

THE H I S T O R Y
OF THE DECLINE AND FALL
OF THE
R O M A N E M P I R E.

By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq;

VOLUME THE SIXTH.

---

L O N D O N :
PRINTED FOR A. STRAHAN; AND T. CADELL, IN THE STRAND.
MDCCLXXXVIII.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

OF THE

SIXTH VOLUME.

CHAP. LVIII.

Origin and Numbers of the First Crusade.—Characters of the Latin Princes.—Their March to Constantinople.—Policy of the Greek Emperor Alexius.—Conquest of Nice, Antioch, and Jerusalem, by the Franks.—Deliverance of the Holy Sepulchre.—Godfrey of Bouillon, First King of Jerusalem.—Institutions of the French or Latin Kingdom.

A. D.		Page
1095—1099.	THE first Crusade	1
	Peter the Hermit	ib.
1095	Urban II. in the Council of Placentia	3
	Council of Clermont	6
	Justice of the Crusades	9
	Spiritual Motives and Indulgences	11
	Temporal and carnal Motives	14
	Influence of Example	16
1096	Departure of the first Crusaders	17
	Their Destruction in Hungary and Asia	19
	The Chiefs of the first Crusade	21
	I. Godfrey of Bouillon	22

A. D.		Page
	II. Hugh of Vermandois, Robert of Normandy, Robert of Flanders, Stephen of Chartres, &c.	23
	III. Raymond of Tholouſe	24
	IV. Bohemond and Tancred	25
	Chivalry	26
1096, 1097.	March of the Princes to Constantinople	29
	Policy of the Emperor Alexius Comnenus	32
	He obtains the Homage of the Crusaders	34
	Influence of the Franks	37
1097	Their Review and Numbers	38
	Siege of Nice	40
	Battle of Dorylæum	42
	March through the Lesser Asia	44
1097—1151.	Baldwin founds the Principality of Edeſſa	45
1097, 1098.	Siege of Antioch	46
1098	Victory of the Crusaders	49
	Their Famine and Distress at Antioch	ib.
	Legend of the Holy Lance	51
	Celestial Warriors	53
	The State of the Turks and Caliphs of Egypt	55
1098, 1099.	Delay of the Franks	56
1099	Their March to Jerusalem	57
	Siege and Conquest of Jerusalem	ib.

C O N T E N T S.

A. D.	Page	A. D.	Page
1099, 1100. Election and Reign of Godfrey of Bouillon - - -	61	1187 His Conquest of the Kingdom And City of Jerusalem - -	95 98
1099 Battle of Ascalon - - -	62	1188 The third Crusade, by Sea - -	100
1099—1187. The Kingdom of Jerusalem	63	1189—1191. Siege of Acre - -	102
1099—1369. Assise of Jerusalem - -	66	1191, 1192. Richard of England, in Palestine	103
Court of Peers - - -	67	1192 His Treaty and Departure - -	106
Law of judicial Combats - - -	68	1193 Death of Saladin - - -	108
Court of Bargeselles - - -	70	1198—1216. Innocent III. - - -	ib.
Syrians - - -	ib.	1203 The fourth Crusade - -	109
Villains and Slaves - - -	71	1218 The fifth - - -	ib.
		1228 The emperor Frederic II. in Palestine	110
		1243 Invasion of the Carizmians - -	113
		1248—1254. St. Louis, and the sixth Crusade	ib.
		1249 He takes Damietta - -	115
		1250 His Captivity in Egypt - -	ib.
		1270 His Death before Tunis, in the seventh Crusade - - -	117
		1250—1517. The Mamalukes of Egypt	ib.
		1268 Loss of Antioch - -	118
		1291 The Loss of Acre and the Holy Land	119
C H A P. LIX.
Preservation of the Greek Empire.—Numbers, Passage, and Event, of the Second and Third Crusades.—St. Bernard.—Reign of Saladin in Egypt and Syria.—His Conquest of Jerusalem.—Naval Crusades.—Richard the First of England.—Pope Innocent the Third; and the Fourth and Fifth Crusades.—The Emperor Frederic the Second.—Louis the Ninth of France; and the Two last Crusades.—Expulsion of the Latins or Franks by the Mamalukes.
A. D.	Page	A. D.	Page
1097—1118. Success of Alexius - -	72	Schism of the Greeks and Latins.—State of Constantinople.—Revolt of the Bulgarians.—Isaac Angelus dethroned by his Brother Alexius.—Origin of the Fourth Crusade.—Alliance of the French and Venetians with the Son of Isaac.—Their naval Expedition to Constantinople.—The Two Sieges and final Conquest of the City by the Latins.
Expeditions by Land - - -	75
1101 The first Crusade - - -	ib.	A. D.	Page
1147 The second, of Conrad III. and Louis VII.	ib.	Schism of the Greeks - -	121
1189 The third, of Frederic I. - -	ib.	Their Aversion to the Latins - -	ib.
Their Numbers - - -	ib.	Procession of the Holy Ghost - -	122
Passage through the Greek Empire	77	Variety of ecclesiastical Discipline	123
Turkish Warfare - - -	80	857—886. Ambitious Quarrels of Photius, Patriarch of Constantinople, with the Popes	124
Obstinacy of the Enthusiasm of the Crusades	82	1054 The Popes excommunicate the Patriarch of Constantinople and the Greeks	126
1091—1153. Character and Mission of St. Bernard - - -	83	1100—1200. Enmity of the Greeks and Latins	ib.
Progress of the Mahometans - -	85	The Latins at Constantinople - -	128
The Atabeks of Syria - - -	86	1183 Their Massacre - - -	129
1127—1145. Zenghi - - -	ib.		1185—1195. Reign
1145—1174. Nouredin - - -	87
1163—1169. Conquest of Egypt by the Turks	88
1171 End of the Fatimite Caliphs - -	91
1171—1193. Reign and Character of Saladin	92

C O N T E N T S.

A. D.	Page	A. D.	Page
1185—1195. Reign and Character of Isaac Angelus	130	1204 Revolt of the Greeks	180
1186 Revolt of the Bulgarians	131	1204—1222. Theodore Lascaris, Emperor of Nice	181
1195—1203. Usurpation and Character of Alexius Angelus	132	The Dukes and Emperors of Trebizond	182
1198 The fourth Crusade	134	The Despots of Epirus	183
Embraced by the Barons of France	135	1205 The Bulgarian War	184
697—1200. State of the Venetians	137	Defeat and Captivity of Baldwin	186
1201 Alliance of the French and Venetians	139	Retreat of the Latins	187
1202 Assembly and Departure of the Crusade from Venice	141	Death of the Emperor	188
Siege of Zara	143	1206—1216. Reign and Character of Henry	ib.
Alliance of the Crusaders with the Greek Prince, the young Alexius	144	1217 Peter of Courtenay, Emperor of Constantinople	192
1203 Voyage from Zara to Constantinople	146	1217—1219. His Captivity and Death	193
Fruitless Negotiation of the Emperor	149	1221—1228. Robert, Emperor of Constantinople	197
Passage of the Bosphorus	150	1228—1237. Baldwin II. and John of Brienne, Emperors of Constantinople	196
First Siege and Conquest of Constantinople by the Latins	153	1237—1261. Baldwin II.	198
Restoration of the Emperor Isaac Angelus, and his son Alexius	156	The Holy Crown of Thorns	200
Quarrels of the Greeks and Latins	158	1237—1261. Progress of the Greeks	202
1204 The War renewed	160	1259 Michael Palæologus, the Greek Emperor	203
Alexius and his Father deposed by Mourzoufle	162	1261 Constantinople recovered by the Greeks	204
Second Siege	ib.	General Consequences of the Crusades	206
Pillage of Constantinople	165
Division of the Spoil	167	Digression on the Family of Courtenay.
Misery of the Greeks	168	A. D.	Page
Sacrilige and Mockery	169	1020 Origin of the Family of Courtenay	211
Destruction of the Statues	170	1101—1152. I. The Counts of Edessa	212
		II. The Courtenays of France	213
		1150 Their Alliance with the Royal Family	214
		III. The Courtenays of England	217
		The Earls of Devonshire	218

C H A P. LXI.

Partition of the Empire by the French and Venetians.—Five Latin Emperors of the Houses of Flanders and Courtenay.—Their Wars against the Bulgarians and Greeks.—Weakness and Poverty of the Latin Empire.—Recovery of Constantinople by the Greeks.—General Consequences of the Crusades.

A. D.	Page
1204 Election of the Emperor Baldwin I.	174
Division of the Greek Empire	177

C H A P. LXII.

The Greek Emperors of Nice and Constantinople.—Elevation and Reign of Michael Palæologus.—His false Union with the Pope and the Latin Church.—Hostile Designs of Charles of Anjou.—Revolt of Sicily.—War of the Catalans in Asia and Greece.—Revolutions and present State of Athens.

A. D.	Page
Restoration of the Greek Empire	221
1204—1222. Theodore Lascaris	ib.
1222—1255. John

C O N T E N T S.

A. D.	Page	A. D.	Page
1222—1255. John Ducas Vataces	222	1321—1328. Three Civil Wars between the
1255—1259. Theodore Lascaris II.	224	two Emperors	262
1259 Minority of John Lascaris	225	1325 Coronation of the Younger Andronicus	ib.
Family and Character of Michael Palæo-		1328 The Elder Andronicus abdicates the Gologus	226	vernment	263
His Elevation to the Throne	228	1332 His Death	265
1260 Michael Palæologus Emperor	231	1328—1341. Reign of Andronicus the Younger	ib.
1261 Recovery of Constantinople	ib.	His two Wives	ib.
Return of the Greek Emperor	232	1341—1391. Reign of John Palæologus	267
Palæologus blinds and banishes the young		Fortune of John Cantacuzenus	ib.
Emperor	234	He is left Regent of the Empire	268
1262—1268. Is excommunicated by the Patri-		1341 His Regency is attacked	ib.
arch Arsenius	235	By Apocaucus, the Empress Anne of Sa-
1266—1312. Schism of the Arsenites	236	voy, and the Patriarch	269
1259—1282. Reign of Michael Palæologus	237	Cantacuzene assumes the Purple	270
1273—1332. Reign of Andronicus the Elder	ib.	1341—1347. The Civil War	272
1274—1277. His Union with the Latin Church	238	Victory of Cantacuzene	ib.
1277—1282. His Persecution of the Greeks	240	1347 He re-enters Constantinople	274
1283 The Union dissolved	242	1347—1355. Reign of John Cantacuzene	275
1266 Charles of Anjou subdues Naples and		1353 John Palæologus takes up Arms against
Sicily	ib.	him	277
1270 Threatens the Greek Empire	244	1355 Abdication of Cantacuzene	ib.
1280 Palæologus instigates the Revolt of Sicily	245	1341—1351. Dispute concerning the Light of
1282 The Sicilian Vespers	247	Mount Thabor	278
Defeat of Charles	248	1261—1347. Establishment of the Genoese at 1303—1307. The Service and War of the Cal-		Pera or Galata	280
talans in the Greek Empire	ib.	Their Trade and Intolence	282
1204—1456. Revolutions of Athens	253	1348 Their War with the Emperor Cantacu-
Present State of Athens	255	zene	283
		1349 Destruction of his Fleet	284
		1352 Victory of the Genoese over the Venetians and Greeks	285
		Their Treaty with the Empire	287

C H A P. LXIII.

Civil Wars, and Ruin of the Greek Empire.—Reigns of Andronicus, the Elder and Younger, and John Palæologus.—Regency, Revolt, Reign, and Abdication of John Cantacuzene.—Establishment of a Genoese Colony at Pera or Galata.—Their Wars with the Empire and City of Constantinople.

A. D.	Page
1282—1320. Superstition of Andronicus and the Times	257
1320 First Disputes between the Elder and Younger Andronicus	260

C H A P. LXIV.

Conquests of Zingis Khan and the Moguls from China to Poland.—Escape of Constantinople and the Greeks.—Origin of the Ottoman Turks in Bithynia.—Reigns and Victories of Othman, Orchan, Amurath the First, and Bajazet the First.—Foundation and Progress of the Turkish Monarchy in Asia and Europe.—
Danger

C O N T E N T S.

A. D.	Page	A. D.	Page
Danger of Constantinople and the Greek Empire.		1355—1391. The Emperor John Palæologus	327
		Discord of the Greeks	ib.
1206—1227. Zingis Khan, first Emperor of the Moguls and Tartars	289	1391—1425. The Emperor Manuel	328
His Laws	290	1395—1402. Distress of Constantinople	329
1210—1214. His Invasion of China	293	C H A P. LXV.
1218—1224. Of Carizme, Transoxiana, and Persia	294	Elevation of Timour or Tamerlane to the Throne of Samarcand.—His Conquests in Persia, Georgia, Tartary, Russia, India, Syria, and Anatolia.—His Turkish War.—Defeat and Captivity of Bajazet.—Death of Timour.—Civil War of the Sons of Bajazet.—Restoration of the Turkish Monarchy by Mahomet the First.—Siege of Constantinople by Amurath the Second.
1227 His Death	296	A. D.	Page
1227—1295. Conquests of the Moguls under the Successors of Zingis	296	Histories of TIMOUR, or Tamerlane
1234 Of the Northern Empire of China	297	1361—1370. His first Adventures	331
1279 Of the Southern	298	1370 He ascends the Throne of Zagatai	335
1258 Of Persia, and the Empire of the Caliphs	299	1370—1400. His Conquests	ib.
1242—1272. Of Anatolia	301	1380—1393. I. Of Persia	ib.
1235—1245. Of Kipzak, Russia, Poland, Hungary, &c.	ib.	1370—1383. II. Of Turkestan	337
1242 Of Siberia	304	1390—1396. Of Kipzak, Russia, &c.	358
1227—1259. The Successors of Zingis	305	1398, 1399. III. Of Hindostan	339
1259—1368. Adopt the Manners of China	306	1400 His War against Sultan Bajazet	342
1259—1300. Division of the Mogul Empire	307	Timour invades Syria	344
1240—1304. Escape of Constantinople and the Greek Empire from the Moguls	308	Sacks Aleppo	346
1304 Decline of the Mogul Khans of Persia	310	1401 Damascus	347
1240 Origin of the Ottomans	ib.	And Bagdad	348
1299—1326. Reign of Othman	311	1402 Invades Anatolia	ib.
1326—1360. Reign of Orchan	312	Battle of Angora	349
1326—1339. His Conquest of Bithynia	313	Defeat and Captivity of Bajazet	351
1300 Division of Anatolia among the Turkish Emirs	ib.	The Story of his Iron Cage disproved by the Persian Historian of Timour	352
1312 Loss of the Asiatic Provinces	314	Attested, 1. by the French	353
1310—1323. The Knights of Rhodes	ib.	———, 2. by the Italians	354
1341—1347. First Passage of the Turks into Europe	315	———, 3. by the Arabs	ib.
1346 Marriage of Orchan with a Greek Princess	316	———, 4. by the Greeks	355
1353 Establishment of the Ottomans in Europe	317	———, 5. by the Turks	ib.
Death of Orchan and his Son Soliman	319	Probable Conclusion	356
1360—1389. The Reign and European Conquests of Amurath I.	ib.	1403 Death of Bajazet	ib.
The Janizaries	320	Term of the Conquests of Timour	357
1389—1403. The Reign of Bajazet I. Ilderim	321		1404, 1405. His
His Conquests, from the Euphrates to the Danube	ib.
1396 Battle of Nicopolis	323
1396—1398. Crusade and Captivity of the French Princes	324

C O N T E N T S.

A. D.	Page	A. D.	Page
1404. His Triumph at Samarcand	359	Of England	389
1405 His Death on the Road to China	360	1402 His Return to Greece	390
Character and Merits of Timour	361	Greek Knowledge and Descriptions	ib.
1403—1421. Civil Wars of the Sons of Bajazet	364	Of Germany	391
1. Mustapha	ib.	Of France	ib.
2. Isâ	365	Of England	392
1403—1410. 3. Soliman	ib.	1402—1417. Indifference of Manuel towards
1410 4. Moufa	366	the Latins	394
1413—1421. 5. Mahomet I.	ib.	1417—1425. His Negotiations	ib.
1421—1451. Reign of Amurath II.	367	His private Motives	395
1421 Re-union of the Ottoman Empire	ib.	His Death	396
1402—1425. State of the Greek Empire	369	1425—1437. Zeal of John Palæologus II.	ib.
1422 Siege of Constantinople by Amurath II.	371	Corruption of the Latin Church	397
1425—1448. The Emperor John Palæologus II.	ib.	1377—1429. Schism	398
Hereditary Succession and Merit of the Ot-		1409 Council of Pisa	ib.
tomans	372	1414—1418. Of Constance	ib.
Education and Discipline of the Turks	373	1431—1443. Of Basil	399
Invention and Use of Gunpowder	375	Their Opposition to Eugenius IV.	ib.
		1434—1437. Negotiations with the Greeks	400
		1437 John Palæologus embarks in the Pope's Gallies	ib.
		1438 His triumphal Entry at Venice	404
		----- into Ferrara	405
		1438, 1439. Council of the Greeks and Latins at Ferrara and Florence	406
		Negotiations with the Greeks	410
		1438 Eugenius deposed at Basil	412
		Re-union of the Greeks at Florence	ib.
		1440 Their Return to Constantinople	413
		1449 Final Peace of the Church	414
		1300—1453. State of the Greek Language at Constantinople	ib.
		Comparison of the Greeks and Latins	416
		Revival of the Greek Learning in Italy	417
		1339 Lessons of Barlaam	418
		1339—1374. Studies of Petrarch	419
		1360 Of Boccace	421
		1360—1363. Leo Pilatus, first Greek Professor at Florence, and in the West	ib.
		1390—1415. Foundation of the Greek Language in Italy by Manuel Chryso-
		loras	423
		1400—1500. The Greeks in Italy	425
		Cardinal Bessarion, &c.	ib.
		Their Faults and Merits	426
		The Platonic Philosophy	427
		Emulation and Progress of the Latins	429
		1447—1455. Nicho-

C H A P. LXVI.

Applications of the Eastern Emperors to the Popes.—Visits to the West, of John the First, Manuel, and John the Second, Palæologus.—Union of the Greek and Latin Churches, promoted by the Council of Basil, and concluded at Ferrara and Florence.—State of Literature at Constantinople.—Its Revival in Italy by the Greek Fugitives.—Curiosity and Emulation of the Latins.

A. D.	Page
1339 Embassy of the Younger Andronicus to Pope Benedict XII.	378
The Arguments for a Crusade and Union	379
1348 Negotiation of Cantacuzene with Clement VI.	381
1355 Treaty of John Palæologus I. with Innocent VI.	383
1359 Visit of John Palæologus to Urban V. at Rome	385
1370 His Return to Constantinople	387
Visit of the Emperor Manuel	ib.
1400 To the Court of France	388

C O N T E N T S.

A. D.	Page
1447—1455. Nicholas V. -	429
1428—1492. Cosimo and Lorenzo of Medicis	430
Use and Abuse of ancient Learning	431

C H A P. LXVII.

Schism of the Greeks and Latins.—Reign and Character of Amurath the Second.—Crusade of Ladislaus King of Hungary.—His Defeat and Death.—John Huniades.—Scanderbeg.—Constantine Palaeologus last Emperor of the East.

A. D.	Page
Comparison of Rome and Constantinople	434
1440—1448. The Greek Schism after the Council of Florence - -	437
Zeal of the Orientals and Russians	439
1421—1451. Reign and Character of Amurath II. - -	440
1442—1444. His double Abdication - -	442
1443 Eugenius forms a League against the Turks - -	443
Ladislaus, King of Poland and Hungary, marches against them - -	445
The Turkish Peace - -	446
1444 Violation of the Peace - -	447
Battle of Warna - -	449
Death of Ladislaus - -	450
The Cardinal Julian - -	451
John Corvinus Huniades - -	452
1456 His Defence of Belgrade, and Death	453
1404—1413. Birth and Education of Scanderbeg, Prince of Albania - -	454
1443 His Revolt from the Turks - -	456
His Valour - -	457
1467 And Death - -	458
1448—1453. Constantine, the last of the Roman or Greek Emperors - -	459
1450—1452. Embassies of Phranza - -	460
State of the Byzantine Court - -	462

C H A P. LXVIII.

Reign and Character of Mahomet the Second.—Siege, Assault, and final Con- quest of Constantinople by the Turks.—Death of Constantine Palaeologus.—Servitude of the Greeks.—Extinction of the Roman Empire in the East.—Consternation of Europe.—Conquests and Death of Mahomet the Second.

A. D.	Page
Character of Mahomet II. - -	464
1451—1481. His Reign - -	466
1451 Hostile Intentions of Mahomet - -	468
1452 He builds a Fortrefs on the Bosphorus	471
The Turkish War - -	472
1452, 1453. Preparations for the Siege of Constantinople - -	473
The great Cannon of Mahomet - -	475
1453 Mahomet II. forms the Siege of Constantinople - -	477
Forces of the Turks - -	478
— of the Greeks - -	479
1452 False Union of the two Churches	480
Obstinacy and Fanaticism of the Greeks	481
1453 Siege of Constantinople by Mahomet II.	484
Attack and Defence - -	485
Succour and Victory of four Ships	487
Mahomet transports his Navy over Land	490
Distress of the City - -	492
Preparations of the Turks for the general Assault - -	493
Last Farewel of the Emperor and the Greeks - -	495
The general Assault - -	496
Death of the Emperor Constantine Palaeologus - -	500
Loss of the City and Empire - -	ib.
The Turks enter and pillage Constantinople	ib.
Captivity of the Greeks - -	502
Amount of the Spoil - -	504
Mahomet II. visits the City, St. Sophia, the Palace, &c. - -	505
His Behaviour to the Greeks - -	507
He repeoples and adorns Constantinople	508
Extinction of the Imperial Families of Comnenus and Palaeologus - -	511
1460 Loss of the Morea - -	512
1461 — of Trebizond - -	513
1453 Grief and Terror of Europe - -	514
1481 Death of Mahomet II. - -	516

C O N T E N T S.

C H A P. LXIX.

State of Rome from the Twelfth Century.—
Temporal Dominion of the Popes.—Seditions of the City.—Political Heresy of Arnold of Brescia.—Restoration of the Republic.—The Senators.—Pride of the Romans.—Their Wars.—They are deprived of the Election and Presence of the Popes, who retire to Avignon.—The Jubilee.—Noble Families of Rome.—Feud of the Colonna and Ursini.

A. D.	Page
1100—1500. State and Revolutions of Rome	518
800—1100. The French and German Emperors of Rome	519
Authority of the Popes in Rome	521
From Affection	ib.
— Right	ib.
— Virtue	522
— Benefits	ib.
Incontinancy of Superstition	523
Seditions of Rome against the Popes	524
1086—1305. Successors of Gregory VII.	525
1099—1118. Paschal II.	526
1118, 1119. Gelasius II.	ib.
1144, 1145. Lucius II.	527
1181—1185. Lucius III.	ib.
1119—1124. Calistus II.	528
1130—1143. Innocent II.	ib.
Character of the Romans by St. Bernard	ib.
1140 Political Heresy of Arnold of Brescia	529
1144—1154. He exhorts the Romans to restore the Republic	531
1155 His Execution	533
1144 Restoration of the Senate	ib.
The Capitol	535
The Coin	536
The Prefect of the City	537
Number and Choice of the Senate	538
The Office of Senator	539
1252—1258. Brancalcione	540
1265—1278. Charles of Anjou	541
1281 Pope Martin IV.	542
1323 The Emperor Lewis of Bavaria	ib.

A. D.	Page
Addresses of Rome to the Emperors	542
1144 Conrad III.	543
1155 Frederic I.	544
Wars of the Romans against the neighbouring Cities	547
1167 Battle of Tusculum	549
1234 — of Viterbo	ib.
The Election of the Popes	550
1179 Right of the Cardinals established by Alexander III.	ib.
1274 Institution of the Conclave by Gregory X.	551
Absence of the Popes from Rome	553
1294—1303. Boniface VIII.	554
1309 Translation of the Holy See to Avignon	555
1300 Institution of the Jubilee, or Holy Year	557
1350 The second Jubilee	559
The Nobles or Barons of Rome	560
Family of Leo the Jew	561
The Colonna	562
And Ursini	565
Their hereditary Feuds	566

C H A P. LXX.

Character and Coronation of Petrarch.—
Restoration of the Freedom and Government of Rome by the Tribune Rienzi.—
His Virtues and Vices, his Expulsion and Death.—Return of the Popes from Avignon.—Great Schism of the West.—Reunion of the Latin Church.—Last Struggles of Roman Liberty.—Statutes of Rome.—Final Settlement of the Ecclesiastical State.

A. D.	Page
1304—1374. Petrarch	567
1341 His poetic Coronation at Rome	570
Birth, Character, and patriotic Designs of Rienzi	572
1347 He assumes the Government of Rome	574
With the Title and Office of Tribune	576
Laws of the good Estate	ib.
Freedom and Prosperity of the Roman Republic	578
The	The

C O N T E N T S.

A. D.	Page	A. D.	Page
The Tribune is respected in Italy, &c.	580	1500 The Popes acquire the absolute Dominion
And celebrated by Petrarch	581	of Rome	613
His Vices and Follies	ib.	The Ecclesiastical Government	616
1347 The Pomp of his Knighthood	583	1585—1590. Sixtus V.	617
And Coronation	585
Fear and Hatred of the Nobles of Rome	ib.
They oppose Rienzi in Arms	587
Defeat and Death of the Colonna	588
Fall and Flight of the Tribune Rienzi	589
1347—1354. Revolutions of Rome	590
Adventures of Rienzi	591
1351 A Prisoner at Avignon	592
1354 Rienzi, Senator of Rome	593
His Death	595
1355 Petrarch invites and upbraids the Emperor
Charles IV.	ib.
He solicits the Popes of Avignon to fix their Residence at Rome	596
1367—1370. Return of Urban V.	597
1377 Final Return of Gregory XI.	598
1378 His Death	599
Election of Urban VI.	ib.
Election of Clement VII.	600
1378—1418. Great Schism of the West	601
Calamities of Rome	602
1392—1407. Negotiations for Peace and Union	603
1409 Council of Pisa	604
1414—1418. Council of Constance	605
Election of Martin V.	606
1417 Martin V.	ib.
1431 Eugenius IV.	ib.
1447 Nicholas V.	ib.
1454 Last Revolt of Rome	607
1452 Last Coronation of a German Emperor,
Frederic III.	608
The Statutes and Government of Rome	ib.
1453 Conspiracy of Porcaro	610
Last Disorders of the Nobles of Rome	612

C H A P. LXXI.

Prospect of the Ruins of Rome in the Fifteenth Century.—Four Causes of Decay and Destruction.—Example of the Coliseum.—Renovation of the City.—Conclusion of the whole Work.

A. D.	Page
1430 View and Discourse of Poggius from the Capitoline Hill	619
His Description of the Ruins	620
Gradual Decay of Rome	622
Four Causes of Destruction	623
I. The Injuries of Nature	ib.
Hurricanes and Earthquakes	ib.
Fires	624
Inundations	625
II. The hostile Attacks of the Barbarians and Christians	626
III. The Use and Abuse of the Materials	628
IV. The domestic Quarrels of the Romans	632
The Coliseum or Amphitheatre of Titus	635
Games of Rome	637
1332 A Bull-feast in the Coliseum	ib.
Injuries	639
And Consecration of the Coliseum	640
Ignorance and Barbarism of the Romans	ib.
1420 Restoration and Ornaments of the City	643
Final Conclusion	645

---

T H E
H I S T O R Y
.O F T H E
D E C L I N E A N D F A L L
O F T H E
R O M A N E M P I R E.

---

C H A P. LVIII.

Origin and Numbers of the First Crusade.—Characters of the Latin Princes.—Their March to Constantinople.—Policy of the Greek Emperor Alexius.—Conquest of Nice, Antioch, and Jerusalem, by the Franks.—Deliverance of the Holy Sepulchre.—Godfrey of Bouillon, First King of Jerusalem.—Institutions of the French or Latin Kingdom.

ABOUT twenty years after the conquest of Jerusalem by the Turks, the holy sepulchre was visited by an hermit of the name of Peter, a native of Amiens, in the province of Picardy' in France. His resentment and sympathy were excited by his own injuries and the oppression of the Christian name; he mingled his

C H A P.
LVIII.

The first crusade,
A. D.
1095—1099.
Peter the Hermit.

<sup>1</sup> Whimsical enough is the origin of the name of Picards, and from thence of Picardie, which does not date earlier than A. D. 1200. It was an academical joke, an epithet first applied

C H A P.
LVIII.

his tears with those of the patriarch, and earnestly enquired, if no hopes of relief could be entertained from the Greek emperors of the East. The patriarch exposed the vices and weakness of the successors of Constantine. "I will rouse," exclaimed the hermit, "the martial nations of Europe in your cause;" and Europe was obedient to the call of the hermit. The astonished patriarch dismissed him with epistles of credit and complaint, and no sooner did he land at Bari, than Peter hastened to kiss the feet of the Roman pontiff. His stature was small, his appearance contemptible; but his eye was keen and lively; and he possessed that vehemence of speech, which seldom fails to impart the persuasion of the soul. He was born of a gentleman's family (for we must now adopt a modern idiom), and his military service was under the neighbouring counts of Boulogne, the heroes of the first crusade. But he soon relinquished the sword and the world; and if it be true, that his wife, however noble, was aged and ugly, he might withdraw, with the less reluctance, from her bed to a convent, and at length to an hermitage. In this austere solitude, his body was emaciated, his fancy was inflamed; whatever he wished, he believed; whatever he believed, he saw in dreams and revelations. From Jerusalem, the pilgrim returned an accomplished fanatic; but as he excelled in the popular madness of the times, pope Urban the second received him as a prophet, applauded his glorious design, promised to support it in a general council, and encouraged him to proclaim the deliverance of the Holy Land. Invigorated by the approbation of the pontiff, his zealous missionary traversed, with speed and success, the provinces of Italy and France. His diet was abstemious, his prayers long and fervent, and the alms which he received with one hand, he distriapplied to the quarrelsome humour of those students, in the university of Paris, who came from the frontier of France and Flanders (Valesii Notitia Galliarum, p. 447. Longuerue, Description de la France, p. 54.).

<sup>2</sup> William of Tyre (l. i. c. 11. p. 637, 638.) thus describes the hermit: puffillus,

persona contemptibilis, vivacis ingenii, et oculum habens perspicacem gratumque, et sponte fluens ei non deerat eloquium. See Albert Aquensis, p. 185. Guibert, p. 382. Anna Comnena in Alexiad, l. x. p. 284, &c. with Ducange's notes, p. 319.

* buted

C H A P.
LVIII.

buted with the other : his head was bare, his feet naked, his meagre body was wrapt in a coarse garment ; he bore and displayed a weighty crucifix ; and the ass on which he rode, was sanctified in the public eye by the service of the man of God. He preached to innumerable crowds in the churches, the streets, and the highways : the hermit entered with equal confidence the palace and the cottage ; and the people, for all was people, was impetuously moved by his call to repentance and arms. When he painted the sufferings of the natives and pilgrims of Palestine, every heart was melted to compassion ; every breast glowed with indignation, when he challenged the warriors of the age to defend their brethren and rescue their Saviour : his ignorance of art and language was compensated by sighs, and tears, and ejaculations ; and Peter supplied the deficiency of reason by loud and frequent appeals to Christ and his Mother, to the saints and angels of paradise, with whom he had personally conversed. The most perfect orator of Athens might have envied the success of his eloquence : the rustic enthusiast inspired the passions which he felt, and Christendom expected with impatience the counsels and decrees of the supreme pontiff.

The magnanimous spirit of Gregory the seventh had already embraced the design of arming Europe against Asia ; the ardour of his zeal and ambition still breathes in his epistles : from either side of the Alps, fifty thousand Catholics had enlisted under the banner of St. Peter<sup>3</sup> ; and his successor reveals his intention of marching at their head against the impious sectaries of Mahomet. But the glory or reproach of executing, though not in person, this holy enterprise, was reserved for Urban the second<sup>4</sup>, the most faithful of his disciples. He undertook the conquest of the East, whilst the larger portion of Rome was possessed and fortified by his rival Guibert of Urban II.

in the council of Placentia,
A. D. 1095,
March.

<sup>3</sup> Ultra quinquaginta millia, si me possunt in expeditione pro duce et pontifice habere, armatâ manû volunt in inimicos Dei insurgere et ad sepulchrum Domini ipso ducente pervenire (Gregor. vii. epist. ii.

31. in tom. xii. p. 322. concil.).

<sup>4</sup> See the original lives of Urban II. by Pandulphus Pisanus and Bernardus Guido, in Muratori, Rer. Ital. Script. tom. iii. pars i. p. 352, 353.

C H A P.
LVIII.

Ravenna, who contended with Urban for the name and honours of the pontificate. He attempted to unite the powers of the West, at a time when the princes were separated from the church, and the people from their princes, by the excommunication which himself and his predecessors had thundered against the emperor and the king of France. Philip the first, of France, supported with patience the censures which he had provoked by his scandalous life and adulterous marriage. Henry the fourth, of Germany, asserted the right of investitures, the prerogative of confirming his bishops by the delivery of the ring and crozier. But the emperor's party was crushed in Italy by the arms of the Normans and the countess Mathilda; and the long quarrel had been recently envenomed by the revolt of his son Conrad and the shame of his wife<sup>5</sup>, who, in the synods of Constance and Placentia, confessed the manifold prostitutions to which she had been exposed by an husband regardless of her honour and his own<sup>6</sup>. So popular was the cause of Urban, so weighty was his influence, that the council which he summoned at Placentia<sup>7</sup> was composed of two hundred bishops of Italy, France, Burgundy, Swabia, and Bavaria. Four thousand of the clergy, and thirty thousand of the laity, attended this important meeting; and, as the most spacious cathedral would have been inadequate to the multitude, the session of seven days was held in a plain adjacent to the quod ipsam tantas spurcitas non tam commisisse quam invitam pertulisse pro certo cognoverit papa cum sanctâ synodo. Apud Baron. A. D. 1093, N<sup>o</sup> 4. 1094, N<sup>o</sup> 3. A rare subject for the infallible decision of a pope and council. These abominations are repugnant to every principle of human nature, which is not altered by a dispute about rings and croziers. Yet it should seem, that the wretched woman was tempted by the priests to relate or subscribe some infamous stories of herself and her husband.

<sup>5</sup> She is known by the different names of Præx, Eupræcia, Eufrafia, and Adelaïs; and was the daughter of a Russian prince, and the widow of a margrave of Brandenburg. Struv. Corpus Hist. Germanicæ, p. 340.

<sup>6</sup> *Henricus odio eam cepit habere: ideo incarcerationavit eam, et concessit ut plerique vim ei inferrent; immo filium hortans ut eam sabagitaret (Dodechin, Continuat. Marian. Scot. apud Baron. A. D. 1093, N<sup>o</sup> 4.). In the synod of Constance, she is described by Bernoldus, rerum inspector: quæ se tantas et tam inauditas fornicationum spurcitas, et a tantis passam fuisse conquesta est, &c. and again at Placentia: *fatis misericorditer suscepit, eo

<sup>7</sup> See the narrative and acts of the synod of Placentia, Concil. tom. xii. p. 821, &c.

city. The ambassadors of the Greek emperor, Alexius Comnenus, were introduced to plead the distress of their sovereign and the danger of Constantinople, which was divided only by a narrow sea from the victorious Turks, the common enemies of the Christian name. In their suppliant address they flattered the pride of the Latin princes; and, appealing at once to their policy and religion, exhorted them to repel the Barbarians on the confines of Asia, rather than to expect them in the heart of Europe. At the sad tale of the misery and perils of their Eastern brethren the assembly burst into tears: the most eager champions declared their readiness to march; and the Greek ambassadors were dismissed with the assurance of a speedy and powerful succour. The relief of Constantinople was included in the larger and most distant project of the deliverance of Jerusalem; but the prudent Urban adjourned the final decision to a second synod, which he proposed to celebrate in some city of France in the autumn of the same year. The short delay would propagate the flame of enthusiasm; and his firmest hope was in a nation of soldiers<sup>8</sup>, still proud of the pre-eminence of their name, and ambitious to emulate their hero Charlemagne<sup>9</sup>, who, in the popular romance of Turpin<sup>10</sup>, had achieved the conquest of the Holy Land. A latent motive of affection or vanity might influence the choice of Urban: he was himself a native of France, a monk of Clugny, and the first of his countrymen who ascended the throne

<sup>8</sup> Guibert himself, a Frenchman, praises the piety and valour of the French nation, the author and example of the crusades: Gens nobilis, prudens, bellicosa, dapilis et nitida . . . Quos enim Britones, Anglos, Ligures, si bonis eos moribus videamus, non illico Francos homines appellemus? (p. 478.) He owns, however, that the vivacity of the French degenerates into petulance among foreigners (p. 483.), and vain loquaciousness (p. 502.).

<sup>9</sup> Per viam quam jam dudum Carolus Magnus mirificus rex Francorum aptari fecit usque C. P. (Gesta Francorum, p. 1. Robert. Monach. Hist. Hieros. l. i. p. 33, &c.).

<sup>10</sup> John Tilpinus, or Turpinus, was archbishop of Rheims, A. D. 773. After the year 1000, this romance was composed in his name, by a monk of the borders of France and Spain: and such was the idea of ecclesiastical merit, that he describes himself as a fighting and drinking priest! Yet the book of lies was pronounced authentic by pope Calixtus II. (A. D. 1122), and is respectfully quoted by the abbot Suger, in the great Chronicles of St. Denys (Fabric. Bibliot. Latin. medii.Ævi, edit. Mansi, tom. iv. p. 161.).

C H A P.
LVIII.

Council of Clermont,
A. D. 1095,
November.

of St. Peter. The pope had illustrated his family and province; nor is there perhaps a more exquisite gratification than to revisit, in a conspicuous dignity, the humble and laborious scenes of our youth.

It may occasion some surprise that the Roman pontiff should erect, in the heart of France, the tribunal from whence he hurled his anathemas against the king. But our surprise will vanish so soon as we form a just estimate of a king of France of the eleventh century<sup>11</sup>. Philip the first was the great-grandson of Hugh Capet the founder of the present race, who, in the decline of Charlemagne's posterity, added the regal title to his patrimonial estates of Paris and Orleans. In this narrow compass, he was possessed of wealth and jurisdiction; but in the rest of France, Hugh and his first descendants were no more than the feudal lords of about sixty dukes and counts, of independent and hereditary power<sup>12</sup>, who disdained the control of laws and legal assemblies, and whose disregard of their sovereign was revenged by the disobedience of their inferior vassals. At Clermont, in the territories of the count of Auvergne<sup>13</sup>, the pope might brave with impunity the resentment of Philip; and the council which he convened in that city was not less numerous or respectable than the synod of Placentia<sup>14</sup>. Besides his court and council of Roman cardinals, he was supported by thirteen archbishops and two hundred and twenty-five bishops; the number of mitred prelates was computed at four hundred; and the fathers of the church were blessed by the faints, and enlightened by the doctors of the age. From the adjacent kingdoms, a martial train of lords and knights of power and

<sup>11</sup> See Etat de la France, by the Count de Boulainvilliers, tom. i. p. 180—182. and the second volume of the Observations sur l'Histoire de France, by the Abbé de Mably.

<sup>12</sup> In the provinces to the south of the Loire, the first Capetians were scarcely allowed a feudal supremacy. On all sides, Normandy, Bretagne, Aquitain, Burgundy, Lorraine, and Flanders, contracted the name and limits of the proper France. See Hadrian Vales. Notitia Galliarum.

<sup>13</sup> These counts, a younger branch of the dukes of Aquitain, were at length despoiled of the greatest part of their country by Philip Augustus. The bishops of Clermont gradually became princes of the city. Melanges, tirés d'une grande Bibliotheque, tom. xxxvi. p. 288, &c.

<sup>14</sup> See the acts of the council of Clermont, Concil. tom. xii. p. 829, &c.

renown, attended the council<sup>15</sup>, in high expectation of its resolves; and such was the ardour of zeal and curiosity, that the city was filled, and many thousands, in the month of November, erected their tents or huts in the open field. A session of eight days produced some useful or edifying canons for the reformation of manners; a severe censure was pronounced against the licence of private war; the truce of God<sup>16</sup> was confirmed, a suspension of hostilities during four days of the week; women and priests were placed under the safeguard of the church; and a protection of three years was extended to husbandmen and merchants, the defenceless victims of military rapine. But a law, however venerable be the sanction, cannot suddenly transform the temper of the times; and the benevolent efforts of Urban deserve the less praise, since he laboured to appease some domestic quarrels that he might spread the flames of war from the Atlantic to the Euphrates. From the synod of Placentia, the rumour of his great design had gone forth among the nations: the clergy on their return had preached in every diocese the merit and glory of the deliverance of the Holy Land; and when the pope ascended a lofty scaffold in the market-place of Clermont, his eloquence was addressed to a well prepared and impatient audience. His topics were obvious, his exhortation was vehement, his success inevitable. The orator was interrupted by the shout of thousands, who with one voice, and in their rustic idiom, exclaimed aloud, “God wills it, God wills it<sup>17</sup>.” acclamation of the clergy who understood Latin (Robert. Mon. l. i. p. 32.). By the illiterate laity, who spoke the Provincial or Limousin idiom, it was corrupted to Deus lo vult, or Diex el vult. See Chron. Casinense, l. iv. c. 11. p. 497. in Muratori, Script. Rerum Ital. tom. iv. and Ducange (Dissertat. xi. p. 207. sur Joinville, and Gloss. Latin. tom. ii. p. 690.), who, in his preface, produces a very difficult specimen of the dialect of Rovergue, A. D. 1100, very near, both in time and place, to the council of Clermont (p. 15, 16.).

<sup>15</sup> Confluxerunt ad concilium e multis regionibus, viri potentes et honorati, innumeri quamvis cingulo laicalis militiae superbi (Baldric, an eye witness, p. 86—88. Robert. Mon. p. 31, 32. Will. Tyr. i. 14, 15. p. 639—641. Guibert, p. 478—480. Fulcher. Carnot. p. 382.).

<sup>16</sup> The Truce of God (Treva, or Treuga Dei) was first invented in Aquitain, A. D. 1032; blamed by some bishops as an occasion of perjury, and rejected by the Normans as contrary to their privileges (Ducange, Gloss. Latin. tom. vi. p. 682—685.).

<sup>17</sup> Deus vult, Deus vult! was the pure

C H A P.
JVIII.

“ It is indeed the will of God,” replied the pope; “ and let this memorable word, the inspiration surely of the Holy Spirit, be forever adopted as your cry of battle, to animate the devotion and courage of the champions of Christ. His cross is the symbol of your salvation; wear it, a red, a bloody cross, as an external mark on your breasts or shoulders, as a pledge of your sacred and irrevocable engagement.” The proposal was joyfully accepted; great numbers both of the clergy and laity impressed on their garments the sign of the cross<sup>18</sup>, and solicited the pope to march at their head. This dangerous honour was declined by the more prudent successor of Gregory, who alleged the schism of the church, and the duties of his pastoral office, recommending to the faithful, who were disqualified by sex or profession, by age or infirmity, to aid, with their prayers and alms, the personal service of their robust brethren. The name and powers of his legate he devolved on Adhemar bishop of Puy, the first who had received the cross at his hands. The foremost of the temporal chiefs was Raymond count of Thoulouse, whose ambassadors in the council excused the absence, and pledged the honour, of their master. After the confession and absolution of their sins, the champions of the cross were dismissed with a superfluous admonition to invite their countrymen and friends; and their departure for the Holy Land was fixed to the festival of the Assumption, the fifteenth of August, of the ensuing year<sup>19</sup>.

So

<sup>18</sup> Most commonly on their shoulders, in gold, or silk, or cloth, sewed on their garments. In the first crusade, all were red: in the third, the French alone preserved that colour, while green crosses were adopted by the Flemings, and white by the English (Ducange, tom. ii. p. 651.). Yet in England, the red ever appears the favourite, and, as it were, the national, colour of our military ensigns and uniforms.

<sup>19</sup> Bongarsius, who has published the original writers of the crusades, adopts, with much complacency, the fanatic title of Gei-

bertus, Gesta Dei per Francos; though some critics propose to read Gesta Diaboli per Francos (Hanovix, 1611, two vols. in folio). I shall briefly enumerate, as they stand in this collection, the authors whom I have used for the first crusade. I. Gesta Francorum. II. Robertus Monachus. III. Baldricus. IV. Raimundus de Agiles. V. Albertus Aquensis. VI. Fulcherius Carnotensis. VII. Guibertus. VIII. Willielmus Tyriensis. Muratori has given us, IX. Radulphus Cadomensis de Gestis Tancredi (Script. Rer. Ital. tom. v. p. 285—333.), and, X. Bernardus Thefau-

So familiar, and as it were so natural to man, is the practice of violence, that our indulgence allows the slightest provocation, the most disputable right, as a sufficient ground of national hostility. But the name and nature of an holy war demands a more rigorous scrutiny; nor can we hastily believe, that the servants of the Prince of peace would unsheathe the sword of destruction, unless the motive were pure, the quarrel legitimate, and the necessity inevitable. The policy of an action may be determined from the tardy lessons of experience; but, before we act, our conscience should be satisfied of the justice and propriety of our enterprise. In the age of the crusades, the Christians, both of the East and West, were persuaded of their lawfulness and merit; their arguments are clouded by the perpetual abuse of scripture and rhetoric; but they seem to insist on the right of natural and religious defence, their peculiar title to the Holy Land, and the impiety of their Pagan and Mahometan foes<sup>22</sup>.

I. The right of a just defence may fairly include our civil and spiritual allies: it depends on the existence of danger; and that danger must be estimated by the two-fold consideration of the malice, and the power, of our enemies. A pernicious tenet has been imputed to the Mahometans, the duty of extirpating all other religions by the sword. This charge of ignorance and bigotry is refuted by the Koran, by the history of the Musulman conquerors, and by their public and legal toleration of the Christian worship. But it cannot be denied, that the Oriental churches are depressed under their iron

C H A P.
LVIII.
Justice of the crusades?

The Thesaurarius de Acquisitione Terræ Sanctæ (tom. vii. p. 664—848.). The last of these was unknown to a late French historian, who has given a large and critical list of the writers of the crusades (Esprit des Croisades, tom. i. p. 13—141.), and most of whose judgments my own experience will allow me to ratify. It was late before I could obtain a sight of the French historians collected by Duchesne. I. Petri Tudebodi Sacerdotis Sivracenſis Hiſtoria de Hieroſolymitano Itinere (tom. iv. p. 773—815.), has been transfused into the first anonymous writer of Bongarsius. II. The Metrical History of the first Crusade, in vii books (p. 890—912.), is of small value or account.

<sup>22</sup> If the reader will turn to the first scene of the first part of Henry the Fourth, he will see in the text of Shakspeare the natural feelings of enthusiasm; and in the notes of Dr. Johnson, the workings of a bigotted though vigorous mind, greedy of every pretence to hate and persecute those who dissent from his creed.

C H A P.
LVIII.

yoke; that, in peace and war, they assert a divine and indefeasible claim of universal empire; and that, in their orthodox creed, the unbelieving nations are continually threatened with the loss of religion or liberty. In the eleventh century, the victorious arms of the Turks presented a real and urgent apprehension of these losses. They had subdued in less than thirty years the kingdoms of Asia, as far as Jerusalem and the Hellespont; and the Greek empire tottered on the verge of destruction. Besides an honest sympathy for their brethren, the Latins had a right and interest in the support of Constantinople, the most important barrier of the West; and the privilege of defence must reach to prevent, as well as to repel, an impending assault. But this salutary purpose might have been accomplished by a moderate succour; and our calmer reason must disclaim the innumerable hosts and remote operations, which overwhelmed Asia and depopulated Europe. II. Palestine could add nothing to the strength or safety of the Latins; and fanaticism alone could pretend to justify the conquest of that distant and narrow province. The Christians affirmed that their inalienable title to the promised land had been sealed by the blood of their divine Saviour: it was their right and duty to rescue their inheritance from the unjust possessors, who profaned his sepulchre, and oppressed the pilgrimage of his disciples. Vainly would it be alleged that the pre-eminence of Jerusalem, and the sanctity of Palestine, have been abolished with the Mosaic law; that the God of the Christians is not a local deity, and that the recovery of Bethlem or Calvary, his cradle or his tomb, will not atone for the violation of the moral precepts of the gospel. Such arguments glance aside from the leaden shield of superstition; and the religious mind will not easily relinquish its hold on the sacred ground of mystery and miracle. III. But the holy wars which have been waged in every climate of the globe, from Egypt to Livonia, and from Peru to Hindostan, require the support of some more general and flexible tenet. It has been often supposed, and sometimes affirmed, that a difference of religion is a worthy cause of hostility; that obstinate unbelievers may be slain or subdued by the champions of the cross; and that grace is the sole fountain of dominion as well as of mercy. Above four hundred years before the first crusade, the eastern and western provinces of the Roman empire had been acquired about the same time, and in the same manner, by the Barbarians of Germany and Arabia. Time and treaties had legitimated the conquests of the Christian Franks; but in the eyes of their subjects and neighbours, the Mahometan princes were still tyrants and usurpers, who, by the arms of war or rebellion, might be lawfully driven from their unlawful possession<sup>21</sup>.

As the manners of the Christians were relaxed, their discipline of penance<sup>22</sup> was enforced; and with the multiplication of sins, the remedies were multiplied. In the primitive church, a voluntary and open confession prepared the work of atonement. In the middle ages, the bishops and priests interrogated the criminal; compelled him to account for his thoughts, words, and actions; and prescribed the terms of his reconciliation with God. But as this discretionary power might alternately be abused by indulgence and tyranny, a rule of discipline was framed, to inform and regulate the spiritual judges. This mode of legislation was invented by the Greeks; their penitentials<sup>23</sup> were translated, or imitated, in the Latin church; and, in the time of Charlemagne, the clergy of every diocese were provided with a code, which they prudently concealed from the knowledge of the vulgar. In this dangerous estimate of crimes

Spiritual motives and indulgences.

<sup>21</sup> The sixth Discourse of Fleury on Ecclesiastical History (p. 223—261.) contains an accurate and rational view of the causes and effects of the crusades.

<sup>22</sup> The penance, indulgences, &c. of the middle ages are amply discussed by Muratori (Antiquitat. Italiae medii Aevi, tom. v. differt. lxxviii. p. 709—768.), and by M. Chais (Lettres sur les Jubiles et les Indulgences, tom. ii. lettres 21 & 22. p. 478—556.), with this difference, that the abuses of superstition are mildly, perhaps faintly, exposed by the learned Italian, and peevishly magnified by the Dutch minister.

<sup>23</sup> Schmidt (Histoire des Allemands, tom. ii. p. 211—220. 452—462.) gives an abstract of the Penitential of Regino in the ninth, and of Burchard in the tenth, century. In one year, five-and-thirty murders were perpetrated at Worms.

C H A P.
LVIII.

and punishments, each case was supposed, each difference was remarked, by the experience or penetration of the monks; some sins are enumerated which innocence could not have suspected, and others which reason cannot believe; and the more ordinary offences of fornication and adultery, of perjury and sacrilege, of rapine and murder, were expiated by a penance, which, according to the various circumstances, was prolonged from forty days to seven years. During this term of mortification, the patient was healed, the criminal was absolved, by a salutary regimen of fasts and prayers: the disorder of his dress was expressive of grief and remorse; and he humbly abstained from all the business and pleasure of social life. But the rigid execution of these laws would have depopulated the palace, the camp, and the city: the Barbarians of the West believed and trembled; but nature often rebelled against principle; and the magistrate laboured without effect to enforce the jurisdiction of the priest. A literal accomplishment of penance was indeed impracticable; the guilt of adultery was multiplied by daily repetition; that of homicide might involve the massacre of a whole people; each act was separately numbered; and, in those times of anarchy and vice, a modest sinner might easily incur a debt of three hundred years. His insolvency was relieved by a commutation, or indulgence: a year of penance was appreciated at twenty-six solidi<sup>24</sup> of silver, about four pounds sterling, for the rich; at three solidi, or nine shillings, for the indigent: and these alms were soon appropriated to the use of the church, which derived, from the redemption of sins, an inexhaustible source of opulence and dominion. A debt of three hundred years, or twelve hundred pounds, was enough to impoverish a plentiful fortune; the scarcity of gold and silver was supplied by the alienation of land; and the princely donations of Pepin and Charlemagne are expressly given for the remedy of their

<sup>24</sup> Till the xiiith century, we may support the clear account of xii denarii, or pence, to the solidus, or shilling; and xx solidi to the pound weight of silver, about the pound sterling. Our money is diminished to a third, and the French to a fiftieth, of this primitive standard.

C H A P.
LVIII.

soul. It is a maxim of the civil law, that whosoever cannot pay with his purse, must pay with his body; and the practice of flagellation was adopted by the monks, a cheap, though painful, equivalent. By a fantastic arithmetic, a year of penance was taxed at three thousand lashes<sup>25</sup>; and such was the skill and patience of a famous hermit, St. Dominic of the Iron Cuirass<sup>26</sup>, that in six days he could discharge an entire century, by a whipping of three hundred thousand stripes. His example was followed by many penitents of both sexes; and, as a vicarious sacrifice was accepted, a sturdy disciplinarian might expiate on his own back the sins of his benefactors<sup>27</sup>. These compensations of the purse and the person introduced, in the eleventh century, a more honourable mode of satisfaction. The merit of military service against the Saracens of Africa and Spain, had been allowed by the predecessors of Urban the second. In the council of Clermont, that pope proclaimed a plenary indulgence to those who should enlist under the banner of the cross; the absolution of all their sins, and a full receipt for all that might be due of canonical penance<sup>28</sup>. The cold philosophy of modern times is incapable of feeling the impression that was made on a sinful and fanatic world. At the voice of their pastor, the robber, the incendiary, the homicide, arose by thousands to redeem their souls, by repeating on the infidels the same deeds which they had exercised against their Christian brethren; and the terms of atonement were eagerly embraced by offenders of every rank and

<sup>25</sup> Each century of lashes was sanctified with the recital of a psalm; and the whole Psalter, with the accompaniment of 15,000 stripes, was equivalent to five years.

<sup>26</sup> The Life and Achievements of St. Dominic Loricatus, was composed by his friend and admirer, Peter Damianus. See Fleury, Hist. Eccles. tom. xiii. p. 96—104. Baronius, A. D. 1056, N<sup>o</sup> 7. who observes from Damianus, how fashionable, even among ladies of quality (sublimis generis), this expiation (purgatorii genus) was grown.

<sup>27</sup> At a quarter, or even half a rial a lash,

Sancho Panza was a cheaper, and possibly not a more dishonest, workman. I remember in Père Labat (Voyages en Italie, tom. vii. p. 16—29.) a very lively picture of the dexterity of one of these artists.

<sup>28</sup> Quicumque pro solâ devotione, non pro honoris vel pecuniæ adeptione, ad liberandam ecclesiam Dei Jerusalem profectus fuerit, iter illud pro omni pœnitentia reputetur. Canon. Concil. Claromont. ii. p. 829. Guibert styles it novum salutis genus (p. 471.), and is almost philosophical on the subject.

C. H. A. P.
LXIII.

denomination. None were pure; none were exempt from the guilt and penalty of sin; and those who were the least amenable to the justice of God and the church, were the best entitled to the temporal and eternal recompence of their pious courage. If they fell, the spirit of the Latin clergy did not hesitate to adorn their tomb with the crown of martyrdom<sup>29</sup>; and should they survive, they could expect without impatience the delay and increase of their heavenly reward. They offered their blood to the Son of God, who had laid down his life for their salvation: they took up the cross, and entered with confidence into the way of the Lord. His providence would watch over their safety; perhaps his visible and miraculous power would smooth the difficulties of their holy enterprise. The cloud and pillar of Jehovah had marched before the Israelites into the promised land. Might not the Christians more reasonably hope that the rivers would open for their passage; that the walls of the strongest cities would fall at the sound of their trumpets; and that the sun would be arrested in his mid-career, to allow them time for the destruction of the infidels?

Temporal and carnal
motives.

Of the chiefs and soldiers who marched to the holy sepulchre, I will dare to affirm, that all were prompted by the spirit of enthusiasm; the belief of merit, the hope of reward, and the assurance of divine aid. But I am equally persuaded, that in many it was not the sole, that in some it was not the leading, principle of action. The use and abuse of religion are feeble to stem, they are strong and irresistible to impel, the stream of national manners. Against the private wars of the Barbarians, their bloody tournaments, licentious loves, and judicial duels, the popes and synods might ineffectually thunder. It is a more easy task to provoke the metaphysical disputes of the Greeks, to drive into the cloister the victims of anarchy or despotism, to sanctify the patience of slaves and cowards, or to assume the merit of the humanity and benevolence of modern Christians. War and exercise were the reigning passions of the Franks or Latins; they were enjoined, as a penance, to gratify those passions, to visit distant lands, and to draw their swords against the nations of the East. Their victory, or even their attempt, would immortalise the names of the intrepid heroes of the cross; and the purest piety could not be insensible to the most splendid prospect of military glory. In the petty quarrels of Europe, they shed the blood of their friends and countrymen, for the acquisition perhaps of a castle or a village. They could march with alacrity against the distant and hostile nations who were devoted to their arms: their fancy already grasped the golden sceptres of Asia; and the conquest of Apulia and Sicily by the Normans might exalt to royalty the hopes of the most private adventurer. Christendom, in her rudest state, must have yielded to the climate and cultivation of the Mahometan countries; and their natural and artificial wealth had been magnified by the tales of pilgrims, and the gifts of an imperfect commerce. The vulgar, both the great and small, were taught to believe every wonder, of lands flowing with milk and honey, of mines and treasures, of gold and diamonds, of palaces of marble and jasper, and of odoriferous groves of cinnamon and frankincense. In this earthly paradise, each warrior depended on his sword to carve a plentiful and honourable establishment, which he measured only by the extent of his wishes<sup>30</sup>. Their vassals and soldiers trusted their fortunes to God and their master: the spoils of a Turkish emir might enrich the meanest follower of the camp; and the flavour of the wines, the beauty of the Grecian women<sup>31</sup>, were temptations more adapted to the nature,

<sup>29</sup> Such at least was the belief of the crusaders, and such is the uniform style of the historians (Esprit des Croisades, tom. iii. p. 477); but the prayers for the repose of their souls, is inconsistent in orthodox theology with the merits of martyrdom.

C H A P.
LVIII.

<sup>30</sup> The same hopes were displayed in the letters of the adventurers ad animandas res in Francia residant. Hugh de Reitefle could boast, that his share amounted to one abbey and ten castles, of the yearly value of 1500 marks, and that he should acquire an hundred castles by the conquest of Aleppo (Guiberti, P. 554, 555).

<sup>31</sup> In his genuine or fictitious letter to the count of Flanders, Alexis mingles with the danger of the church, and the relics of saints, the auri et argenti amor, and pulcherrimarum feminarum voluptas (p. 471); as it signifies the indignant Guibert, the Greek women were handsomer than more of France.

than

C H A P.
LVIII.

than to the profession, of the champions of the cross. The love of freedom was a powerful incitement to the multitudes who were oppressed by feudal or ecclesiastical tyranny. Under this holy sign the peasants and burghers, who were attached to the servitude of the glebe, might escape from an haughty lord, and transplant themselves and their families to a land of liberty. The monk might release himself from the discipline of his convent: the debtor might suspend the accumulation of usury, and the pursuit of his creditors; and outlaws and malefactors of every cast might continue to brave the laws and elude the punishment of their crimes<sup>32</sup>.

Influence of example.

These motives were potent and numerous: when we have singly computed their weight on the mind of each individual, we must add the infinite series, the multiplying powers of example and fashion. The first proselytes became the warmest and most effectual missionaries of the cross: among their friends and countrymen they preached the duty, the merit, and the recompence, of their holy vow; and the most reluctant hearers were insensibly drawn within the whirlpool of persuasion and authority. The martial youths were fired by the reproach or suspicion of cowardice; the opportunity of visiting with an army the sepulchre of Christ, was embraced by the old and infirm, by women and children, who consulted rather their zeal than their strength; and those who in the evening had derided the folly of their companions, were the most eager, the ensuing day, to tread in their footsteps. The ignorance, which magnified the hopes, diminished the perils, of the enterprise. Since the Turkish conquest, the paths of pilgrimage were obliterated; the chiefs themselves had an imperfect notion of the length of the way and the state of their enemies; and such was the stupidity of the people, that, at the sight of the first city or castle beyond the limits of their knowledge, they were ready to ask whether that was not the Jeru-

<sup>32</sup> See the privileges of the Crucesignati, freedom from debt, usury, injury, secular justice, &c. The pope was their perpetual guardian (Ducange, tom. ii. p. 651, 652.).

falem,

fales, the term and object of their labours. Yet the more prudent of the crusaders, who were not sure that they should be fed from heaven with a shower of quails or manna, provided themselves with those precious metals, which, in every country, are the representatives of every commodity. To defray, according to their rank, the expences of the road, princes alienated their provinces, nobles their lands and castles, peasants their cattle and the instruments of husbandry. The value of property was depreciated by the eager competition of multitudes; while the price of arms and horses was raised to an exorbitant height by the wants and impatience of the buyers<sup>33</sup>. Those who remained at home, with sense and money, were enriched by the epidemical disease: the sovereigns acquired at a cheap rate the domains of their vassals; and the ecclesiastical purchasers completed the payment by the assurance of their prayers. The cross, which was commonly sewed on the garment, in cloth or silk, was inscribed by some zealots on their skin: an hot iron, or indelible liquor, was applied to perpetuate the mark; and a crafty monk, who shewed the miraculous impression on his breast, was repaid with the popular veneration and the richest benefices of Palestine<sup>34</sup>.

The fifteenth of August had been fixed in the council of Clermont for the departure of the pilgrims: but the day was anticipated by the thoughtless and needy crowd of plebeians; and I shall briefly dispatch the calamities which they inflicted and suffered, before I enter on the more serious and successful enterprise of the chiefs. Early in the spring, from the confines of France and Lorraine, above sixty thousand of the populace of both sexes flocked round the first mis-

C H A P.
LVIII.

Departure of the first crusaders,
A. D. 1096,
March, May,
&c.

<sup>33</sup> Guibert (p. 481.) paints in lively colours this general emotion. He was one of the few contemporaries who had genius enough to feel the astonishing scenes that were passing before their eyes. Erat itaque videre miraculum caro omnes emere, atque vili vendere, &c.

<sup>34</sup> Some instances of these figmata are given in the Esprit des Croisades (tom. iii. p. 169, &c.), from authors whom I have not seen.

C H A P.
LVIII.

tionary of the crusade, and pressed him with clamorous importunity to lead them to the holy sepulchre. The hermit, assuming the character, without the talents or authority, of a general, impelled or obeyed the forward impulse of his votaries along the banks of the Rhine and Danube. Their wants and numbers soon compelled them to separate, and his lieutenant, Walter the Pennylefs, a valiant though needy foldier, conducted a vanguard of pilgrims, whose condition may be determined from the proportion of eight horsemen to fifteen thousand foot. The example and footsteps of Peter were closely pursued by another fanatic, the monk Godescal, whose sermons had swept away fifteen or twenty thousand peasants from the villages of Germany. Their rear was again pressed by an herd of two hundred thousand, the most stupid and savage refuse of the people, who mingled with their devotion a brutal licence of rapine, prostitution, and drunkenness. Some counts and gentlemen, at the head of three thousand horse, attended the motions of the multitude to partake in the spoil; but their genuine leaders (may we credit such folly?) were a goose and a goat, who were carried in the front, and to whom these worthy Christians ascribed an infusion of the divine spirit<sup>35</sup>. Of these, and of other bands of enthusiasts, the first and most easy warfare was against the Jews, the murderers of the Son of God. In the trading cities of the Moselle and the Rhine, their colonies were numerous and rich; and they enjoyed, under the protection of the emperor and the bishops, the free exercise of their religion<sup>36</sup>. At Verdun, Treves, Mentz, Spires, Worms, many <sup>35</sup> Fuit et aliud scelus detestabile in hac congregatione pedestris populi stulti et vesana levitatis, anferem quendam divino spiritu affertebant afflatum, et capellam non minus eodem repletam, et has sibi duces secundæ viæ fecerant, &c. (Albert. Aquensis, l. i. c. 51. p. 196.) Had these peasants founded an empire, they might have introduced, as in Egypt, the worship of animals, which their philosophic descendants would have glossed over with some specious and subtle allegory.

<sup>36</sup> Benjamin of Tudela describes the state of his Jewish brethren from Cologne along the Rhine: they were rich, generous, learned, hospitable, and lived in the eager hope of the Messiah (Voyage, tom. i. p. 243—245. par Baratier). In seventy years (he wrote about A. D. 1170) they had recovered from these massacres.

thousands

thousands of that unhappy people were pillaged and massacred<sup>37</sup>: nor had they felt a more bloody stroke since the persecution of Hadrian. A remnant was saved by the firmness of their bishops, who accepted a feigned and transient conversion; but the more obstinate Jews opposed their fanaticism to the fanaticism of the Christians, barricaded their houses, and precipitating themselves, their families, and their wealth, into the rivers or the flames, disappointed the malice, or at least the avarice, of their implacable foes.

C H A P.
LVIII.

Between the frontiers of Austria and the seat of the Byzantine monarchy, the crusaders were compelled to traverse an interval of six hundred miles; the wild and desolate countries of Hungary<sup>38</sup> and Bulgaria. The soil is fruitful, and intersected with rivers; but it was then covered with morasses and forests, which spread to a boundless extent, whenever man has ceased to exercise his dominion over the earth. Both nations had imbibed the rudiments of Christianity; the Hungarians were ruled by their native princes; the Bulgarians by a lieutenant of the Greek emperor; but, on the slightest provocation, their ferocious nature was rekindled, and ample provocation was afforded by the disorders of the first pilgrims. Agriculture must have been unskilful and languid among a people, whose cities were built of reeds and timber, which were deserted in the summer season for the tents of hunters and shepherds. A scanty supply of provisions was rudely demanded, forcibly seized, and greedily consumed; and on the first quarrel, the crusaders gave a loose to indignation and revenge. But their ignorance of the country, of war, and of discipline, exposed them to every snare. The Greek præfect of Bulgaria commanded a regular force; at the trumpet of the Hungarian

Their destruction in Hungary and Asia,
A. D. 1096.

<sup>37</sup> These massacres and depredations on the Jews, which were renewed at each crusade, are coolly related. It is true, that St. Bernard (epist. 363. tom. i. p. 329.) admonishes the Oriental Franks, non sunt persequendi Judæi, non sunt trucidandi. The contrary doctrine had been preached by a rival monk.

<sup>38</sup> See the contemporary description of Hungary in Otho of Frisingen, l. ii. c. 31. in Muratori, Script. Rerum Italicarum, tom. vi. p. 665, 666.

C H A P.
LVIII.

king, the eighth or the tenth of his martial subjects bent their bows and mounted on horseback; their policy was insidious, and their retaliation on these pious robbers was unrelenting and bloody<sup>39</sup>. About a third of the naked fugitives, and the hermit Peter was of the number, escaped to the Thracian mountains; and the emperor, who respected the pilgrimage and succour of the Latins, conducted them by secure and easy journies to Constantinople, and advised them to await the arrival of their brethren. For a while they remembered their faults and losses; but no sooner were they revived by the hospitable entertainment, than their venom was again inflamed; they stung their benefactor, and neither gardens, nor palaces, nor churches, were safe from their depredations. For his own safety, Alexius allured them to pass over to the Asiatic side of the Bosphorus; but their blind impetuosity soon urged them to desert the station which he had assigned, and to rush headlong against the Turks, who occupied the road of Jerusalem. The hermit, conscious of his shame, had withdrawn from the camp to Constantinople; and his lieutenant, Walter the Pennylefs, who was worthy of a better command, attempted without success to introduce some order and prudence among the herd of savages. They separated in quest of prey, and themselves fell an easy prey to the arts of the sultan. By a rumour that their foremost companions were rioting in the spoils of his capital, Soliman tempted the main body to descend into the plain of Nice; they were overwhelmed by the Turkish arrows; and a pyramid of bones<sup>40</sup> informed their companions of the place of their defeat. Of the first crusaders, three hundred thousand had already perished, before a single city was rescued from the infidels, before their graver and more noble brethren had completed the preparations of their enterprize <sup>41</sup>.

<sup>39</sup> The old Hungarians, without excepting Turotzius, are ill informed of the first crusade, which they involve in a single passage. Katona, like ourselves, can only quote the writers of France; but he compares with local science the ancient and modern geography. Ante portam Cyperon, is Sopron or Pofon; Mallevilla, Zemlin; Fluvius Maroz, Savus;

Lintax, Leith; Mesebroch, or Merseburg, Ouar, or Mofon; Tollenburg, Pragg (de Regibus Hungariae, tom. iii. p. 19—53.).

<sup>40</sup> Anna Comnena (Alexias, l. x. p. 287.) describes this οταν κελωιος as a mountain εψηλον και βλοιο και πλατις αξιολογωτατοι. In the siege of Nice, such were used by the Franks themselves as the materials of a wall.

C H A P.
LVIII.

None of the great sovereigns of Europe embarked their persons in the first crusade. The emperor Henry the fourth was not disposed to obey the summons of the pope: Philip the first of France was occupied by his pleasures; William Rufus of England by a recent conquest; the kings of Spain were engaged in a domestic war against the Moors; and the northern monarchs of Scotland, Denmark <sup>42</sup>, Sweden, and Poland, were yet strangers to the passions and interests of the South. The religious ardour was more strongly felt by the princes of the second order, who held an important place in the feudal system. Their situation will naturally cast under four distinct heads the review of their names and characters; but I may escape some needless repetition, by observing at once, that courage and the exercise of arms are the common attribute of these Christian adven-

The chiefs of
the first crusade.

<sup>41</sup> To save time and space, I shall represent, in a short table, the particular references to the great events of the first crusade.

	The Crowd.	The Chiefs.	The Road to Constantinople.	Alexius.	Nice and Asia Minor.	Edeffa.	Antioch.	The Battle.	The Holy Lance.	Conquest of Jerusalem.
Francorum	p. 1, 2.	p. 2.	p. 2, 3.	p. 4, 5.	p. 5-7.	—	p. 9-15.	p. 15-22.	p. 18-20.	p. 26-29.
ertus Monachus	p. 33, 34.	p. 35, 36.	p. 36, 37.	p. 37, 38.	p. 39-45.	—	p. 45-55.	p. 56-66.	p. 61, 62.	p. 74-81.
driens	p. 89.	—	p. 91-93.	p. 91-94.	p. 94-101.	—	p. 101, 111.	p. 111-122.	p. 110-119.	p. 130-138.
imundus des	—	—	p. 139, 140.	p. 140, 141.	p. 142.	—	p. 142-149.	p. 149-155.	p. 150.	p. 175-183.
iles	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	p. 152, 156.	—
ertus Aquensis	l. i. c. 7-31.	—	l. ii. c. 1-8.	{ l. ii. c. } { 9-19. }	{ l. ii. c. 20-43. } { l. iii. c. 1-4. }	{ l. iii. c. 5-32. } { l. iv. 9. 12. } { l. v. 15-22. }	{ l. iii. c. 33 } { —66. iv. } { 1-26. }	{ l. iv. c. 7 } { 7-56. }	l. iv. c. 43.	{ l. v. c. 45. } { lvi. c. 1-11. }
cherius Car-	p. 384.	—	p. 385, 386.	p. 386.	p. 387-389.	p. 389, 390.	p. 390-392.	p. 392-395.	p. 392.	p. 390-411.
tenfis	p. 482, 485.	—	p. 485, 489.	p. 485-490.	{ p. 491-493. } { 408. }	p. 496, 497.	{ p. 498. } { 506, 512. }	p. 512-523.	{ p. 520. } { 530, 553. }	p. 523-537.
uibertus	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
illelmus	l. i. c. 18-30.	l. i. c. 17.	{ l. iii. c. 1-4. } { 13, 17, 22. }	l. ii. c. 5-23.	{ l. iii. c. 1-12. } { l. iv. c. 13-25. }	l. iv. c. 1-6.	{ l. iv. 9-24. } { l. v. 1-23. }	l. vi. c. 1-23.	l. v. c. 14.	{ l. vi. c. 1-27. } { lvi. c. 1-27. }
renfis	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
ulphus Cal-	—	c. 1-3, 15.	c. 4-7, 17.	{ c. 8-13. } { 18, 19. }	{ c. 14-16. } { 21-47. }	—	c. 48-71.	c. 72-91.	c. 100-100.	c. 111-138.
menfis	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
ardus The-	c. 7-11.	—	c. 11-20.	c. 11-20.	c. 21-25.	c. 26.	c. 27-38.	c. 39-52.	c. 45.	c. 54-77.
rrarius	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—

<sup>42</sup> The author of the Esprit des Croisades by sultan Soliman in Cappadocia, but who has doubted, and might have disbelieved, still lives in the poem of Tasso (tom. iv. the crusade and tragic death of prince Sueno, p. 111-115.), with 1500 or 15,000 Danes, who was cut off turers.

C H A P.
LVIII.
I. Godfrey of Bouillon.

turers. I. The first rank both in war and council is justly due to Godfrey of Bouillon; and happy would it have been for the crusaders, if they had trusted themselves to the sole conduct of that accomplished hero, a worthy representative of Charlemagne, from whom he was descended in the female line. His father was of the noble race of the counts of Boulogne: Brabant, the lower province of Lorraine<sup>43</sup>, was the inheritance of his mother; and by the emperor's bounty, he was himself invested with that ducal title, which has been improperly transferred to his lordship of Bouillon in the Ardennes<sup>44</sup>. In the service of Henry the fourth, he bore the great standard of the empire, and pierced with his lance the breast of Rodolph, the rebel king: Godfrey was the first who ascended the walls of Rome; and his sickness, his vow, perhaps his remorse for bearing arms against the pope, confirmed an early resolution of visiting the holy sepulchre, not as a pilgrim, but a deliverer. His valour was matured by prudence and moderation; his piety, though blind, was sincere; and, in the tumult of a camp, he practised the real and fictitious virtues of a convent. Superior to the private factions of the chiefs, he reserved his enmity for the enemies of Christ; and though he gained a kingdom by the attempt, his pure and disinterested zeal was acknowledged by his rivals. Godfrey of Bouillon<sup>45</sup> was accompanied by his two brothers, by Eustace the elder, who had succeeded to the county of Boulogne, and by the younger, Baldwin, a character of more ambiguous virtue. The duke of Lorraine was alike celebrated on either side of the Rhine: from his birth and education he was equally conversant with the French and Teutonic

<sup>43</sup> The fragments of the kingdoms of Lotharingia, or Lorraine, were broken into the two duchies, of the Moselle, and of the Meuse; the first has preserved its name, which in the latter has been changed into that of Brabant (Valef. Notit. Gall. p. 283—288.).

<sup>44</sup> See, in the Description of France, by the Abbe de Longuerue, the articles of Bou-

logne, part i. p. 54. Brabant, part ii. p. 47, 48. Bouillon, p. 134. On his departure, Godfrey sold or pawned Bouillon to the church for 1300 marks.

<sup>45</sup> See the family character of Godfrey, in William of Tyre, l. ix. c. 5—8.; his previous design on Guibert (p. 485.), his sickness and vow, in Bernard. Theaur. (c. 78.).

languages :

languages: the barons of France, Germany, and Lorraine, assembled their vassals; and the confederate force that marched under his banner was composed of fourscore thousand foot and about ten thousand horse.

C H A P.
LVIII.

II. In the parliament that was held at Paris, in the king's presence, about two months after the council of Clermont, Hugh count of Vermandois was the most conspicuous of the princes who assumed the cross. But the appellation of the great was applied, not so much to his merit or possessions (though neither were contemptible), as to the royal birth of the brother of the king of France<sup>46</sup>. Robert duke of Normandy was the eldest son of William the Conqueror; but on his father's death he was deprived of the kingdom of England, by his own indolence and the activity of his brother Rufus. The worth of Robert was degraded by an excessive levity and easiness of temper: his cheerfulness seduced him to the indulgence of pleasure; his profuse liberality impoverished the prince and people; his indiscriminate clemency multiplied the number of offenders; and the amiable qualities of a private man became the essential defects of a sovereign. For the trifling sum of ten thousand marks he mortgaged Normandy during his absence to the English usurper<sup>47</sup>; but his engagement and behaviour in the holy war, announced in Robert a reformation of manners, and restored him in some degree to the public esteem. Another Robert was count of Flanders, a royal province, which, in this century, gave three queens to the thrones of France, England, and Denmark: he was surnamed the sword and lance of the Christians; but in the exploits of a soldier, he sometimes forgot the duties of a general. Stephen, count of Chartres, of Blois, and of Troyes, was one of the richest princes of the age;

II. Hugh of Vermandoi, Robert of Normandy, Robert of Flanders, Stephen of Chartres, &c.

<sup>46</sup> Anna Comnena supposes, that Hugh was proud of his nobility, riches, and power (l. x. p. 288.): the two last articles appear more equivocal; but an εὐγενία, which seven hundred years ago was famous in the palace of Constantinople, attests the ancient dignity of the Capetian family of France.

<sup>47</sup> Will. Gemeticensis, l. vii. c. 7. p. 672,

673. in Camden. Normanicis. He pawned the duchy for one hundredth part of the present yearly revenue. Ten thousand marks may be equal to five hundred thousand livres, and Normandy annually yields fifty-seven millions to the king (Necker, Administration des Finances, tom. i. p. 287.).

C H A P.
LVIII.

III. Raymond of Tholoufe.

and the number of his castles has been compared to the three hundred and sixty-five days of the year. His mind was improved by literature; and in the council of the chiefs, the eloquent Stephen<sup>48</sup> was chosen to discharge the office of their president. These four were the principal leaders of the French, the Normans, and the pilgrims of the British isles: but the list of the barons who were possessed of three or four towns, would exceed, says a contemporary, the catalogue of the Trojan war<sup>49</sup>. III. In the south of France, the command was assumed by Adhemar, bishop of Puy, the pope's legate, and by Raymond, count of St. Giles and Tholoufe, who added the prouder titles of duke of Narbonne and marquis of Provence. The former was a respectable prelate, alike qualified for this world and the next. The latter was a veteran warrior, who had fought against the Saracens of Spain, and who consecrated his declining age, not only to the deliverance, but to the perpetual service, of the holy sepulchre. His experience and riches gave him a strong ascendant in the Christian camp, whose distress he was often able, and sometimes willing, to relieve. But it was easier for him to extort the praise of the Infidels, than to preserve the love of his subjects and associates. His eminent qualities were clouded by a temper, haughty, envious, and obstinate; and, though he resigned an ample patrimony, for the cause of God, his piety, in the public opinion, was not exempt from avarice and ambition<sup>50</sup>. A mercantile, rather than a martial spirit, prevailed among his provincials<sup>51</sup>, a common name, which included the natives of Auvergne and Languedoc<sup>52</sup>, the vassals

of

<sup>48</sup> His original letter to his wife, is inserted in the Spicilegium of Dom. Luc. d'Acheri, tom. iv. and quoted in the Esprit des Croisades, tom. i. p. 63.

<sup>49</sup> Unius enim, duum, trium seu quatuor oppidorum dominos quis numeret? quorum tanta fuit copia, ut non vix totidem Trojana obsidio coegisse putetur (Ever the lively and interesting Guibert, p. 486.).

<sup>50</sup> It is singular enough, that Raymond of St. Giles, a second character in the genuine history of the crusades, should shine as the first of heroes in the writings of the Greeks (Anna Comnen. Alexiad. l. x, xi.) and the Arabians (Longueruana, p. 129.).

<sup>51</sup> Omnes de Burgundiâ, et Alverniâ, et Vasconiâ, et Gothi (of Languedoc), provinciales appellabantur, ceteri vero Francigenæ et hoc in exercitu; inter hostes autem Franci dicebantur. Raymond des Agiles, p. 144.

<sup>52</sup> The town of his birth, or first appanage, was consecrated to St. Ægidius, whose name, of the kingdom of Burgundy or Arles. From the adjacent frontier of Spain, he drew a band of hardy adventurers; as he marched through Lombardy, a crowd of Italians flocked to his standard, and his united force consisted of one hundred thousand horse and foot. If Raymond was the first to enlist and the last to depart, the delay may be excused by the greatness of his preparation and the promise of an everlasting farewell. IV. The name of Bohemond, the son of Robert Guiscard, was already famous by his double victory over the Greek emperor: but his father's will had reduced him to the principality of Tarentum, and the remembrance of his Eastern trophies, till he was awakened by the rumour and passage of the French pilgrims. It is in the person of this Norman chief that we may seek for the coolest policy and ambition with a small alloy of religious fanaticism. His conduct may justify a belief that he had secretly directed the design of the pope, which he affected to second with astonishment and zeal: at the siege of Amalphi, his example and discourse inflamed the passions of a confederate army; he instantly tore his garment to supply crosses for the numerous candidates, and prepared to visit Constantinople and Asia at the head of ten thousand horse and twenty thousand foot. Several princes of the Norman race accompanied this veteran general; and his cousin Tancred<sup>53</sup> was the partner, rather than the servant, of the war. In the accomplished character of Tancred, we discover all the virtues of a perfect knight<sup>54</sup>, the true spirit of chivalry, which inspired the generous as early as the first crusade, was corrupted by the French into St. Gilles, or St. Giles. It is situate in the Lower Languedoc, between Nismes and the Rhône, and still boasts a collegiate church of the foundation of Raymond (Melanges tirés d'une grande Bibliothèque, tom. xxxvii. p. 51.).

IV. Bohemond and Tancred.

<sup>53</sup> The mother of Tancred was Emma, sister of the great Robert Guiscard; his father, the marquis Odo the Good. It is singular enough, that the family and country of so illustrious a person should be unknown; but Muratori reasonably conjectures that he was an Italian, and perhaps of the race of the marquises of Montferrat in Piedmont (Script. tom. v. p. 281, 282.).

<sup>54</sup> To gratify the childish vanity of the house of Este, Tasso has inserted in his poem, and in the first crusade, a fabulous hero, the brave and amorous Rinaldo (x. 75-generous sentiments and social offices of man, far better than the base philosophy, or the baser religion, of the times.

C H A P.
LVIII.

Chivalry.

Between the age of Charlemagne and that of the crusades, a revolution had taken place among the Spaniards, the Normans, and the French, which was gradually extended to the rest of Europe. The service of the infantry was degraded to the plebeians; the cavalry formed the strength of the armies, and the honourable name of miles, or soldier, was confined to the gentlemen<sup>55</sup> who served on horseback, and were invested with the character of knighthood. The dukes and counts, who had usurped the rights of sovereignty, divided the provinces among their faithful barons: the barons distributed among their vassals the fiefs or benefices of their jurisdiction; and these military tenants, the peers of each other and of their lord, composed the noble or equestrian order, which disdained to conceive the peasant or burgher as of the same species with themselves. The dignity of their birth was preserved by pure and equal alliances; their sons alone, who could produce four quarters or lines of ancestry, without spot or reproach, might legally pretend to the honour of knighthood; but a valiant plebeian was sometimes enriched and ennobled by the sword, and became the father of a new race. A single knight could impart, according to his judgment, the character which he received; and the warlike sovereigns of Europe derived more glory from this personal distinction, than from the lustre of their diadem. This ceremony, of which some traces may be xvii. 66—94.). He might borrow his name from Rinaldo, with the Aquila bianca Estense, who vanquished, as the standard-bearer of the Roman church, the emperor Frederic I. (Storia Imperiale di Ricobaldo, in Muratori Script. Ital. tom. ix. p. 560. Ariosto, Orlando Furioso, iii. 30.). But, 1. The distance of sixty years between the youth of the two Rinaldos, destroys their identity. 2. The Storia Imperiale is a forgery of the conte Boyardo, at the end of the xvth century (Muratori, p. 281—289.). 3. This Rinaldo, and his exploits, are not less chimerical than the hero of Tasso (Muratori, Antichità Estense, tom. i. p. 350.).

<sup>55</sup> Of the words gentilis, gentilhomme, gentleman, two etymologies are produced: 1. From the Barbarians of the fifth century, the soldiers, and at length the conquerors of the Roman empire, who were vain of their foreign nobility; and, 2. From the sense of the civilians, who consider gentilis as synonymous with ingenuus. Selden inclines to the first, but the latter is more pure, as well as probable.

found in Tacitus and the woods of Germany<sup>56</sup>, was in its origin simple and profane; the candidate, after some previous trial, was invested with his sword and spurs; and his cheek or shoulder were touched with a slight blow, as an emblem of the last affront, which it was lawful for him to endure. But superstition mingled in every public and private action of life; in the holy wars, it sanctified the profession of arms; and the order of chivalry was assimilated in its rights and privileges to the sacred orders of priesthood. The bath and white garment of the novice, were an indecent copy of the regeneration of baptism: his sword, which he offered on the altar, was blessed by the ministers of religion; his solemn reception was preceded by fasts and vigils; and he was created a knight in the name of God, of St. George, and of St. Michael the archangel. He swore to accomplish the duties of his profession; and education, example, and the public opinion, were the inviolable guardians of his oath. As the champion of God and the ladies (I blush to unite such discordant names), he devoted himself to speak the truth; to maintain the right; to protect the distressed; to practise courtesy, a virtue less familiar to the ancients; to pursue the infidels; to despise the allurements of ease and safety; and to vindicate in every perilous adventure the honour of his character. The abuse of the same spirit provoked the illiterate knight to disdain the arts of industry and peace; to esteem himself the sole judge and avenger of his own injuries; and proudly to neglect the laws of civil society and military discipline. Yet the benefits of this institution, to refine the temper of Barbarians, and to infuse some principles, of faith, justice, and humanity, were strongly felt, and have been often observed. The asperity of national prejudice was softened; and the community of religion and arms spread a similar colour and generous emulation over the face of Christendom. Abroad, in enterprise and pilgrimage, at home in martial exercise.

C H A P.
LVIII.

<sup>56</sup> Framea scutoque juvenem ornant. Tacitus, Germania, c. 13.

C H A P.
LVIII.

the warriors of every country were perpetually associated ; and impartial taste must prefer a Gothic tournament to the Olympic games of classic antiquity<sup>57</sup>. Instead of the naked spectacles which corrupted the manners of the Greeks, and banished from the stadium the virgins and matrons ; the pompous decoration of the lists was crowned with the presence of chaste and high-born beauty, from whose hands the conqueror received the prize of his dexterity and courage. The skill and strength that were exerted in wrestling and boxing, bear a distant and doubtful relation to the merit of a soldier ; but the tournaments, as they were invented in France, and eagerly adopted both in the East and West, presented a lively image of the business of the field. The single combats, the general skirmish, the defence of a pass, or castle, were rehearsed as in actual service ; and the contest, both in real and mimic war, was decided by the superior management of the horse and lance. The lance was the proper and peculiar weapon of the knight : his horse was of a large and heavy breed ; but this charger, till he was roused by the approaching danger, was usually led by an attendant, and he quietly rode a pad or palfrey of a more easy pace. His helmet, and sword, his greaves, and buckler, it would be superfluous to describe ; but I may remark, that at the period of the crusades, the armour was less ponderous than in later times ; and that, instead of a massy cuirass, his breast was defended by an hauberk or coat of mail. When their long lances were fixed in the rest, the warriors furiously spurred their horses against the foe ; and the light cavalry of the Turks and Arabs could seldom stand against the direct and impetuous weight of their charge. Each knight was attended to the field by his faithful squire, a youth of equal birth and similar hopes ; he was followed by his archers and men at arms, and four, or five, or six foldiers, were computed as the furniture of a complete lance. In the expeditions to the neighbouring kingdoms or the Holy Land, the duties of the feudal tenure no longer subsisted; the voluntary service of the knights and their followers was either prompted by zeal or attachment, or purchased with rewards and promises; and the numbers of each squadron were measured by the power, the wealth, and the fame of each independent chieftain. They were distinguished by his banner, his armorial coat, and his cry of war; and the most ancient families of Europe must seek in these achievements the origin and proof of their nobility. In this rapid portrait of chivalry, I have been urged to anticipate on the story of the crusades, at once an effect, and a cause, of this memorable institution<sup>58</sup>.

<sup>57</sup> The athletic exercises, particularly the cœstus and pancratium, were condemned by Lycurgus, Philopœmen, and Galen, a law-giver, a general, and a physician. Against their authority and reasons, the reader may weigh the apology of Lucian, in the character of Solon. See West on the Olympic Games, in his Pindar, vol. ii. p. 86—96. 245—248.

Such were the troops, and such the leaders, who assumed the cross for the deliverance of the holy sepulchre. As soon as they were relieved by the absence of the plebeian multitude, they encouraged each other, by interviews and messages, to accomplish their vow and hasten their departure. Their wives and sisters were desirous of partaking the danger and merit of the pilgrimage; their portable treasures was conveyed in bars of silver and gold; and the princes and barons were attended by their equipage of hounds and hawks to amuse their leisure and to supply their table. The difficulty of procuring subsistence for so many myriads of men and horses, engaged them to separate their forces; their choice or situation determined the road; and it was agreed to meet in the neighbourhood of Constantinople, and from thence to begin their operations against the Turks. From the banks of the Meuse and the Moselle, Godfrey of Bouillon followed the direct way of Germany, Hungary, and Bulgaria: and, as long as he exercised the sole command, every step

C H A P.
LVIII.

March of the princes to Constantinople,
A. D. 1096,
August 15—
A. D. 1097,
May.

<sup>58</sup> On the curious subjects of knighthood, knights-service, nobility, arms, cry of war, banners, and tournaments, an ample fund of information may be sought in Selden (Opera, tom. iii. part i. Titles of Honour, part ii. c. 1. 3. 5. 8.), Ducange (Gloss. Latin. tom. iv. p. 398—412, &c. Dissertations sur Joinville (i. vi—xii. p. 127—142. p. 165—222.), and M. de St. Palaye (Memoires sur la Chevalerie).

afforded

C H A P.
LVIII.

afforded some proof of his prudence and virtue. On the confines of Hungary he was stopped three weeks by a Christian people, to whom the name, or at least the abuse, of the cross was justly odious. The Hungarians still smarted with the wounds which they had received from the first pilgrims: in their turn they had abused the right of defence and retaliation; and they had reason to apprehend a severe revenge from an hero of the same nation, and who was engaged in the same cause. But, after weighing the motives and the events, the virtuous duke was content to pity the crimes and misfortunes of his worthless brethren; and his twelve deputies, the messengers of peace, requested in his name a free passage and an equal market. To remove their suspicions, Godfrey trusted himself, and afterwards his brother, to the faith of Carloman king of Hungary, who treated them with a simple but hospitable entertainment: the treaty was sanctified by their common gospel; and a proclamation, under pain of death, restrained the animosity and licence of the Latin soldiers. From Austria to Belgrade, they traversed the plains of Hungary, without enduring or offering an injury; and the proximity of Carloman, who hovered on their flanks with his numerous cavalry, was a precaution not less useful for their safety than for his own. They reached the banks of the Save; and no sooner had they passed the river, than the king of Hungary restored the hostages, and saluted their departure with the fairest wishes for the success of their enterprise. With the same conduct and discipline, Godfrey pervaded the woods of Bulgaria and the frontiers of Thrace; and might congratulate himself, that he had almost reached the first term of his pilgrimage, without drawing his sword against a Christian adversary. After an easy and pleasant journey through Lombardy, from Turin to Aquileia, Raymond and his provincials marched forty days through the savage country of Dalmatia<sup>59</sup> and Sclavonia.

The

<sup>59</sup> The Familie Dalmaticæ of Ducange historians are recent and fabulous, the Greeks are meagre and imperfect; the national remote and careless. In the year 1104, Coloman

The weather was a perpetual fog; the land was mountainous and desolate; the natives were either fugitive or hostile: loose in their religion and government, they refused to furnish provisions or guides; murdered the stragglers; and exercised by night and day the vigilance of the count, who derived more security from the punishment of some captive robbers than from his interview and treaty with the prince of Scodra<sup>60</sup>. His march between Durazzo and Constantinople was harassed, without being stopped, by the peasants and soldiers of the Greek emperor; and the same faint and ambiguous hostility was prepared for the remaining chiefs, who passed the Adriatic from the coast of Italy. Bohemond had arms and vessels, and foresight and discipline; and his name was not forgotten in the provinces of Epirus and Thessaly. Whatever obstacles he encountered were surmounted by his military conduct and the valour of Tancred; and if the Norman prince affected to spare the Greeks, he gorged his soldiers with the full plunder of an heretical castle<sup>61</sup>. The nobles of France pressed forwards with the vain and thoughtless ardour of which their nation has been sometimes accused. From the Alps to Apulia the march of Hugh the Great, of the two Roberts, and of Stephen of Chartres, through a wealthy country, and amidst the applauding Catholics, was a devout or triumphant progress: they kissed the feet of the Roman pontiff; and the golden standard of St. Peter was delivered to the brother of the French

C H A P.
LVIII.

Coloman reduced the maritime country as far as Trau and Salona (Katona, Hist. Crit. tom. iii. p. 195—207.).

<sup>60</sup> Scodras appears in Livy as the capital and fortress of Gentius king of the Illyrians, arx munitissima, afterwards a Roman colony (Cellarius, tom. i. p. 393, 394.). It is now called Iscodar, or Scutari (d'Anville, Geographie Ancienne, tom. i. p. 164.). The sanjak (now a pasha) of Scutari, or Schendecire, was the eighth under the Beglerbeg of Romania, and furnished 600 soldiers on a revenue of 78,787 rix-dollars (Marfigli. Stato Militare del Impero Ottomano, p. 128.).

<sup>61</sup> In Pelagonia castrum hæreticum.... spoliatum cum suis habitatoribus igne combussere. Nec id eis injuria contigit: quia illorum detestabilis fermo et cancer serpebat, jamque circumjacentes regiones suo pravo dogmate sædaverat (Robert. Mon. p. 36, 37.). After coolly relating the fact, the archbishop Baldric adds, as a praise, Omnes siquidem illi viatores, Judeos, hæreticos, Saracenos æqualiter habent exosos; quos omnes appellant inimicos Dei (p. 92.)

monarchs.

C H A P.
LVIII.

monarch<sup>62</sup>. But in this visit of piety and pleasure, they neglected to secure the season, and the means, of their embarkation: the winter was insensibly lost; their troops were scattered and corrupted in the towns of Italy. They separately accomplished their passage, regardless of safety or dignity: and within nine months from the feast of the Assumption, the day appointed by Urban, all the Latin princes had reached Constantinople. But the count of Vermandois was produced as a captive; his foremost vessels were scattered by a tempest; and his person, against the law of nations, was detained by the lieutenants of Alexius. Yet the arrival of Hugh had been announced by four-and-twenty knights in golden armour, who commanded the emperor to revere the general of the Latin Christians, the brother of the King of kings<sup>63</sup>.

Policy of the emperor Alexius Com-
nenus,
A. D. 1096,
December—
A. D. 1097,
May.

In some Oriental tale I have read the fable of a shepherd, who was ruined by the accomplishment of his own wishes: he had prayed for water; the Ganges was turned into his grounds, and his flock and cottage were swept away by the inundation. Such was the fortune, or at least the apprehension, of the Greek emperor Alexius Comnenus, whose name has already appeared in this history, and whose conduct is so differently represented by his daughter Anne<sup>64</sup>, and by the Latin writers<sup>65</sup>. In the council of Placentia,

<sup>62</sup> Αναλαβόμενος από Ρώμης την χρισμὴν τῆ Ἁγίας Πέτρῃ σημαίαν (Alexiad, l. x. p. 288.).

<sup>63</sup> Ὁ βασιλεὺς τῶν βασιλείων, καὶ ἀρχηγὸς τῆ Φραγγικῆς ἑσπεριότητος ἀπαντοῖ. This Oriental pomp is extravagant in a count of Vermandois; but the patriot Ducange repeats with much complacency (Not. ad Alexiad. p. 352, 353. Dissert. xxvii. sur Joinville, p. 315.), the passages of Matthew Paris (A. D. 1254.) and Froissard (vol. iv. p. 201.), which style the king of France, rex regum, and chef de tous les rois Chrétiens.

<sup>64</sup> Anna Comnena was born the 1st of December, A. D. 1083, indiction vii. (Alexiad, l. vi. p. 166, 167.). At thirteen, the time of the first crusade, she was nubile, and perhaps married to the younger Nicephorus Bryennius, whom she fondly styles τὸν ἐμὸν Καίσαρα (l. x. p. 295, 296.). Some moderns have imagined, that her enmity to Bohemond was the fruit of disappointed love. In the transactions of Constantinople and Nice, her partial accounts (Alex. l. x, xi. p. 283—317.) may be opposed to the partiality of the Latins, but in their subsequent exploits she is brief and ignorant.

<sup>65</sup> In their views of the character and conduct of Alexius, Maimbourg has favoured the Catholic Franks, and Voltaire has been partial to the schismatic Greeks. The prejudice of a philosopher is less excusable than that of a Jesuit.

his ambassadors had solicited a moderate succour, perhaps of ten thousand soldiers : but he was astonished by the approach of so many potent chiefs and fanatic nations. The emperor fluctuated between hope and fear, between timidity and courage ; but in the crooked policy which he mistook for wisdom, I cannot believe, I cannot discern, that he maliciously conspired against the life or honour of the French heroes. The promiscuous multitudes of Peter the hermit, were savage beasts, alike destitute of humanity and reason : nor was it possible for Alexius to prevent or deplore their destruction. The troops of Godfrey and his peers were less contemptible, but not less suspicious, to the Greek emperor. Their motives might be pure and pious ; but he was equally alarmed by his knowledge of the ambitious Bohemond, and his ignorance of the Transalpine chiefs : the courage of the French was blind and headstrong ; they might be tempted by the luxury and wealth of Greece, and elated by the view and opinion of their invincible strength ; and Jerusalem might be forgotten in the prospect of Constantinople. After a long march and painful abstinence, the troops of Godfrey encamped in the plains of Thrace ; they heard with indignation, that their brother, the count of Vermandois, was imprisoned by the Greeks ; and their reluctant duke was compelled to indulge them in some freedom of retaliation and rapine. They were appeased by the submission of Alexius ; he promised to supply their camp ; and as they refused in the midst of winter, to pass the Bosphorus, their quarters were assigned among the gardens and palaces on the shores of that narrow sea. But an incurable jealousy still rankled in the minds of the two nations, who despised each other as slaves and Barbarians. Ignorance is the ground of suspicion, and suspicion was inflamed into daily provocations : prejudice is blind, hunger is deaf ; and Alexius is accused of a design to starve or assault the Latins in a dangerous post, on all sides encompassed with the waters<sup>66</sup>. Godfrey founded

C H A P.
LVIII.

his

<sup>66</sup> Between the Black Sea, the Bosphorus, summer, and runs fifteen miles through a flat and the river Barbyfes, which is deep in meadow. Its communication with Europe and his trumpets, burst the net, overspread the plain, and insulted the suburbs: but the gates of Constantinople were strongly fortified; the ramparts were lined with archers; and after a doubtful conflict, both parties listened to the voice of peace and religion. The gifts and promises of the emperor insensibly soothed the fierce spirit of the western strangers; as a Christian warrior, he rekindled their zeal for the prosecution of their holy enterprise, which he engaged to second with his troops and treasures. On the return of spring, Godfrey was persuaded to occupy a pleasant and plentiful camp in Asia; and no sooner had he passed the Bosphorus, than the Greek vessels were suddenly recalled to the opposite shore. The same policy was repeated with the succeeding chiefs, who were swayed by the example, and weakened by the departure, of their foremost companions. By his skill and diligence, Alexius prevented the union of any two of the confederate armies at the same moment under the walls of Constantinople; and before the feast of the Pentecost not a Latin pilgrim was left on the coast of Europe.

C H A P.
LVIII.

He obtains the homage of the crusaders.

The same arms which threatened Europe, might deliver Asia, and repel the Turks from the neighbouring shores of the Bosphorus and Hellespont. The fair provinces from Nice to Antioch were the recent patrimony of the Roman emperor; and his ancient and perpetual claim still embraced the kingdoms of Syria and Egypt. In his enthusiasm, Alexius indulged, or affected, the ambitious hope of leading his new allies to subvert the thrones of the East: but the calmer dictates of reason and temper dissuaded him from exposing his royal person to the faith of unknown and lawless Barbarians. His prudence, or his pride, was content with extorting from the French princes an oath of homage and fidelity, and a solemn promise, that they would either restore, or hold, their Asiatic conquests, as the humble and loyal vassals of the Roman empire. Their indeand Constantinople is by the stone bridge of Bosphoro Thracio, l. ii. c. 3. Ducange, the Blacherna, which in successive ages was C. P. Christiana, l. iv. c. 2. p. 179.)

pendent spirit was fired at the mention of this foreign and voluntary fervitude: they successively yielded to the dextrous application of gifts and flattery; and the first profelytes became the most eloquent and effectual missionaries to multiply the companions of their shame. The pride of Hugh of Vermandois was soothed by the honours of his captivity; and in the brother of the French king, the example of submission was prevalent and weighty. In the mind of Godfrey of Bouillon every human consideration was subordinate to the glory of God and the success of the crusade. He had firmly resisted the temptations of Bohemond and Raymond, who urged the attack and conquest of Constantinople. Alexius esteemed his virtues, deservedly named him the champion of the empire, and dignified his homage with the filial name and the rites of adoption<sup>67</sup>. The hateful Bohemond was received as a true and ancient ally; and if the emperor reminded him of former hostilities, it was only to praise the valour that he had displayed, and the glory that he had acquired, in the fields of Durazzo and Larissa. The son of Guiscard was lodged and entertained, and served with Imperial pomp: one day, as he passed through the gallery of the palace, a door was carelessly left open to expose a pile of gold and silver, of silk and gems, of curious and costly furniture, that was heaped in seeming disorder, from the floor to the roof of the chamber. "What conquests," exclaimed the ambitious miser, "might not be achieved by the possession of such a treasure?" "It is your own," replied a Greek attendant who watched the motions of his soul; and Bohemond, after some hesitation, condescended to accept this magnificent present. The Norman was flattered by the assurance of an independent principality, and Alexius eluded, rather than denied, his daring demand of the office of great domestic, or general, of the East. The two Roberts, the son of the conqueror of England, and the kinsman of three

C H A P.
LVIII.

<sup>67</sup> There were two sorts of adoption, the one by arms, the other by introducing the son between the third and fifth of his father. Ducange (sur Joinville, diss. xxii. p. 270.) supposes Godfrey's adoption to have been of the latter sort.

C H A P.
LVIII.

queens<sup>68</sup>, bowed in their turn before the Byzantine throne. A private letter of Stephen of Chartres attests his admiration of the emperor, the most excellent and liberal of men, who taught him to believe that he was a favourite, and promised to educate and establish his youngest son. In his southern province, the count of St. Giles and Tholouse faintly recognized the supremacy of the king of France, a prince of a foreign nation and language. At the head of an hundred thousand men, he declared, that he was the soldier and servant of Christ alone, and that the Greek might be satisfied with an equal treaty of alliance and friendship. His obstinate resistance enhanced the value and the price of his submission; and he shone, says the princess Anne, among the Barbarians, as the sun amidst the stars of heaven. His disgust of the noise and insolence of the French, his suspicions of the designs of Bohemond, the emperor imparted to his faithful Raymond; and that aged statesman might clearly discern, that however false in friendship, he was sincere in his enmity<sup>69</sup>. The spirit of chivalry was last subdued in the person of Tancred; and none could deem themselves dishonoured by the imitation of that gallant knight. He disdained the gold and flattery of the Greek monarch; assaulted in his presence an insolent patrician; escaped to Asia in the habit of a private soldier; and yielded with a sigh to the authority of Bohemond and the interest of the Christian cause. The best and most ostensible reason was the impossibility of passing the sea and accomplishing their vow, without the licence and the vessels of Alexius; but they cherished a secret hope, that as soon as they trod the continent of Asia, their swords would obliterate their shame, and dissolve the engagement, which on his side might not be very faithfully performed. The ceremony of their homage was grateful to a people who had long since considered pride as the substitute of power. High on his throne, the emperor sat mute and immovable: his majesty was adored by the Latin princes; and they submitted to kiss either his feet or his knees, an indignity which their own writers are ashamed to confess and unable to deny<sup>70</sup>.

<sup>68</sup> After his return, Robert of Flanders became the man of the king of England, for a pension of four hundred marks. See the first act in Rymer's Fœdera.
<sup>69</sup> Senfit vetus regnandi, falsos in amore, odia non fingere, Tacit. vi. 44.

C H A P.
LVIII.

Private or public interest suppressed the murmurs of the dukes and counts; but a French baron (he is supposed to be Robert of Paris<sup>71</sup>) presumed to ascend the throne, and to place himself by the side of Alexius. The sage reproof of Baldwin provoked him to exclaim, in his barbarous idiom, "Who is this rustic, that keeps his seat, while so many valiant captains are standing round him?" The emperor maintained his silence, dissembled his indignation, and questioned his interpreter concerning the meaning of the words, which he partly suspected from the universal language of gesture and countenance. Before the departure of the pilgrims, he endeavoured to learn the name and condition of the audacious baron. "I am a Frenchman," replied Robert, "of the purest and most ancient nobility of my country. All that I know is, that there is a church in my neighbourhood<sup>72</sup>, the resort of those who are desirous of approving their valour in single combat. Till an enemy appears, they address their prayers to God and his saints. That church I have frequently visited, but never have I found an antagonist who dared to accept my defiance." Alexius dis-

Inference of
the Franks.

<sup>70</sup> The proud historians of the crusades slide and stumble over this humiliating step. Yet, since the heroes knelt to salute the emperor as he sat motionless on his throne, it is clear that they must have kissed either his feet or knees. It is only singular, that Anna should not have amply supplied the silence or ambiguity of the Latins. The abasement of their princes, would have added a fine chapter to the Ceremoniale Aulae Byzantinæ.

<sup>71</sup> He called himself Φραγγος καθεζος των αυγειων (Alexias, l. x. p. 301.). What a title of noblesse of the xith century, if any one could now prove his inheritance! Anna relates, with visible pleasure, that the swelling Barbarian, Δαττης τετυφωμενος, was killed, or wounded, after fighting in the front in the battle of Dorylæum (l. xi. p. 317.). This circumstance may justify the suspicion of Ducange (Not. p. 362.), that he was no other than Robert of Paris, of the district most peculiarly styled the Duchy or Island of France (L'Isle de France).

<sup>72</sup> With the same penetration, Ducange discovers his church to be that of St. Draufus, or Drofin, of Soissons, quem duello dimicatori solent invocare: pugiles qui ad memoriam ejus (his tomb) pernoctant invictos reddidit, ut et de Burgundiâ et Italia tali necessitate confugiatur ad eum. Joan. Sariberiensis, epist. 139.

C H A P.
LVIII.

Their review and numbers,
A. D. 1097,
May.

missed the challenger with some prudent advice for his conduct in the Turkish warfare; and history repeats with pleasure this lively example of the manners of his age and country.

The conquest of Asia was undertaken and achieved by Alexander, with thirty-five thousand Macedonians and Greeks<sup>73</sup>; and his best hope was in the strength and discipline of his phalanx of infantry. The principal force of the crusaders consisted in their cavalry; and when that force was mustered in the plains of Bithynia, the knights and their martial attendants on horseback amounted to one hundred thousand fighting men, completely armed with the helmet and coat of mail. The value of these soldiers deserved a strict and authentic account; and the flower of European chivalry might furnish, in a first effort, this formidable body of heavy horse. A part of the infantry might be enrolled for the service of scouts, pioneers, and archers; but the promiscuous crowd were lost in their own disorder; and we depend not on the eyes or knowledge, but on the belief and fancy, of a chaplain of count Baldwin<sup>74</sup>, in the estimate of six hundred thousand pilgrims able to bear arms, besides the priests and monks, the women and children, of the Latin camp. The reader starts; and before he is recovered from his surprise, I shall add, on the same testimony, that if all who took the cross had accomplished their vow, above SIX MILLIONS would have migrated from Europe to Asia. Under this oppression of faith, I derive some relief from a more sagacious and thinking writer<sup>75</sup>, who, after the same review of the cavalry, accuses the credulity of the priest of Chartres, and even doubts whether the Cisalpine regions (in the geography of a Frenchman) were sufficient to produce and pour forth such incre-

<sup>73</sup> There is some diversity on the numbers of his army: but no authority can be compared with that of Ptolemy, who states it at five thousand horse and thirty thousand foot (see Uther's Annales, p. 152.).

<sup>74</sup> Fulcher. Carnotensis, p. 387. He enumerates nineteen nations of different names and languages (p. 389.); but I do not clearly apprehend his difference between the Franci and Galli, Itali and Apuli. Elsewhere (p. 385.) he contemptuously brands the deserters.

<sup>75</sup> Guibert, p. 556. Yet even his gentle opposition implies an immense multitude. By Urban II. in the fervour of his zeal, it is only rated at 300,000 pilgrims (epist. xvi. Concil. tom. xii. p. 731.).

dible multitudes. The coolest scepticism will remember, that of these religious volunteers great numbers never beheld Constantinople and Nice. Of enthusiasm the influence is irregular and transient: many were detained at home by reason or cowardice, by poverty or weakness; and many were repulsed by the obstacles of the way, the more insuperable as they were unforeseen to these ignorant fanatics. The savage countries of Hungary and Bulgaria were whitened with their bones: their vanguard was cut in pieces by the Turkish sultan; and the loss of the first adventure by the sword, or climate, or fatigue, has already been stated at three hundred thousand men. Yet the myriads that survived, that marched, that pressed forwards on the holy pilgrimage, were a subject of astonishment to themselves and to the Greeks. The copious energy of her language sinks under the efforts of the princess Anne<sup>76</sup>: the images of locusts, of leaves and flowers, of the sands of the sea, or the stars of heaven, imperfectly represent what she had seen and heard; and the daughter of Alexius exclaims, that Europe was loosened from its foundations, and hurled against Asia. The ancient hosts of Darius and Xerxes labour under the same doubt of a vague and indefinite magnitude; but I am inclined to believe, that a larger number has never been contained within the lines of a single camp than at the siege of Nice, the first operation of the Latin princes. Their motives, their characters, and their arms, have been already displayed. Of their troops, the most numerous portion were natives of France: the Low Countries, the banks of the Rhine, and Apulia, sent a powerful reinforcement: some bands of adventurers were drawn from Spain, Lombardy, and England<sup>77</sup>; and from the distant bogs and mountains

C H A P.
LVIII.

<sup>76</sup> Alexias, l. x. p. 283. 305. Her fastidious delicacy complains of their strange and inarticulate names, and indeed there is scarcely one that she has not contrived to disfigure with the proud ignorance, so dear and familiar to a polished people. I shall select only one example, Suzgels, for the count of St. Giles.

<sup>77</sup> William of Malmesbury (who wrote about the year 1130) has inserted in his history (l. iv. p. 150—154.) a narrative of the first crusade: but I wish that, instead of listening

C H A P.
LVIII.

tains of Ireland or Scotland<sup>78</sup> issued some naked and savage fanatics, ferocious at home but unwarlike abroad. Had not superstition condemned the sacrilegious prudence of depriving the poorest or weakest Christian of the merit of the pilgrimage, the useless crowd, with mouths, but without hands, might have been stationed in the Greek empire, till their companions had opened and secured the way of the Lord. A small remnant of the pilgrims, who passed the Bosphorus, was permitted to visit the holy sepulchre. Their northern constitution was scorched by the rays, and infected by the vapours, of a Syrian sun. They consumed, with heedless prodigality, their stores of water and provision: their numbers exhausted the inland country; the sea was remote, the Greeks were unfriendly, and the Christians of every sect fled before the voracious and cruel rapine of their brethren. In the dire necessity of famine, they sometimes roasted and devoured the flesh of their infant or adult captives. Among the Turks and Saracens, the idolaters of Europe were rendered more odious by the name and reputation of cannibals: the spies who introduced themselves into the kitchen of Bohemond, were shewn several human bodies turning on the spit; and the artful Norman encouraged a report, which increased at the same time the abhorrence and the terror of the infidels<sup>79</sup>.

Siege of Nice.
A. D. 1097,
May 14--
June 30.

I have expatiated with pleasure on the first steps of the crusaders, as they paint the manners and character of Europe: but I shall abridge the tedious and uniform narrative of their blind achieve-to the tenue mermur which had passed the British ocean (p. 141.), he had confined himself to the numbers, families, and adventures of his countrymen. I find in Dugdale, that an English Norman, Stephen earl of Albemarle and Holderness, led the rear-guard with duke Robert, at the battle of Antioch (Baronage, part i. p. 61.).

<sup>78</sup> Videres Scotorum apud ferocium alias imbellium cuncos (Guibert, p. 471.): the crus in-tactum, and hijida oblamys, may suit the Highlanders; but the sinibus uliginosis, may rather apply to the Irish bogs. William of Malmesbury expressly mentions the Welsh and Scots, &c. (l. iv. p. 133.) who quitted, the former venationem saltuum, the latter familiaritatem pulicum.

<sup>79</sup> This cannibal hunger, sometimes real, more frequently an artifice or a lye, may be found in Anna Comnena (Alexias, l. x. p. 288.), Guibert (p. 546.), Radulph. Cadom. (c. 97.). The stratagem is related by the author of the Gesta Francorum, the monk Robert Baldric, and Raymond des Agiles, in the siege and famine of Antioch.

ments, which were performed by strength and are described by ignorance. From their first station in the neighbourhood of Nicomedia, they advanced in successive divisions; passed the contracted limit of the Greek empire; opened a road through the hills, and commenced by the siege of his capital, their pious warfare against the Turkish sultan. His kingdom of Roum extended from the Hellespont to the confines of Syria, and barred the pilgrimage of Jerusalem: his name was Kilidge-Arflan, or Soliman<sup>80</sup>, of the race of Seljuk, and son of the first conqueror; and in the defence of a land which the Turks considered as their own, he deserved the praise of his enemies, by whom alone he is known to posterity. Yielding to the first impulse of the torrent, he deposited his family and treasure in Nice; retired to the mountains with fifty thousand horse; and twice descended to assault the camps or quarters of the Christian besiegers, which formed an imperfect circle of above six miles. The lofty and solid walls of Nice were covered by a deep ditch, and flanked by three hundred and seventy towers; and on the verge of Christendom, the Moslems were trained in arms and inflamed by religion. Before this city, the French princes occupied their stations, and prosecuted their attacks without correspondence or subordination: emulation prompted their valour; but their valour was sullied by cruelty, and their emulation degenerated into envy and civil discord. In the siege of Nice, the arts and engines of antiquity were employed by the Latins; the mine and the battering-ram, the tortoise, and the belfrey or moveable turret, artificial fire, and the catapult and ballist, the sling, and the cross-bow for the casting of stones and darts<sup>81</sup>. In the space of seven weeks, much labour

and

<sup>80</sup> His Musulman appellation of Soliman is used by the Latins, and his character is highly embellished by Tasso. His Turkish name of Kilidge-Arflan (A. H. 485—500. A. D. 1192—1106. See de Guignes's Tables, tom. i. p. 245.) is employed by the Orientals, and with some corruption by the Greeks:

but little more than his name can be found in the Mahometan writers, who are dry and sulky on the subject of the first crusade (de Guignes, tom. iii. p. ii. p. 10—30.).

<sup>81</sup> On the fortifications, engines, and sieges of the middle ages, see Muratori (Antiquitat. Italiae, tom. ii. dissert. xxvi. p. 452—524.).

C H A P.
LVIII.

and blood were expended, and some progress, especially by count Raymond, was made on the side of the besiegers. But the Turks could protract their resistance and secure their escape, as long as they were masters of the lake<sup>82</sup> Afcenius, which stretches several miles to the westward of the city. The means of conquest were supplied by the prudence and industry of Alexius; a great number of boats was transported on sledges from the sea to the lake; they were filled with the most dextrous of his archers; the flight of the sultana<sup>83</sup> was intercepted; Nice was invested by land and water; and a Greek emissary persuaded the inhabitants to accept his master's protection, and to save themselves, by a timely surrender, from the rage of the savages of Europe. In the moment of victory, or at least of hope, the crusaders, thirsting for blood and plunder, were awed by the Imperial banner that streamed from the citadel; and Alexius guarded with jealous vigilance this important conquest. The murmurs of the chiefs were stifled by honour or interest; and after an halt of nine days, they directed their march towards Phrygia under the guidance of a Greek general, whom they suspected of a secret connivance with the sultan. The consort and the principal servants of Soliman had been honourably restored without ransom; and the emperor's generosity to the miscreants<sup>83</sup> was interpreted as treason to the Christian cause.

Battle of Dorylaeum,
A. D. 1097,
July 4.

Soliman was rather provoked than dismayed by the loss of his capital: he admonished his subjects and allies of this strange invasion of the western Barbarians; the Turkish emirs obeyed the call of loyalty or religion; the Turkman hords encamped round his standard; and his whole force is loosely stated by the Christians at 524.). The helfredas, from whence our bellrey, was the moveable tower of the ancients (Ducange, tom. i. p. 608.).

<sup>82</sup> I cannot forbear remarking the resemblance between the siege and lake of Nice, with the operations of Herman Cortez before Mexico. See Dr. Robertson, Hist. of America, l. v.

<sup>83</sup> Miscreant, a word invented by the French crusaders, and confined in that language to its primitive sense. It should seem, that the zeal of our ancestors boiled higher, and that they branded every unbeliever as a rascal. A similar prejudice still lurks in the minds of many who think themselves Christians.

two hundred, or even three hundred and sixty, thousand horse. Yet he patiently waited till they had left behind them the sea and the Greek frontier; and hovering on the flanks, observed their careless and confident progress in two columns beyond the view of each other. Some miles before they could reach Dorylæum in Phrygia, the left, and least numerous, division was surprised, and attacked, and almost oppressed, by the Turkish cavalry<sup>84</sup>. The heat of the weather, the clouds of arrows, and the barbarous onset, overwhelmed the crusaders; they lost their order and confidence, and the fainting fight was sustained by the personal valour, rather than by the military conduct, of Bohemond, Tancred, and Robert of Normandy. They were revived by the welcome banners of duke Godfrey, who flew to their succours with the count of Vermandois, and sixty thousand horse; and was followed by Raymond of Tholouse, the bishop of Puy, and the remainder of the sacred army. Without a moment's pause, they formed in new order, and advanced to a second battle. They were received with equal resolution; and, in their common disdain for the unwarlike people of Greece and Asia, it was confessed on both sides, that the Turks and the Franks were the only nations entitled to the appellation of soldiers<sup>85</sup>. Their encounter was varied and balanced by the contrast of arms and discipline; of the direct charge, and wheeling evolutions; of the couched lance, and the brandished javelin; of a weighty broadsword, and a crooked sabre; of cumbersome armour, and thin flowing robes; and of the long Tartar bow, and the arbalist or cross-bow, a deadly weapon, yet unknown to the Orientals<sup>86</sup>. As long as the horses were fresh and the quivers full,

Soliman

<sup>84</sup> Baronius has produced a very doubtful letter to his brother Roger (A. D. 1098, N<sup>o</sup> 15.). The enemies consisted of Medes, Persians, Chaldæans: be it so. The first attack was cum nostro incommodo; true and tender. But why Godfrey of Bouillon and Hugh brothers? Tancred is styled filius; of whom? certainly not of Roger, nor of Bohemond.

<sup>85</sup> Veruntamen dicunt se esse de Francorum generatione; et quia nullus homo naturaliter debet esse miles nisi Franci et Turci (Gesta Francorum, p. 7.). The same community of blood and valour is attested by archbishop Baldric (p. 99.).

<sup>86</sup> Balista, Balestra, Arbalestre. See Muratori, Antiq. tom. ii. p. 517—524. Duncange,

C H A P.
LVIII.

Christians were pierced by the Turkish arrows. In the evening, swiftness yielded to strength; on either side, the numbers were equal, or at least as great as any ground could hold, or any generals could manage; but in turning the hills, the last division of Raymond and his provincials was led, perhaps without design, on the rear of an exhausted enemy; and the long contest was determined. Besides a nameless and unaccounted multitude, three thousand Pagan knights were slain in the battle and pursuit; the camp of Soliman was pillaged; and in the variety of precious spoil, the curiosity of the Latins was amused with foreign arms and apparel, and the new aspect of dromedaries and camels. The importance of the victory was proved by the hasty retreat of the sultan: reserving ten thousand guards of the relics of his army, Soliman evacuated the kingdom of Roum, and hastened to implore the aid, and kindle the resentment, of his Eastern brethren. In a march of five hundred miles, the crusaders traversed the Lesser Asia, through a wasted land and deserted towns, without finding either a friend or an enemy. The geographer<sup>57</sup> may trace the position of Dorylæum, Antioch of Pisidia, Iconium, Archelais, and Germanicia, and may compare those classic appellations with the modern names of Eskishehr the old city, Akshhehr the white city, Cogni, Erekli, and Marashi. As the pilgrims passed over a desert, where a draught of water is exchanged for silver, they were tormented by intolerable thirst; and on the banks of the first rivulet, their haste and intemperance were still more pernicious to the disorderly throng. They climbed with toil and danger the steep and slippery sides of mount Taurus: many of

March
through the Lesser Asia,
July—September.

cange, Gloss. Latin. tom. i. p. 531, 532. In the time of Anna Comnena, this weapon, which she describes under the name of zangra, was unknown in the East (l. x. p. 271.). By an humane inconsistency, the pope strove to prohibit it in Christian wars.

<sup>57</sup> The curious reader may compare the classic learning of Cellarius, and the geographical science of d'Anville. William of Tyre is the only historian of the crusades who has any knowledge of antiquity; and M. Otterrod almost in the footsteps of the Franks from Constantinople to Antioch (Voyage en Turquie et en Perse, tom. i. p. 35—88.).

the foldiers caſt away their arms to ſecure their footheps; and had not terror preceded their van, the long and trembling file might have been driven down the precipice by an handful of reſolute enemies. Two of their moſt reſpectable chiefs, the duke of Lorraine and the count of Tholouſe, were carried in litters: Raymond was raiſed, as it is ſaid by miracle, from an hopeleſs malady; and Godfrey had been torn by a bear, as he purſued that rough and perilous chace in the mountains of Pifidia.

C H A P.
LVIII.

To improve the general conſternation, the couſin of Bohemond and the brother of Godfrey were detached from the main army with their reſpective ſquadrons of five, and of ſeven, hundred knights. They over-ran in a rapid career the hills and ſea-coaſt of Cilicia, from Cogni to the Syrian gates: the Norman ſtandard was firſt planted on the walls of Tarſus and Malmiſtra; but the proud injuſtice of Baldwin at length provoked the patient and generous Italian; and they turned their conſecrated ſwords againſt each other in a private and profane quarrel. Honour was the motive, and fame the reward, of Tancred; but fortune ſmiled on the more ſelfiſh enterpriſe of his rival<sup>88</sup>. He was called to the aſſiſtance of a Greek or Armenian tyrant, who had been ſuffered under the Turkiſh yoke to reign over the Chriſtians of Edeſſa. Baldwin accepted the character of his ſon and champion; but no ſooner was he introduced into the city, than he inflamed the people to the maſſacre of his father, occupied the throne and treaſure, extended his conqueſts over the hills of Armenia and the plain of Meſopotamia, and founded the firſt principality of the Franks or Latins, which ſubſiſted fifty-four years beyond the Euphrates<sup>89</sup>.

Baldwin
founds the principality of Edeſſa,
A. D.
1097—1151.

<sup>88</sup> This detached conqueſt of Edeſſa is beſt represented by Fulcherius Carnoteniſis, or of Chartres (in the collections of Bongarſius, Duchefne, and Martenne), the valiant chaplain of count Baldwin (Eſprit des Croiſades, tom. i. p. 13, 14.). In the diſputes of that prince with Tancred, his partiality is encountered by the partiality of Radulphus Cadomenſis, the ſoldier and hiſtorian of the gallant marquis.

<sup>89</sup> See de Guignes, Hiſt. des Huns, tom. i. p. 456.

C H A P.
LVIII.

Siege of Antioch,
A. D. 1097,
October 21—
A. D. 1098,
June 3.

Before the Franks could enter Syria, the summer, and even the autumn, were completely wasted: the siege of Antioch, or the separation and repose of the army during the winter season, was strongly debated in their council: the love of arms and the holy sepulchre urged them to advance; and reason perhaps was on the side of resolution, since every hour of delay abates the fame and force of the invader, and multiplies the resources of defensive war. The capital of Syria was protected by the river Orontes; and the iron bridge, of nine arches, derives its name from the massy gates of the two towers which are constructed at either end. They were opened by the sword of the duke of Normandy: his victory gave entrance to three hundred thousand crusaders, an account which may allow some scope for losses and desertion, but which clearly detects much exaggeration in the review of Nice. In the description of Antioch<sup>99</sup>, it is not easy to define a middle term between her ancient magnificence, under the successors of Alexander and Augustus, and the modern aspect of Turkish desolation. The Tetrapolis, or four cities, if they retained their name and position, must have left a large vacancy in a circumference of twelve miles; and that measure, as well as the number of four hundred towers, are not perfectly consistent with the five gates, so often mentioned in the history of the siege. Yet Antioch must have still flourished as a great and populous capital. At the head of the Turkish emirs, Baghikian, a veteran chief, commanded in the place: his garrison was composed of six or seven thousand horse, and fifteen or twenty thousand foot: one hundred thousand Moslems are said to have fallen by the sword; and their numbers were probably inferior to the Greeks, Armenians, and Syrians, who had been no more than fourteen years the slaves of the house of Seljuk. From the remains of a solid and stately wall, it appears

<sup>99</sup> For Antioch, see Pococke (Description of the East, vol. ii. p. i. p. 188—193.), Otter's notes), the Index Geographicus of Schultens (ad calcem Bohadin. Vit. Saladin.), Otter (Voyage en Turquie, &c. tom. i. p. 81, &c.), the Turkish geographer (in and Abulfeda (Tabula Syriæ, p. 115, 116. vers. Reiske).

appears to have arisen to the height of three score feet in the vallies; and wherever less art and labour had been applied, the ground was supposed to be defended by the river, the morais, and the mountains. Notwithstanding these fortifications, the city had been repeatedly taken by the Persians, the Arabs, the Greeks, and the Turks; so large a circuit must have yielded many pervious points of attack; and in a siege that was formed about the middle of October, the vigour of the execution could alone justify the boldness of the attempt. Whatever strength and valour could perform in the field was abundantly discharged by the champions of the cross: in the frequent occasions of sallies, of forage, of the attack and defence of convoys, they were often victorious; and we can only complain, that their exploits are sometimes enlarged beyond the scale of probability and truth. The sword of Godfrey<sup>91</sup> divided a Turk from the shoulder to the haunch; and one half of the infidel fell to the ground, while the other was transported by his horse to the city gate. As Robert of Normandy rode against his antagonist, "I devote thy head," he piously exclaimed, "to the demons of hell;" and that head was instantly cloven to the breast by the resistless stroke of his descending faulchion. But the reality or the report of such gigantic prowess<sup>92</sup> must have taught the Moslems to keep within their walls; and against those walls of earth or stone, the sword and the lance were unavailing weapons. In the slow and successive labours of a siege, the crusaders were supine and ignorant, without skill to contrive, or money to purchase, or industry to use, the artificial engines and implements of assault. In the conquest of mine nataret (Radulph. Cadom. c. 53. p. 304.). Yet he justifies the deed by the stupendis viribus of Godfrey; and William of Tyre covers it by ostupuit populus facti novitate. . . mirabilis (l. v. c. 6. p. 101.). Yet it must not have appeared incredible to the knights of that age.

<sup>91</sup> Ensem elevat, eumque a sinistra parte scapularum, tanta virtute intorsit ut quod pectus medium disjunctis spinam et vitalia interrumpit, et sic lubricus ensis super crus dextrum integer exivit; sicque caput integrum cum dextra parte corporis immergit gurgite, partemque quæ equo præsidebat remisit civitati (Robert. Mon. p. 50.). Cujus ense trajectus, Turcus duo factus est Turci; ut inferior alter in urbem equitaret, alter arcitenens in flu-

<sup>92</sup> See the exploits of Robert, Raymond, and the modest Tancred, who imposed silence on his squire (Radulph. Cadom. c. 53.).

C H A P.
LVIII.

Nice, they had been powerfully assisted by the wealth and knowledge of the Greek emperor: his absence was poorly supplied by some Genoese and Pisan vessels, that were attracted by religion or trade to the coast of Syria: the stores were scanty, the return precarious, and the communication difficult and dangerous. Indolence or weakness had prevented the Franks from investing the entire circuit; and the perpetual freedom of two gates relieved the wants and recruited the garrison of the city. At the end of seven months, after the ruin of their cavalry, and an enormous loss by famine, desertion, and fatigue, the progress of the crusaders was imperceptible, and their success remote, if the Latin Ulysses, the artful and ambitious Bohemond, had not employed the arms of cunning and deceit. The Christians of Antioch were numerous and discontented: Phirouz, a Syrian renegado, had acquired the favour of the emir and the command of three towers; and the merit of his repentance disguised to the Latins, and perhaps to himself, the foul design of perfidy and treason. A secret correspondence, for their mutual interest, was soon established between Phirouz and the prince of Tarento; and Bohemond declared in the council of the chiefs, that he could deliver the city into their hands. But he claimed the sovereignty of Antioch as the reward of his service; and the proposal which had been rejected by the envy, was at length extorted from the distress, of his equals. The nocturnal surprise was executed by the French and Norman princes, who ascended in person the scaling-ladders that were thrown from the walls: their new proselyte, after the murder of his too scrupulous brother, embraced and introduced the servants of Christ; the army rushed through the gates; and the Moslems soon found, that although mercy was hopeless, resistance was impotent. But the citadel still refused to surrender; and the victors themselves were speedily encompassed and besieged by the innumerable forces of Kerboga, prince of Mosul, who, with twenty-eight Turkish emirs, advanced to the deliverance of Antioch. Five-and-twenty days the Christians

Christians spent on the verge of destruction; and the proud lieutenant of the caliph and the sultan left them only the choice of ferocity or death<sup>93</sup>. In this extremity they collected the relics of their strength, sallied from the town, and in a single memorable day annihilated or dispersed the host of Turks and Arabians, which they might safely report to have consisted of six hundred thousand men<sup>94</sup>. Their supernatural allies I shall proceed to consider: the human causes of the victory of Antioch were the fearless despair of the Franks; and the surprise, the discord, perhaps the errors, of their unskilful and presumptuous adversaries. The battle is described with as much disorder as it was fought; but we may observe the tent of Kerboga, a moveable and spacious palace, enriched with the luxury of Asia, and capable of holding above two thousand persons; we may distinguish his three thousand guards, who were cased, the horses as well as the men, in complete steel.

In the eventful period of the siege and defence of Antioch, the crusaders were alternately exalted by victory or sunk in despair; either swelled with plenty or emaciated with hunger. A speculative reasoner might suppose, that their faith had a strong and serious influence on their practice; and that the soldiers of the cross, the deliverers of the holy sepulchre, prepared themselves by a sober and virtuous life for the daily contemplation of martyrdom. Experience blows away this charitable illusion: and seldom does the history of profane war display such scenes of intemperance and prostitution as were exhibited under the walls of Antioch. The

C H A P.
LVIII.

Victory of the crusaders,
A. D. 1093,
June 28.

Their famine and distress
at Antioch.

<sup>93</sup> After mentioning the distress and humble petition of the Franks, Abulpharagius adds the haughty reply of Cobbuka, or Kerboga; non evasuri estis nisi per gladium (Dynast. p. 242.).

<sup>94</sup> In describing the host of Kerboga, most of the Latin historians, the author of the Gesta (p. 17.), Robert Monachus (p. 56.), Baldric (p. 111.), Fulcherius Carnotensis (p. 392.), Guibert (p. 512.), William of Tyre (l. vi. c. 3. p. 714.), Bernard Thesau- rarius (c. 39. p. 695.), are content with the vague expressions of infinita multitudo, immensum agmen, innumera copia or gentes, which correspond with the μεγα οαριθμητων ζυλωνων of Anna Comnena (Alexias, l. xi. p. 318—320.). The numbers of the Turks are fixed by Albert Aqueusis at 200,000 (l. iv. c. 10. p. 242.), and by Radulphus Cadomensis at 400,000 horse (c. 72. p. 309.).

C H A P.
LVIII.

grove of Daphne no longer flourished; but the Syrian air was still impregnated with the same vices; the Christians were seduced by every temptation<sup>95</sup> that nature either prompts or reprobates; the authority of the chiefs was despised; and sermons and edicts were alike fruitless against those scandalous disorders, not less pernicious to military discipline, than repugnant to evangelic purity. In the first days of the siege and the possession of Antioch, the Franks consumed with wanton and thoughtless prodigality the frugal subsistence of weeks and months: the desolate country no longer yielded a supply; and from that country they were at length excluded by the arms of the besieging Turks. Disease, the faithful companion of want, was envenomed by the rains of the winter, the summer heats, unwholesome food, and the close imprisonment of multitudes. The pictures of famine and pestilence are always the same, and always disgusting; and our imagination may suggest the nature of their sufferings and their resources. The remains of treasure or spoil were eagerly lavished in the purchase of the vilest nourishment; and dreadful must have been the calamities of the poor, since, after paying three marks of silver for a goat and fifteen for a lean camel<sup>96</sup>, the count of Flanders was reduced to beg a dinner, and duke Godfrey to borrow an horse. Sixty thousand horses had been reviewed in the camp: before the end of the siege they were diminished to two thousand, and scarcely two hundred fit for service could be mustered on the day of battle. Weakness of body, and terror of mind, extinguished the ardent enthusiasm of the pilgrims; and every motive of honour and religion was subdued by the desire of a kid or lamb, from one shilling to eighteen of our present money: in the second famine, a loaf of bread, or the head of an animal, sold for a piece of gold. More examples might be produced; but it is the ordinary, not the extraordinary, prices, that deserve the notice of the philosopher.

<sup>95</sup> See the tragic and scandalous fate of an archdeacon of royal birth, who was slain by the Turks as he reposed in an orchard, playing at dice with a Syrian concubine.

<sup>96</sup> The value of an ox rose from five solidi (fifteen shillings) at Christmas to two marks (four pounds), and afterwards much higher:

life<sup>97</sup>. Among the chiefs, three heroes may be found without fear or reproach: Godfrey of Bouillon was supported by his magnanimous piety; Bohemond by ambition and interest; and Tancred declared, in the true spirit of chivalry, that as long as he was at the head of forty knights, he would never relinquish the enterprize of Palestine. But the count of Tholouse and Provence was suspected of a voluntary indisposition; the duke of Normandy was recalled from the sea-shore by the censures of the church; Hugh the Great, though he led the vanguard of the battle, embraced an ambiguous opportunity of returning to France; and Stephen count of Chartres basely deserted the standard which he bore, and the council in which he presided. The soldiers were discouraged by the flight of William viscount of Melun, surnamed the Carpenter, from the weighty strokes of his axe; and the saints were scandalised by the fall of Peter the Hermit, who, after arming Europe against Asia, attempted to escape from the penance of a necessary fast. Of the multitude of recreant warriors, the names (says an historian) are blotted from the book of life; and the opprobrious epithet of the rope-dancers was applied to the deserters who dropt in the night from the walls of Antioch. The emperor Alexius<sup>98</sup>, who seemed to advance to the succour of the Latins, was dismayed by the assurance of their hopeless condition. They expected their fate in silent despair; oaths and punishments were tried without effect; and to rouse the soldiers to the defence of the walls, it was found necessary to set fire to their quarters.

For their salvation and victory, they were indebted to the same fanaticism which had led them to the brink of ruin. In such a cause, and in such an army, visions, prophecies, and miracles, were

C H A P.
LVIII.

<sup>97</sup> Alii multi, quorum nomina non tenemus, quia deleta de libro vite presentis operi non sunt inferenda (Will. Tyr. l. vi. c. 5. p. 715). Guibert (p. 518. 523.) attempts to excuse Hugh the Great, and even Stephen of Chartres.

<sup>98</sup> See the progress of the crusade, the retreat of Alexius, the victory of Antioch, and the conquest of Jerusalem, in the Alexiad, l. xi. p. 317—327. Anna was so prone to exaggeration, that she magnifies the exploits of the Latins.

Legend of the Holy Lance.

C H A P.
LVIII.

frequent and familiar. In the distress of Antioch, they were repeated with unusual energy and success: St. Ambrose had assured a pious ecclesiastic, that two years of trial must precede the season of deliverance and grace; the deserters were stopped by the presence and reproaches of Christ himself; the dead had promised to arise and combat with their brethren; the Virgin had obtained the pardon of their sins; and their confidence was revived by a visible sign, the seasonable and splendid discovery of the HOLY LANCE. The policy of their chiefs has on this occasion been admired, and might surely be excused; but a pious fraud is seldom produced by the cool conspiracy of many persons; and a voluntary impostor might depend on the support of the wise and the credulity of the people. Of the diocese of Marseilles, there was a priest of low cunning and loose manners, and his name was Peter Bartholemy. He presented himself at the door of the council-chamber, to disclose an apparition of St. Andrew, which had been thrice reiterated in his sleep, with a dreadful menace, if he presumed to suppress the commands of heaven. “At Antioch,” said the apostle, “in the church of my brother St. Peter, near the high altar, is concealed the steel head of the lance that pierced the side of our Redeemer. In three days, that instrument of eternal, and now of temporal, salvation, will be manifested to his disciples. Search and ye shall find: bear it aloft in battle; and that mystic weapon shall penetrate the souls of the miscreants.” The pope’s legate, the bishop of Puy, affected to listen with coldness and distrust; but the revelation was eagerly accepted by count Raymond, whom his faithful subject, in the name of the apostle, had chosen for the guardian of the holy lance. The experiment was resolved; and on the third day, after a due preparation of prayer and fasting, the priest of Marseilles introduced twelve trusty spectators, among whom were the count and his chaplain; and the church-doors were barred against the impetuous multitude. The ground was opened in the appointed place; but the workmen, workmen, who relieved each other, dug to the depth of twelve feet without discovering the object of their search. In the evening, when count Raymond had withdrawn to his post, and the weary assistants began to murmur, Bartholemy, in his shirt, and without his shoes, boldly descended into the pit; the darkness of the hour and of the place enabled him to secrete and deposit the head of a Saracen lance; and the first found, the first gleam, of the steel, was saluted with a devout rapture. The holy lance was drawn from its recess, wrapt in a veil of silk and gold, and exposed to the veneration of the crusaders; their anxious suspense burst forth in a general shout of joy and hope, and the desponding troops were again inflamed with the enthusiasm of valour. Whatever had been the arts, and whatever might be the sentiments of the chiefs, they skilfully improved this fortunate revolution by every aid that discipline and devotion could afford. The soldiers were dismissed to their quarters with an injunction to fortify their minds and bodies for the approaching conflict, freely to bestow their last pittance on themselves and their horses, and to expect with the dawn of day the signal of victory. On the festival of St. Peter and St. Paul, the gates of Antioch were thrown open; a martial psalm, "Let the Lord arise, and let his enemies be scattered!" was chaunted by a procession of priests and monks; the battle array was marshalled in twelve divisions, in honour of the twelve apostles; and the holy lance, in the absence of Raymond, was entrusted to the hands of his chaplain. The influence of this relic or trophy was felt by the servants, and perhaps by the enemies, of Christ<sup>99</sup>; and its potent energy was heightened by an accident, a stratagem, or a rumour, of a miraculous complexion. Three knights, in white garments and resplendent arms, either issued, or seemed to issue, from the hills: the voice of Adhemar, the

C H A P.
LVIII.

Celestial warriors.

<sup>99</sup> The Mahometan Aboulmahafen (apud de Guignes, tom. ii. p. ii. p. 95.) is more correct in his account of the holy lance than the Christians, Anna Comnena and Abulpharagius: the Greek princess confounds it with a nail of the cross (l. xi. p. 326.); the Jacobite primate, with St. Peter's staff (p. 242.).

C H A P.
LVIII.

pope's legate, proclaimed them as the martyrs St. George, St. Theodore, and St. Maurice; the tumult of battle allowed no time for doubt or scrutiny; and the welcome apparition dazzled the eyes or the imagination of a fanatic army. In the season of danger and triumph, the revelation of Bartholomy of Marfeilles was unanimously asserted; but as soon as the temporary service was accomplished, the personal dignity and liberal alms which the count of Tholouse derived from the custody of the holy lance, provoked the envy, and awakened the reason, of his rivals. A Norman clerk presumed to sift, with a philosophic spirit, the truth of the legend, the circumstances of the discovery, and the character of the prophet; and the pious Bohemond ascribed their deliverance to the merits and intercession of Christ alone. For a while, the Provincials defended their national palladium with clamours and arms; and new visions condemned to death and hell the profane sceptics, who presumed to scrutinise the truth and merit of the discovery. The prevalence of incredulity compelled the author to submit his life and veracity to the judgment of God. A pile of dry faggots, four feet high, and fourteen long, was erected in the midst of the camp; the flames burnt fiercely to the elevation of thirty cubits; and a narrow path of twelve inches was left for the perilous trial. The unfortunate priest of Marfeilles traversed the fire with dexterity and speed; but his thighs and belly were scorched by the intense heat; he expired the next day; and the logic of believing minds will pay some regard to his dying protestations of innocence and truth. Some efforts were made by the Provincials to substitute a cross, a ring, or a tabernacle, in the place of the holy lance, which soon vanished in contempt and oblivion<sup>100</sup>. Yet the revelation of Antioch is gravely

<sup>100</sup> The two antagonists who express the most intimate knowledge and the strongest conviction of the miracle, and of the fraud, are Raymond des Agiles, and Radulphus Cadomenis, the one attached to the count of Tholouse, the other to the Norman prince.

Fulcherius Carnotensis presumes to say, audite fraudem et non fraudem! and afterwards, invenit lanceam, fallaciter occultatam forsitan. The rest of the herd are loud and strenuous.

asserted

asserted by succeeding historians; and such is the progress of credulity, that miracles, most doubtful on the spot and at the moment, will be received with implicit faith at a convenient distance of time and space.

C H A P.
L.VIII.

The state of the Turks
and caliphs
of Egypt.

The prudence or fortune of the Franks had delayed their invasion till the decline of the Turkish empire<sup>101</sup>. Under the manly government of the three first sultans, the kingdoms of Asia were united in peace and justice; and the innumerable armies which they led in person were equal in courage, and superior in discipline, to the Barbarians of the West. But at the time of the crusade, the inheritance of Malek Shaw was disputed by his four sons; their private ambition was insensible of the public danger; and, in the vicissitudes of their fortune, the royal vassals were ignorant, or regardless, of the true object of their allegiance. The twenty-eight emirs, who marched with the standard of Kerboga, were his rivals or enemies; their hasty levies were drawn from the towns and tents of Mesopotamia and Syria; and the Turkish veterans were employed or consumed in the civil wars beyond the Tigris. The caliph of Egypt embraced this opportunity of weakness and discord, to recover his ancient possessions; and his sultan Aphdal besieged Jerusalem and Tyre, expelled the children of Ortok, and restored in Palestine the civil and ecclesiastical authority of the Fatimites<sup>102</sup>. They heard with astonishment of the vast armies of Christians that had passed from Europe to Asia, and rejoiced in the sieges and battles which broke the power of the Turks, the adversaries of their sect and monarchy. But the same Christians were the enemies of the prophet; and from the overthrow of Nice and Antioch, the motive of their enterprise, which was gradually understood, would urge them for-

<sup>101</sup> See M. de Guignes (tom ii. p. ii. p. 223, &c.); and the articles of Barkiarok, Mohammed, Langiar, in d'Herbelot.

<sup>102</sup> The emir, or sultan Aphdal, recovered Jerusalem and Tyre, A. H. 489 (Renaudot, Hist. Patriarch. Alexandrin. p. 478. de Guignes, tom. i. p. 249. from Abulfeda and Ben Schounah). Jerusalem ante adventum vestrum recuperavimus. Turcos eiecimus, say the Fatimite ambassadors.

wards

C H A P.
LVIII.

wards to the banks of the Jordan, or perhaps of the Nile. An intercourse of epistles and embassies, which rose and fell with the events of war, was maintained between the throne of Cairo and the camp of the Latins; and their adverse pride was the result of ignorance and enthusiasm. The ministers of Egypt declared in an haughty, or insinuated in a milder, tone, that their sovereign, the true and lawful commander of the faithful, had rescued Jerusalem from the Turkish yoke; and that the pilgrims, if they would divide their numbers, and lay aside their arms, should find a safe and hospitable reception at the sepulchre of Jesus. In the belief of their lost condition, the caliph Mostali despised their arms and imprisoned their deputies: the conquest and victory of Antioch prompted him to solicit those formidable champions with gifts of horses and silk robes, of vases, and purses of gold and silver; and in his estimate of their merit or power, the first place was assigned to Bohemond, and the second to Godfrey. In either fortune, the answer of the crusaders was firm and uniform: they disdained to enquire into the private claims or possessions of the followers of Mahomet: whatsoever was his name or nation, the usurper of Jerusalem was their enemy; and instead of prescribing the mode and terms of their pilgrimage, it was only by a timely surrender of the city and province, their sacred right, that he could deserve their alliance, or deprecate their impending and irresistible attack<sup>103</sup>.

Delay of the Franks,
A. D. 1098,
July—
A. D. 1099,
May.

Yet this attack, when they were within the view and reach of their glorious prize, was suspended above ten months after the defeat of Kerboga. The zeal and courage of the crusaders were chilled in the moment of victory: and, instead of marching to improve the consternation, they hastily dispersed to enjoy the luxury, of Syria. The causes of this strange delay may be found in the want of strength and subordination. In the painful and various service of Antioch, the cavalry was annihilated; many thousands of every rank had been lost by famine, sickness, and desertion: the same abuse of plenty had been productive of a third famine; and the alternative of intemperance and distress, had generated a pestilence, which swept away above fifty thousand of the pilgrims. Few were able to command, and none were willing to obey: the domestic feuds, which had been stifled by common fear, were again renewed in acts, or at least in sentiments, of hostility; the fortune of Baldwin and Bohemond excited the envy of their companions; the bravest knights were enlisted for the defence of their new principalities; and count Raymond exhausted his troops and treasures in a idle expedition into the heart of Syria. The winter was consumed in discord and disorder; a sense of honour and religion was rekindled in the spring; and the private soldiers, less susceptible of ambition and jealousy, awakened with angry clamours the indolence of their chiefs. In the month of May, the relics of this mighty host proceeded from Antioch to Laodicea; about forty thousand Latins, of whom no more than fifteen hundred horse, and twenty thousand foot, were capable of immediate service. Their easy march was continued between mount Libanus and the sea-shore; their wants were liberally supplied by the coasting traders of Genoa and Pisa; and they drew large contributions from the emirs of Tripoli, Tyre, Sidon, Acre, and Cæsarea, who granted a free passage, and promised to follow the example of Jerusalem. From Cæsarea they advanced into the midland country; their clerks recognised the sacred geography of Lydda, Ramla, Emaus, and Bethlem, and as soon as they described the holy city, the crusaders forgot their toils and claimed their reward<sup>104</sup>.

<sup>103</sup> See the transactions between the caliph Aquefis (l. iii. c. 59.), who are more sensible of their importance, than the contemporary writers.

Jerusalem has derived some reputation from the number and importance of her memorable sieges. It was not till after a long and

C. H. A. P.
LVIII.

Their march to Jerusalem,
A. D. 1099,
May 13—
June 6.

Siege and conquest of Jerusalem,

<sup>104</sup> The greatest part of the march of the Franks is traced, and most accurately traced, in Maundrell's Journey from Aleppo to Jerusalem (p. 11—67.), un des meilleurs morceaux, sans contredit, qu'on ait dans ce genre (d'Anville, Memoire sur Jerusalem, p. 27.).

C H A P.
LVIII.

A. D. 1099,
June 7—
July 15.

obstinate contest that Babylon and Rome could prevail against the obstinacy of the people, the craggy ground that might supersede the necessity of fortifications, and the walls and towers that would have fortified the most accessible plain<sup>105</sup>. Obstacles were diminished in the age of the crusades. The bulwarks had been completely destroyed and imperfectly restored: the Jews, their nation and worship, were for ever banished; but nature is less changeable than man, and the site of Jerusalem, though somewhat softened and somewhat removed, was still strong against the assaults of an enemy. By the experience of a recent siege and a three years possession, the Saracens of Egypt had been taught to discern, and in some degree to remedy, the defects of a place, which religion as well as honour forbade them to resign. Aladin or Istikhar, the caliph's lieutenant, was entrusted with the defence: his policy strove to restrain the native Christians by the dread of their own ruin and that of the holy sepulchre; to animate the Moslems by the assurance of temporal and eternal rewards. His garrison is said to have consisted of forty thousand Turks and Arabians; and if he could muster twenty thousand of the inhabitants, it must be confessed that the besieged were more numerous than the besieging army<sup>106</sup>. Had the diminished strength and numbers of the Latins allowed them to grasp the whole circumference of four thousand yards (about two English miles and an half<sup>107</sup>), to what useful purpose should they have descended

<sup>105</sup> See the masterly description of Tacitus (Hist. v. 11, 12, 13.), who supposes, that the Jewish lawgivers had provided for a perpetual state of hostility against the rest of mankind.

<sup>106</sup> The lively scepticism of Voltaire is balanced with sense and erudition by the French author of the Esprit des Croisades (tom. iv. p. 386—388.), who observes, that according to the Arabians, the inhabitants of Jerusalem must have exceeded 200,000; that in the siege of Titus, Josephus collects 1,300,000 Jews; that they are stated by Tacitus himself at 600,000, and that the largest defalcation, that his accepimus can justify, will still leave them more numerous than the Roman army.

<sup>107</sup> Maundrell, who diligently perambulated the walls, found a circuit of 4630 paces, or 4167 English yards (p. 109, 110.): from an authentic plan, d'Anville concludes a measure nearly similar of 1960 French toises (p. 23—29.), in his scarce and valuable tract. For the topography of Jerusalem, see Reland (Palestina, tom. ii. p. 832—860.).

into into the valley of Ben Himmon and torrent of Cedron<sup>158</sup>, or approached the precipices of the South and East, from whence they had nothing either to hope or fear? Their siege was more reasonably directed against the northern and western sides of the city. Godfrey of Bouillon erected his standard on the first swell of mount Calvary: to the left, as far as St. Stephen's gate, the line of attack was continued by Tancred and the two Roberts; and count Raymond established his quarters from the citadel to the foot of mount Sion, which was no longer included within the precincts of the city. On the fifth day, the crusaders made a general assault in the fanatic hope of battering down the walls without engines, and of scaling them without ladders. By the dint of brutal force, they burst the first barrier, but they were driven back with shame and slaughter to the camp: the influence of vision and prophecy was deadened by the too frequent abuse of those pious stratagems; and time and labour were found to be the only means of victory. The time of the siege was indeed fulfilled in forty days, but they were forty days of calamity and anguish. A repetition of the old complaint of famine may be imputed in some degree to the voracious or disorderly appetite of the Franks; but the stony soil of Jerusalem is almost destitute of water; the scanty springs and hasty torrents were dry in the summer season; nor was the thirst of the besiegers relieved, as in the city, by the artificial supply of cisterns and aqueducts. The circumjacent country is equally destitute of trees for the uses of shade or building; but some large beams were discovered in a cave by the crusaders: a wood near Sichem, the enchanted grove of Tasso<sup>159</sup>,

C H A P.
LVIII.

<sup>158</sup> Jerusalem was possessed only of the torrent of Kedron, dry in summer, and of the little spring or brook of Siloe (Reland, tom. i. p. 294. 302.). Both strangers and natives complained of the want of water, which in time of war was studiously aggravated. Within the city, Tacitus mentions a perennial fountain, an aqueduct, and cisterns for rain water. The aqueduct was conveyed from the rivulet Tekoe or Etham, which is likewise mentioned by Bohadin (in Vit. Saladin. p. 238.).

<sup>159</sup> Gierusalemme Liberata, canto xiii. It is pleasant enough to observe how Tasso has copied and embellished the minutest details of the siege.

C H A P.
LVIII.

was cut down: the necessary timber was transported to the camp by the vigour and dexterity of Tancred; and the engines were framed by some Genoese artists, who had fortunately landed in the harbour of Jaffa. Two moveable turrets were constructed at the expence, and in the stations, of the duke of Lorraine and the count of Tholouse, and rolled forwards with devout labour, not to the most accessible, but to the most neglected, parts of the fortification. Raymond's tower was reduced to ashes by the fire of the besieged, but his colleague was more vigilant and successful; the enemies were driven by his archers from the rampart; the draw-bridge was let down; and on a Friday at three in the afternoon, the day and hour of the Passion, Godfrey of Bouillon stood victorious on the walls of Jerusalem. His example was followed on every side by the emulation of valour; and about four hundred and sixty years after the conquest of Omar, the holy city was rescued from the Mahometan yoke. In the pillage of public and private wealth, the adventurers had agreed to respect the exclusive property of the first occupant; and the spoils of the great mosque, seventy lamps and massy vases of gold and silver, rewarded the diligence, and displayed the generosity, of Tancred. A bloody sacrifice was offered by his mistaken votaries to the God of the Christians: resistance might provoke, but neither age nor sex could mollify, their implacable rage: they indulged themselves three days in a promiscuous massacre<sup>112</sup>; and the infection of the dead bodies produced an epidemical disease. After seventy thousand Moslems had been put to the sword, and the harmless Jews had been burnt in their synagogue, they could still reserve a multitude of captives, whom interest or lassitude persuaded them to spare. Of these savage heroes of the cross, Tancred alone betrayed some sentiments of compassion; yet we may praise the more selfish lenity of Raymond, who granted a capitulation and safe conduct to the garrison of the citadel<sup>111</sup>. The holy sepulchre was now free; and the bloody victors prepared to accomplish their vow. Bareheaded and barefoot, with contrite hearts, and in an humble posture, they ascended the hill of Calvary, amidst the loud anthems of the clergy; kissed the stone which had covered the Saviour of the world; and bedewed with tears of joy and penitence the monument of their redemption. This union of the fiercest and most tender passions has been variously considered by two philosophers; by the one<sup>112</sup>, as easy and natural; by the other<sup>113</sup>, as absurd and incredible. Perhaps it is too rigorously applied to the same persons and the same hour: the example of the virtuous Godfrey awakened the piety of his companions; while they cleansed their bodies, they purified their minds; nor shall I believe that the most ardent in slaughter and rapine were the foremost in the procession to the holy sepulchre.

<sup>112</sup> Besides the Latins, who are not ashamed of the massacre, see Elmacin (Hist. Saracen. p. 363.), Abulpharagius (Dynast. p. 243.), and M. de Guignes (tom. ii. p. ii. p. 99.), from Aboulmahafen.

Eight days after this memorable event, which pope Urban did not live to hear, the Latin chiefs proceeded to the election of a king, to guard and govern their conquests in Palestine. Hugh the Great, and Stephen of Chartres, had retired with some loss of reputation, which they strove to regain by a second crusade and an honourable death. Baldwin was established at Edeffa, and Bohemond at Antioch, and two Roberts, the duke of Normandy<sup>114</sup> and the count of Flanders, preferred their fair inheritance in the West to a doubtful competition or a barren sceptre. The jealousy and ambition of Raymond were condemned by his own followers, and the free, the just, the unanimous voice of the army, proclaimed Godfrey of

C H A P.
LVIII.

Election and reign of Godfrey of Bouillon,
A. D. 1099;
July 27—
A. D. 1100
July 13.

<sup>111</sup> The old tower Psephina, in the middle ages Neblosa, was named Castellum Pisanum, from the patriarch Daibert. It is still the citadel, the residence of the Turkish aga, and commands a prospect of the Dead Sea, Judea, and Arabia (d'Anville, p. 19—23). It was likewise called the Tower of David, πύργος παυλιανῶν.

<sup>112</sup> Hume, in his History of England, vol. i. p. 311, 312. octavo edition.

<sup>113</sup> Voltaire, in his Essai sur l'Histoire Generale, tom. ii. c. 54. p. 345, 346.

<sup>114</sup> The English ascribe to Robert of Normandy, and the Provincials to Raymond of Tholouse, the glory of refusing the crown; but the honest voice of tradition has preserved the memory of the ambition and revenge (Villehardouin, N<sup>o</sup> 136.) of the count of St. Giles. He died at the siege of Tripoli, which was possessed by his descendants.

C. H. A. P.
LVIII.

Battle of Ascalon,
A. D. 1099,
August 12.

Bouillon the first and most worthy of the champions of Christendom. His magnanimity accepted a trust as full of danger as of glory; but in a city where his Saviour had been crowned with thorns, the devout pilgrim rejected the name and ensigns of royalty; and the founder of the kingdom of Jerusalem contented himself with the modest title of Defender and Baron of the Holy Sepulchre. His government of a single year<sup>115</sup>, too short for the public happiness, was interrupted in the first fortnight by a summons to the field, by the approach of the vizir or sultan of Egypt, who had been too slow to prevent, but who was impatient to avenge, the loss of Jerusalem. His total overthrow in the battle of Ascalon sealed the establishment of the Latins in Syria, and signalized the valour of the French princes, who in this action bade a long farewell to the holy wars. Some glory might be derived from the prodigious inequality of numbers, though I shall not count the myriads of horse and foot on the side of the Fatimites; but, except three thousand Ethiopians or blacks, who were armed with flails or scourges of iron, the Barbarians of the South fled on the first onset, and afforded a pleasing comparison between the active valour of the Turks and the sloth and effeminacy of the natives of Egypt. After suspending before the holy sepulchre the sword and standard of the sultan, the new king (he deserves the title) embraced his departing companions, and could retain only with the gallant Tancred three hundred knights, and two thousand foot soldiers, for the defence of Palestine. His sovereignty was soon attacked by a new enemy, the only one against whom Godfrey was a coward. Adhemar, bishop of Puy, who excelled both in council and action, had been swept away in the last plague of Antioch: the remaining ecclesiastics preserved only the pride and avarice of their character; and their seditious clamours had required that the choice of a bishop should precede that of a king. The revenue and jurisdiction of the lawful patriarch were usurped by the

<sup>115</sup> See the election, the battle of Ascalon, and in the conclusion of the Latin historians on, &c. in William of Tyre, l. ix. c. 1—12. of the first crusade.

Latin clergy: the exclusion of the Greeks and Syrians was justified by the reproach of heresy or schism<sup>116</sup>; and, under the iron yoke of their deliverers, the Oriental Christians regretted the tolerating government of the Arabian caliphs. Daimbert, archbishop of Pisa, had long been trained in the secret policy of Rome: he brought a fleet of his countrymen to the succour of the Holy Land, and was installed, without a competitor, the spiritual and temporal head of the church. The new patriarch<sup>117</sup> immediately grasped the sceptre which had been acquired by the toil and blood of the victorious pilgrims; and both Godfrey and Bohemond submitted to receive at his hands the investiture of their feudal possessions. Nor was this sufficient; Daimbert claimed the immediate property of Jerusalem and Jaffa: instead of a firm and generous refusal, the hero negotiated with the priest; a quarter of either city was ceded to the church; and the modest bishop was satisfied with an eventual reversion of the rest, on the death of Godfrey without children, or on the future acquisition of a new seat at Cairo or Damascus.

Without this indulgence, the conqueror would have almost been stripped of his infant kingdom, which consisted only of Jerusalem and Jaffa, with about twenty villages and towns of the adjacent country<sup>118</sup>. Within this narrow verge, the Mahometans were still lodged in some impregnable castles; and the husbandman, the trader, and the pilgrim, were exposed to daily and domestic hostility. By the arms of Godfrey himself, and of the two Baldwins, his brother and cousin, who succeeded to the throne, the Latins breathed with more ease and safety; and at length they equalled, in the extent of their dominions, though not in the millions of their subjects, the ancient princes of

C H A P.
LVIII.

The kingdom of Jerusalem.
A. D.
1099—1187

<sup>116</sup> Renaudot, Hist. Patriarch. Alex. p. 479.

<sup>117</sup> See the claims of the patriarch Daimbert, in William of Tyre (l. iv. c. 15—18. x. 4. 7. 9.), who asserts with marvellous candour the independence of the conquerors and kings of Jerusalem.

<sup>118</sup> Willerm. Tyr. l. x. 19. The Hiberia Hierosolimita of Jacobus à Viriaco (l. i. c. 21—50.), and the Secreta Fidelium Crucis of Marinus Sanutus (l. iii. p. i.), describe the state and conquests of the Latin kingdom of Jerusalem.

C H A P.
LVIII.

Judah and Israel<sup>119</sup>. After the reduction of the maritime cities of Laodicea, Tripoli, Tyre, and Ascalon<sup>120</sup>, which were powerfully assisted by the fleets of Venice, Genoa, and Pisa, and even of Flanders and Norway<sup>121</sup>, the range of sea-coast from Scanderoon to the borders of Egypt was possessed by the Christian pilgrims. If the prince of Antioch disclaimed his supremacy, the counts of Edessa and Tripoli owned themselves the vassals of the king of Jerusalem: the Latins reigned beyond the Euphrates; and the four cities of Hems, Hamah, Damascus, and Aleppo, were the only relics of the Mahometan conquests in Syria<sup>122</sup>. The laws and language, the manners and titles, of the French nation and Latin church, were introduced into these transmarine colonies. According to the feudal jurisprudence, the principal states and subordinate baronies descended in the line of male and female succession<sup>123</sup>; but the children of the first conquerors<sup>124</sup>, a motley and degenerate race, were dissolved by

<sup>119</sup> An actual muster, not including the tribes of Levi and Benjamin, gave David an army of 1,300,000, or 1,574,000 fighting men; which, with the addition of women, children, and slaves, may imply a population of thirteen millions, in a country sixty leagues in length, and thirty broad. The honest and rational Le Clerc (Comment. on 2<sup>d</sup> Samuel xxiv. and 1st Chronicles xxi. æstuat angusto in limite, and mutters his suspicion of a false transcript; a dangerous suspicion!)

<sup>120</sup> These sieges are related, each in its proper place, in the great history of William of Tyre, from the ixth to the xviiith book, and more briefly told by Bernardus Thesaurarius (de Acquisitione Terræ Sanctæ, c. 89—98. p. 732—740.). Some domestic facts are celebrated in the Chronicles of Pisa, Genoa, and Venice, in the vth, ixth, and xiiith tomes of Muratori.

<sup>121</sup> Quidam populus de insulis occidentis egressus, et maxime de eâ parte quæ Norvegia dicitur. William of Tyre (l. xi. c. 14. p. 804.) marks their course per Britannicum

mare et Calpen to the siege of Sidon.

<sup>122</sup> Benelathir, apud de Guignes, Hist. des Huns, tom. ii. part. ii. p. 150, 151. A. D. 1127. He must speak of the inland country.

<sup>123</sup> Sanut very sensibly descants on the mischiefs of female succession, in a land hostibus circumdata, ubi cuncta virilia et virtuosâ esse deberent. Yet, at the summons, and with the approbation, of her feudal lord, a noble damsel was obliged to chuse a husband and champion (Assises de Jerusalem, c. 242, &c.). See in M. de Guignes (tom. i. p. 441—471.) the accurate and useful tables of these dynasties, which are chiefly drawn from the Lignages d'Outremer.

<sup>124</sup> They were called by derision Poullains, Pullani, and their name is never pronounced without contempt (Ducange, Gloss. Latin. tom. v. p. 535. and Observations sur Joinville, p. 34, 85. Jacob à Vitriaco, Hist. Hierosol. l. i. c. 67. 72. and Sanut, l. iii. p. viii. c. 2. p. 182.). Illustrium virorum qui ad Terræ Sanctæ . . . liberationem in ipsâ manserunt degeneres filii . . . in deliciis enutriti, molles et effeminati, &c.

the

the luxury of the climate; the arrival of new crusaders from Europe, was a doubtful hope and a casual event. The service of the feudal tenures<sup>125</sup> was performed by six hundred and sixty-six knights, who might expect the aid of two hundred more under the banner of the count of Tripoli; and each knight was attended to the field by four squires or archers on horseback<sup>126</sup>. Five thousand and seventy-five serjeants, most probably foot-foldiers, were supplied by the churches and cities; and the whole legal militia of the kingdom could not exceed eleven thousand men, a slender defence against the surrounding myriads of Saracens and Turks<sup>127</sup>. But the firmest bulwark of Jerusalem was founded on the knights of the hospital of St. John<sup>128</sup>, and of the temple of Solomon<sup>129</sup>; on the strange association of a monastic and military life, which fanaticism might suggest, but which policy must approve. The flower of the nobility of Europe aspired to wear the cross, and to profess the vows, of these respectable orders; their spirit and discipline were immortal; and the speedy donation of twenty-eight thousand farms, or manors<sup>130</sup>, enabled them to support a regular force of cavalry and infantry for the defence of Palestine. The austerity of the convent soon evaporated

<sup>125</sup> This authentic detail is extracted from the Assises de Jerusalem (c. 324. 326—331.). Sanut (l. iii. p. viii. c. 1. p. 174.) reckons only 518 knights, and 5775 followers.

<sup>126</sup> The sum total, and the division, ascertain the service of the three great baronies at 100 knights each; and the text of the Assises, which extends the number to 500, can only be justified by this supposition.

<sup>127</sup> Yet on great emergencies (says Sanut) the barons brought a voluntary aid, decentem comitivam militum juxta statum suum.

<sup>128</sup> William of Tyre (l. xviii. c. 3, 4, 5.) relates the ignoble origin, and early insolence, of the Hospitalers, who soon deserted their humble patron, St. John the Eleemosynary, for the more august character of St. John the Baptist (see the ineffectual struggles of Pagi, Critica, A. D. 1099, N<sup>o</sup> 14—18.). They assumed the profession of arms about the year 1120; the Hospital was mater, the Temple, filia; the Teutonic order was founded A. D. 1190, at the siege of Acre (Mosheim, Institut. p. 389, 390.).

<sup>129</sup> See St. Bernard de Laude Novæ Militiæ Templi, composed A. D. 1132—1136, in Opp. tom. i. p. ii. p. 547—563. edit. Mabillon, Venet. 1750. Such an encomium, which is thrown away on the dead Templars, would be highly valued by the historians of Malta.

<sup>130</sup> Matthew Paris, Hist. Major, p. 544. He assigns to the Hospitalers 19,000, to the Templars 9,000 maneria, a word of much higher import (as Ducange has rightly observed) in the English than in the French idiom. Manor is a lordship, manoir a dwelling.

C H A P. in the exercise of arms: the world was scandalised by the pride, LVIII. avarice, and corruption of these Christian soldiers; their claims of immunity and jurisdiction disturbed the harmony of the church and state; and the public peace was endangered by their jealous emulation.
 But in their most dissolute period, the knights of the hospital and temple maintained their fearless and fanatic character: they neglected to live, but they were prepared to die, in the service of Christ; and the spirit of chivalry, the parent and offspring of the crusades, has been transplanted by this institution from the holy sepulchre to the isle of Malta<sup>131</sup>.

Assise of Jerusalem,
 A. D.
 1099—1369.

The spirit of freedom, which pervades the feudal institutions, was felt in its strongest energy by the volunteers of the cross, who elected for their chief the most deserving of his peers. Amidst the slaves of Asia, unconscious of the lesson or example, a model of political liberty was introduced: and the laws of the French kingdom are derived from the purest source of equality and justice. Of such laws, the first and indispensable condition is the assent of those, whose obedience they require, and for whose benefit they are designed. No sooner had Godfrey of Bouillon accepted the office of supreme magistrate, than he solicited the public and private advice of the Latin pilgrims, who were the best skilled in the statutes and customs of Europe. From these materials, with the counsel and approbation of the patriarch and barons, of the clergy and laity, Godfrey composed the ASSISE OF JERUSALEM<sup>132</sup>, a precious monument of feudal jurisprudence. The new code, attested by the seals of the king, the patriarch, and the viscount of Jerusalem, was deposited in the holy sepulchre, enriched with the improvements of succeeding times, and respectfully consulted as often as any doubtful question arose in the tribunals of Palestine. With the kingdom and city, all was lost<sup>133</sup>; the fragments of the written law were preserved by jealous tradition<sup>134</sup> and variable practice till the middle of the thirteenth century: the code was restored by the pen of John d'IBelin, count of Jaffa, one of the principal feudatories<sup>135</sup>; and the final revision was accomplished in the year thirteen hundred and sixty-nine, for the use of the Latin kingdom of Cyprus<sup>136</sup>.

<sup>131</sup> In the three first books of the Histoire des Chevaliers de Malthe, par l'Abbé de Vertot, the reader may amuse himself with a fair, and sometimes flattering, picture of the order, while it was employed for the defence of Palestine. The subsequent books pursue their emigrations to Rhodes and Malta.

<sup>132</sup> The Assises de Jerusalem, in old law

French, were printed with Beaumanoir's Coutumes de Beauvoisis (Bourges and Paris, 1690, in folio), and illustrated by Gaspard Thaumassiere, with a comment and glossary. An Italian version had been published in 1535, at Venice, for the use of the kingdom of Cyprus.

C H A P.
LVIII.

The justice and freedom of the constitution were maintained by two tribunals of unequal dignity, which were instituted by Godfrey of Bouillon after the conquest of Jerusalem. The king, in person, presided in the upper-court, the court of the barons. Of these the four most conspicuous were the prince of Galilee, the lord of Sidon and Caesarea, and the counts of Jaffa and Tripoli, who, perhaps with the constable and marshal<sup>137</sup>, were in a special manner the compeers and judges of each other. But all the nobles, who held their lands immediately of the crown, were entitled and bound to attend the king's court; and each baron exercised a similar jurisdiction in the subordinate assemblies of his own feudatories. The connection of lord peers.

Court of

<sup>133</sup> A la terre perdue, tout fut perdu, is the vigorous expression of the Affise (c. 281.). Yet Jerusalem capitulated with Saladin; the queen and the principal Christians departed in peace; and a code so precious and so portable could not provoke the avarice of the conquerors. I have sometimes suspected the existence of this original copy of the Holy Sepulchre, which might be invented to sanctify and authenticate the traditionary customs of the French in Palestine.

<sup>134</sup> A noble lawyer, Raoul de Tabarie, denied the prayer of king Amauri (A. D. 1195—1205), that he would commit his knowledge to writing, and frankly declared, que de ce qu'il favoit, ne feroit-il ja nul borjois son pareill, ne nul sage homme lettré (c. 281.).

<sup>135</sup> The compiler of this work, Jean d'IBelin, was count of Jaffa and Ascalon, lord of Baruth (Berytus) and Rames, and died A. D. 1266 (Sanut, l. iii. p. ii. c. 5. 8.). The family of IBelin, which descended from a younger brother of a count of Chartres in France, long flourished in Palestine and Cyprus (see the Lignages de deça Mer, or d'Ou-tremer, c. 6. at the end of the Affises de Jerusalem, an original book, which records the pedigrees of the French adventurers).

<sup>136</sup> By sixteen commissioners chosen in the states of the island: the work was finished the 3<sup>d</sup> of November 1369, sealed with four seals, and deposited in the cathedral of Nicosia (see the preface to the Affises).

<sup>137</sup> The cautious John d'IBelin argues, rather than affirms, that Tripoli is the fourth barony, and expresses some doubt concerning the right or pretension of the constable and marshal (c. 323.).

C H A P.
LVIII.

and vassal was honourable and voluntary: reverence was due to the benefactor, protection to the dependent; but they mutually pledged their faith to each other; and the obligation on either side might be suspended by neglect or dissolved by injury. The cognizance of marriages and testaments was blended with religion, and usurped by the clergy; but the civil and criminal causes of the nobles, the inheritance and tenure of their fiefs, formed the proper occupation of the supreme court. Each member was the judge and guardian both of public and private rights. It was his duty to assert with his tongue and sword the lawful claims of the lord; but if an unjust superior presumed to violate the freedom or property of a vassal, the confederate peers stood forth to maintain his quarrel by word and deed. They boldly affirmed his innocence and his wrongs; demanded the restitution of his liberty or his lands; suspended, after a fruitless demand, their own service; rescued their brother from prison; and employed every weapon in his defence, without offering direct violence to the person of their lord, which was ever sacred in their eyes<sup>138</sup>. In their pleadings, replies, and rejoinders, the advocates of the court were subtle and copious; but the use of argument and evidence was often superseded by judicial combat; and the Assise of Jerusalem admits in many cases this barbarous institution, which has been slowly abolished by the laws and manners of Europe.

Law of judicial combats.

The trial by battle was established in all criminal cases, which affected the life, or limb, or honour, of any person; and in all civil transactions, of or above the value of one mark of silver. It appears, that in criminal cases the combat was the privilege of the accuser, who, except in a charge of treason, avenged his personal injury, or the death of those persons whom he had a right to represent; but wherever, from facè mettre au cors ou au fié d'aucun d'yaus sans esgard et sans connoissance de court, que tous les autres doivent venir devant le seignor, &c. (212.). The form of their remonstrances is conceived with the noble simplicity of freedom.

<sup>138</sup> Entre seignor et homme ne n'a que la foi;... mais tant que l'homme doit à son seignor reverence en toutes choses (c. 206.). Tous les hommes dudit royaume sont par ladite Assise tenus les uns as autres... et en celle maniere que le seignor mette main ou

the nature of the charge, testimony could be obtained, it was necessary for him to produce witnesses of the fact. In civil cases, the combat was not allowed as the means of establishing the claim of the demandant; but he was obliged to produce witnesses who had, or assumed to have, knowledge of the fact. The combat was then the privilege of the defendant; because he charged the witness with an attempt by perjury to take away his right. He came therefore to be in the same situation as the appellant in criminal cases. It was not then as a mode of proof that the combat was received, nor as making negative evidence (according to the supposition of Montesquieu<sup>139</sup>); but in every case the right to offer battle was founded on the right to pursue by arms the redress of an injury; and the judicial combat was fought on the same principle, and with the same spirit, as a private duel. Champions were only allowed to women, and to men maimed or past the age of sixty. The consequence of a defeat was death to the person accused, or to the champion or witness, as well as to the accuser himself; but in civil cases, the demandant was punished with infamy and the loss of his suit, while his witness and champion suffered an ignominious death. In many cases it was in the option of the judge to award or to refuse the combat: but two are specified, in which it was the inevitable result of the challenge; if a faithful vassal gave the lie to his compeer, who unjustly claimed any portion of their lord's demesnes; or if an unsuccessful suitor presumed to impeach the judgment and veracity of the court. He might impeach them, but the terms were severe and perilous: in the same day he successively fought all the members of the tribunal, even those who had been absent: a single defeat was followed by death and infamy; and where none could hope for victory, it is highly probable that none would adventure the trial. In the Assise of Jerusalem, the legal subtlety of the count of Jassa is more <sup>139</sup> See l'Esprit des Loix, l. xxviii. In the forty years since its publication, no work has been more read and criticised; and the spirit of enquiry which it has excited, is not the least of our obligations to the author.

laudably

C H A P.
LVIII.

laudably employed to elude, than to facilitate, the judicial combat, which he derives from a principle of honour rather than of superstition<sup>140</sup>.

Court of
burgeſſes.

Among the cauſes which enfranchiſed the plebeians from the yoke of feudal tyranny, the inſtitution of cities and corporations is one of the moſt powerful; and if thoſe of Paleſtine are coeval with the firſt cruſade, they may be ranked with the moſt ancient of the Latin world. Many of the pilgrims had eſcaped from their lords under the banner of the croſs; and it was the policy of the French princes to tempt their ſtay by the aſſurance of the rights and privileges of freemen. It is expreſsly declared in the Aſſize of Jeruſalem, that after inſtituting, for his knights and barons, the court of peers, in which he preſided himſelf, Godfrey of Bouillon eſtabliſhed a ſecond tribunal, in which his perſon was repreſented by his viſcount. The jurifdiction of this inferior court extended over the burgeſſes of the kingdom; and it was compoſed of a ſelect number of the moſt diſcreet and worthy citizens, who were ſworn to judge, according to the laws, of the actions and fortunes of their equals<sup>141</sup>. In the conqueſt and ſettlement of new cities, the example of Jeruſalem was imitated by the kings and their great vaſſals; and above thirty ſimilar corporations were founded before the loſs of the Holy Land. Another claſs of ſubjects, the Syrians<sup>142</sup>, or Oriental Chriſtians, were oppreſſed by the zeal of the clergy, and proteſted by the toleration of the ſtate. Godfrey liſtened to their reaſonable prayer, that they might be judged Syrians.

<sup>140</sup> For the intelligence of this obſcure and obſolete jurisprudence (c. 80—111.), I am deeply indebted to the friendſhip of a learned lord, who, with an accurate and diſcerning eye, has ſurveyed the philoſophic hiſtory of law. By his ſtudies, poſterity might be enriched: the merit of the orator and the judge can be felt only by his contemporaries.

<sup>141</sup> Louis le Gros, who is conſidered as the father of this inſtitution in France, did not begin his reign till nine years (A. D.

1108) after Godfrey of Bouillon (Aſſiſes, c. 2. 324.). For its origin and effects, ſee the judicious remarks of Dr. Robertſon (Hiſtory of Charles V. vol. i. p. 30—36. 251—265. quarto edition).

<sup>142</sup> Every reader converſant with the hiſtorians of the cruſades, will underſtand by the peuple des Suriens, the Oriental Chriſtians, Melchites, Jacobites, or Neſtorians, who had all adopted the uſe of the Arabic language (vol. iv. p. 593.).

by their own national laws. A third court was instituted for their use, of limited and domestic jurisdiction: the sworn members were Syrians, in blood, language, and religion; but the office of the president (in Arabic, of the rais) was sometimes exercised by the viscount of the city. At an immeasurable distance below the nobles, the burgesses, and the strangers, the Assise of Jerusalem condescends to mention the villains and slaves, the peasants of the land and the captives of war, who were almost equally considered as the objects of property. The relief or protection of these unhappy men was not esteemed worthy of the care of the legislator; but he diligently provides for the recovery, though not indeed for the punishment, of the fugitives. Like hounds, or hawks, who had strayed from the lawful owner, they might be lost and claimed: the slave and falcon were of the same value; but three slaves, or twelve oxen, were accumulated to equal the price of the war-horse; and a sum of three hundred pieces of gold was fixed, in the age of chivalry, as the equivalent of the more noble animal<sup>143</sup>.

C H A P.
LVIII.

Villains and slaves.

<sup>143</sup> See the Assises de Jerusalem (310, 311, 312.). These laws were enacted as late as the year 1350, in the kingdom of Cyprus. In the same century, in the reign of Edward I. I understand, from a late publication (of his Book of Account), that the price of a war-horse was not less exorbitant in England.

C H A P. LIX.

Preservation of the Greek Empire.—Numbers, Passage, and Event, of the Second and Third Crusades.—St. Bernard.—Reign of Saladin in Egypt and Syria.—His Conquest of Jerusalem.—Naval Crusades.—Richard the First of England.—Pope Innocent the Third; and the Fourth and Fifth Crusades.—The Emperor Frederic the Second.—Louis the Ninth of France; and the two last Crusades.—Expulsion of the Latins or Franks by the Mamalukes.

C H A P.
LIX.
Success of Alexius,
A. D.
1097—1118.

IN a style less grave than that of history, I should perhaps compare the emperor Alexius' to the jackall, who is said to follow the steps, and to devour the leavings, of the lion. Whatever had been his fears and toils in the passage of the first crusade, they were amply recompensed by the subsequent benefits which he derived from the exploits of the Franks. His dexterity and vigilance secured their first conquest of Nice; and from this threatening station the Turks were compelled to evacuate the neighbourhood of Constantinople. While the crusaders, with blind valour, advanced into the midland countries of Asia, the crafty Greek improved the favourable occasion when the emirs of the sea-coast were recalled to the standard of the sultan. The Turks were driven from the isles of Rhodes and Chios: the cities of Ephesus and Smyrna, of Sardes,

* Anna Comnena relates her father's conquests in Asia Minor, Alexiad, l. xi. p. 321—325. l. xiv. p. 419.; his Cilician war against Tancred and Bohemond, p. 328—

342.; the war of Epirus, with tedious prolixity, l. xii, xiii. p. 345—406.; the death of Bohemond, l. xiv. p. 419.

Philadelphia, and Laodicea, were restored to the empire, which Alexius enlarged from the Hellespont to the banks of the Mæander, and the rocky shores of Pamphylia. The churches resumed their splendour; the towns were rebuilt and fortified; and the desert country was peopled with colonies of Christians, who were gently removed from the more distant and dangerous frontier. In these paternal cares, we may forgive Alexius, if he forgot the deliverance of the holy sepulchre; but, by the Latins, he was stigmatized with the foul reproach of treason and desertion. They had sworn fidelity and obedience to his throne; but he had promised to assist their enterprise in person, or, at least, with his troops and treasures: his base retreat dissolved their obligations; and the sword, which had been the instrument of their victory, was the pledge and title of their just independence. It does not appear that the emperor attempted to revive his obsolete claims over the kingdom of Jerusalem<sup>2</sup>; but the borders of Cilicia and Syria were more recent in his possession, and more accessible to his arms. The great army of the crusaders was annihilated or dispersed; the principality of Antioch was left without a head, by the surprise and captivity of Bohemond: his ransom had oppressed him with a heavy debt; and his Norman followers were insufficient to repel the hostilities of the Greeks and Turks. In this distress, Bohemond embraced a magnanimous resolution, of leaving the defence of Antioch to his kinsman, the faithful Tancred; of arming the West against the Byzantine empire, and of executing the design which he inherited from the lessons and example of his father Guiscard. His embarkation was clandestine: and if we may credit a tale of the princess Anne, he passed the hostile sea, closely secreted in a coffin<sup>3</sup>. But his reception in France was <sup>3</sup> Anna Comnena adds, that to complete the imitation, he was shut up with a dead cock; and condescends to wonder how the Barbarian could endure the confinement and putrefaction. This absurd tale is unknown to the Latins.

<sup>2</sup> The kings of Jerusalem submitted however to a nominal dependence, and in the dates of their inscriptions (one is still legible in the church of Bethlem), they respectfully placed before their own, the name of the reigning emperor (Ducange, Dissertations sur Joinville, xxvii. p. 319.).

C H A P.
LIX.

dignified by the public applause, and his marriage with the king's daughter: his return was glorious, since the bravest spirits of the age enlisted under his veteran command; and he repassed the Adriatic at the head of five thousand horse and forty thousand foot, assembled from the most remote climates of Europe*. The strength of Durazzo, and prudence of Alexius, the progress of famine, and approach of Winter, eluded his ambitious hopes; and the venal confederates were seduced from his standard. A treaty of peace<sup>5</sup> suspended the fears of the Greeks; and they were finally delivered by the death of an adversary, whom neither oaths could bind, nor dangers could appal, nor prosperity could satiate. His children succeeded to the principality of Antioch; but the boundaries were strictly defined, the homage was clearly stipulated, and the cities of Tarsus and Malmissra were restored to the Byzantine emperors. Of the coast of Anatolia, they possessed the entire circuit from Trebizond to the Syrian gates. The Seljukian dynasty of Roum<sup>6</sup> was separated on all sides from the sea and their Musulman brethren; the power of the sultans was shaken by the victories, and even the defeats of the Franks; and after the loss of Nice, they removed their throne to Cogni or Iconium, an obscure and inland town above three hundred miles from Constantinople<sup>7</sup>. Instead of trembling for their capital, the Comnenian princes waged an offensive war against the Turks, and the first crusade prevented the fall of the declining empire.

* Απὸ Ὀλνῆς, in the Byzantine Geography, must mean England; yet we are more credibly informed, that our Henry I. would not suffer him to levy any troops in his kingdom (Ducange, Not. ad Alexiad, p. 41.).

<sup>5</sup> The copy of the treaty (Alexiad, l. xiii. p. 406—416.) is an original and curious piece, which would require, and might afford, a good map of the principality of Antioch.

<sup>6</sup> See in the learned work of M. de Guignes (tom. ii. part ii.), the history of the Seljukians of Iconium, Aleppo, and Damascus, as far as it may be collected from the Greeks, Latins, and Arabians. The last are ignorant or regardless of the affairs of Roum.

<sup>7</sup> Iconium is mentioned as a station by Xenophon, and by Strabo, with the ambiguous title of Κοινοπολις (Cellarius, tom. ii. p. 121.). Yet St. Paul found in that place a multitude (πληθος) of Jews and Gentiles. Under the corrupt name of Kunijab, it is described as a great city, with a river and gardens, three leagues from the mountains, and decorated (I know not why) with Plato's tomb (Abulfeda, tabul. xvii. p. 303. verf. Reiske; and the Index Geographicus of Schultens from Ibn Said).

In the twelfth century, three great emigrations marched by land from the West to the relief of Palestine. The soldiers and pilgrims of Lombardy, France, and Germany, were excited by the example and success of the first crusade<sup>8</sup>. Forty-eight years after the deliverance of the holy sepulchre, the emperor, and the French king, Conrad the third, and Louis the seventh, undertook the second crusade to support the falling fortunes of the Latins<sup>9</sup>. A grand division of the third crusade was led by the emperor Frederic Barbarossa<sup>10</sup>, who sympathized with his brothers of France and England in the common loss of Jerusalem. These three expeditions may be compared in their resemblance of the greatness of numbers, their passage through the Greek empire, and the nature and event of their Turkish warfare, and a brief parallel may save the repetition of a tedious narrative. However splendid it may seem, a regular story of the crusades would exhibit the perpetual return of the same causes and effects; and the frequent attempts for the defence or recovery of the Holy Land, would appear so many faint and unsuccessful copies of the original.

C H A P.
LIX.

Expeditions
by land:
the first crusade,
A. D. 1101,
the second, of Conrad III.
and Louis
VII.
A. D. 1147,
the third, of Frederic I.
A. D. 1189.

I. Of the swarms that so closely trod in the footsteps of the first pilgrims, the chiefs were equal in rank, though unequal in fame and merit, to Godfrey of Bouillon and his fellow adventurers. At their head were displayed the banners of the dukes of Burgundy, Bavaria, and Aquitain: the first a descendant of Hugh Capet, the second a father of the Brunswick line: the archbishop of Milan, a

Their numbers.

<sup>8</sup> For this supplement to the first crusade, see Anna Comnena (Alexias, l. xi. p. 531, &c. and the viiith book of Albert Aqueusis).

<sup>9</sup> For the second crusade of Conrad III. and Lewis VII. see William of Tyre (l. xvi. c. 18—29.), Otho of Frisingen (l. i. c. 34—45. 59, 60), Matthew Paris (Hist. Major. p. 68.), Struvius (Corpus, Hist. Germanicæ, p. 372, 373.), Scriptores Rerum Francicarum à Duchesne, tom. iv. Nicetas, in Vit. Manuel, l. i. c. 4, 5, 6. p. 41—48. Cinnamus, l. ii. p. 41—47.

<sup>10</sup> For the third crusade, of Frederic Barbarossa, see Nicetas in Isaac. Angel. l. ii. c. 3—8. p. 257—266. Struv. (Corpus, Hist. Germ. p. 414.), and two historians, who probably were spectators, Tagino (in Scriptor. Freher. tom. i. p. 406—416. edit. Struv.), and the Anonymus de Expeditione Asiaticâ, Fred. I. (in Canisii, Antiq. Lectio. tom. iii. p. ii. p. 493—516. edit. Bânage).

C H A P.
LIX.

temporal prince, transported, for the benefit of the Turks, the treasures and ornaments of his church and palace; and the veteran crusaders, Hugh the Great, and Stephen of Chartres, returned to consummate their unfinished vow. The huge and disorderly bodies of their followers moved forwards in two columns; and if the first consisted of two hundred and sixty thousand persons, the second might possibly amount to sixty thousand horse, and one hundred thousand foot<sup>11</sup>. The armies of the second crusade might have claimed the conquest of Asia: the nobles of France and Germany were animated by the presence of their sovereigns; and both the rank and personal characters of Conrad and Louis, gave a dignity to their cause, and a discipline to their force, which might be vainly expected from the feudatory chiefs. The cavalry of the emperor, and that of the king, was each composed of seventy thousand knights and their immediate attendants in the field<sup>12</sup>; and if the light-armed troops, the peasant infantry, the women and children, the priests and monks, be rigorously excluded, the full account will scarcely be satisfied with four hundred thousand souls. The West, from Rome to Britain, was called into action; the kings of Poland and Bohemia obeyed the summons of Conrad; and it is affirmed by the Greeks and Latins, that in the passage of a streight or river, the Byzantine agents, after a tale of nine hundred thousand, desisted from the endless and formidable computation<sup>13</sup>. In the third crusade, as the French and English preferred the navigation of the Mediterranean, the host of Frederic Barbarossa was less numerous. Fifteen thousand knights, <sup>11</sup> Anne, who states these later swarms at 40,000 horse, and 100,000 foot, calls them Normans, and places at their head two brothers of Flanders. The Greeks were strangely ignorant of the names, families and possessions of the Latin princes.

<sup>12</sup> William of Tyre, and Matthew Paris, reckon 70,000 loricati in each of the armies.

<sup>13</sup> The imperfect enumeration is mentioned by Cinnamus (ἑξακλις καὶ ἑκατὸν), and confirmed by Odo de Diogilo apud Ducange ad Cinnamum, with the more precise sum of 900,556. Why must therefore the version and comment suppose the modest and insufficient reckoning of 90,000? Does not Godfrey of Viterbo (Pantheon, p. xix. in Muratori, tom. vii. p. 462.) exclaim?

— Numerum si poscere queras.

Millia millena milites agmen erat.

and as many squires, were the flower of the German chivalry: sixty thousand horse, and one hundred thousand foot, were mustered by the emperor in the plains of Hungary; and after such repetitions we shall no longer be startled at the six hundred thousand pilgrims, which credulity has ascribed to this last emigration<sup>14</sup>. Such extravagant reckonings prove only the astonishment of contemporaries; but their astonishment most strongly bears testimony to the existence of an enormous though indefinite multitude. The Greeks might applaud their superior knowledge of the arts and stratagems of war, but they confessed the strength and courage of the French cavalry and the infantry of the Germans<sup>15</sup>; and the strangers are described as an iron race, of gigantic stature, who darted fire from their eyes, and spilt blood like water on the ground. Under the banners of Conrad, a troop of females rode in the attitude and armour of men; and the chief of these Amazons, from her gilt spurs and buskins, obtained the epithet of the Golden-footed Dame.

II. The numbers and character of the strangers was an object of terror to the effeminate Greeks, and the sentiment of fear is nearly allied to that of hatred. This aversion was suspended or softened by the apprehension of the Turkish power; and the invectives of the Latins will not bias our more candid belief, that the emperor Alexius dissembled their insolence, eluded their hostilities, counselled their rashness, and opened to their ardour the road of pilgrimage and conquest. But when the Turks had been driven from Nice and the sea-coast, when the Byzantine princes no longer dreaded the distant Sultans of Cogni, they felt with purer indignation the free

C H A P.
LIX.

Passage through the Greek empire.

<sup>14</sup> This extravagant account is given by Albert of Stade (apud Struvium, p. 414.); my calculation is borrowed from Godfrey of Viterbo, Arnold of Lubeck, apud eundem, and Bernard Thefaur. (c. 169. p. 804.). The original writers are silent. The Mahometans gave him 200,000, or 260,000 men (Bohadin, in Vit. Saladin. p. 110.).

<sup>15</sup> I must observe, that in the second and third crusades, the subjects of Conrad and Frederic are styled by the Greeks and Orientals Alamanni. The Lechi and Tzechi of Cinnamus, are the Poles and Bohemians; and it is for the French, that he reserves the ancient appellation of Germans. He likewise names the B. Str., or Pr. Str.

and

C H A P.
LIX.

and frequent passage of the western Barbarians, who violated the majesty, and endangered the safety, of the empire. The second and third crusades were undertaken under the reign of Manuel Comnenus and Isaac Angelus. Of the former, the passions were always impetuous, and often malevolent; and the natural union of a cowardly and a mischievous temper was exemplified in the latter, who, without merit or mercy, could punish a tyrant, and occupy his throne. It was secretly, and perhaps tacitly, resolved by the prince and people to destroy, or at least to discourage, the pilgrims, by every species of injury and oppression; and their want of prudence and discipline continually afforded the pretence or the opportunity. The Western monarchs had stipulated a safe passage and fair market in the country of their Christian brethren; the treaty had been ratified by oaths and hostages; and the poorest soldier of Frederic's army was furnished with three marks of silver to defray his expences on the road. But every engagement was violated by treachery and injustice; and the complaints of the Latins are attested by the honest confession of a Greek historian, who has dared to prefer truth to his country<sup>16</sup>. Instead of an hospitable reception, the gates of the cities, both in Europe and Asia, were closely barred against the crusaders; and the scanty pittance of food was let down in baskets from the walls. Experience or foresight might excuse this timid jealousy; but the common duties of humanity prohibited the mixture of chalk, or other poisonous ingredients, in the bread; and should Manuel be acquitted of any foul connivance, he is guilty of coining base money for the purpose of trading with the pilgrims. In every step of their march they were stopped or misled: the governors had private orders to fortify the passes and break down the bridges against them: the stragglers were pillaged and murdered; the soldiers and horses were pierced in the woods by arrows from an invisible hand; the sick were burnt in their beds; and the dead bodies were hung on gibbets along the highways. These injuries exasperated the champions of the cross, who were not endowed with evangelical patience; and the Byzantine princes, who had provoked the unequal conflict, promoted the embarkation and march of these formidable guests. On the verge of the Turkish frontier Barbarossa spared the guilty Philadelphia<sup>17</sup>, rewarded the hospitable Laodicea, and deplored the hard necessity that had stained his sword with any drops of Christian blood. In their intercourse with the monarchs of Germany and France, the pride of the Greeks was exposed to an anxious trial. They might boast that on the first interview the feat of Louis was a low stool, beside the throne of Manuel<sup>18</sup>; but no sooner had the French king transported his army beyond the Bosphorus, than he refused the offer of a second conference, unless his brother would meet him on equal terms, either on the sea or land. With Conrad and Frederic, the ceremonial was still nicer and more difficult: like the successors of Constantine, they styled themselves emperors of the Romans<sup>19</sup>; and firmly maintained the purity of their title and dignity. The first of these representatives of Charlemagne would only converse with Manuel on horseback in the open field; the second, by passing the Hellespont rather than the Bosphorus, declined the view of Constantinople and its sovereign. An emperor, who had been crowned at Rome, was reduced in the Greek epistles to the humble appellation of Rex, or from such ignominy (for Joinville, dissertat. xxvii. p. 317—320.). Louis afterwards insisted on a meeting in manu ex æquo, not ex æquo, according to the laughable readings of some MSS.

<sup>16</sup> Nicetas was a child at the second crusade, but in the third he commanded against the Franks the important post of Philippopolis. Cinnamus is infected with national prejudice and pride.

<sup>17</sup> The conduct of the Philadelphians is blamed by Nicetas, while the anonymous German accuses the rudeness of his countrymen (culpâ nostrâ). History would be pleasant, if we were embarrassed only by such contradictions. It is likewise from Nicetas, that we learn the pious and humane sorrow of Frederic.

<sup>18</sup> Χρυσάλλη εἶρε, which Cinnamus translates into Latin by the word Σελάνου. Ducange works very hard to save his king and country

<sup>19</sup> Ego Romanorum imperator sum, ille Romanorum (Anonym. Canis. p. 512.). The public and historical style of the Greeks was Ρηξ . . . πριnceps. Yet Cinnamus owns, that Ἰμπερατορ is synonymous to Βασιλεὺς.

prince

C H A P.
LIX.

prince of the Alemanni; and the vain and feeble Angelus affected to be ignorant of the name of one of the greatest men and monarchs of the age. While they viewed with hatred and suspicion the Latin pilgrims, the Greek emperors maintained a strict, though secret, alliance with the Turks and Saracens. Isaac Angelus complained, that by his friendship for the great Saladin he had incurred the enmity of the Franks; and a mosque was founded at Constantinople for the public exercise of the religion of Mahomet<sup>29</sup>.

Turkish warfare.

III. The swarms that followed the first crusade, were destroyed in Anatolia by famine, pestilence, and the Turkish arrows: and the princes only escaped with some squadrons of horse to accomplish their lamentable pilgrimage. A just opinion may be formed of their knowledge and humanity; of their knowledge from the design of subduing Persia and Chorasán in their way to Jerusalem; of their humanity from the massacre of the Christian people, a friendly city, who came out to meet them with palms and crosses in their hands. The arms of Conrad and Louis were less cruel and imprudent; but the event of the second crusade was still more ruinous to Christendom; and the Greek Manuel is accused by his own subjects of giving seasonable intelligence to the sultan, and treacherous guides to the Latin princes. Instead of crushing the common foe, by a double attack at the same time but on different sides, the Germans were urged by emulation, and the French were retarded by jealousy. Louis had scarcely passed the Bosphorus when he was met by the returning emperor, who had lost the greatest part of his army in glorious, but unsuccessful, action on the banks of the Mæander. The contrast of the pomp of his rival hastened the retreat of Conrad: the desertion of his independent vassals reduced him to his hereditary troops; and he borrowed some Greek vessels to execute by sea the pilgrimage of Palestine. Without studying the lessons of experience, or the nature of the war, the king of France advanced through the same country to a similar fate. The vanguard, which bore the royal banner and the oriflamme of St. Denys<sup>21</sup>, had doubled their march with rash and inconsiderate speed; and the rear which the king commanded in person no longer found their companions in the evening camp. In darkness and disorder they were encompassed, assaulted, and overwhelmed, by the innumerable host of Turks, who in the art of war were superior to the Christians of the twelfth century. Louis, who climbed a tree in the general discomfiture, was saved by his own valour and the ignorance of his adversaries; and with the dawn of day he escaped alive, but almost alone to the camp of the vanguard. But instead of pursuing his expedition by land, he was rejoiced to shelter the relics of his army in the friendly sea-port of Satalia. From thence he embarked for Antioch; but so penurious was the supply of Greek vessels, that they could only afford room for his knights and nobles; and the plebeian crowd of infantry was left to perish at the foot of the Pamphylian hills. The emperor and the king embraced and wept at Jerusalem; their martial trains, the remnant of mighty armies, were joined to the Christian powers of Syria, and a fruitless siege of Damascus was the final effort of the second crusade. Conrad and Louis embarked for Europe with the personal fame of piety and courage; but the Orientals had braved these potent monarchs of the Franks, with whose names and military forces they had been so often threatened<sup>22</sup>. Perhaps they had still more to fear from the veteran genius of Frederic the first, who in his youth had served in Asia under his uncle Conrad. Forty campaigns in Germany and Italy had taught

<sup>29</sup> In the Epistles of Innocent III. (xiii. 130.), see the views of a pope and a cadhi on p. 184.), and the History of Bohadin (p. 129, this singular toleration.

<sup>21</sup> As counts of Vexin, the kings of France were the vassals and advocates of the monastery of St. Denys. The saint's peculiar banner, which they received from the abbot, was of a square form, and a red or flaming colour. The oriflamme appeared at the head of the French armies from the 12th to the 15th century (Ducange sur Joinville, dissert. xviii. p. 244—253.).

<sup>22</sup> The original French histories of the second crusade, are the Gesta Ludovici VII. published in the 15th volume of Duchesne's Collection. The same volume contains many original letters of the king, of Suger his minister, &c. the best documents of authentic history.

C H A P.
LIX.

Barbarossa to command; and his soldiers, even the princes of the empire, were accustomed under his reign to obey. As soon as he lost sight of Philadelphia and Laodicea, the last cities of the Greek frontier, he plunged into the salt and barren desert, a land (says the historian) of horror and tribulation<sup>23</sup>. During twenty days, every step of his fainting and sickly march was besieged by the innumerable hords of Turkmans<sup>24</sup>, whose numbers and fury seemed after each defeat to multiply and inflame. The emperor continued to struggle and to suffer; and such was the measure of his calamities, that when he reached the gates of Iconium, no more than one thousand knights were able to serve on horseback. By a sudden and resolute assault, he defeated the guards, and stormed the capital of the sultan<sup>25</sup>, who humbly sued for pardon and peace. The road was now open, and Frederic advanced in a career of triumph, till he was unfortunately drowned in a petty torrent of Cilicia<sup>26</sup>. The remainder of his Germans was consumed by sickness and desertion; and the emperor's son expired with the greatest part of his Swabian vassals at the siege of Acre. Among the Latin heroes, Godfrey of Bouillon and Frederic Barbarossa could alone achieve the passage of the Lesser Asia; yet even their success was a warning; and in the last and most experienced age of the crusades, every nation preferred the sea to the toils and perils of an inland expedition<sup>27</sup>.

Obstinacy of the enthusiasm of the crusades.

The enthusiasm of the first crusade is a natural and simple event, while hope was fresh, danger untried, and enterprise congenial to

<sup>23</sup> Terram horroris et saluginis, terram siccam, sterilem inamantam. Anonym. Canis. p. 517. The emphatic language of a sufferer.

<sup>24</sup> Gens innumera, sylvestris, indomita, prædones sine dustore. The sultan of Cogni might sincerely rejoice in their defeat. Anonym. Canis. p. 517, 518.

<sup>25</sup> See in the anonymous writer in the collection of Canisius, Tagino, and Behadin (Vit. Saladin. p. 119, 120.), the ambiguous conduct of Kilidge Arslan, sultan of Cogni, who hated and feared both Saladin and Frederic.

<sup>26</sup> The desire of comparing two great men, has tempted many writers to drown Frederic in the river Cydnus, in which Alexander so imprudently bathed (Q. Curt. l. iii. c. 4, 5.). But from the march of the emperor, I rather judge, that his Saleph is the Calycadnus, a stream of less fame, but of a longer course.

<sup>27</sup> Marinus Sanutus, A. D. 1321, lays it down as a precept, Quod stulus Ecclesiæ per terram nullatenus est ducenda. He resolves, by the Divine aid, the objection, or rather exception, of the first crusade (Secreta Fidei-um Crucis, l. ii. pars ii. c. i. p. 37.).

the

the spirit of the times. But the obstinate perseverance of Europe may indeed excite our pity and admiration; that no instruction should have been drawn from constant and adverse experience; that the same confidence should have repeatedly grown from the same failures; that six succeeding generations should have rushed headlong down the precipice that was open before them; and that men of every condition should have staked their public and private fortunes, on the desperate adventure of possessing or recovering a tomb-stone two thousand miles from their country. In a period of two centuries after the council of Clermont, each spring and summer produced a new emigration of pilgrim warriors for the defence of the Holy Land; but the seven great armaments or crusades were excited by some impending or recent calamity: the nations were moved by the authority of their pontiffs, and the example of their kings: their zeal was kindled, and their reason was silenced, by the voice of their holy orators; and among these, Bernard<sup>28</sup>, the monk, or the saint, may claim the most honourable place. About eight years before the first conquest of Jerusalem, he was born of a noble family in Burgundy; at the age of three-and-twenty, he buried himself in the monastery of Citeaux, then in the primitive fervour of the institution; at the end of two years he led forth her third colony, or daughter, to the valley of Clairvaux<sup>29</sup> in Champagne; and was content, till the hour of his death, with the humble station of Abbot of his own community. A philosophic age has abolished, with too liberal and indiscriminate disdain, the honours of these spiritual

C H A P.
LIX.

Character and mission of St. Bernard,
A. D.
1091—1153.

<sup>28</sup> The most authentic information of St. Bernard must be drawn from his own writings, published in a correct edition by Père Mabillon, and reprinted at Venice 1750, in six volumes in folio. Whatever friendship could recollect, or superstition could add, is contained in the two lives, by his disciples, in the sixth volume: whatever learning and criticism could ascertain, may be found in the prefaces of the Benedictine editor.

<sup>29</sup> Clairvaux, surnamed the Valley of Absinth, is situate among the woods near Bar sur Aube in Champagne. St. Bernard would blush at the pomp of the church and monastery: he would ask for the library, and I know not whether he would be much edified by a tun of 800 muids (914½ hogheads), which almost rivals that of Heidelberg (Mélangés Tirés d'une Grande Bibliothèque, tom. xvi. p. 15—20.).

C H A P.
LIX.

heroes. The meanest among them are distinguished by some energies of the mind; they were at least superior to their votaries and disciples; and, in the race of superstition, they attained the prize for which such numbers contended. In speech, in writing, in action, Bernard stood high above his rivals and contemporaries; his compositions are not devoid of wit and eloquence; and he seems to have preserved as much reason and humanity as may be reconciled with the character of a saint. In a secular life, he would have shared the seventh part of a private inheritance; by a vow of poverty and penance, by closing his eyes against the visible world<sup>30</sup>, by the refusal of all ecclesiastical dignities, the abbot of Clairvaux became the oracle of Europe, and the founder of one hundred and sixty convents. Princes and pontiffs trembled at the freedom of his apostolical censures: France, England, and Milan, consulted and obeyed his judgment in a schism of the church: the debt was repaid by the gratitude of Innocent the second; and his successor Eugenius the third was the friend and disciple of the holy Bernard. It was in the proclamation of the second crusade that he shone as the missionary and prophet of God, who called the nations to the defence of his holy sepulchre<sup>31</sup>. At the parliament of Vezelay he spoke before the king; and Louis the seventh, with his nobles, received their crosses from his hand. The abbot of Clairvaux then marched to the less easy conquest of the emperor Conrad: a phlegmatic people, ignorant of his language, was transported by the pathetic vehemence of his tone and gestures; and his progress, from Constance to Cologne, was the triumph of eloquence and zeal. Bernard applauds his own success in the depopulation of Europe; affirms that cities and castles

<sup>30</sup> The disciples of the saint (Vit. 1<sup>ma</sup>, l. iii. c. 2. p. 1232. Vit. 2<sup>da</sup>, c. 16. N<sup>o</sup> 45. p. 1383.) record a marvellous example of his pious apathy. Juxta lacum etiam Lausannensem totius diei itinere pergens, penitus non attendit aut se videre non vidit. Cum enim vespere facto de eodem lacu focii colloquerentur, interrogabat eos ubi lacus ille

esset; et mirati sunt universi. To admire or despise St. Bernard as he ought, the reader, like myself, should have before the windows of his library the beauties of that incomparable landscape.

<sup>31</sup> Otho Frising. l. i. c. 4. Bernard, Epist. 363. ad Francos Orientales, Opp. tom. i. p. 328. Vit. 1<sup>ma</sup>, l. iii. c. 4. tom. vi. p. 1235.

were emptied of their inhabitants; and computes, that only one man was left behind for the consolation of seven widows<sup>32</sup>. The blind fanatics were desirous of electing him for their general; but the example of the hermit Peter was before his eyes; and while he assured the Crusaders of the divine favour, he prudently declined a military command, in which failure and victory would have been almost equally disgraceful to his character<sup>33</sup>. Yet, after the calamitous event, the abbot of Clairvaux was loudly accused as a false prophet, the author of the public and private mourning; his enemies exulted, his friends blushed, and his apology was slow and unsatisfactory. He justifies his obedience to the commands of the pope; expatiates on the mysterious ways of providence; imputes the misfortunes of the pilgrims to their own sins; and modestly insinuates, that his mission had been approved by signs and wonders<sup>34</sup>. Had the fact been certain, the argument would be decisive; and his faithful disciples, who enumerate twenty or thirty miracles in a day, appeal to the public assemblies of France and Germany, in which they were performed<sup>35</sup>. At the present hour, such prodigies will not obtain credit beyond the precincts of Clairvaux; but in the preternatural cures of the blind, the lame, and the sick, who were presented to the man of God, it is impossible for us to ascertain the separate shares of accident, of fancy, of imposture, and of fiction.

Omnipotence itself cannot escape the murmurs of its discordant votaries; since the same dispensation which was applauded as a deli-

C H A P.
LIX.

Progress of the Mahometans.

<sup>32</sup> Mandatis et obediivi.... multiplicati sunt super numerum; vacuantur urbes et castella; et pene jam non inveniunt quem apprehendant septem mulieres unum virum; adeo ubique viduæ vivis remanent viris. Bernard. Epist. p. 247. We must be careful not to construe pene as a substantive.

<sup>33</sup> Quis ego sum ut disponam acies, ut egrediar ante facies armatorum, aut quid tam remotum a professione meâ, si vires, si peritia, &c. epist. 256. tom. i. p. 259. He speaks with contempt of the hermit Peter, vir quidam, epist. 363.

<sup>34</sup> Sic dicunt forsitan iste, unde scimus quòd a Domino sermo egressus sit? Que signa tu facis ut credamus tibi? Non est quod ad ista ipse respondeam; perendum verendie mee, responde tu pro me, et pro te ipso, secundum que vidisti et audisti, et secundum quod te inspiraverit Deus. Consulat. l. ii. c. 1. Opp. tom. ii. p. 421—423.

<sup>35</sup> See the testimonies in Vita 173 l. iv. c. 5, 6. Opp. tom. vi. p. 1258—1261. l. vi. c. 1—17. p. 1286—1314.

C H A P.
LIX.

verance in Europe, was deplored, and perhaps arraigned, as a calamity in Asia. After the loss of Jerusalem, the Syrian fugitives diffused their consternation and sorrow: Bagdad mourned in the dust; the cadhi Zeineddin of Damascus tore his beard in the caliph's presence; and the whole divan shed tears at his melancholy tale<sup>36</sup>. But the commanders of the faithful could only weep; they were themselves captives in the hands of the Turks: some temporal power was restored to the last age of the Abbassides; but their humble ambition was confined to Bagdad and the adjacent province. Their tyrants, the Seljukian sultans, had followed the common law of the Asiatic dynasties, the unceasing round of valour, greatness, discord, degeneracy, and decay: their spirit and power were unequal to the defence of religion; and, in his distant realm of Persia, the Christians were strangers to the name and the arms of Sangiar, the last hero of his race<sup>37</sup>. While the sultans were involved in the silken web of the haram, the pious task was undertaken by their slaves, the Atabeks<sup>38</sup>; a Turkish name, which, like the Byzantine patricians, may be translated by Father of the Prince. Ascanfar, a valiant Turk, had been the favourite of Malek Shaw, from whom he received the privilege of standing on the right-hand of the throne; but, in the civil wars that ensued on the monarch's death, he lost his head and the government of Aleppo. His domestic emirs persevered in their attachment to his son Zenghi, who proved his first arms against the Franks in the defeat of Antioch:

The Atabeks
of Syria.

Zenghi,
A. D.
1127—1145.

<sup>36</sup> Abulmahafen apud de Guignes, Hist. des Huns, tom. ii. P. ii. p. 99.

<sup>37</sup> See his article in the Bibliothèque Orientale of d'Herbelot, and de Guignes, tom. ii. P. i. p. 230—261. Such was his valour, that he was styled the second Alexander; and such the extravagant love of his subjects, that they prayed for the sultan a year after his decease. Yet Sangiar might have been made prisoner by the Franks, as well as by the Uzes. He reigned near fifty years (A. D.

1103—1152.), and was a munificent patron of Persian poetry.

<sup>38</sup> See the Chronology of the Atabeks of Irak and Syria, in de Guignes, tom. i. p. 254; and the reigns of Zenghi and Noureddin in the same writer (tom. ii. P. ii. p. 147—221.), who uses the Arabic text of Benelathir, Ben Schounah, and Abulfeda; the Bibliothèque Orientale, under the articles Atabeks and Noureddin, and the Dynasties of Abulpharagius, p. 250—267. verf. Pocock.

thirty campaigns in the service of the caliph and fultan established his military fame; and he was invested with the command of Mosul, as the only champion that could avenge the cause of the prophet. The public hope was not disappointed: after a siege of twenty-five days, he stormed the city of Edessa, and recovered from the Franks their conquests beyond the Euphrates<sup>39</sup>: the martial tribes of Curdistan were subdued by the independent sovereign of Mosul and Aleppo: his soldiers were taught to behold the camp as their only country; they trusted to his liberality for their rewards; and their absent families were protected by the vigilance of Zenghi. At the head of these veterans, his son Nouredin gradually united the Mahometan powers; added the kingdom of Damascus to that of Aleppo, and waged a long and successful war against the Christians of Syria; he spread his ample reign from the Tigris to the Nile, and the Abbassides rewarded their faithful servant with all the titles and prerogatives of royalty. The Latins themselves were compelled to own the wisdom and courage, and even the justice and piety, of this implacable adversary<sup>40</sup>. In his life and government, the holy warrior revived the zeal and simplicity of the first caliphs. Gold and silk were banished from his palace; the use of wine from his dominions; the public revenue was scrupulously applied to the public service; and the frugal household of Nouredin was maintained from his legitimate share of the spoil which he vested in the purchase of a private estate. His favourite Sultana sighed for some female object of expence. “Alas,” replied the king, “I fear God,

C H A P
LIX.

Nouredin,
A. D.
1145—1174

<sup>39</sup> William of Tyre (l. xvi. c. 4, 5. 7.) describes the loss of Edessa, and the death of Zenghi. The corruption of his name into Sanguin, afforded the Latins a comfortable allusion to his sanguinary character and end, sit sanguine sanguinolentus.

<sup>40</sup> Noradinus (says William of Tyre, l. xx. 33.) maximus nominis et fidei Christianæ persecutor; princeps tamen justus, vafer, pro-

vidus, et secundum gentis suæ traditiones religiosus. To this catholic witness, we may add the primacy of the Jacobites (Abulpharag. p. 267.), quo non alter erat inter reges vitæ ratione magis laudabili, aut quæ pluribus justitiæ experimentis abundaret. The true praise of kings is after their death, and from the mouth of their enemies.

“ perty

C H A P.          " perty I cannot alienate ; but I still possess three shops in the city LIX. " of Hems : these you may take ; and these alone can I bestow." His chamber of justice was the terror of the great and the refuge of the poor. Some years after the sultan's death, an oppressed subject called aloud in the streets of Damascus, " O Noureddin, Noureddin, " where art thou now ? Arise, arise, to pity and protect us ! " A tumult was apprehended, and a living tyrant blushed or trembled at the name of a departed monarch.

Conquest of Egypt by the Turks,
A. D.
1163—1169.

By the arms of the Turks and Franks, the Fatimites had been deprived of Syria. In Egypt, the decay of their character and influence was still more essential. Yet they were still revered as the descendants and successors of the prophet ; they maintained their invisible state in the palace of Cairo ; and their person was seldom violated by the profane eyes of subjects or strangers. The Latin ambassadors <sup>41</sup> have described their own introduction through a series of gloomy passages, and glittering porticoes : the scene was enlivened by the warbling of birds and the murmur of fountains : it was enriched by a display of rich furniture, and rare animals ; of the Imperial treasures, something was shewn, and much was supposed ; and the long order of unfolding doors was guarded by black soldiers and domestic eunuchs. The sanctuary of the presence chamber was veiled with a curtain ; and the vizir, who conducted the ambassadors, laid aside his scymetar, and prostrated himself three times on the ground ; the veil was then removed ; and they beheld the commander of the faithful, who signified his pleasure to the first slave of the throne. But this slave was his master : the vizirs or sultans had usurped the supreme administration of Egypt ; the claims of the rival candidates were decided by arms ; and the name of the most worthy, of the strongest, was inserted in the royal patent of command. The factions of Dargham and Shower alternately expelled each other from the capital and country; and the weaker side implored the dangerous protection of the sultan of Damascus or the king of Jerusalem, the perpetual enemies of the sect and monarchy of the Fatimites. By his arms and religion, the Turk was most formidable; but the Frank, in an easy direct march, could advance from Gaza to the Nile; while the intermediate situation of his realm compelled the troops of Nouredin to wheel round the skirts of Arabia, a long and painful circuit, which exposed them to thirst, fatigue, and the burning winds of the desert. The secret zeal and ambition of the Turkish prince aspired to reign in Egypt under the name of the Abbassides; but the restoration of the suppliant Shower was the ostensible motive of the first expedition; and the success was entrusted to the emir Shiracouh, a valiant and veteran commander. Dargham was oppressed and slain; but the ingratitude, the jealousy, the just apprehensions, of his more fortunate rival, soon provoked him to invite the king of Jerusalem to deliver Egypt from his insolent benefactors. To this union, the forces of Shiracouh were unequal; he relinquished the premature conquest; and the evacuation of Belbeis or Pelusium was the condition of his safe retreat. As the Turks desiled before the enemy, and their general closed the rear, with a vigilant eye, and a battle-axe in his hand, a Frank presumed to ask him if he were not afraid of an attack? "It is doubtless in your power to begin the attack," replied the intrepid emir; "but rest assured, that not one of my soldiers will go to paradise till he has sent an infidel to hell." His report of the riches of the land, the effeminacy of the natives, and the disorders of the government, revived the hopes of Nouredin; the caliph of Bagdad applauded the pious design; and Shiracouh descended into Egypt a second time with twelve thousand Turks and eleven thousand Arabs. Yet his forces were still inferior to the confederate armies of the

<sup>41</sup> From the ambassador, William of Tyre (l. xix. c. 17, 18.) describes the palace of Cairo. In the caliph's treasure were found a vase of crystal and porcelain of China weighing seventeen Egyptian drams, an emerald a palm and an half in length, and many pearls as large as a pigeon's egg, a ruby (Renaudot, p. 536.).

C H A P.
LIX.

Franks and Saracens; and I can discern an unusual degree of military art, in his passage of the Nile, his retreat into Thebais, his masterly evolutions in the battle of Babain, the surprize of Alexandria, and his marches and counter-marches in the flats and valley of Egypt, from the tropic to the sea. His conduct was seconded by the courage of his troops, and on the eve of action a Mameluke<sup>42</sup> exclaimed, “ If we cannot wrest Egypt from the Christian dogs, why do we not renounce the honours and rewards of the sultan, and retire to labour with the peasants, or to spin with the females of the haram?” Yet, after all his efforts in the field<sup>43</sup>, after the obstinate defence of Alexandria<sup>44</sup> by his nephew Saladin, an honourable capitulation and retreat concluded the second enterprise of Shiracouh; and Nouredin reserved his abilities for a third and more propitious occasion. It was soon offered by the ambition and avarice of Amalric or Amaury, king of Jerusalem, who had imbibed the pernicious maxim, that no faith should be kept with the enemies of God. A religious warrior, the great master of the hospital, encouraged him to proceed; the emperor of Constantinople, either gave, or promised, a fleet to act with the armies of Syria; and the perfidious Christian, unsatisfied with spoil and subsidy, aspired to the conquest of Egypt. In this emergency, the Moslems turned their eyes towards the sultan of Damascus; the vizir, whom danger encompassed on all sides, yielded to their unanimous wishes, and Nouredin seemed to be tempted by the fair offer of one third of the revenue of the kingdom. The Franks were already at the king of Jerusalem no more than 374 knights. Both the Franks and the Moslems report the superior numbers of the enemy; a difference which may be solved by counting or omitting the unwarlike Egyptians.

<sup>42</sup> Mamluc, plur. Mamalic, is defined by Pocock (Prolegom. ad Abulpharag. p. 7.), and d’Herbelot (p. 545.), servum emptitium, seu qui pretio numerato in domini possessionem cedit. They frequently occur in the wars of Saladin (Bohadin, p. 236, &c.); and it was only the Bahartie Mamelukes that were first introduced into Egypt by his descendants.

<sup>43</sup> Jacobus à Vitriaco (p. 1116.) gives the

<sup>44</sup> It was the Alexandria of the Arabs, a middle term in extent and riches between the period of the Greeks and Romans, and that of the Turks (Savary, Lettres sur l’Egypte, tom. i. p. 25, 26.).

gates of Cairo; but the suburbs, the old city, were burnt on their approach; they were deceived by an insidious negociation; and their vessels were unable to surmount the barriers of the Nile. They prudently declined a contest with the Turks, in the midst of an hostile country; and Amaury retired into Palestine, with the shame and reproach that always adhere to unsuccessful injustice. After this deliverance, Shiracouh was invested with a robe of honour, which he soon stained with the blood of the unfortunate Shower. For a while, the Turkish emirs condescended to hold the office of vizir; but this foreign conquest precipitated the fall of the Fatimites themselves; and the bloodless change was accomplished by a message and a word. The caliphs had been degraded by their own weakness and the tyranny of the vizirs: their subjects blushed, when the descendant and successor of the prophet presented his naked hand to the rude gripe of a Latin ambassador; they wept when he sent the hair of his women, a sad emblem of their grief and terror, to excite the pity of the sultan of Damascus. By the command of Nouredin, and the sentence of the doctors, the holy names of Abubeker, Omar, and Othman, were solemnly restored: the caliph Mosthadi, of Bagdad, was acknowledged in the public prayers as the true commander of the faithful; and the green livery of the sons of Ali was exchanged for the black colour of the Abbassides. The last of his race, the caliph Adhed, who survived only ten days, expired in happy ignorance of his fate: his treasures secured the loyalty of the soldiers and silenced the murmurs of the sectaries; and in all subsequent revolutions, Egypt has never departed from the orthodox tradition of the Moslems<sup>45</sup>.

C H A P.
LIX.

End of the Fatimite ca-liphs,
A. D. 1171.

<sup>45</sup> For this great revolution of Egypt, see William of Tyre (l. xix. 5, 6, 7. 12—31. xx. 5—12.), Bohadin (in Vit. Saladin. p. 30—39.), Abulfeda (in Excerpt. Schultens, p. 1—12.), d'Herbelot (Bibliot. Orient. Adhed, Fathemab, but very incorrecd), Re-naudot (Hist. Patriarch. Alex. p. 522—525. 532—537.), Vertot (Hist. des Chevaliers de Malthe, tom. i. p. 141—153. in 4<sup>to</sup>), and M. de Guignes (tom. ii. p. ii. p. 185—215.).

C H A P.
LIX.

Reign and character of Saladin,
A. D.

1171—1193.

The hilly country beyond the Tigris is occupied by the pastoral tribes of the Curds<sup>46</sup>: a people hardy, strong, savage, impatient of the yoke, addicted to rapine, and tenacious of the government of their national chiefs. The resemblance of name, situation, and manners, seem to identify them with the Carduchians of the Greeks<sup>47</sup>; and they still defend against the Ottoman Porte the antique freedom which they asserted against the successors of Cyrus. Poverty and ambition prompted them to embrace the profession of mercenary soldiers: the service of his father and uncle prepared the reign of the great Saladin<sup>48</sup>; and the son of Job or Ayub, a simple Kurd, magnanimously smiled at his pedigree, which flattery deduced from the Arabian caliphs<sup>49</sup>. So unconscious was Noureddin of the impending ruin of his house, that he constrained the reluctant youth to follow his uncle Shiracouh into Egypt: his military character was established by the defence of Alexandria; and if we may believe the Latins, he solicited and obtained from the Christian general the profane honours of knighthood<sup>50</sup>. On the death of Shiracouh, the office of grand vizir was bestowed on Saladin, as the youngest and least powerful of the emirs; but with the advice of his father, whom he invited to Cairo, his genius obtained the richest and most authentic materials, a life of Saladin by his friend and minister the Cadhi Bohadin, and copious extracts from the history of his kinsman the prince Abulfeda of Hamah. To these we may add, the article of Salabeddin in the Bibliotheque Orientale, and all that may be gleaned from the Dynasties of Abulpharagius.

<sup>46</sup> For the Curds, see de Guignes, tom. i. p. 416, 417. the Index Geographicus of Schultens, and Tavernier, Voyages, p. i. p. 308, 309. The Ayoubites descended from the tribe of the Rawadiaz, one of the noblest; but as they were infected with the heresy of the Metempsychosis, the orthodox sultans insinuated, that their descent was only on the mother's side, and that their ancestor was a stranger who settled among the Curds.

<sup>47</sup> See the the ivth book of the Anabasis of Xenophon. The ten thousand suffered more from the arrows of the free Carduchians, than from the splendid weakness of the great king.

<sup>48</sup> We are indebted to the professor Schultens (Lugd. Bat. 1755; in folio) for the

<sup>49</sup> Since Abulfeda was himself an Ayoubite, he may share the praise, for imitating, at least tacitly, the modesty of the founder.

<sup>50</sup> Hist. Hierosol. in the Gesta Dei per Francos, p. 1152. A similar example may be found in Joinville (p. 42. edition du Louvre); but the pious St. Louis refused to dignify infidels with the order of Christian knighthood (Ducange, Observations, p. 70.).

ascendant

ascendant over his equals, and attached the army to his person and interest. While Nouredin lived, these ambitious Curds were the most humble of his slaves; and the indiscreet murmurs of the divan were silenced by the prudent Ayub, who loudly protested that at the command of the sultan he himself would lead his son in chains to the foot of the throne. "Such language," he added in private, "was prudent and proper in an assembly of your rivals; but we are now above fear and obedience; and the threats of Nouredin shall not extort the tribute of a sugar-cane." His seasonable death relieved them from the odious and doubtful conflict: his son, a minor of eleven years of age, was left for a while to the emirs of Damascus; and the new lord of Egypt was decorated by the caliph with every title<sup>51</sup> that could sanctify his usurpation in the eyes of the people. Nor was Saladin long content with the possession of Egypt; he despoiled the Christians of Jerusalem, and the Atabeks of Damascus, Aleppo, and Diarbekir: Mecca and Medina acknowledged him for their temporal protector: his brother subdued the distant regions of Yemen, or the happy Arabia; and at the hour of his death, his empire was spread from the African Tripoli to the Tigris, and from the Indian ocean to the mountains of Armenia. In the judgment of his character, the reproaches of treason and ingratitude strike forcibly on our minds, impressed, as they are, with the principle and experience of law and loyalty. But his ambition may in some measure be excused by the revolutions of Asia<sup>52</sup>, which had erased every notion of legitimate succession; by the recent example of the Atabeks themselves; by his reverence to the son of his benefactor, his humane and generous behaviour to the collateral

<sup>51</sup> In these Arabic titles, religionis must always be understood; Nouredin, lumen r.; Ezzodin, decus; Amadoddin, columen: our hero's proper name was Joseph, and he was styled Salaboddin, salus; Al Malickus, Al Nasrus, rex defensor; Abu Medafir, pater victoriae. Schultens, Præfat.

<sup>52</sup> Abulfeda, who descended from a brother of Saladin, observes from many examples, that the founders of dynasties took the guilt for themselves, and left the reward to their innocent collaterals (Excerpt. p. 10.).

C H A P.
LIX.

branches; by their incapacity and his merit; by the approbation of the caliph, the sole source of all legitimate power; and, above all, by the wishes and interest of the people, whose happiness is the first object of government. In his virtues, and in those of his patron, they admired the singular union of the hero and the saint; for both Nouredin and Saladin are ranked among the Mahometan saints; and the constant meditation of the holy war appears to have shed a serious and sober colour over their lives and actions. The youth of the latter<sup>53</sup> was addicted to wine and women; but his aspiring spirit soon renounced the temptations of pleasure, for the graver follies of fame and dominion: the garment of Saladin was a coarse woollen; water was his only drink; and, while he emulated the temperance, he surpassed the chastity, of his Arabian prophet. Both in faith and practice he was a rigid Musulman; he ever deplored that the defence of religion had not allowed him to accomplish the pilgrimage of Mecca; but at the stated hours, five times each day, the sultan devoutly prayed with his brethren: the involuntary omission of fasting was scrupulously repaid; and his perusal of the Koran, on horseback between the approaching armies, may be quoted as a proof, however ostentatious, of piety and courage<sup>54</sup>. The superstitious doctrine of the sect of Shafei was the only study that he deigned to encourage: the poets were safe in his contempt; but all profane science was the object of his aversion; and a philosopher, who had vented some speculative novelties, was seized and strangled by the command of the royal saint. The justice of his divan was accessible to the meanest suppliant against himself and his ministers; and it was only for a kingdom that Saladin would deviate from the rule of equity. While the descendants of Seljuk and Zenghi held his stirrup and smoothed his garments, he was affable and patient with the meanest of his servants. So boundless was his libe-

<sup>53</sup> See his life and character in Renaudot, p. 537—548.

brated in the first chapter of Bohadin (p. 4—30.), himself an eye-witness, and an honest bigot.

<sup>54</sup> His civil and religious virtues are cele-

rality, that he distributed twelve thousand horses at the siege of Acre; and, at the time of his death, no more than forty-seven drams of silver and one piece of gold coin were found in the treasury; yet in a martial reign, the tributes were diminished, and the wealthy citizens enjoyed without fear or danger the fruits of their industry. Egypt, Syria, and Arabia, were adorned by the royal foundations of hospitals, colleges, and mosques; and Cairo was fortified with a wall and citadel; but his works were consecrated to public use<sup>55</sup>, nor did the sultan indulge himself in a garden or palace of private luxury. In a fanatic age, himself a fanatic, the genuine virtues of Saladin commanded the esteem of the Christians: the emperor of Germany gloried in his friendship<sup>56</sup>: the Greek emperor solicited his alliance<sup>57</sup>; and the conquest of Jerusalem diffused, and perhaps magnified, his fame both in the East and West.

During its short existence, the kingdom of Jerusalem<sup>58</sup> was supported by the discord of the Turks and Saracens; and both the Fatimite caliphs and the sultans of Damascus were tempted to sacrifice the cause of their religion to the meaner considerations of private and present advantage. But the powers of Egypt, Syria, and Arabia, were now united by an hero, whom nature and fortune had armed against the Christians. All without, now bore the most threatening aspect; and all was feeble and hollow in the internal state of Jerusalem. After the two first Baldwins, the brother and cousin of Godfrey of Bouillon, the sceptre devolved by female succession to Melisenda, daughter of the second Baldwin, and her husband Fulk, count of Anjou, the father, by a former marriage, of our English Plantagenets. Their two sons, Baldwin the third and Amaury,

C H A P.
LIX.

His conquest of the kingdom,
A. D. 1187,
July 3.

<sup>55</sup> In many works, particularly Joseph's well in the castle of Cairo, the sultan and the patriarch have been confounded by the ignorance of natives and travellers.

<sup>56</sup> Anonym. Canisii, tom. iii. p. ii. p. 504.

<sup>57</sup> Bohadin, p. 129, 130.

<sup>58</sup> For the Latin kingdom of Jerusalem, see William of Tyre, from the ixth to the xxii<sup>d</sup> book. Jacob. à Vitriaco, Hist. Hierosolem. l. i. and Sanutus, Secreta Fidelium Crucis, l. iii. p. vi, vii, viii, ix.

C H A P.
LIX.

waged a strenuous, and not unsuccessful, war against the infidels; but the son of Amaury, Baldwin the fourth, was deprived, by the leprosy, a gift of the crusades, of the faculties both of mind and body. His sister Sybilla, the mother of Baldwin the fifth, was his natural heiress: after the suspicious death of her child, she crowned her second husband, Guy of Lusignan, a prince of a handsome person, but of such base renown, that his own brother Jeffrey was heard to exclaim, "Since they have made him a king, surely they " would have made me a god!" The choice was generally blamed; and the most powerful vassal, Raymond count of Tripoli, who had been excluded from the succession and regency, entertained an implacable hatred against the king, and exposed his honour and conscience to the temptations of the sultan. Such were the guardians of the holy city; a leper, a child, a woman, a coward, and a traitor: yet its fate was delayed twelve years by some supplies from Europe, by the valour of the military orders, and by the distant or domestic avocations of their great enemy. At length, on every side the sinking state was encircled and pressed by an hostile line; and the truce was violated by the Franks, whose existence it protected. A soldier of fortune, Reginald of Chatillon, had seized a fortress on the edge of the desert, from whence he pillaged the caravans, insulted Mahomet, and threatened the cities of Mecca and Medina. Saladin condescended to complain; rejoiced in the denial of justice; and at the head of fourscore thousand horse and foot, invaded the Holy Land. The choice of Tiberias for his first siege was suggested by the count of Tripoli, to whom it belonged; and the king of Jerusalem was persuaded to drain his garrisons, and to arm his people, for the relief of that important place<sup>99</sup>. By the advice of the perfidious Raymond, the Christians were betrayed into a camp destitute of water: he fled on the first onset with the curses of both nations<sup>60</sup>: Lusignan was overthrown with the loss of thirty thousand men; and the wood of the true cross, a dire misfortune! was left in the power of the infidels. The royal captive was conducted to the tent of Saladin; and as he fainted with thirst and terror, the generous victor presented him with a cup of sherbet cooled in snow, without suffering his companion, Reginald of Chatillon, to partake of this pledge of hospitality and pardon. “The person and dignity of a king,” said the sultan, “are sacred; but this impious robber must instantly acknowledge the prophet, whom he has blasphemed, or meet the death which he has so often deserved.” On the proud or conscientious refusal of the Christian warrior, Saladin struck him on the head with his scymetar, and Reginald was dispatched by the guards<sup>61</sup>. The trembling Lusignan was sent to Damascus to an honourable prison and speedy ransom; but the victory was stained by the execution of two hundred and thirty knights of the hospital, the intrepid champions and martyrs of their faith. The kingdom was left without a head; and of the two grand masters of the military orders, the one was slain and the other was a prisoner. From all the cities, both of the sea-coast and the inland country, the garrisons had been drawn away for this fatal field: Tyre and Tripoli alone could escape the rapid inroad of Saladin; and three months after the battle of Tiberias he appeared in arms before the gates of Jerusalem<sup>62</sup>.

<sup>99</sup> Templarii ut apes bombabant et Hospitalarii ut venti stridebant, et barones se exitio offerebant, et Turcopuli (the Christian light troops) semet ipsi in ignem injiciebant (Hpahani de Expugnatione Kudûticâ, p. 18. apud Schultens); a specimen of Arabian eloquence, somewhat different from the style of Xenophon!

C H A P.
LIX.

<sup>60</sup> The Latins affirm, the Arabians insinuate, the treason of Raymond; but had he really embraced their religion, he would have been a saint and a hero in the eyes of the latter.

<sup>61</sup> Renaud, Reginald, or Arnold de Chatillon, is celebrated by the Latins in his life and death; but the circumstances of the latter are more distinctly related by Bohadin and Abulfeda; and Joinville (Hist. de St. Louis, p. 70.) alludes to the practice of Sala-din, of never putting to death a prisoner who had tasted his bread and salt. Some of the companions of Arnold had been slaughtered, and almost sacrificed, in a valley of Mecca, ubi sacrificia maculantur (Abulfeda, p. 32.).

<sup>62</sup> Vertot, who well describes the loss of the kingdom and city (Hist. des Chevaliers de Malthe, tom. i. l. ii. p. 226—278.), inserts two original epistles of a knight templar.

C H A P.
LIX. and city of Jerusalem,
A. D. 1187,
October 2.

He might expect, that the siege of a city, so venerable on earth and in heaven, so interesting to Europe and Asia, would rekindle the last sparks of enthusiasm; and that, of sixty thousand Christians, every man would be a soldier, and every soldier a candidate for martyrdom. But queen Sybilla trembled for herself and her captive husband; and the barons and knights, who had escaped from the sword and chains of the Turks, displayed the same factious and selfish spirit in the public ruin. The most numerous portion of the inhabitants was composed of the Greek and Oriental Christians, whom experience had taught to prefer the Mahometan before the Latin yoke<sup>63</sup>; and the holy sepulchre attracted a base and needy crowd, without arms or courage, who subsisted only on the charity of the pilgrims. Some feeble and hasty efforts were made for the defence of Jerusalem; but in the space of fourteen days, a victorious army drove back the sallies of the besieged, planted their engines, opened the wall to the breadth of fifteen cubits, applied their scaling-ladders, and erected on the breach twelve banners of the prophet and the sultan. It was in vain that a bare-foot procession of the queen, the women, and the monks, implored the Son of God to save his tomb and his inheritance from impious violation. Their sole hope was in the mercy of the conqueror, and to the first suppliant deputation that mercy was sternly denied. "He had sworn to "avenge the patience and long-suffering of the Moslems; the hour
"of forgiveness was elapsed, and the moment was now arrived to "expiate in blood, the innocent blood, which had been spilt by God"frey and the first crusaders." But a desperate and successful struggle of the Franks admonished the sultan that his triumph was not yet secure; he listened with reverence to a solemn adjuration in the name of the common father of mankind; and a sentiment of human sympathy mollified the rigour of fanaticism and conquest. He consented to accept the city, and to spare the inhabitants. The

<sup>63</sup> Renaudot, Hist. Patriarch. Alex. p. 545.

Greek and Oriental Christians were permitted to live under his dominion ; but it was stipulated, that in forty days all the Franks and Latins should evacuate Jerusalem, and be safely conducted to the sea-ports of Syria and Egypt ; that ten pieces of gold should be paid for each man, five for each woman, and one for every child ; and that those who were unable to purchase their freedom should be detained in perpetual slavery. Of some writers it is a favourite and invidious theme to compare the humanity of Saladin with the massacre of the first crusade. The difference would be merely personal ; but we should not forget that the Christians had offered to capitulate, and that the Mahometans of Jerusalem sustained the last extremities of an assault and storm. Justice is indeed due to the fidelity with which the Turkish conqueror fulfilled the conditions of the treaty ; and he may be deservedly praised for the glance of pity which he cast on the misery of the vanquished. Instead of a rigorous exaction of his debt, he accepted a sum of thirty thousand byzants, for the ransom of seven thousand poor ; two or three thousand more were dismissed by his gratuitous clemency ; and the number of slaves was reduced to eleven or fourteen thousand persons. In his interview with the queen, his words, and even his tears, suggested the kindest consolations ; his liberal alms were distributed among those who had been made orphans or widows by the fortune of war ; and while the knights of the hospital were in arms against him, he allowed their more pious brethren to continue, during the term of a year, the care and service of the sick. In these acts of mercy the virtue of Saladin deserves our admiration and love : he was above the necessity of dissimulation, and his stern fanaticism would have prompted him to dissemble, rather than to affect, this profane compassion for the enemies of the Koran. After Jerusalem had been delivered from the presence of the strangers, the sultan made his triumphant entry, his banners waving in the wind and to the harmony of martial music. The great mosch of Omar, which had been converted into

C H A P.
LIX.

C H A P.
LIX.

a church, was again consecrated to one God and his prophet Mahomet; the walls and pavement were purified with rose water; and a pulpit, the labour of Noureddin, was erected in the sanctuary. But when the golden cross that glittered on the dome was cast down, and dragged through the streets, the Christians of every sect uttered a lamentable groan, which was answered by the joyful shouts of the Moslems. In four ivory chests the patriarch had collected the crosses, the images, the vases, and the relics, of the holy place: they were seized by the conqueror, who was desirous of presenting the caliph with the trophies of Christian idolatry. He was persuaded however to entrust them to the patriarch and prince of Antioch; and the pious pledge was redeemed by Richard of England, at the expence of fifty-two thousand byzants of gold<sup>64</sup>.

The third crusade, by sea,
A. D. 1188.

The nations might fear and hope the immediate and final expulsion of the Latins from Syria; which was yet delayed above a century after the death of Saladin<sup>65</sup>. In the career of victory, he was first checked by the resistance of Tyre; the troops and garrisons, which had capitulated, were imprudently conducted to the same port: their numbers were adequate to the defence of the place; and the arrival of Conrad of Montferrat inspired the disorderly crowd with confidence and union. His father, a venerable pilgrim, had been made prisoner in the battle of Tiberias; but that disaster was unknown in Italy and Greece, when the son was urged by ambition and piety to visit the inheritance of his royal nephew, the infant Baldwin. The view of the Turkish banners warned him from the hostile coast of Jaffa; and Conrad was unanimously hailed as the prince and champion of Tyre, which was already besieged by the conqueror of Jerusalem. The firmness of his zeal, and perhaps his knowledge of a generous foe, enabled him to brave the threats of the sultan, and to declare, that should his aged parent be exposed before the walls, he himself would discharge the first arrow, and glory in his descent from a Christian martyr<sup>66</sup>. The Egyptian fleet was allowed to enter the harbour of Tyre; but the chain was suddenly drawn, and five galleys were either sunk or taken: a thousand Turks were slain in a rally; and Saladin, after burning his engines, concluded a glorious campaign by a disgraceful retreat to Damascus. He was soon assailed by a more formidable tempest. The pathetic narratives, and even the pictures, that represented in lively colours the servitude and profanation of Jerusalem, awakened the torpid sensibility of Europe: the emperor, Frederic Barbarossa, and the kings of France and England, assumed the cross; and the tardy magnitude of their armaments was anticipated by the maritime states of the Mediterranean and the Ocean. The skilful and provident Italians first embarked in the ships of Genoa, Pisa, and Venice. They were speedily followed by the most eager pilgrims of France, Normandy, and the Western Isles. The powerful succour of Flanders, Frise, and Denmark, filled near an hundred vessels; and the northern warriors were distinguished in the field by a lofty stature and a ponderous battle-axe<sup>67</sup>. Their increasing multitudes could no longer be confined within the walls of Tyre, or remain obedient to the voice of Conrad. They pitied the misfortunes, and revered the dignity, of Lusignan, who was released from prison, perhaps, to divide the army of the Franks. He proposed the recovery of Ptolemais, or Acre, thirty miles to the south of Tyre; and the place was first invested by two thousand horse and thirty thousand foot under his nominal command. I shall not expatiate on the story of insularum quæ inter occidentem et septentrionem sitæ sunt, gentes bellicose, corporis proceri, mortis intrepidæ, bipennibus armatæ, navibus rotundis quæ Yfnachia dicuntur adveſtæ.

<sup>64</sup> For the conquest of Jerusalem, Bohadin (p. 67—75.) and Abulfeda (p. 40—43.) are our Moslem witnesses. Of the Christian, Bernard Thesaurarius (c. 151—167.) is the most copious and authentic; see likewise Matthew Paris (p. 120—124.).

<sup>65</sup> The sieges of Tyre and Acre are most copiously described by Bernard Thesaurarius (de Acquisitione Terræ Sanctæ, c. 167—179.), the author of the Historia Hierosolymitana (p. 1150—1172. in Bongarsius), Abulfeda (p. 43—50.), and Bohadin (p. 75—179.).

<sup>66</sup> I have followed a moderate and probable representation of the fact: by Vertot, who adopts without reluctance a romantic tale, the old marquis is actually exposed to the darts of the besieged.

<sup>67</sup> Northmanni et Gothi, et cæteri populi

C H A P.
LIX.

Siege of Acre,
A. D. 1187,
July—
A. D. 1191,
July.

this memorable siege; which lasted near two years, and consumed, in a narrow space, the forces of Europe and Asia. Never did the flame of enthusiasm burn with fiercer and more destructive rage; nor could the true believers, a common appellation, who consecrated their own martyrs, refuse some applause to the mistaken zeal and courage of their adversaries. At the sound of the holy trumpet, the Moslems of Egypt, Syria, Arabia, and the Oriental provinces, assembled under the servant of the prophet<sup>68</sup>: his camp was pitched and removed within a few miles of Acre; and he laboured, night and day, for the relief of his brethren and the annoyance of the Franks. Nine battles, not unworthy of the name, were fought in the neighbourhood, of mount Carmel, with such vicissitude of fortune, that in one attack, the sultan forced his way into the city; that in one rally, the Christians penetrated to the royal tent. By the means of divers and pigeons, a regular correspondence was maintained with the besieged: and, as often as the sea was left open, the exhausted garrison was withdrawn, and a fresh supply was poured into the place. The Latin camp was thinned by famine, the sword, and the climate; but the tents of the dead were replenished with new pilgrims, who exaggerated the strength and speed of their approaching countrymen. The vulgar was astonished by the report, that the pope himself, with an innumerable crusade, was advanced as far as Constantinople. The march of the emperor filled the East with more serious alarms; the obstacles which he encountered in Asia, and perhaps in Greece, were raised by the policy of Saladin; his joy on the death of Barbarossa was measured by his esteem; and the Christians were rather dismayed than encouraged at the sight of the duke of Swabia and his way-worn remnant of five thousand Germans. At length, in the spring of the second year, the royal fleets of France and England cast anchor in the bay of Acre, and the siege was more vigorously prosecuted by the youthful emulation of the two kings, Philip Augustus and Richard Plantagenet. After every resource had been tried, and every hope was exhausted, the defenders of Acre submitted to their fate; a capitulation was granted, but their lives and liberties were taxed at the hard conditions of a ransom of two hundred thousand pieces of gold, the deliverance of one hundred nobles and fifteen hundred inferior captives, and the restoration of the wood of the holy cross. Some doubts in the agreement, and some delay in the execution, rekindled the fury of the Franks, and three thousand Moslems, almost in the sultan's view, were beheaded by the command of the sanguinary Richard<sup>69</sup>. By the conquest of Acre, the Latin powers acquired a strong town and a convenient harbour; but the advantage was most dearly purchased. The minister and historian of Saladin computes, from the report of the enemy, that their numbers, at different periods, amounted to five or six hundred thousand; that more than one hundred thousand Christians were slain; that a far greater number was lost by disease or shipwreck; and that a small portion of this mighty host could return in safety to their native countries<sup>70</sup>.

<sup>68</sup> The historian of Jerusalem (p. 1108.) and Getulians, so that Asia and Africa fought adds the nations of the East from the Tigris against Europe. to India, and the swarthy tribes of Moors

Philip Augustus, and Richard the first, are the only kings of France and England, who have fought under the same banners; but the holy service, in which they were enlisted, was incessantly disturbed by their national jealousy; and the two factions, which they protected in Palestine, were more averse to each other than to the

C H A P.
LIX.

Richard of England, in Palestine,
A. D.
1191, 1192.

<sup>69</sup> Bohadin, p. 180.; and this massacre is neither denied nor blamed by the Christian historians. Alacriter iusta complentes (the English soldiers), says Galfridus à Vinefauf (l. iv. c. 4. p. 346.), who fixes at 2700 the number of victims; who are multiplied to 5000 by Roger Hoveden (p. 697. 698.). The humanity or avarice of Philip Augustus was persuaded to ransom his prisoners (Jacob. à Vitriaco, l. i. c. 98. p. 1122.).

<sup>70</sup> Bohadin, p. 14. He quotes the judgment of Balianus, and the prince of Sidon, and adds, ex illo mundo quasi hominum paucissimi redierunt. Among the Christians who died before St. John d'Acre, I find the English names of de Ferrers earl of Derby (Dugdale, Baronage, part. i. p. 260.), Mowbray (idem, p. 124.), de Mandevil, de Fiennes, St. John, Scrope, Pigot, Talbot, &c.

common

C H A P. common enemy. In the eyes of the Orientals, the French monarch
 LIX. was superior in dignity and power; and in the emperor's absence, the Latins revered him as their temporal chief<sup>71</sup>. His exploits were not adequate to his fame. Philip was brave, but the statesman predominated in his character; he was soon weary of sacrificing his health and interest on a barren coast; the surrender of Acre became the signal of his departure; nor could he justify this unpopular desertion, by leaving the duke of Burgundy, with five hundred knights and ten thousand foot, for the service of the Holy Land. The king of England, though inferior in dignity, surpassed his rival in wealth and military renown<sup>72</sup>; and if heroism be confined to brutal and ferocious valour, Richard Plantagenet will stand high among the heroes of the age. The memory of Cœur de Lion, of the lion-hearted prince, was long dear and glorious to his English subjects; and, at the distance of sixty years, it was celebrated in proverbial sayings by the grandsons of the Turks and Saracens, against whom he had fought: his tremendous name was employed by the Syrian mothers to silence their infants; and if an horse suddenly started from the way, his rider was wont to exclaim, "Dost thou think king Richard is in that bush<sup>73</sup>?" His cruelty to the Mahometans was the effect of temper and zeal; but I cannot believe that a soldier, so free and fearless in the use of his lance, would have descended to whet a dagger against his valiant brother Conrad of Montferrat, who was slain at Tyre by some secret assassins<sup>74</sup>. After the surrender of Acre, and the depar-

<sup>71</sup> Magnus hic apud eos, interque reges eorum tum virtute, tum majestate eminentissimus rerum arbiter (Bohadin, p. 159.). He does not seem to have known the names either of Philip or Richard.

<sup>72</sup> Rex Angliæ, præstrenuus... rege Gallo- rum minor apud eos censebatur ratione regni atque dignitatis; sed tum divitiis florentior, tum bellicâ virtute multo erat celebrior (Bohadin, p. 161.). A stranger might admire those riches; the national historians will tell with what lawless and wakeful oppression they were collected.

<sup>73</sup> Joinville, p. 17. Cuides-tu que ce soit le roi Richard?

<sup>74</sup> Yet he was guilty in the opinion of the Moslems, who attest the confession of the assassins, that they were sent by the king of England (Bohadin, p. 225.); and his only defence is an absurd and palpable forgery (Hist. de l'Académie des Inscriptions, tom. xvi. p. 155—163.), a pretended letter from the prince of the assassins, the Sheïch, or old man of the mountain, who justified Richard, by assuming to himself the guilt or merit of the murder.

ture of Philip, the king of England led the crusaders to the recovery of the sea-coast; and the cities of Cæsarea and Jaffa were added to the fragments of the kingdom of Lusignan. A march of one hundred miles from Acre to Ascalon, was a great and perpetual battle of eleven days. In the disorder of his troops, Saladin remained on the field with seventeen guards, without lowering his standard, or suspending the sound of his brazen kettle-drum: he again rallied and renewed the charge; and his preachers or heralds called aloud on the unitarians, manfully to stand up against the Christian idolaters. But the progress of these idolaters was irresistible: and it was only by demolishing the walls and buildings of Ascalon, that the sultan could prevent them from occupying an important fortress on the confines of Egypt. During a severe winter, the armies slept; but in the spring, the Franks advanced within a day's march of Jerusalem, under the leading standard of the English king; and his active spirit intercepted a convoy, or caravan, of seven thousand camels. Saladin<sup>75</sup> had fixed his station in the holy city; but the city was struck with consternation and discord: he fasted; he prayed; he preached; he offered to share the dangers of the siege; but his Mamelukes, who remembered the fate of their companions at Acre, pressed the sultan with loyal or seditious clamours, to reserve his person and their courage for the future defence of the religion and empire<sup>76</sup>. The Moslems were delivered by the sudden, or, as they deemed, the miraculous, retreat of the Christians<sup>77</sup>; and the laurels of Richard were blasted by the prudence, or envy, of his compa-

C H A P.
LIX.

<sup>75</sup> See the distress and pious firmness of Saladin, as they are described by Bohadin (p. 7—9. 235—237.), who himself harangued the defenders of Jerusalem; their fears were not unknown to the enemy (Jacob. à Vitriaco, l. i. c. 100. p. 1123. Vinisau, l. v. c. 50. p. 399.).

<sup>76</sup> Yet unless the sultan, or an Ayoubite prince, remained in Jerusalem, nec Curdi, Turcis, nec Turci essent obtemperari Curdis (Bohadin, p. 236.). He draws aside a corner of the political curtain.

<sup>77</sup> Bohadin (p. 237.) and even Jeffrey de Vinisau (l. vi. c. 1—8. p. 403—409.) ascribe the retreat to Richard himself; and Jacobus à Vitriaco observes, that in his impatience to depart, in alterum virum mutatus est (p. 1123.). Yet Joinville, a French knight, accuses the envy of Hugh duke of Burgundy (p. 116.), without supposing, like Matthew Paris, that he was bribed by Saladin.

C H A P.
LIX.

nions. The hero, ascending an hill, and veiling his face, exclaimed with an indignant voice, "Those who are unwilling to rescue, are unworthy to view, the sepulchre of Christ!" After his return to Acre, on the news that Jaffa was surpris'd by the sultan, he sail'd with some merchant vessels, and leaped foremost on the beach; the castle was reliev'd by his presence; and sixty thousand Turks and Saracens fled before his arms. The discovery of his weakness provok'd them to return in the morning; and they found him carelessly encamp'd before the gates with only seventeen knights and three hundred archers. Without counting their numbers, he sustained their charge; and we learn from the evidence of his enemies, that the king of England, grasping his lance, rode furiously along their front, from the right to the left wing, without meeting an adversary who dared to encounter his career<sup>78</sup>. Am I writing the history of Orlando or Amadis?

His treaty and departure,
A. D. 1192,
September.

During these hostilities, a languid and tedious negotiation<sup>79</sup> between the Franks and Moslems, was started, and continued, and broken, and again resumed, and again broken. Some acts of royal courtesy, the gift of snow and fruit, the exchange of Norway hawks and Arabian horses, softened the asperity of religious war: from the vicissitude of success, the monarchs might learn to suspect that Heaven was neuter in the quarrel; nor, after the trial of each other, could either hope for a decisive victory<sup>80</sup>. The health both of Richard and Saladin appear'd to be in a declining state; and they

<sup>78</sup> The expeditions to Ascalon, Jerusalem, and Jaffa, are related by Bohadin (p. 184—242) and Abulfeda (p. 51, 52.). The author of the Itinerary, or the monk of St. Alban's, cannot exaggerate the Cadhi's account of the prowess of Richard (Vinisauſ, l. vi. c. 14—24. p. 412—421. Hist. Major, p. 137—143.); and on the whole of this war, there is a marvellous agreement between the Christian and Mahometan writers, who mutually praise the virtues of their enemies.

<sup>79</sup> See the progress of negotiation and hostility in Bohadin (p. 207—260.), who was himself an actor in the treaty. Richard declared his intention of returning with new armies to the conquest of the Holy Land; and Saladin answer'd the menace with a civil compliment (Vinisauſ, l. vi. c. 28. p. 423.).

<sup>80</sup> The most copious and original account of this holy war, is Galfridi à Vinisauſ Itinerarium Regis Anglorum Richardi et aliorum in Terram Hierosolymorum, in six books, published in the ii<sup>d</sup> volume of Gale's Scriptores Hist. Anglicanæ (p. 247—429.). Roger Hoveden and Matthew Paris afford likewise many valuable materials; and the former describes, with accuracy, the discipline and navigation of the English fleet.

respectively

respectively suffered the evils of distant and domestic warfare: Plantagenet was impatient to punish a perfidious rival who had invaded Normandy in his absence; and the indefatigable sultan was subdued by the cries of the people, who was the victim, and of the soldiers, who were the instruments, of his martial zeal. The first demands of the king of England were the restitution of Jerusalem, Palestine, and the true cross; and he firmly declared, that himself and his brother pilgrims would end their lives in the pious labour, rather than return to Europe with ignominy and remorse. But the conscience of Saladin refused, without some weighty compensation, to restore the idols, or promote the idolatry, of the Christians: he asserted, with equal firmness, his religious and civil claim to the sovereignty of Palestine; descanted on the importance and sanctity of Jerusalem; and rejected all terms of the establishment, or partition, of the Latins. The marriage which Richard proposed, of his sister with the sultan's brother, was defeated by the difference of faith: the princess abhorred the embraces of a Turk; and Adel, or Saphadin, would not easily renounce a plurality of wives. A personal interview was declined by Saladin, who alleged their mutual ignorance of each other's language; and the negotiation was managed with much art and delay by their interpreters and envoys. The final agreement was equally disapproved by the zealots of both parties, by the Roman pontiff and the caliph of Bagdad. It was stipulated that Jerusalem and the holy sepulchre should be open, without tribute or vexation, to the pilgrimage of the Latin Christians; that, after the demolition of Ascalon, they should inclusively possess the sea-coast from Jaffa to Tyre; that the count of Tripoli and the prince of Antioch should be comprised in the truce; and that, during three years and three months, all hostilities should cease. The principal chiefs of the two armies swore to the observance of the treaty; but the monarchs were satisfied with giving their word and their right-hand; and the royal majesty was excused from an oath, which always implies some suspicion of falsehood and dishonour.

C H A P.
LIX.

C II A P.
LIX.

Death of Saladin,
A. D. 1193,
March 4.

nour. Richard embarked for Europe to seek a long captivity and a premature grave; and the space of a few months concluded the life and glories of Saladin. The Orientals describe his edifying death, which happened at Damascus; but they seem ignorant of the equal distribution of his alms among the three religions<sup>81</sup>, or of the display of a shroud, instead of a standard, to admonish the East of the instability of human greatness. The unity of empire was dissolved by his death; his sons were oppressed by the stronger arm of their uncle Saphadin; the hostile interests of the sultans of Egypt, Damascus, and Aleppo<sup>82</sup>, were again revived; and the Franks or Latins stood, and breathed, and hoped, in their fortresses along the Syrian coast.

Innocent III.
A. D.
1198—1216.

The noblest monument of a conqueror's fame, and of the terror which he inspired, is the Saladinic tenth, a general tax, which was imposed on the laity, and even the clergy, of the Latin church for the service of the holy war. The practice was too lucrative to expire with the occasion; and this tribute became the foundation of all the tithes and tenths on ecclesiastical benefices, which have been granted by the Roman pontiffs to Catholic sovereigns, or reserved for the immediate use of the apostolic see<sup>83</sup>. This pecuniary emolument must have tended to increase the interest of the popes in the recovery of Palestine; after the death of Saladin they preached the crusade, by their epistles, their legates, and their missionaries; and the accomplishment of the pious work might have been expected from the zeal and talents of Innocent the third<sup>84</sup>. Under that

<sup>81</sup> Even Vertot (tom. i. p. 251.) adopts the foolish notion of the indifference of Saladin, who professed the Koran with his last breath.

<sup>82</sup> See the succession of the Ayoubites, in Abulpharagius (Dynast. p. 277, &c.), and the tables of M. de Guignes, l'Art de Verifier les Dates, and the Bibliothèque Orientale.

<sup>83</sup> Thomassin (Discipline de l'Eglise, tom. iii.

p. 311—374.) has copiously treated of the origin, abuses, and restrictions of these tenths. A theory was started, but not pursued, that they were rightfully due to the pope, a tenth of the Levites' tenth to the high priest (Selden on Tithes; see his Works, vol. iii. p. ii. p. 1083.).

<sup>84</sup> See the Gesta Innocentii III. in Muratori, Script. Rer. Ital. (tom. iii. p. i. p. 486—568.).

young and ambitious priest, the successors of St. Peter attained the full meridian of their greatness; and in a reign of eighteen years, he exercised a despotic command over the emperors and kings, whom he raised and deposed; over the nations, whom an interdict of months or years deprived, for the offence of their rulers, of the exercise of Christian worship. In the council of the Lateran he acted as the ecclesiastical, almost as the temporal, sovereign of the East and West. It was at the feet of his legate that John of England surrendered his crown; and Innocent may boast of the two most signal triumphs over sense and humanity, the establishment of transubstantiation, and the origin of the inquisition. At his voice, two crusades, the fourth and the fifth, were undertaken; but, except a king of Hungary, the princes of the second order were at the head of the pilgrims; the forces were inadequate to the design; nor did the effects correspond with the hopes and wishes of the pope and the people. The fourth crusade was diverted from Syria to Constantinople; and the conquest of the Greek or Roman empire by the Latins will form the proper and important subject of the next chapter. In the fifth<sup>55</sup>, two hundred thousand Franks were landed at the eastern mouth of the Nile. They reasonably hoped that Palestine must be subdued in Egypt, the seat and storehouse of the sultan; and, after a siege of sixteen months, the Moslems deplored the loss of Damietta. But the Christian army was ruined by the pride and insolence of the legate Pelagius, who, in the pope's name, assumed the character of general: the sickly Franks were encompassed by the waters of the Nile and the Oriental forces; and it was by the evacuation of Damietta that they obtained a safe retreat, some concessions for the pilgrims, and the tardy restitution of the doubtful

C H A P.
LIX.

The fourth
crusade,
A. D. 1202.

The fifth,
A. D. 1213.

<sup>55</sup> See the 4th crusade, and the siege of Damietta, in Jacobus à Vitriaco (l. iii. p. 1125—1149. in the Gesta Dei of Bongarsius), an eye-witness, Bernard Thesaurarius (in Script. Muratori, tom. vii. p. 825—846. c. 190—207.), a contemporary, and Sanutus (Secreta Fidel. Crucis, l. iii. p. xi. c. 4—9.), a diligent compiler; and of the Arabians, Abulpharagius (Dynast. p. 294.), and the Extracts at the end of Joinville (p. 533. 537. 540. 547, &c.).

C H A P.
LIX.

relic of the true cross. The failure may in some measure be ascribed to the abuse and multiplication of the crusades, which were preached at the same time against the Pagans of Livonia, the Moors of Spain, the Albigeois of France, and the kings of Sicily, of the Imperial family<sup>86</sup>. In these meritorious services, the volunteers might acquire at home the same spiritual indulgence, and a larger measure of temporal rewards; and even the popes, in their zeal against a domestic enemy, were sometimes tempted to forget the distress of their Syrian brethren. From the last age of the crusades they derived the occasional command of an army and revenue; and some deep reasoners have suspected that the whole enterprise, from the first synod of Placentia, was contrived and executed by the policy of Rome. The suspicion is not founded, either in nature or in fact. The successors of St. Peter appear to have followed, rather than guided, the impulse of manners and prejudice; without much foresight of the seasons, or cultivation of the soil, they gathered the ripe and spontaneous fruits of the superstition of the times. They gathered these fruits without toil or personal danger: in the council of the Lateran, Innocent the third declared an ambiguous resolution of animating the crusaders by his example; but the pilot of the sacred vessel could not abandon the helm; nor was Palestine ever blessed with the presence of a Roman pontiff<sup>87</sup>.

The emperor
Frederic II.
in Palestine,
A. D. 1228.

The persons, the families, and estates of the pilgrims, were under the immediate protection of the popes; and these spiritual patrons soon claimed the prerogative of directing their operations, and enforcing, by commands and censures, the accomplishment of their vow. Frederic the second<sup>88</sup>, the grandson of Barbarossa, was successfully for the reason of the xiiith century. <sup>87</sup> This simple idea is agreeable to the good sense of Motheim (Institut. Hist. Eccles. p. 332.) and the fine philosophy of Hume (Hist. of England, vol. i. p. 330.).

<sup>86</sup> To those who took the cross against Mainz, the pope (A. D. 1255) granted plenissimam peccatorum remissionem. Fideles mirabantur quod tantum eis promitteret pro sanguine Christianorum effundendo quantum pro creore infidelium aliquando (Matthew Paris, p. 785.). A high flight

<sup>88</sup> The original materials for the crusade of Frederic II. may be drawn from Richard de

cessively the pupil, the enemy, and the victim, of the church. At the age of twenty-one years, and in obedience to his guardian Innocent the third, he assumed the cross; the same promise was repeated at his royal and imperial coronations; and his marriage with the heiress of Jerusalem for ever bound him to defend the kingdom of his son Conrad. But as Frederic advanced in age and authority, he repented of the rash engagements of his youth: his liberal sense and knowledge taught him to despise the phantoms of superstition and the crowns of Asia: he no longer entertained the same reverence for the successors of Innocent; and his ambition was occupied by the restoration of the Italian monarchy from Sicily to the Alps. But the success of this project would have reduced the popes to their primitive simplicity; and, after the delays and excuses of twelve years, they urged the emperor, with intreaties and threats, to fix the time and place of his departure for Palestine. In the harbours of Sicily and Apulia, he prepared a fleet of one hundred galleys, and of one hundred vessels, that were framed to transport and land two thousand five hundred knights, with their horses and attendants; his vassals of Naples and Germany formed a powerful army; and the number of English crusaders was magnified to sixty thousand by the report of fame. But the inevitable, or affected, slowness of these mighty preparations, consumed the strength and provisions of the more indigent pilgrims: the multitude was thinned by sickness and desertion, and the sultry summer of Calabria anticipated the mischiefs of a Syrian campaign. At length the emperor hoisted sail at Brundisium, with a fleet and army of forty thousand men; but he kept the sea no more than three days; and his hasty retreat, which was ascribed by his friends to a grievous indisposition, was accused by his enemies as a voluntary and obstinate disobedide St. Germano (in Muratori, Script. Rerum Eccles. tom. xvi.), Vertot (Chevaliers de Ital. tom. vii. p. 1002—1013.) and Matthew Paris (p. 286. 291. 300. 302. 304.). Malthe, tom. i. l. iii), Giannone (Historia Civile di Napoli, tom. ii. l. xvi.), and Muratori (Annali d'Italia, tom. x.).

C H A P.
LIX.

C H A P.
LIX.

ence. For suspending his vow, was Frederic excommunicated by Gregory the ninth; for presuming, the next year, to accomplish his vow, he was again excommunicated by the same pope<sup>89</sup>. While he served under the banner of the cross, a crusade was preached against him in Italy; and after his return he was compelled to ask pardon for the injuries which he had suffered. The clergy and military orders of Palestine were previously instructed to renounce his communion and dispute his commands; and in his own kingdom, the emperor was forced to consent that the orders of the camp should be issued in the name of God and of the Christian republic. Frederic entered Jerusalem in triumph; and with his own hands (for no priest would perform the office) he took the crown from the altar of the holy sepulchre. But the patriarch cast an interdict on the church which his presence had profaned; and the knights of the hospital and temple informed the sultan how easily he might be surpris'd and slain in his unguarded visit to the river Jordan. In such a state of fanaticism and faction, victory was hopeless and defence was difficult; but the conclusion of an advantageous peace may be imputed to the discord of the Mahometans and their personal esteem for the character of Frederic. The enemy of the church is accused of maintaining with the miscreants an intercourse of hospitality and friendship, unworthy of a Christian; of despising the barrenness of the land; and of indulging a profane thought, that if Jehovah had seen the kingdom of Naples, he never would have selected Palestine for the inheritance of his chosen people. Yet Frederic obtained from the sultan the restitution of Jerusalem, of Bethlem and Nazareth, of Tyre and Sidon: the Latins were allowed to inhabit and fortify the city; an equal code of civil and religious freedom was ratified for the sectaries of Jesus and those of Mahomet; and, while the former worshipp'd at the holy sepulchre, the latter might

<sup>89</sup> Poor Muratori knows what to think, but knows not what to say, "Chino quì il capo," &c. p. 322.

might pray and preach in the mosque of the temple<sup>92</sup>, from whence the prophet undertook his nocturnal journey to heaven. The clergy deplored this scandalous toleration; and the weaker Moslems were gradually expelled; but every rational object of the crusades was accomplished without bloodshed; the churches were restored, the monasteries were replenished; and, in the space of fifteen years, the Latins of Jerusalem exceeded the number of six thousand. This peace and prosperity, for which they were ungrateful to their benefactor, was terminated by the irruption of the strange and savage hords of Carizmians<sup>91</sup>. Flying from the arms of the Moguls, those shepherds of the Caspian rolled headlong on Syria; and the union of the Franks with the sultans of Aleppo, Hems, and Damascus, was insufficient to stem the violence of the torrent. Whatever stood against them, was cut off by the sword, or dragged into captivity; the military orders were almost exterminated in a single battle; and in the pillage of the city, in the profanation of the holy sepulchre, the Latins confess and regret the modesty and discipline of the Turks and Saracens.

Of the seven crusades, the two last were undertaken by Louis the ninth, king of France; who lost his liberty in Egypt, and his life on the coast of Africa. Twenty-eight years after his death, he was canonized at Rome; and sixty-five miracles were readily found, and solemnly attested, to justify the claim of the royal saint<sup>92</sup>. The voice of history renders a more honourable testimony, that he united the virtues of a king, an hero, and a man; that his martial spirit was tempered by the love of private and public justice; and that Louis was the father of his people, the friend of his neighbours, and

C H A P.
LIX.

Invasion of the Carizmians,
A. D. 1243

St. Louis, and the sixth crusade,
A. D.
1248--1254.

<sup>92</sup> The clergy artfully confounded the mosque or church of the temple with the holy sepulchre, and their wilful error has deceived both Vertot and Muratori. (p. 546, 547.), and by Joinville, Nangis, and the Arabians (p. 111, 112. 191, 192. 528. 530.).

<sup>91</sup> The irruption of the Carizmians, or of St. Louis, by the confessor of queen Margaret (p. 291—523. Joinville, du Louvre).

C H A P.
LIX.

the terror of the infidels. Superstition alone, in all the extent of her baleful influence<sup>93</sup>, corrupted his understanding and his heart; his devotion stooped to admire and imitate the begging friars of Francis and Dominic; he pursued with blind and cruel zeal the enemies of the faith; and the best of kings twice descended from his throne to seek the adventures of a spiritual knight-errant. A monkish historian would have been content to applaud the most despicable part of his character; but the noble and gallant Joinville<sup>94</sup>, who shared the friendship and captivity of Louis, has traced with the pencil of nature the free portrait of his virtues as well as of his failings. From this intimate knowledge, we may learn to suspect the political views of depressing their great vassals, which are so often imputed to the royal authors of the crusades. Above all the princes of the middle ages, Louis the ninth successfully laboured to restore the prerogatives of the crown; but it was at home, and not in the East, that he acquired for himself and his posterity; his vow was the result of enthusiasm and sickness; and if he were the promoter, he was likewise the victim, of this holy madness. For the invasion of Egypt, France was exhausted of her troops and treasures; he covered the sea of Cyprus with eighteen hundred sails; the most modest enumeration amounts to fifty thousand men; and, if we might trust his own confession, as it is reported by Oriental vanity, he disembarked nine thousand five hundred horse, and one hundred and thirty thousand foot, who performed their pilgrimage under the shadow of his power<sup>95</sup>.

<sup>93</sup> He believed all that mother church taught (Joinville, p. 10.), but he cautioned Joinville against disputing with infidels. "L'homme lay (said he in his old language) quand il ot medire de la loy Crestienne, ne doit pas deffendre la loy Crestienne ne mais que de l'espée, dequoi il doit donner parmi le ventre dedens, tant comme elle y peut entrer" (p. 12.).

<sup>94</sup> I have two editions of Joinville, the one (Paris, 1668) most valuable for the observations of Ducange; the other (Paris au Louvre, 1761) most precious for the pure and authentic text, a MS. of which has been recently discovered. The last editor proves, that the history of St. Louis was finished A. D. 1309, without explaining, or even admiring, the age of the author, which must have exceeded ninety years (Preface, p. xi. Observations de Ducange, p. 17.).

<sup>95</sup> Joinville, p. 32. Arabic Extracts, p. 549.

In complete armour, the oriflamme waving before him, Louis leaped foremost on the beach; and the strong city of Damietta, which had cost his predecessors a siege of sixteen months, was abandoned on the first assault by the trembling Moslems. But Damietta was the first and the last of his conquests; and in the fifth and sixth crusades, the same causes, almost on the same ground, were productive of similar calamities<sup>96</sup>. After a ruinous delay, which introduced into the camp the seeds of an epidemical disease, the Franks advanced from the sea-coast towards the capital of Egypt, and strove to surmount the unseasonable inundation of the Nile, which opposed their progress. Under the eye of their intrepid monarch, the barons and knights of France displayed their invincible contempt of danger and discipline: his brother, the count of Artois, stormed with inconsiderate valour the town of Maffoura; and the carrier pigeons announced to the inhabitants of Cairo, that all was lost. But a foldier, who afterwards usurped the sceptre, rallied the flying troops: the main body of the Christians was far behind their vanguard; and Artois was overpowered and slain. A shower of Greek fire was incessantly poured on the invaders; the Nile was commanded by the Egyptian gallies, the open country by the Arabs; all provisions were intercepted; each day aggravated the sickness and famine; and about the same time a retreat was found to be necessary and impracticable. The Oriental writers confess, that Louis might have escaped, if he would have deserted his subjects: he was made prisoner, with the greatest part of his nobles; all who could not redeem their lives by service or ransom, were inhumanly massacred; and the walls of Cairo were decorated with a circle of Christian heads<sup>97</sup>. The king of France was loaded with chains;

C H A P.
LIX.
He takes Damietta,
A. D. 1249.

His captivity
in Egypt,

but

<sup>96</sup> The last editors have enriched their name of Redefrant. Matthew Paris (p. 683. Joinville with large and curious extracts from 684.) has described the rival folly of the the Arabic historians, Macrizi, Abulfeda, French and English who fought and fell at &c. See likewise Abulpharagius (Dynast. Maffoura.

p. 322—325.), who calls him by the corrupt <sup>97</sup> Savary, in his agreeable Lettres sur l'Egypte,
Q 2

C H A P.
LIX.

A. D. 1250,
April 5—
May 6.

but the generous victor, a great grandson of the brother of Saladin, sent a robe of honour to his royal captive; and his deliverance, with that of his soldiers, was obtained by the restitution of Damietta<sup>98</sup> and the payment of four hundred thousand pieces of gold. In a soft and luxurious climate, the degenerate children of the companions of Nouredin and Saladin were incapable of resisting the flower of European chivalry: they triumphed by the arms of their slaves or Mamalukes, the hardy natives of Tartary, who at a tender age had been purchased of the Syrian merchants, and were educated in the camp and palace of the sultan. But Egypt soon afforded a new example of the danger of prætorian bands; and the rage of these ferocious animals, who had been let loose on the strangers, was provoked to devour their benefactor. In the pride of conquest, Touran Shaw, the last of his race, was murdered by his Mamalukes; and the most daring of the assassins entered the chamber of the captive king, with drawn scymetars, and their hands imbrued in the blood of their sultan. The firmness of Louis commanded their respect<sup>99</sup>; their avarice prevailed over cruelty and zeal; the treaty was accomplished; and the king of France, with the relics of his army, was permitted to embark for Palestine. He wasted four years within the walls of Acre, unable to visit Jerusalem, and unwilling to return without glory to his native country.

The memory of his defeat excited Louis, after sixteen years of wisdom and repose, to undertake the seventh and last of the crusades.

l'Egypte, has given a description of Damietta (tom. i. lettre xviii. p. 274—290.), and a narrative of the expedition of St. Louis (xxv. p. 306—350.).

<sup>98</sup> For the ransom of St. Louis, a million of byzants was asked and granted; but the sultan's generosity reduced that sum to 800,000 byzants, which are valued by Joinville at 400,000 French livres of his own time, and expressed by Matthew Paris by 100,000 marks of silver (Ducange, Dissertation xx. sur Joinville).

<sup>99</sup> The idea of the emirs to chuse Louis for their sultan, is seriously attested by Joinville (p. 77, 78.), and does not appear to me so absurd as to M. de Voltaire (Hist. Generale, tom. ii. p. 386, 387.). The Mamalukes themselves were strangers, rebels, and equals; they had felt his valour, they hoped his conversion; and such a motion, which was not seconded, might be made, perhaps by a secret Christian, in their tumultuous assembly.

His finances were restored, his kingdom was enlarged; a new generation of warriors had arisen, and he embarked with fresh confidence at the head of six thousand horse and thirty thousand foot. The loss of Antioch had provoked the enterprise: a wild hope of baptizing the king of Tunis, tempted him to steer for the African coast; and the report of an immense treasure reconciled his troops to the delay of their voyage to the Holy Land. Instead of a proselyte, he found a siege; the French panted and died on the burning sands; St. Louis expired in his tent; and no sooner had he closed his eyes, than his son and successor gave the signal of the retreat<sup>100</sup>. "It is thus," says a lively writer, "that a Christian king died near the ruins of Carthage, waging war against the sectaries of Mahomet, in a land to which Dido had introduced the deities of Syria<sup>101</sup>."

C H A P.
LIX.

His death before Tunis, in the seventh crusade, A. D. 1270, August 25.

A more unjust and absurd constitution cannot be devised, than that which condemns the natives of a country to perpetual servitude, under the arbitrary dominion of strangers and slaves. Yet such has been the state of Egypt above five hundred years. The most illustrious sultans of the Baharite and Borgite dynasties<sup>102</sup>, were themselves promoted from the Tartar and Circassian bands; and the four-and-twenty beys or military chiefs, have ever been succeeded, not by their sons, but by their servants. They produce the great charter of their liberties, the treaty of Selim the first with the republic<sup>103</sup>; and the Othman emperor still accepts from Egypt a slight acknow-

The Mamelukes of Egypt, A. D. 1250—1517.

<sup>100</sup> See the expedition in the Annals of St. Louis, by William de Nangis, p. 270—287. and the Arabic Extracts, p. 545. 555. of the Louvre edition of Joinville.

<sup>101</sup> Voltaire, Hist. Generale, tom. ii. p. 391.

<sup>102</sup> The chronology of the two dynasties of Mamelukes, the Baharites, Turks or Tartars of Kipzak, and the Borgites, Circassians, is given by Pocock (Prolegom. ad Abulpharag. p. 6—31.) and de Guignes (tom. i. p. 264—270.); their history from Abulfeda, Macrizi, &c. to the beginning of the xvth century, by the same M. de Guignes (tom. iv. p. 110—328.).

<sup>103</sup> Savary, Lettres sur l'Egypte, tom. ii. lettre xv. p. 187—208. I much question the authenticity of this copy; yet it is true, that sultan Selim concluded a treaty with the Circassians or Mamelukes of Egypt, and left them in possession of arms, riches, and power. See a new Abregé de l'Histoire Ottomane, composed in Egypt, and translated by M. Digeon (tom. i. p. 55—58. Paris, 1781), a curious, authentic, and national history.

C H A P.
LIX.

ledgment of tribute and subjection. With some breathing intervals of peace and order, the two dynasties are marked as a period of rapine and bloodshed<sup>104</sup>: but their throne, however shaken, rested on the two pillars of discipline and valour; their sway extended over Egypt, Nubia, Arabia, and Syria; their Mamalukes were multiplied from eight hundred to twenty-five thousand horse; and their numbers were increased by a provincial militia of one hundred and seven thousand foot, and the occasional aid of sixty-six thousand Arabs<sup>105</sup>. Princes of such power and spirit could not long endure on their coast an hostile and independent nation; and if the ruin of the Franks was postponed about forty years, they were indebted to the cares of an unsettled reign, to the invasion of the Mogols, and to the occasional aid of some warlike pilgrims. Among these, the English reader will observe the name of our first Edward, who assumed the cross in the lifetime of his father Henry. At the head of a thousand soldiers, the future conqueror of Wales and Scotland delivered Acre from a siege; marched as far as Nazareth with an army of nine thousand men; emulated the fame of his uncle Richard; extorted, by his valour, a ten years truce; and escaped, with a dangerous wound, from the dagger of a fanatic assassin<sup>106</sup>. Antioch<sup>107</sup>, whose situation had been less exposed to the calamities of the holy war, was finally occupied and ruined by Boudoedar, or Bibars, sultan of Egypt and Syria; the Latin principality was extinguished; and the first feat of the Christian name was dispeopled by the slaughter of

Cross of Antioch,
A. D. 1268,
June 12.

<sup>104</sup> Si totum quo regnum occuparunt tempus respicias, presertim quod fini propius, reperies illud bellis, pugnis, injuriis, ac rapinis refertum (Al Jannabi, apud Pocock, p. 31.). 'The reign of Mohammed (A. D. 1311—1341) affords' an happy exception (de Guignes, tom. iv. p. 208—210.).

<sup>105</sup> They are now reduced to 3500: but the expence of each Mamaluke may be rated at 100 louis; and Egypt groans under the avarice and insolence of these strangers (Voyages de Volney, tom. i. p. 89—187.).

<sup>106</sup> See Carte's History of England, vol. ii. p. 165—175. and his original authors, Thomas Wikes and Walter Hemingford (l. iii. c. 34, 35.), in Gale's Collection (tom. ii. p. 97. 587—592). They are both ignorant of the princess Eleanor's piety in sucking the poisoned wound, and saving her husband at the risk of her own life.

<sup>107</sup> Sanutus, Secret. Fidelium Crucis, l. iii. p. xii. c. 9. and de Guignes, Hist. des Huns, tom. iv. p. 143. from the Arabic historians.

seventeen, and the captivity of one hundred, thousand of her inhabitants. The maritime towns of Laodicea, Gabala, Tripoli, Berytus, Sidon, Tyre, and Jaffa, and the stronger castles of the Hospitalers and Templars, successively fell; and the whole existence of the Franks was confined to the city and colony of St. John of Acre, which is sometimes described by the more classic title of Ptolemais.

C H A P.
LIX.

After the loss of Jerusalem, Acre<sup>108</sup>, which is distant about seventy miles, became the metropolis of the Latin Christians, and was adorned with strong and stately buildings, with aqueducts, an artificial port, and a double wall. The population was increased by the incessant streams of pilgrims and fugitives: in the pauses of hostility, the trade of the East and West was attracted to this convenient station; and the market could offer the produce of every clime and the interpreters of every tongue. But in this conflux of nations, every vice was propagated and practised: of all the disciples of Jesus and Mahomet, the male and female inhabitants of Acre were esteemed the most corrupt; nor could the abuse of religion be corrected by the discipline of law. The city had many sovereigns, and no government. The kings of Jerusalem and Cyprus, of the house of Lusignan, the princes of Antioch, the counts of Tripoli and Sidon, the great masters of the hospital, the temple, and the Teutonic order, the republics of Venice, Genoa, and Pisa, the pope's legate, the kings of France and England, assumed an independent command: seventeen tribunals exercised the power of life and death; every criminal was protected in the adjacent quarter; and the perpetual jealousy of the nations often burst forth in acts of violence and blood. Some adventurers, who disgraced the ensign of the cross, compensated their want of pay by the plunder of the Mahometan villages: nineteen Syrian merchants, who traded under the public faith, were despoiled and hanged by the Christians; and the

<sup>108</sup> The state of Acre is represented in all the chronicles of the times, and most accurately in John Villani, l. vii. c. 144. in Muratori, Scriptores Rerum Italicarum, tom. xiii. p. 337, 338.

C H A P.
LIX.

The loss of Acre and the Holy Land,
A. D. 1291,
May 18.

denial of satisfaction justified the arms of the sultan Khalil. He marched against Acre, at the head of sixty thousand horse and one hundred and forty thousand foot: his train of artillery (if I may use the word) was numerous and weighty; the separate timbers of a single engine were transported in one hundred waggons; and the royal historian Abulfeda, who served with the troops of Hamah, was himself a spectator of the holy war. Whatever might be the vices of the Franks, their courage was rekindled by enthusiasm and despair; but they were torn by the discord of seventeen chiefs, and overwhelmed on all sides by the powers of the sultan. After a siege of thirty-three days, the double wall was forced by the Moslems; the principal tower yielded to their engines; the Mamalukes made a general assault; the city was stormed; and death or slavery was the lot of sixty thousand Christians. The convent, or rather fortress, of the Templars resisted three days longer; but the great master was pierced with an arrow; and, of five hundred knights, only ten were left alive, less happy than the victims of the sword, if they lived to suffer on a scaffold in the unjust and cruel proscription of the whole order. The king of Jerusalem, the patriarch, and the great master of the hospital, effected their retreat to the shore; but the sea was rough; the vessels were insufficient; and great numbers of the fugitives were drowned before they could reach the isle of Cyprus, which might comfort Lusignan for the loss of Palestine. By the command of the sultan, the churches and fortifications of the Latin cities were demolished: a motive of avarice or fear still opened the holy sepulchre to some devout and defenceless pilgrims; and a mournful and solitary silence prevailed along the coast which had so long resounded with the WORLD'S DEBATE<sup>109</sup>.

<sup>109</sup> See the final expulsion of the Franks, in Macrizi, &c. in de Guignes, tom. iv. p. 162. Sanutus, l. iii. p. xii. c. 11—22. Abulfeda, 164. and Vertot, tom. i. l. iii. p. 407—428.

C H A P. LX.

Schism of the Greeks and Latins.—State of Constantinople.—Revolt of the Bulgarians.—Isaac Angelus de-throned by his Brother Alexius.—Origin of the Fourth Crusade.—Alliance of the French and Venetians with the Son of Isaac.—Their naval Expedition to Constantinople.—The two Sieges and final Conquest of the City by the Latins.

THE restoration of the Western empire by Charlemagne, was speedily followed by the separation of the Greek and Latin churches<sup>1</sup>. A religious and national animosity still divides the two largest communions of the Christian world; and the schism of Constantinople, by alienating her most useful allies and provoking her most dangerous enemies, has precipitated the decline and fall of the Roman empire in the East.

In the course of the present history, the aversion of the Greeks for the Latins has been often visible and conspicuous. It was originally derived from the disdain of servitude, inflamed, after the time of Constantine, by the pride of equality or dominion; and finally exasperated by the preference which their rebellious subjects had given to the alliance of the Franks. In every age, the Greeks were proud of their superiority in profane and religious knowledge: they had first received the light of Christianity; they had pronounced the decrees of the seven general councils: they alone possessed the language

C H A P.
LX.
Schism of
the Greeks.

Their aversion to the Latins.

<sup>1</sup> In the successive centuries, from the 11th to the 18th, partiality: the filioque (Institut. Hist. Ecclésiast. p. 277.), Leo III. p. 303. Photius, p. 107, the Greeks, with learning, cleareness, and im- 303. Michael Cerularius, p. 370, 371, &c.

C H A P.
LX.

Procession of the Holy Ghost.

of scripture and philosophy; nor should the Barbarians, immersed in the darkness of the West<sup>2</sup>, presume to argue on the high and mysterious questions of theological science. Those Barbarians despised in their turn the restless and subtle levity of the Orientals, the authors of every heresy; and blessed their own simplicity, which was content to hold the tradition of the apostolic church. Yet in the seventh century, the synods of Spain, and afterwards of France, improved or corrupted the Nicene creed, on the mysterious subject of the third person of the Trinity<sup>3</sup>. In the long controversies of the East, the nature and generation of the Christ had been scrupulously defined; and the well-known relation of father and son seemed to convey a faint image to the human mind. The idea of birth was less analogous to the Holy Spirit, who, instead of a divine gift or attribute, was considered by the Catholics, as a substance, a person, a god; he was not begotten, but in the orthodox style he proceeded. Did he proceed from the Father alone, perhaps by the Son? or from the Father and the Son? The first of these opinions was asserted by the Greeks, the second by the Latins; and the addition to the Nicene creed of the word filioque, kindled the flame of discord between the Oriental and the Gallic churches. In the origin of the dispute, the Roman pontiffs affected a character of neutrality and moderation<sup>4</sup>: they condemned the innovation, but they acquiesced in the sentiment, of their Transalpine brethren: they seemed desirous of casting a veil of silence and charity over the superfluous research; and in the correspondence of Charlemagne and Leo the third, the pope assumes the liberality of

<sup>2</sup> ἄνθρωποι ἄσχετοι καὶ ἀποστρεφόμενοι, ἀνδρες ἰσχυροὶ, ἀνοδοίτες, τῆς γὰρ Ἑσπερία μέρους ὑπερχύοντες (Phot. Epist. p. 47. edit. Montacut.). The Oriental patriarch continues to apply the images of thunder, earthquake, hail, wild-boar, precursors of Antichrist, &c. &c.

<sup>3</sup> The mysterious subject of the procession of the Holy Ghost, is discussed in the historical, theological, and controversial sense, or non-sense, by the Jesuit Petavius (Dogmata Theologica, tom. ii. l. vii. p. 362—440.).

<sup>4</sup> Before the shrine of St. Peter, he placed two shields of the weight of 94½ pounds of pure silver; on which he inscribed the text of both creeds (utroque symbolo), pro amore et cautela orthodoxæ fidei (Anastaf. in Leon. III. in Muratori, tom. iii. pars i. p. 208.). His language most clearly proves, that neither the filioque, nor the Athanasian creed, were received at Rome about the year 830.

a statesman, and the prince descends to the passions and prejudices of a priest<sup>5</sup>. But the orthodoxy of Rome spontaneously obeyed the impulse of her temporal policy; and the filioque, which Leo wished to erase, was transcribed in the symbol and chaunted in the liturgy of the Vatican. The Nicene and Athanasian creeds are held as the Catholic faith, without which none can be saved; and both Papists and Protestants must now sustain and return the anathemas of the Greeks, who deny the procession of the Holy Ghost from the Son, as well as from the Father. Such articles of faith are not susceptible of treaty; but the rules of discipline will vary in remote and independent churches; and the reason, even of divines, might allow, that the difference is inevitable and harmless. The craft or superstition of Rome has imposed on her priests and deacons the rigid obligation of celibacy; among the Greeks, it is confined to the bishops; the loss is compensated by dignity or annihilated by age; and the parochial clergy, the papas, enjoy the conjugal society of the wives whom they have married before their entrance into holy orders. A question concerning the Azjms was fiercely debated in the eleventh century, and the essence of the Eucharist was supposed in the East and West, to depend on the use of leavened or unleavened bread. Shall I mention in a serious history the furious reproaches that were urged against the Latins, who, for a long while remained on the defensive? They neglected to abstain, according to the apostolical decree, from things strangled, and from blood: they fasted, a Jewish observance! on the Saturday of each week: during the first week of Lent they permitted the use of milk and cheese<sup>6</sup>; their infirm monks were indulged in the taste of flesh; and animal grease was substituted for the want

C H A P.
LX.

Variety of ecclesiastical discipline.

<sup>5</sup> The Missi of Charlemagne pressed him to declare, that all who rejected the filioque, at least the doctrine, must be damned. All, replies the pope, are not capable of reaching the altiora mysteria; qui potuerit, et non voluerit, saluus esse non potest (Collect. Council. tom. 3. p. 277 - 286.). The potuerit would leave a large loop-hole of salvation!

<sup>6</sup> In France, after some harsher laws, the ecclesiastical discipline is now relaxed: milk, cheese, and butter, are become a perpetual, and eggs an annual, indulgence in Lent (Vie pri ce des Fra. . . tom. II. p. 27 - 38.).

C H A P.
LX.

Ambitious quarrels of Photius, patriarch of Constantinople, with the popes,
A. D.
857—886.

of vegetable oil: the holy chrism or unction in baptism, was reserved to the episcopal order: the bishops, as the bridegrooms of their churches, were decorated with rings; their priests shaved their faces, and baptized by a single immersion. Such were the crimes which provoked the zeal of the patriarchs of Constantinople; and which were justified with equal zeal by the doctors of the Latin church<sup>7</sup>.

Bigotry and national aversion are powerful magnifiers of every object of dispute; but the immediate cause of the schism of the Greeks may be traced in the emulation of the leading prelates, who maintained the supremacy of the old metropolis superior to all, and of the reigning capital, inferior to none, in the Christian world. About the middle of the ninth century, Photius<sup>8</sup>, an ambitious layman, the captain of the guards and principal secretary, was promoted by merit and favour to the more desirable office of patriarch of Constantinople. In science, even ecclesiastical science, he surpassed the clergy of the age; and the purity of his morals has never been impeached: but his ordination was hasty, his rise was irregular; and Ignatius, his abdicated predecessor, was yet supported by the public compassion and the obstinacy of his adherents. They appealed to the tribunal of Nicholas the first, one of the proudest and most aspiring of the Roman pontiffs, who embraced the welcome opportunity of judging and condemning his rival of the East. Their quarrel was embittered by a conflict of jurisdiction over the king and nation of the Bulgarians; nor was their recent conversion to Christianity of much avail to either prelate, unless he could number the proselytes among the subjects of his power. With the aid of his court the Greek patriarch was victorious; but in the furious contest he deposed in his turn the successor of St. Peter, and involved prolix answer of cardinal Humbert).

<sup>7</sup> The original monuments of the schism, of the charges of the Greeks against the Latins, are deposited in the Epistles of Photius (Epist. Encyclica, ii. p. 47—61.) and of Michael Cerularius (Canisii Antiq. Lectiones, tom. iii. p. 5. p. 281—324. edit. Bafnage, with the

<sup>8</sup> The 11th volume of the Venice edition of the Councils, contains all the acts of the synods, and history of Photius: they are abridged, with a faint tinge of prejudice or prudence, by Dupin and Fleury.

the Latin church in the reproach of heresy and schism. Photius sacrificed the peace of the world to a short and precarious reign: he fell with his patron, the Cæsar Bardas; and Basil the Macedonian performed an act of justice in the restoration of Ignatius, whose age and dignity had not been sufficiently respected. From his monastery, or prison, Photius solicited the favour of the emperor by pathetic complaints and artful flattery; and the eyes of his rival were scarcely closed, when he was again restored to the throne of Constantinople. After the death of Basil, he experienced the vicissitudes of courts and the ingratitude of a royal pupil: the patriarch was again deposed, and in his last solitary hours he might regret the freedom of a secular and studious life. In each revolution, the breath, the nod, of the sovereign had been accepted by a submissive clergy; and a synod of three hundred bishops was always prepared to hail the triumph, or to stigmatize the fall, of the holy, or the execrable, Photius<sup>9</sup>. By a delusive promise of succour or reward, the popes were tempted to countenance these various proceedings; and the synods of Constantinople were ratified by their epistles or legates. But the court and the people, Ignatius and Photius, were equally adverse to their claims; their ministers were insulted or imprisoned; the procession of the Holy Ghost was forgotten; Bulgaria was for ever annexed to the Byzantine throne; and the schism was prolonged by their rigid censure of all the multiplied ordinations of an irregular patriarch. The darkness and corruption of the tenth century suspended the intercourse, without reconciling the minds, of the two nations. But when the Norman sword restored the churches of Apulia to the jurisdiction of Rome, the departing flock was warned, by a petulant epistle of the Greek patriarch, to avoid and abhor the errors of the Latins. The rising majesty of Rome could no longer <sup>9</sup> The synod of Constantinople, held in the year 869, is the viiith of the general councils, the last assembly of the East which is recognised by the Roman church. She rejects the synods of Constantinople of the years 867 and 879, which were, however, equally numerous and noisy; but they were favourable to Photius.

C. H. A. P.
IX.

The popes
excommunicate the Church of Constantinople and the Greeks,
A. D. 1054,
July 16.

brook the influence of a rebel; and Michael Cerularius was excommunicated in the heart of Constantinople by the pope's legates. Shaking the dust from their feet, they deposited on the altar of St. Sophia a direful anathema<sup>40</sup>, which enumerates the seven mortal heresies of the Greeks, and devotes the guilty teachers, and their unhappy sectaries, to the eternal society of the devil and his angels. According to the emergencies of the church and state, a friendly correspondence was sometimes resumed; the language of charity and concord was sometimes affected; but the Greeks have never recanted their errors; the popes have never repealed their sentence: and from this thunderbolt we may date the consummation of the schism. It was enlarged by each ambitious step of the Roman pontiffs: the emperors blushed and trembled at the ignominious fate of their royal brethren of Germany; and the people was scandalized by the temporal power and military life of the Latin clergy<sup>41</sup>.

Enmity of
the Greeks
and Latins,
A. D.
1100—1200.

The aversion of the Greeks and Latins was nourished and manifested in the three first expeditions to the Holy Land. Alexius Comnenus contrived the absence at least of the formidable pilgrims: his successors, Manuel and Isaac Angelus, conspired with the Moslems for the ruin of the greatest princes of the Franks; and their crooked and malignant policy was seconded by the active and voluntary obedience of every order of their subjects. Of this hostile temper, a large portion may doubtless be ascribed to the difference of language, dress, and manners, which severs and alienates the nations of the globe. The pride, as well as the prudence, of the sovereign, was deeply wounded by the intrusion of foreign armies, that claimed a right of traversing his dominions and passing under the walls of his capital: his subjects were insulted and plundered by the rude strangers of the West; and the hatred of the pusillanimous Greeks the popes, and the Latin communion. The style of Ciaranus and Nicetas is still more vehement. Yet how calm is the voice of history compared with that of polemic!

<sup>40</sup> See this anathema in the Councils, tom. vi. p. 1477—1480.

<sup>41</sup> Anna Comnena (Alexiad, l. i. p. 31—35.) represents the splendour, not only of the church, but of the palace, for Gregory VII.

was sharpened by secret envy of the bold and pious enterprises of the Franks. But these profane causes of national enmity were fortified and inflamed by the venom of religious zeal. Instead of a kind embrace, an hospitable reception from their Christian brethren of the East, every tongue was taught to repeat the names of schismatic and heretic, more odious to an orthodox ear than those of pagan and infidel: instead of being loved for the general conformity of faith and worship, they were abhorred for some rules of discipline, some questions of theology, in which themselves or their teachers might differ from the Oriental church. In the crusade of Louis the seventh, the Greek clergy washed and purified the altars which had been defiled by the sacrifice of a French priest. The companions of Frederic Barbarossa deplore the injuries which they endured, both in word and deed, from the peculiar rancour of the bishops and monks. Their prayers and sermons excited the people against the impious Barbarians; and the patriarch is accused of declaring, that the faithful might obtain the redemption of all their sins by the extirpation of the schismatics<sup>12</sup>. An enthusiast, named Dorotheus, alarmed the fears, and restored the confidence, of the emperor, by a prophetic assurance, that the German heretic, after assaulting the gate of Blachernes, would be made a signal example of the divine vengeance. The passage of these mighty armies were rare and perilous events; but the crusades introduced a frequent and familiar intercourse between the two nations, which enlarged their knowledge, without abating their prejudices. The wealth and luxury of Constantinople

C H A P.
LX.

<sup>12</sup> His anonymous historian (de Exped. Aſiat. Fred. I. in Caniffi Leſſion. Antiq. tom. iii. pars ii. p. 511. edit. Baſnage) mentions the ſermons of the Greek patriarch, quomodo Grecis injungeret in remiſſionem peccatorum peregrinos occidere et delere de terra. Tugino obſerveſ (in Scriptores Freher. tom. i. p. 373. edit. Bruſſ.), Greci hereticos nos appellantes clerici et monachi dictis et factis perſequuntur. We may add the declaration of the emperor Baldwin fifteen years afterwards: Hæc eſt (gens) que Latinos omnes non hominum nomine, ſed canum dignabatur; quorum ſanguinem effundere penè inter merita reputabant (Geſta Innocent. III. c. 92 in Muratori, Script. Rerum Italicarum. tom. iii. pars i. p. 556.). There may be ſome exaggeration, but it was as effectual for the action and re-actiõn of hatred.

demanded

C H A P.
LX.

The Latins
at Constantinople:

demanding the productions of every climate: these imports were balanced by the art and labour of her numerous inhabitants; her situation invites the commerce of the world; and, in every period of her existence, that commerce has been in the hands of foreigners. After the decline of Amalphi, the Venetians, Pisans, and Genoese, introduced their factories and settlements into the capital of the empire: their services were rewarded with honours and immunities; they acquired the possession of lands and houses; their families were multiplied by marriages with the natives; and, after the toleration of a Mahometan mosque, it was impossible to interdict the churches of the Roman rite<sup>13</sup>. The two wives of Manuel Comnenus<sup>14</sup> were of the race of the Franks; the first, a sister-in-law of the emperor Conrad; the second, a daughter of the prince of Antioch: he obtained for his son Alexius a daughter of Philip Augustus king of France; and he bestowed his own daughter on a marquis of Montferrat, who was educated and dignified in the palace of Constantinople. The Greek encountered the arms, and aspired to the empire, of the West; he esteemed the valour, and trusted the fidelity, of the Franks<sup>15</sup>; their military talents were unfitly recompensed by the lucrative offices of judges and treasurers; the policy of Manuel had solicited the alliance of the pope; and the popular voice accused him of a partial bias to the nation and religion of the Latins<sup>16</sup>. During his reign, and that of his successor Alexius, they

<sup>13</sup> See Anna Comnena (Alexiad, l. vi. p. 161, 162.), and a remarkable passage of Nicetas (in Manuel. l. v. c. 9.), who observes of the Venetians, κατα σμικρὴν καὶ φιλανθρωπίαν. Καταστάσαντων τὸν τῶν ἰταλικῶν ἠλιθίζοντες &c.

<sup>14</sup> Ducange, Fam. Byzant. p. 186, 187.

<sup>15</sup> Nicetas in Manuel. l. vii. c. 2. Regnante enim (Manuele) . . . apud eum tantam Latinus populus repererat gratiam ut neglectis Græculis suis tanquam viris mollibus et effeminatis, . . . folis Latinis grandia committeret negotia . . . erga eos profusa liberalitate

abundabat . . . ex omni orbe ad eum tanquam ad benefactorem nobiles et ignobiles concurrabant. Willerm. Tyr. xvii. c. 10.

<sup>16</sup> The suspicions of the Greeks would have been confirmed, if they had seen the political epistles of Manuel to pope Alexander III. the enemy of his enemy Frederic I. in which the emperor declares his wish of uniting the Greeks and Latins as one flock under one shepherd, &c. (See Fleury, Hist. Eccles. tom. xv. p. 187, 213, 243.)

were exposed at Constantinople to the reproach of foreigners, heretics, and favourites; and this triple guilt was severely expiated in the tumult, which announced the return and elevation of Andronicus<sup>17</sup>. The people rose in arms; from the Asiatic shore the tyrant dispatched his troops and galleys to assist the national revenge; and the hopeless resistance of the strangers served only to justify the rage, and sharpen the daggers, of the assassins. Neither age, nor sex, nor the ties of friendship or kindred, could save the victims of national hatred, and avarice, and religious zeal: the Latins were slaughtered in their houses and in the streets; their quarter was reduced to ashes; the clergy was burnt in their churches, and the sick in their hospitals; and some estimate may be formed of the slain from the clemency which sold above four thousand Christians in perpetual slavery to the Turks. The priests and monks were the loudest and most active in the destruction of the schismatics; and they chaunted a thanksgiving to the Lord, when the head of a Roman cardinal, the pope's legate, was severed from his body, fastened to the tail of a dog, and dragged, with savage mockery, through the city. The more diligent of the strangers had retreated, on the first alarm, to their vessels, and escaped through the Hellespont from the scene of blood. In their flight, they burnt and ravaged two hundred miles of the sea-coast; inflicted a severe revenge on the guiltless subjects of the empire; marked the priests and monks as their peculiar enemies; and compensated, by the accumulation of plunder, the loss of their property and friends. On their return, they exposed to Italy and Europe the wealth and weakness, the perfidy and malice, of the Greeks, whose vices were painted as the genuine characters of heresy and schism. The scruples of the first crusaders had neglected the fairest opportunities of securing, by the possession of Constantinople, the way to the Holy Land: a domestic revolution in-

C H A P.
LX.

their massacre,
A. D. 1183.

<sup>17</sup> See the Greek and Latin narratives in Nicetas (in Alexio Comneno, c. 10.) and William of Tyre (l. xxii. c. 10, 11, 12, 13.): the first soft and concise, the second loud, copious, and tragical.

C H A P.
LX.

Reign and
character of Isaac Ange-lus,
A. D.
1135—1195,
Sept. 12.

vited, and almost compelled, the French and Venetians to achieve the conquest of the Roman empire of the East.

In the series of the Byzantine princes, I have exhibited the hypocrisy and ambition, the tyranny and fall, of Andronicus, the last male of the Comnenian family who reigned at Constantinople. The revolution, which cast him headlong from the throne, saved and exalted Isaac Angelus<sup>18</sup>, who descended by the females from the same Imperial dynasty. The successor of a second Nero might have found it an easy task to deserve the esteem and affection of his subjects: they sometimes had reason to regret the administration of Andronicus. The sound and vigorous mind of the tyrant was capable of discerning the connection between his own and the public interest; and while he was feared by all who could inspire him with fear, the unsuspected people, and the remote provinces, might bless the inexorable justice of their master. But his successor was vain and jealous of the supreme power, which he wanted courage and abilities to exercise; his vices were pernicious, his virtues (if he possessed any virtues) were useless, to mankind; and the Greeks, who imputed their calamities to his negligence, denied him the merit of any transient or accidental benefits of the times. Isaac slept on the throne, and was awakened only by the sound of pleasure: his vacant hours were amused by comedians and buffoons, and even to these buffoons the emperor was an object of contempt; his feasts and buildings exceeded the examples of royal luxury; the number of his eunuchs and domestics amounted to twenty thousand; and a daily sum of four thousand pounds of silver would swell to four millions sterling the annual expence of his household and table. His poverty was relieved by oppression; and the public discontent was inflamed by equal abuses in the collection, and the application, of the revenue. While the Greeks numbered the days of their fervitude, a flattering prophet, whom he rewarded with the dignity of patriarch, assured him of a long and victorious reign of thirty-two years; during which he should extend his sway to mount Libanus, and his conquests beyond the Euphrates. But his only step towards the accomplishment of the prediction, was a splendid and scandalous embassy to Saladin<sup>19</sup>, to demand the restitution of the holy sepulchre, and to propose an offensive and defensive league with the enemy of the Christian name. In these unworthy hands, of Isaac and his brother, the remains of the Greek empire crumbled into dust. The island of Cyprus, whose name excites the ideas of elegance and pleasure, was usurped by his namesake, a Comnenian prince: and by a strange concatenation of events, the sword of our English Richard bestowed that kingdom on the house of Lusignan, a rich compensation for the loss of Jerusalem.

<sup>18</sup> The history of the reign of Isaac Angelus is composed, in three books, by the senator Nicetas (p. 228—290.); and his offices of logothete, or principal secretary, and judge of the veil or palace, could not bribe the impartiality of the historian. He wrote, it is true, after the fall and death of his benefactor.

C H A P.
LX.

The honour of the monarchy, and the safety of the capital, were deeply wounded by the revolt of the Bulgarians and Walachians. Since the victory of the second Basil, they had supported, above an hundred and seventy years, the loose dominion of the Byzantine princes; but no effectual measures had been adopted to impose the yoke of laws and manners on these savage tribes. By the command of Isaac, their sole means of subsistence, their flocks and herds, were driven away, to contribute towards the pomp of the royal nuptials; and their fierce warriors were exasperated by the denial of equal rank and pay in the military service. Peter and Asan, two powerful chiefs, of the race of the ancient kings<sup>20</sup>, asserted their own rights and the national freedom: their dæmoniac impostors proclaimed to the crowd, that their glorious patron St. Demetrius had

Revolt of the Bulgarians,
A. D. 1186.

<sup>19</sup> See Bohadin, Vit. Saladin. p. 129—131. 226. vers. Schultens. The ambassador of Isaac was equally versed in the Greek, French, and Arabic languages; a rare instance in those times. His embassies were received with honour, dismissed without effect, and reported with scandal in the West.

<sup>20</sup> Ducange, Familie Dalmaticæ, p. 313, 319, 320. The original correspondence of the Bulgarian king and the Roman pontiff, is inscribed in the Gesta Innocent. III. c. 60—82. p. 515—525.

C H A P.
LX.

for ever deserted the cause of the Greeks; and the conflagration spread from the banks of the Danube to the hills of Macedonia and Thrace. After some faint efforts, Isaac Angelus and his brother acquiesced in their independence; and the Imperial troops were soon discouraged by the bones of their fellow-soldiers, that were scattered along the passes of mount Hæmus. By the arms and policy of John or Joannices, the second kingdom of Bulgaria was firmly established. The subtle Barbarian sent an embassy to Innocent the third, to acknowledge himself a genuine son of Rome in descent and religion<sup>21</sup>; and humbly received from the pope, the licence of coining money, the royal title, and a Latin archbishop or patriarch. The Vatican exulted in the spiritual conquest of Bulgaria, the first object of the schism; and if the Greeks could have preserved the prerogatives of the church, they would gladly have resigned the rights of the monarchy.

Usurpation
and character of Alexius Angelus,
A. D.
1195—1203,
April 8.

The Bulgarians were malicious enough to pray for the long life of Isaac Angelus, the surest pledge of their freedom and prosperity. Yet their chiefs could involve in the same indiscriminate contempt, the family and nation of the emperor. “In all the Greeks,” said Asan to his troops, “the same climate, and character, and education, will be productive of the same fruits. Behold my lance,” continued the warrior, “and the long streamers that float in the wind. They differ only in colour; they are formed of the same silk and fashioned by the same workman; nor has the stripe that is stained in purple, any superior price or value above its fellows<sup>22</sup>.” Several of these candidates for the purple successively by another wave from the Volga to the Danube. Possible, but strange!

<sup>21</sup> The pope acknowledges his pedigree, a nobili urbis Romæ profapiâ genitores tui originem traxerunt. This tradition, and the strong resemblance of the Latin and Walachian idioms, is explained by M. d’Anville (Etats de l’Europe, p. 258—262.). The Italian colonies of the Dacia of Trajan, were swept away by the tide of emigration from the Danube to the Volga, and brought back

<sup>22</sup> This parable is in the best savage style; but I wish the Walach had not introduced the classic name of Mysians, the experiment of the magnet or loadstone, and the passage of an old comic poet (Nicetas, in Alex. Comneno, l. i. p. 299, 300.).

rose and fell under the empire of Isaac: a general who had repelled the fleets of Sicily, was driven to revolt and ruin by the ingratitude of the prince; and his luxurious repose was disturbed by secret conspiracies and popular insurrections. The emperor was saved by accident, or the merit of his servants: he was at length oppressed by an ambitious brother, who, for the hope of a precarious diadem, forgot the obligations of nature, of loyalty, and of friendship<sup>23</sup>. While Isaac in the Thracian vallies pursued the idle and solitary pleasures of the chase, his brother, Alexius Angelus, was invested with the purple, by the unanimous suffrage of the camp: the capital and the clergy subscribed to their choice; and the vanity of the new sovereign rejected the name of his fathers, for the lofty and royal appellation of the Comnenian race. On the despicable character of Isaac, I have exhausted the language of contempt; and can only add, that in a reign of eight years, the baser Alexius<sup>24</sup> was supported by the masculine vices of his wife Euphrosyne. The first intelligence of his fall was conveyed to the late emperor by the hostile aspect and pursuit of the guards, no longer his own: he fled before them above fifty miles as far as Stagyra in Macedonia; but the fugitive, without an object or a follower, was arrested, brought back to Constantinople, deprived of his eyes, and confined in a lonesome tower, on a scanty allowance of bread and water. At the moment of the revolution, his son Alexius, whom he educated in the hope of empire, was twelve years of age. He was spared by the usurper, and reduced to attend his triumph both in peace and war; but as the army was encamped on the sea-shore, an Italian vessel facilitated the escape of the royal youth; and, in the disguise of a common sailor, he eluded the search of his enemies, passed the Hellespont, and found a secure refuge in the isle of Sicily. After

C H A P.
LX.

<sup>23</sup> The Latins aggravate the ingratitude of Alexius, by supposing that he had been released by his brother Isaac from Turkish captivity. This pathetic tale had doubtless been repeated at Venice and Zara: but I do not readily discover its grounds in the Greek historians.

<sup>24</sup> See the reign of Alexius Angelus, or Comnenus, in the three books of Nicetas, p. 291—352.

saluting

C H A P.
LX.

saluting the threshold of the apostles, and imploring the protection of pope Innocent the third, Alexius accepted the kind invitation of his sister Irene, the wife of Philip of Swabia, king of the Romans. But in his passage through Italy, he heard that the flower of Western chivalry was assembled at Venice for the deliverance of the Holy Land; and a ray of hope was kindled in his bosom, that their invincible swords might be employed in his father's restoration.

The fourth
crusade,
A. D. 1198.

About ten or twelve years after the loss of Jerusalem, the nobles of France were again summoned to the holy war by the voice of a third prophet, less extravagant, perhaps, than Peter the hermit, but far below St. Bernard in the merit of an orator and a statesman. An illiterate priest of the neighbourhood of Paris, Fulk of Neuilly<sup>25</sup>, forsook his parochial duty, to assume the more flattering character of a popular and itinerant missionary. The fame of his sanctity and miracles was spread over the land; he declaimed, with severity and vehemence, against the vices of the age; and his sermons, which he preached in the streets of Paris, converted the robbers, the usurers, the prostitutes, and even the doctors and scholars of the university. No sooner did Innocent the third ascend the chair of St. Peter, than he proclaimed in Italy, Germany, and France, the obligation of a new crusade<sup>26</sup>. The eloquent pontiff described the ruin of Jerusalem, the triumph of the Pagans, and the shame of Christendom: his liberality proposed the redemption of sins, a plenary indulgence to all who should serve in Palestine, either a year in person, or two years by a substitute<sup>27</sup>; and among his legates and orators who blew the sacred trumpet, Fulk of Neuilly was the

<sup>25</sup> See Fleury, Hist. Ecclésiast. tom. xvi. p. 26, &c. and Villehardouin, N° 1. with the observations of Ducange, which I always mean to quote with the original text.

<sup>26</sup> The contemporary life of pope Innocent III. published by Baluze and Muratori (Scriptores Rerum Italicarum, tom. iii. pars i. p. 486—568.), is most valuable for the important and original documents which are inserted in the text. The bull of the crusade may be read, c. 84, 85.

<sup>27</sup> Por-ce que cil pardon fut issi gran, si s'en esmeurent mult li cuers des genz, et mult s'en croifierent, porce que li pardons ere si gran. Villehardouin, N° 1. Our philosophers may refine on the causes of the crusades, but such were the genuine feelings of a French knight.

loudest and most successful. The situation of the principal monarchs was averſe to the pious ſummons. The emperor Frederic the ſecond was a child; and his kingdom of Germany was diſputed by the rival houſes of Brunſwick and Swabia, the memorable factions of the Guelphs and Ghibelines. Philip Auguſtus of France had performed, and could not be perſuaded to renew, the perilous vow; but as he was not leſs ambitious of praiſe than of power, he chearfully inſtituted a perpetual fund for the defence of the Holy Land. Richard of England was fatiated with the glory and miſfortunes of his firſt adventure, and he preſumed to deride the exhortations of Fulk of Neuilly, who was not aſhamed in the preſence of kings. “ You adviſe me,” ſaid Plantagenet, “ to diſmiſs my three daughters, pride, avarice, and incontinence: I bequeath them to the moſt deſerving; my pride to the knights-templars, my avarice to the monks of Citeaux, and my incontinence to the prelates.” But the preacher was heard and obeyed by the great vaffals, the princes of the ſecond order; and Theobald, or Thibaut, count of Champagne, was the foremoſt in the holy race. The valiant youth, at the age of twenty-two years, was encouraged by the domeſtic examples of his father, who marched in the ſecond cruſade, and of his elder brother, who had ended his days in Paleſtine with the title of king of Jeruſalem: two thouſand two hundred knights owed ſervice and homage to his peerage<sup>28</sup>: the nobles of Champagne excelled in all the exerciſes of war<sup>29</sup>; and, by his marriage with the heiſeſs of Navarre, Thibaut could draw a band of hardy Gaſcons from either ſide of the Pyrenæan mountains. His companion in arms was Louis, count of Blois and Chartres; like himſelf of regal lineage, for both the princes were nephews, at the

C H A P.
LX.

embraced by the barons of France.

<sup>28</sup> This number of fiefs (of which 1800 owed liege homage) was enrolled in the church of St. Stephen at Troyes, and attested A. D. 1213, by the maſhal and butler of Champagne (Ducange, Obſerv. p. 254.).

<sup>29</sup> Campania....militiæ privilegio ſingularius excellit....in tyrciniis....proluſione armorum, &c. Ducange, p. 249. from the old Chronicle of Jeruſalem, A. D. 1177—1199.

fame

C H A P.
LX.

same time, of the kings of France and England. In a crowd of prelates and barons, who imitated their zeal, I distinguish the birth and merit of Matthew of Montmorency; the famous Simon of Montfort, the scourge of the Albigeois; and a valiant noble, Jeffrey of Villehardouin<sup>30</sup>, marshal of Champagne<sup>31</sup>, who has condescended, in the rude idiom of his age and country<sup>32</sup>, to write or dictate<sup>33</sup> an original narrative of the councils and actions, in which he bore a memorable part. At the same time, Baldwin count of Flanders, who had married the sister of Thibaut, assumed the cross at Bruges, with his brother Henry and the principal knights and citizens of that rich and industrious province<sup>34</sup>. The vow which the chiefs had pronounced in churches, they ratified in tournaments: the operations of the war were debated in full and frequent assemblies; and it was resolved to seek the deliverance of Palestine in Egypt, a country, since Saladin's death, which was almost ruined by famine and civil war. But the fate of so many royal armies displayed the toils and perils of a land expedition; and, if the Flemings dwelt along the ocean, the French barons were destitute of ships and ignorant of navigation. They embraced the wise resolution of chusing six deputies or representatives, of whom Villehardouin was one, with <sup>30</sup> The name of Ville-hardouin, was taken from a village and castle in the diocese of Troyes, near the river Aube, between Bar and Arceis. The family was ancient and noble; the elder branch of our historian existed after the year 1400; the younger, which acquired the principality of Achaia, merged in the house of Savoy (Ducange, p. 235—245.).

<sup>31</sup> This office was held by his father and his descendants, but Ducange has not hunted it with his usual sagacity. I find that, in the year 1356, it was in the family of Conflans; but these provincial, have been long since eclipsed by the national, marshals of France.

<sup>32</sup> This language, of which I shall produce some specimens, is explained by Vigenere and Ducange in a version and glossary. The president des Broffes (Mechanisme des Langues, tom. ii. p. 83.) gives it as the example of a language which has ceased to be French, and is understood only by grammarians.

<sup>33</sup> His age, and his own expression, moi qui ceste oeuvre dicta (N<sup>o</sup> 62, &c.), may justify the suspicion (more probable than Mr. Wood's on Homer), that he could neither read nor write. Yet Champagne may boast of the two first historians, the noble authors of French prose, Villehardouin and Joinville.

<sup>34</sup> The crusade and reigns of the counts of Flanders, Baldwin and his brother Henry, are the subject of a particular history by the Jesuit Doutremens (Constantinopolis Belgica; Turnaci, 1638, in 4<sup>to</sup>), which I have only seen with the eyes of Ducange.

a discretionary trust to direct the motions, and to pledge the faith, of the whole confederacy. The maritime states of Italy were alone possessed of the means of transporting the holy warriors with their arms and horses; and the six deputies proceeded to Venice to solicit, on motives of piety or interest, the aid of that powerful republic.

In the invasion of Italy by Attila, I have mentioned<sup>35</sup> the flight of the Venetians from the fallen cities of the continent, and their obscure shelter in the chain of islands that line the extremity of the Adriatic gulf. In the midst of the waters, free, indigent, laborious, and inaccessible, they gradually coalesced into a republic: the first foundations of Venice were laid in the island of Rialto; and the annual election of the twelve tribunes was superseded by the permanent office of a duke or doge. On the verge of the two empires the Venetians exult in the belief of primitive and perpetual independence<sup>36</sup>. Against the Latins, their antique freedom has been asserted by the sword, and may be justified by the pen. Charlemagne himself resigned all claims of sovereignty to the islands of the Adriatic gulf; his son Pepin was repulsed in the attacks of the lagunas or canals, too deep for the cavalry, and too shallow for the vessels; and in every age, under the German Cæsars, the lands of the republic have been clearly distinguished from the kingdom of Italy. But the inhabitants of Venice were considered by themselves, by strangers, and by their sovereigns, as an inalienable portion of the Greek empire<sup>37</sup>; in the ninth and tenth centuries, the proofs of

State of the Venetians,
A. D.
697—1200.

<sup>35</sup> History, &c. vol. iii. p. 420—422.

<sup>36</sup> The foundation and independence of Venice, and Pepin's invasion, are discussed by Pagi (Critica, tom. iii. A. D. 810, N<sup>o</sup> 4, &c.) and Beretti (Dissert. Chorograph. Italicæ mediæ ævi, in Muratori, Script. tom. x. p. 153.). The two critics have a slight bias, the Frenchman adverse, the Italian favourable, to the republic.

<sup>37</sup> When the son of Charlemagne asserted his right of sovereignty, he was answered by the loyal Venetians, ἐπι ἡμῶν δεῦλον βασιλευμεν ἐμεῖς

τε Παρσιαν βασιλῆα; (Constantin. Porphyrogenit. de Administrat. Imperii, pars ii. c. 28. p. 85.); and the report of the ixth, establishes the fact of the xth century, which is confirmed by the embassy of Liutprand of Cremona. The annual tribute, which the emperor allows them to pay to the king of Italy, alleviates, by doubling, their servitude; but the hateful word δουλοι must be translated, as in the charter of 827 (Laugier, Hist. de Venise, tom. i. p. 67, &c.), by the softer appellation of subditi, or fideles.

C H A P.
LX.

their subjection are numerous and unquestionable; and the vain titles, the servile honours, of the Byzantine court, so ambitiously solicited by their dukes, would have degraded the magistrates of a free people. But the bands of this dependence, which was never absolute or rigid, were imperceptibly relaxed by the ambition of Venice and the weakness of Constantinople. Obedience was softened into respect, privilege ripened into prerogative, and the freedom of domestic government was fortified by the independence of foreign dominion. The maritime cities of Istria and Dalmatia bowed to the sovereigns of the Adriatic; and when they armed against the Normans in the cause of Alexius, the emperor applied, not to the duty of his subjects, but to the gratitude and generosity of his faithful allies. The sea was their patrimony<sup>38</sup>: the western parts of the Mediterranean, from Tuscany to Gibraltar, were indeed abandoned to their rivals of Pisa and Genoa; but the Venetians acquired an early and lucrative share of the commerce of Greece and Egypt. Their riches increased with the increasing demand of Europe: their manufactures of silk and glass, perhaps the institution of their bank, are of high antiquity; and they enjoyed the fruits of their industry in the magnificence of public and private life. To assert her flag, to avenge her injuries, to protect the freedom of navigation, the republic could launch and man a fleet of an hundred galleys; and the Greeks, the Saracens, and the Normans, were encountered by her naval arms. The Franks of Syria were assisted by the Venetians in the reduction of the sea-coast; but their zeal was neither blind nor disinterested; and in the conquest of Tyre, they shared the sovereignty of a city, the first seat of the commerce of the world. The policy of Venice was marked by the avarice of a trading, and the insolence of a maritime, power; yet her ambition was prudent; nor did she often forget that if armed galleys were the effect and safeguard, merchant vessels were the cause and supply, of her greatness. In her religion, she avoided the schism of the Greeks, without yielding a servile obedience to the Roman pontiff; and a free intercourse with the infidels of every clime appears to have allayed betimes the fever of superstition. Her primitive government was a loose mixture of democracy and monarchy: the doge was elected by the votes of the general assembly; as long as he was popular and successful, he reigned with the pomp and authority of a prince; but in the frequent revolutions of the state, he was deposed, or banished, or slain, by the justice or injustice of the multitude. The twelfth century produced the first rudiments of the wise and jealous aristocracy, which has reduced the doge to a pageant and the people to a cypher<sup>39</sup>.

<sup>38</sup> See the xxvth and xxxth dissertations of the Antiquitates medii Ævi of Muratori. From Anderson's History of Commerce, I understand that the Venetians did not trade to England before the year 1323. The most flourishing state of their wealth and commerce in the beginning of the xvth century, is agreeably described by the Abbé Dubos (Hist. de la Ligue de Cambray, tom. ii. p. 443—480.).

When the six ambassadors of the French pilgrims arrived at Venice, they were hospitably entertained in the palace of St. Mark, by the reigning duke: his name was Henry Dandolo<sup>40</sup>; and he shone in the last period of human life as one of the most illustrious characters of the times. Under the weight of years, and after the loss of his eyes<sup>41</sup>, Dandolo retained a sound understanding and a manly

Alliance of the French and Venetians,
A. D. 1201.

<sup>39</sup> The Venetians have been slow in writing and publishing their history. Their most ancient monuments are, 1. The rude Chronicle (perhaps) of John Sagorninus (Venezia, 1765, in octavo), which represents the state and manners of Venice in the year 1008. 2. The larger history of the doge (1342—1354) Andrew Dandolo, published for the first time in the xiith tom. of Muratori, A. D. 1728. The History of Venice by the Abbé Laugier (Paris, 1728), is a work of some merit, which I have chiefly used for the constitutional part.

<sup>40</sup> Henry Dandolo was eighty-four at his election (A. D. 1192), and ninety-seven at his death (A. D. 1205). See the Observations of Ducange sur Villehardouin, N<sup>o</sup> 204.

But this extraordinary longevity is not observed by the original writers, nor does there exist another example of an hero near an hundred years of age. Theophrastus might afford an instance of a writer of ninety-nine; but instead of προμνηστια (Proem. ad Character.), I am much inclined to read εβδημηκοστια, with his last editor Fischer, and the first thoughts of Casaubon. It is scarcely possible that the powers of the mind and body should support themselves till such a period of life.

<sup>41</sup> The modern Venetians (Laugier, tom. ii. p. 119.) accuse the emperor Manuel: but the calumny is refuted by Villehardouin and the older writers, who suppose that Dandolo lost his eyes by a wound (N<sup>o</sup> 34. and Ducange).

C H A P.
LX.

courage; the spirit of an hero, ambitious to signalize his reign by some memorable exploits, and the wisdom of a patriot, anxious to build his fame on the glory and advantage of his country. He praised the bold enthusiasm and liberal confidence of the barons and their deputies; in such a cause, and with such associates, he should aspire, were he a private man, to terminate his life; but he was the servant of the republic, and some delay was requisite to consult, on this arduous business, the judgment of his colleagues. The proposal of the French was first debated by the six sages who had been recently appointed to control the administration of the doge: it was next disclosed to the forty members of the council of state; and finally communicated to the legislative assembly of four hundred and fifty representatives, who were annually chosen in the six quarters of the city. In peace and war, the doge was still the chief of the republic; his legal authority was supported by the personal reputation of Dandolo: his arguments of public interest were balanced and approved; and he was authorized to inform the ambassadors of the following conditions of the treaty<sup>42</sup>. It was proposed that the crusaders should assemble at Venice, on the feast of St. John of the ensuing year: that flat-bottomed vessels should be prepared for four thousand five hundred horses, and nine thousand mules, with a number of ships sufficient for the embarkation of four thousand five hundred knights, and twenty thousand foot: that during a term of nine months they should be supplied with provisions, and transported to whatsoever coast the service of God and Christendom should require; and that the republic should join the armament with a squadron of fifty galleys. It was required that the pilgrims should pay, before their departure, a sum of eighty-five thousand marks of silver; and that all conquests, by sea and land, should be equally divided between the confederates. The terms were hard; but the emergency was pressing, and the French barons were not less profuse of money than of blood. A general assembly was convened to ratify the treaty: the stately chapel and place of St. Mark were filled with ten thousand citizens; and the noble deputies were taught a new lesson of humbling themselves before the majesty of the people. "Illustrious Venetians," said the marshal of Champagne, "we are sent by the greatest and most powerful barons of France, to implore the aid of the masters of the sea for the deliverance of Jerusalem. They have enjoined us to fall prostrate at your feet; nor will we rise from the ground, till you have promised to avenge with us the injuries of Christ." The eloquence of their words and tears<sup>43</sup>, their martial aspect, and suppliant attitude, were applauded by an universal shout; as it were, says Jeffrey, by the sound of an earthquake. The venerable doge ascended the pulpit to urge their request by those motives of honour and virtue, which alone can be offered to a popular assembly: the treaty was transcribed on parchment; attested with oaths and seals, mutually accepted by the weeping and joyful representatives of France and Venice; and dispatched to Rome for the approbation of pope Innocent the third. Two thousand marks were borrowed of the merchants for the first expences of the armament. Of the six deputies, two repassed the Alps to announce their success, while their four companions made a fruitless trial of the zeal and emulation of the republics of Genoa and Pisa.

<sup>42</sup> See the original treaty in the Chronicle of Andrew Dandolo, p. 323—326.

The execution of the treaty was still opposed by unforeseen difficulties and delays. The marshal, on his return to Troyes, was embraced and approved by Thibaut count of Champagne, who had been unanimously chosen general of the confederates. But the health of that valiant youth already declined, and soon became

C H A P.
LX.

Assembly and departure of the crusade
from Venice,
A. D. 1202,
October 8.

<sup>43</sup> A reader of Villehardouin must observe the frequent tears of the marshal and his brother knights. Sachez que la ot mainte lerne plorée de pitié (N<sup>o</sup> 17.); mult plorant (ibid.) 2. mainte lerne plorée (N<sup>o</sup> 31.); si

orent mult pitié et plerent mult durement (N<sup>o</sup> 60.); i ot maint lerne plorée de pitié (N<sup>o</sup> 202.). They weep on every occasion of grief, joy, or devotion.

hopeless;

C H A P.
LX.

hopeless; and he deplored the untimely fate, which condemned him to expire, not in a field of battle, but on a bed of sickness. To his brave and numerous vassals, the dying prince distributed his treasures: they swore in his presence to accomplish his vow and their own; but some there were, says the marshal, who accepted his gifts and forfeited their word. The more resolute champions of the cross held a parliament at Soissons for the election of a new general; but such was the incapacity, or jealousy, or reluctance, of the princes of France, that none could be found both able and willing to assume the conduct of the enterprise. They acquiesced in the choice of a stranger, of Boniface marquis of Montferrat, descended of a race of heroes, and himself of conspicuous fame in the wars and negotiations of the times<sup>44</sup>; nor could the piety or ambition of the Italian chief decline this honourable invitation. After visiting the French court, where he was received as a friend and kinsman, the marquis, in the church of Soissons, was invested with the cross of a pilgrim and the staff of a general; and immediately repassed the Alps, to prepare for the distant expedition of the East. About the festival of the Pentecost he displayed his banner, and marched towards Venice at the head of the Italians: he was preceded or followed by the counts of Flanders and Blois, and the most respectable barons of France; and their numbers were swelled by the pilgrims of Germany<sup>45</sup>, whose object and motives were similar to their own. The Venetians had fulfilled, and even surpassed, their engagements: stables were constructed for the horses, and barracks for the troops; the magazines were abundantly replenished with forage and provisions; and the fleet of transports, ships, and galleys, was ready

<sup>44</sup> By a victory (A. D. 1191) over the citizens of Aſſi, by a crusade to Palestine, and by an embassy from the pope to the German princes (Muratori, Annali d'Italia, tom. x. p. 163. 202.).

<sup>45</sup> See the crusade of the Germans in the

Historia C. P. of Gunther (Canisii Antiq. Lect. tom. iv. p. v—viii.), who celebrates the pilgrimage of his abbot Martin, one of the preaching rivals of Fulk of Neuilly. His monastery, of the Cistercian order, was situated in the diocese of Basil.

C H A P.
LX.

to hoist sail, as soon as the republic had received the price of the freight and armament. But that price far exceeded the wealth of the crusaders who were assembled at Venice. The Flemings, whose obedience to their count was voluntary and precarious, had embarked in their vessels for the long navigation of the ocean and Mediterranean; and many of the French and Italians had preferred a cheaper and more convenient passage from Marseilles and Apulia to the Holy Land. Each pilgrim might complain, that after he had furnished his own contribution he was made responsible for the deficiency of his absent brethren: the gold and silver plate of the chiefs, which they freely delivered to the treasury of St. Mark, was a generous but inadequate sacrifice; and after all their efforts, thirty-four thousand marks were still wanting to complete the stipulated sum. The obstacle was removed by the policy and patriotism of the doge, who proposed to the barons, that if they would join their arms in reducing some revolted cities of Dalmatia, he would expose his person in the holy war, and obtain from the republic a long indulgence, till some wealthy conquest should afford the means of satisfying the debt. After much scruple and hesitation they chose rather to accept the offer than to relinquish the enterprise; and the first hostilities of the fleet and army were directed against Zara<sup>46</sup>, a strong city of the Slavonian coast, which had renounced its allegiance to Venice, and implored the protection of the king of Hungary<sup>47</sup>. The crusaders burst the chain or boom of the harbour; landed their horses, troops, and military engines; and compelled the

Siege of Zara,
Nov. 10.

<sup>46</sup> Jadera, now Zara, was a Roman colony, which acknowledged Augustus for its parent. It is now only two miles round, and contains five or six thousand inhabitants; but the fortifications are strong, and it is joined to the main land by a bridge. See the travels of the two companions, Spon and Wheeler (Voyage de Dalmatie, de Grece, &c. tom. i. p. 64—70. Journey into Greece, p. 8—14.); the last of whom, by mistaking

Sebertia for Sebertii, values an arch with statues and columns at twelve pounds. If, in his time, there were no trees near Zara, the cherry-trees were not yet planted which produce our incomparable marasquin.

<sup>47</sup> Katona (Hist. Critica Reg. Hungariæ, Stirpis Arpad. tom. iv. p. 536—558.) collects all the facts and testimonies most adverse to the conquerors of Zara.

inhabitants,

C H A P.
LX.

inhabitants, after a defence of five days, to surrender at discretion; their lives were spared, but the revolt was punished by the pillage of their houses and the demolition of their walls. The season was far advanced; the French and Venetians resolved to pass the winter in a secure harbour and plentiful country; but their repose was disturbed by national and tumultuous quarrels of the soldiers and mariners. The conquest of Zara had scattered the seeds of discord and scandal: the arms of the allies had been stained in their outset with the blood, not of infidels, but of Christians: the king of Hungary and his new subjects were themselves enlisted under the banner of the cross; and the scruples of the devout, were magnified by the fear or lassitude of the reluctant, pilgrims. The pope had excommunicated the false crusaders who had pillaged and massacred their brethren<sup>48</sup>, and only the marquis Boniface and Simon of Montfort escaped these spiritual thunders; the one by his absence from the siege, the other by his final departure from the camp. Innocent might absolve the simple and submissive penitents of France; but he was provoked by the stubborn reason of the Venetians, who refused to confess their guilt, to accept their pardon, or to allow, in their temporal concerns, the interposition of a priest.

Alliance of
the crusaders
with the Greek prince, the young Alexius.

The assembly of such formidable powers by sea and land, had revived the hopes of young<sup>49</sup> Alexius; and, both at Venice and Zara, he solicited the arms of the crusaders, for his own restoration and his father's<sup>50</sup> deliverance. The royal youth was recommended by Philip king of Germany: his prayers and presence excited the

<sup>48</sup> See the whole transaction, and the sentiments of the pope, in the Epistles of Innocent III. Gesta, c. 86, 87, 88.

<sup>49</sup> A modern reader is surprised to hear of the valet de Constantinople, as applied to young Alexius, on account of his youth, like the infants of Spain, and the nobilissimus puer of the Romans. The pages and valets of the knights were as noble as themselves compassion of the camp; and his cause was embraced and pleaded by the marquis of Montferrat and the doge of Venice. A double alliance, and the dignity of Cæsar, had connected with the Imperial family the two elder brothers of Boniface<sup>51</sup>: he expected to derive a kingdom from the important service; and the more generous ambition of Dandolo was eager to secure the inestimable benefits of trade and dominion that might accrue to his country<sup>52</sup>. Their influence procured a favourable audience for the ambassadors of Alexius; and if the magnitude of his offers excited some suspicion, the motives and rewards which he displayed might justify the delay and diversion of those forces which had been consecrated to the deliverance of Jerusalem. He promised, in his own and his father's name, that as soon as they should be seated on the throne of Constantinople, they would terminate the long schism of the Greeks, and submit themselves and their people to the lawful supremacy of the Roman church. He engaged to recompense the labours and merits of the crusaders, by the immediate payment of two hundred thousand marks of silver; to accompany them in person to Egypt; or, if it should be judged more advantageous, to maintain, during a year, ten thousand men, and, during his life, five hundred knights, for the service of the Holy Land. These tempting conditions were accepted by the republic of Venice; and the eloquence of the doge and marquis persuaded the counts of Flanders, Blois, and St. Pol, with eight barons of France, to join in the glorious enterprise. A treaty of offensive and defensive alliance was confirmed by their oaths and seals; and each individual, according to his situation and character, was swayed by the hope of public or private advantage;

(Villehardouin and Ducange, N<sup>o</sup> 36.).

<sup>50</sup> The emperor Isaac is styled by Villehardouin, Surfac (N<sup>o</sup> 35, &c.), which may be derived from the French Sire, or the Greek Κυρ (κυριος) melted into his proper name; the farther corruptions of Turfac and Conserac will instruct us what licence may have been used in the old dynasties of Assyria and Egypt.

C H A P.
LX.

<sup>51</sup> Reinier and Conrad; the former married Maria, daughter of the emperor Manuel Comnenus; the latter was the husband of Theodora Angela, sister of the emperors Isaac and Alexius. Conrad abandoned the Greek court and princess for the glory of defending Tyre against Saladin (Ducange, Fam. Byzant. p. 187. 203.).

<sup>52</sup> Nicetas (in Alexio Comneno, l. iii. c. 9.) accuses the doge and Venetians as the first authors of the war against Constantinople, and considers only as a κρυφα ὑπερ κρυφατι, the arrival and shameful offers of the royal exile.

C H A P.
LX.

by the honour of restoring an exiled monarch; or by the sincere and probable opinion, that their efforts in Palestine would be fruitless and unavailing, and that the acquisition of Constantinople must precede and prepare the recovery of Jerusalem. But they were the chiefs or equals of a valiant band of freemen and volunteers, who thought and acted for themselves: the soldiers and clergy were divided; and, if a large majority subscribed to the alliance, the numbers and arguments of the dissidents were strong and respectable<sup>53</sup>. The boldest hearts were appalled by the report of the naval power and impregnable strength of Constantinople; and their apprehensions were disguised to the world, and perhaps to themselves, by the more decent objections of religion and duty. They alleged the sanctity of a vow, which had drawn them from their families and homes to the rescue of the holy sepulchre; nor should the dark and crooked counsels of human policy divert them from a pursuit, the event of which was in the hands of the Almighty. Their first offence, the attack of Zara, had been severely punished by the reproach of their conscience and the censures of the pope; nor would they again imbrue their hands in the blood of their fellow-Christians. The apostle of Rome had pronounced; nor would they usurp the right of avenging with the sword the schism of the Greeks and the doubtful usurpation of the Byzantine monarch. On these principles or pretences, many pilgrims, the most distinguished for their valour and piety, withdrew from the camp; and their retreat was less pernicious than the open or secret opposition of a discontented party, that laboured, on every occasion, to separate the army and disappoint the enterprise.

Voyage from Zara to Constantinople,
A. D. 1203,
April 7—
June 24.

Notwithstanding this defection, the departure of the fleet and army was vigorously pressed by the Venetians; whose zeal for the service of the royal youth concealed a just resentment to his nation

<sup>53</sup> Villehardouin and Gunther represent the sentiments of the two parties. The abbot Martin left the army at Zara, proceeded to Palestine, was sent ambassador to Constantinople, and became a reluctant witness of the second siege.

and family. They were mortified by the recent preference which had been given to Pisa the rival of their trade; they had a long arrear of debt and injury to liquidate with the Byzantine court; and Dandolo might not discourage the popular tale, that he had been deprived of his eyes by the emperor Manuel, who perfidiously violated the sanctity of an ambassador. A similar armament, for ages, had not rode the Adriatic: it was composed of one hundred and twenty flat-bottomed vessels or palanders for the horses; two hundred and forty transports filled with men and arms; seventy store-ships laden with provisions; and fifty stout gallies, well prepared for the encounter of an enemy<sup>54</sup>. While the wind was favourable, the sky serene, and the water smooth, every eye was fixed with wonder and delight on the scene of military and naval pomp which overspread the sea. The shields of the knights and squires, at once an ornament and a defence, were arranged on either side of the ships; the banners of the nations and families were displayed from the stern; our modern artillery was supplied by three hundred engines for casting stones and darts: the fatigues of the way were cheered with the sound of music; and the spirits of the adventurers were raised by the mutual assurance, that forty thousand christian heroes were equal to the conquest of the world<sup>55</sup>. In the navigation<sup>56</sup> from Venice and Zara, the fleet was successfully steered by the skill and experience of the Venetian pilots: at Durazzo, the confederates first landed on the territories of the Greek empire: the isle of Corfu afforded a station and repose; they doubled without accident the perilous cape of Malea, the southern point of Peloponnesus or the

<sup>54</sup> The birth and dignity of Andrew Dandolo gave him the motive and the means of searching in the archives of Venice the memorable story of his ancestor. His brevity seems to accuse the copious and more recent narratives of Sanudo (in Muratori, Script. Rerum Italicarum, tom. xxii.), Blondus, Sabellicus, and Rhamnusius.

<sup>55</sup> Villehardouin, N<sup>o</sup> 62. His feelings and expressions are original; he often weeps, but he rejoices in the glories and perils of war with a spirit unknown to a sedentary writer.

<sup>56</sup> In this voyage, almost all the geographical names are corrupted by the Latins. The modern appellation of Chalcis, and all Eubœa, is derived from its Euripus, Eurio, Negri-po, Negropont, which dishonours our maps (d'Anville, Geographie Ancienne, tom. i. p. 263.).

C H A P.
LX.

Morea; made a descent in the islands of Negropont and Andros; and cast anchor at Abydus on the Asiatic side of the Hellespont. These preludes of conquest were easy and bloodless; the Greeks of the provinces, without patriotism or courage, were crushed by an irresistible force; the presence of the lawful heir might justify their obedience; and it was rewarded by the modesty and discipline of the Latins. As they penetrated through the Hellespont, the magnitude of their navy was compressed in a narrow channel; and the face of the waters was darkened with innumerable sails. They again expanded in the basin of the Propontis, and traversed that placid sea, till they approached the European shore, at the abbey of St. Stephen, three leagues to the west of Constantinople. The prudent doge dissuaded them from dispersing themselves in a populous and hostile land; and, as their stock of provisions was reduced, it was resolved, in the season of harvest, to replenish their storeships in the fertile islands of the Propontis. With this resolution, they directed their course; but a strong gale, and their own impatience, drove them to the eastward; and so near did they run to the shore and the city, that some volleys of stones and darts were exchanged between the ships and the rampart. As they passed along, they gazed with admiration on the capital of the East, or, as it should seem, of the earth; rising from her seven hills, and towering over the continents of Europe and Asia. The swelling domes and lofty spires of five hundred palaces and churches, were gilded by the sun and reflected in the waters; the walls were crowded with soldiers and spectators, whose numbers they beheld, of whose temper they were ignorant; and each heart was chilled by the reflection, that, since the beginning of the world, such an enterprise had never been undertaken by such a handful of warriors. But the momentary apprehension was dispelled by hope and valour; and every man, says the marshal of Champagne, glanced his eye on the sword or lance lance which he must speedily use in the glorious conflict<sup>57</sup>. The Latins cast anchor before Chalcedon; the mariners only were left in the vessels; the soldiers, horses, and arms, were safely landed; and, in the luxury of an Imperial palace, the barons tasted the first fruits of their success. On the third day, the fleet and army moved towards Scutari, the Asiatic suburb of Constantinople; a detachment of five hundred Greek horse was surpris'd and defeated by four-score French knights; and in a halt of nine days, the camp was plentifully supplied with forage and provisions.

C H A P.
LX.

In relating the invasion of a great empire, it may seem strange that I have not described the obstacles which should have checked the progress of the strangers. The Greeks, in truth, were an unwarlike people; but they were rich, industrious, and subject to the will of a single man: had that man been capable of fear, when his enemies were at a distance, or of courage, when they approached his person. The first rumour of his nephew's alliance with the French and Venetians was despis'd by the usurper Alexius; his flatterers persuaded him, that in this contempt he was bold and sincere; and each evening in the close of the banquet, he thrice discomfited the Barbarians of the West. These Barbarians had been justly terrified by the report of his naval power; and the sixteen hundred fishing-boats of Constantinople<sup>58</sup> could have manned a fleet, to sink them in the Adriatic, or stop their entrance in the mouth of the Hellespont. But all force may be annihilated by the negligence of the prince and the venality of his ministers. The great duke, or admiral, made a scandalous, almost a public, auction of the sails, the masts, and the rigging: the royal forests were reserved for the more important purpose of the chase; and the trees, says Nicetas, were

Fruitless negotiation of the emperor

<sup>57</sup> Et sachiez que il ne ot si hardi cui le cuer ne fremist (c. 67.) . . . . Chascuns regardoit ses armes . . . . que par tems en aront mestier (c. 68.). Such is the honesty of courage.

piscatorum abundare, quam illos in toto navigio. Habebat enim mille et sexcentas piscatorias naves. . . . Bellicas autem sive mercatorias habebant infinite multitudinis et portam tutissimum. Gunther, Hist. C. P. c. 8. p. 10.

<sup>58</sup> Eandem urbem plus in solis navibus

C H A P.
LX.

guarded by the eunuchs, like the groves of religious worship<sup>59</sup>. From his dream of pride, Alexius was awakened by the siege of Zara and the rapid advances of the Latins; as soon as he saw the danger was real, he thought it inevitable; and his vain presumption was lost in abject dependency and despair. He suffered these contemptible Barbarians to pitch their camp in the sight of the palace; and his apprehensions were thinly disguised by the pomp and menace of a suppliant embassy. The sovereign of the Romans was astonished (his ambassadors were instructed to say) at the hostile appearance of the strangers. If these pilgrims were sincere in their vow for the deliverance of Jerusalem, his voice must applaud, and his treasures should assist, their pious design; but should they dare to invade the sanctuary of empire, their numbers, were they ten times more considerable, should not protect them from his just resentment. The answer of the doge and barons was simple and unanimous. "In the cause of honour and justice," they said, "we despise the usurper of Greece, his threats, and his offers. Our friendship and his allegiance are due to the lawful heir, to the young prince who is seated among us, and to his father, the emperor Isaac, who has been deprived of his sceptre, his freedom, and his eyes, by the crime of an ungrateful brother. Let that brother confess his guilt, and implore forgiveness, and we ourselves will intercede, that he may be permitted to live in affluence and security. But let him not insult us by a second message: our reply will be made in arms, in the palace of Constantinople."

Passage of the Bosphorus,
July 6.

On the tenth day of their encampment at Scutari, the crusaders prepared themselves, as soldiers and as catholics, for the passage of the Bosphorus. Perilous indeed was the adventure; the stream was broad and rapid; in a calm the current of the Euxine might drive down the liquid and unextinguishable fires of the Greeks; and the opposite shores of Europe were defended by seventy thousand horse and foot in formidable array. On this memorable day, which happened to be bright and pleasant, the Latins were distributed in six battles or divisions; the first, or vanguard, was led by the count of Flanders, one of the most powerful of the Christian princes in the skill and number of his cross-bows. The four successive battles of the French were commanded by his brother Henry, the counts of St. Pol and Blois, and Matthew of Montmorency, the last of whom was honoured by the voluntary service of the marshal and nobles of Champagne. The sixth division, the rear-guard and reserve of the army, was conducted by the marquis of Montferrat, at the head of the Germans and Lombards. The chargers, saddled, with their long caparisons dragging on the ground, were embarked in the flat palanders<sup>60</sup>; and the knights stood by the side of their horses, in complete armour, their helmets laced, and their lances in their hands. Their numerous train of serjeants<sup>61</sup> and archers occupied the transports; and each transport was towed by the strength and swiftness of a galley. The six divisions traversed the Bosphorus, without encountering an enemy or an obstacle; to land the foremost was the wish, to conquer or die was the resolution, of every division and of every soldier. Jealous of the pre-eminence of danger, the knights in their heavy armour leaped into the sea, when it rose as high as their girdle; the serjeants and archers were animated by their valour; and the squires, letting down the draw-bridges of the palanders, led the horses to the shore. Before the squadrons could mount, and form, and couch their lances, the seventy thousand Greeks had

<sup>59</sup> Καθ' ἑσπέρα ἰσὺν ἀδελφῶν, ἵππων δὲ καὶ βελούτων παραδόντων ἐφ' ἡδύτο τεταῖον. Nicetas in Alex. Comneno, l. iii. c. 9. p. 348.

C II A P.
LX.

<sup>60</sup> From the version of Vignere I adopt the well-sounding word palander, which is still used, I believe, in the Mediterranean. But had I written in French, I should have preferred the original and expressive denomination of veffiers or huisseirs, from the buis, or door, which was let down as a draw-bridge; but which, at sea, was closed into the side of the ship (see Ducange au Villehardouin, N° 14. and Join-ville, p. 27, 28. edit. du Louvre).

<sup>61</sup> To avoid the vague expressions of followers, &c. I use, after Villehardouin, the word serjeants for all horsemen who were not knights. There were serjeants at arms, and serjeants at law; and if we visit the parade and Westminster-hall, we may observe the strange result of the distinction (Ducange, Glossar. Latin. Serjeantes, &c. tom. vi. p. 226—231.)

vanished

C H A P.
LX.

vanished from their sight; the timid Alexius gave the example to his troops; and it was only by the plunder of his rich pavillions that the Latins were informed that they had fought against an emperor. In the first consternation of the flying enemy, they resolved by a double attack to open the entrance of the harbour. The tower of Galata<sup>62</sup>, in the suburb of Pera, was attacked and stormed by the French, while the Venetians assumed the more difficult task of forcing the boom or chain that was stretched from that tower to the Byzantine shore. After some fruitless attempts, their intrepid perseverance prevailed: twenty ships of war, the relics of the Grecian navy, were either sunk or taken: the enormous and massy links of iron were cut asunder by the shears, or broken by the weight, of the galleys<sup>63</sup>; and the Venetian fleet, safe and triumphant, rode at anchor in the port of Constantinople. By these daring achievements, a remnant of twenty thousand Latins solicited the licence of besieging a capital which contained above four hundred thousand inhabitants<sup>64</sup>, able, though not willing, to bear arms in the defence of their country. Such an account would indeed suppose a population of near two millions; but whatever abatement may be required in the numbers of the Greeks, the belief of those numbers will equally exalt the fearless spirit of their assailants.

<sup>62</sup> It is needless to observe, that on the subject of Galata, the chain, &c. Ducange is accurate and full. Consult likewise the proper chapters of the C. P. Christiana of the same author. The inhabitants of Galata were so vain and ignorant, that they applied to themselves St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians.

<sup>63</sup> The vessel that broke the chain was named the Eagle, Aquila (Dandel. Chronicon. p. 322.), which Blondus (de Gestis Venet.) has changed into Aquilo the north-wind. Ducange, Observations, N° 83. maintains the latter reading; but he had not seen the respectable text of Dandolo, nor did he enough consider the topography of the harbour. The south-east would have been a more effectual wind.

<sup>64</sup> Quatre cens mil homes ou plus (Villehardouin, N° 134.), must be understood of men of a military age. Le Beau (Hist. du Bas Empire, tom. xx. p. 417.) allows Constantinople a million of inhabitants, of whom 60,000 horse, and an infinite number of foot soldiers. In its present decay, the capital of the Ottoman empire may contain 400,000 souls (Bell's Travels, vol. ii. p. 401, 402.); but as the Turks keep no registers, and as circumstances are fallacious, it is impossible to ascertain (Niebuhr, Voyage en Arabie, tom. i. p. 18, 19.) the real populousness of their cities.

In the choice of the attack, the French and Venetians were divided by their habits of life and warfare. The former affirmed with truth, that Constantinople was most accessible on the side of the sea and the harbour. The latter might assert with honour, that they had long enough trusted their lives and fortunes to a frail bark and a precarious element, and loudly demanded a trial of knighthood, a firm ground, and a close onset, either on foot or horseback. After a prudent compromise, of employing the two nations by sea and land, in the service best suited to their character, the fleet covering the army, they both proceeded from the entrance to the extremity of the harbour: the stone bridge of the river was hastily repaired; and the six battles of the French formed their encampment against the front of the capital, the basis of the triangle which runs about four miles from the port to the Propontis<sup>65</sup>. On the edge of a broad ditch, at the foot of a lofty rampart, they had leisure to contemplate the difficulties of their enterprise. The gates to the right and left of their narrow camp poured forth frequent sallies of cavalry and light-infantry, which cut off their stragglers, swept the country of provisions, sounded the alarm five or six times in the course of each day, and compelled them to plant a pallisade, and sink an entrenchment, for their immediate safety. In the supplies and convoys the Venetians had been too sparing, or the Franks too voracious: the usual complaints of hunger and scarcity were heard, and perhaps felt: their stock of flour would be exhausted in three weeks; and their disgust of salt meat tempted them to taste the flesh of their horses. The trembling usurper was supported by Theodore Lascaris, his son-in-law, a valiant youth, who aspired to save and to rule his country; the Greeks, regardless of that country, were awakened to the defence of their religion; but their firmest hope was in the strength and

C H A P.
LX.

First siege and conquest of Constantinople by the Latins,
July 7—18.

<sup>65</sup> On the most correct plans of Constantinople, I know not how to measure more than 4000 paces. Yet Villehardouin computes the space at three leagues (N<sup>o</sup> 86.). If his eye were not deceived, he must reckon by the old Gallic league of 1500 paces, which might still be used in Champagne.

C H A P.
LX.

spirit of the Varangian guards, of the Danes and English, as they are named in the writers of the times<sup>66</sup>. After ten days incessant labour, the ground was levelled, the ditch filled, the approaches of the besiegers were regularly made, and two hundred and fifty engines of assault exercised their various powers to clear the rampart, to batter the walls, and to sap the foundations. On the first appearance of a breach, the scaling-ladders were applied: the numbers that defended the vantage ground repulsed and oppressed the adventurous Latins; but they admired the resolution of fifteen knights and serjeants, who had gained the ascent, and maintained their perilous station till they were precipitated or made prisoners by the Imperial guards. On the side of the harbour the naval attack was more successfully conducted by the Venetians; and that industrious people employed every resource that was known and practised before the invention of gunpowder. A double line, three bow-shots in front, was formed by the gallees and ships; and the swift motion of the former was supported by the weight and loftiness of the latter, whose decks, and poops, and turret, were the platforms of military engines, that discharged their shot over the heads of the first line. The soldiers, who leaped from the gallees on shore, immediately planted and ascended their scaling-ladders, while the large ships, advancing more slowly into the intervals, and lowering a draw-bridge, opened a way through the air from their masts to the rampart. In the midst of the conflict, the doge, a venerable and conspicuous form, stood aloft in complete armour on the prow of his galley. The great standard of St. Mark was displayed before him; his threats, promises, and exhortations, urged the diligence of the rowers; his vessel was the first that struck; and Dandolo was the first warrior on the shore. The nations admired the magnanimity of the blind old man, without reflecting that his age and infirmities diminished the price of life, and enhanced the value of immortal glory. On a sudden, by an invisible hand (for the standard-bearer was probably slain), the banner of the republic was fixed on the rampart: twenty-five towers were rapidly occupied; and, by the cruel expedient of fire, the Greeks were driven from the adjacent quarter. The doge had dispatched the intelligence of his success, when he was checked by the danger of his confederates. Nobly declaring that he would rather die with the pilgrims than gain a victory by their destruction, Dandolo relinquished his advantage, recalled his troops, and hastened to the scene of action. He found the six weary diminutive battles of the French encompassed by sixty squadrons of the Greek cavalry, the least of which was more numerous than the largest of their divisions. Shame and despair had provoked Alexius to the last effort of a general rally; but he was awed by the firm order and manly aspect of the Latins; and, after skirmishing at a distance, withdrew his troops in the close of the evening. The silence or tumult of the night exasperated his fears; and the timid usurper, collecting a treasure of ten thousand pounds of gold, basely deserted his wife, his people, and his fortune; threw himself into a bark, stole through the Bosphorus, and landed in shameful safety in an obscure harbour of Thrace. As soon as they were apprised of his flight, the Greek nobles sought pardon and peace in the dungeon where the blind Isaac expected each hour the visit of the executioner. Again saved and exalted by the vicissitudes of fortune, the captive in his Imperial robes was replaced on the throne, and surrounded with prostrate slaves, whose real terror and affected joy he was incapable of discerning. At the dawn of day, hostilities were suspended; and the Latin chiefs were surprised by a message from the lawful and reigning emperor, who was impatient to embrace his son and to reward his generous deliverers<sup>67</sup>.

<sup>66</sup> The guards, the Varangi, are styled by Villehardouin (N<sup>o</sup> 87. 95, &c.), Englois et Danois avec leurs haches. Whatever had been their origin, a French pilgrim could not be mistaken in the nations of which they were at that time composed.

But

<sup>67</sup> For the first siege and conquest of Constantinople, we may read the original letter of the crusaders to Innocent III. Gestæ, c. 91. p. 533, 534. Villehardouin, N° 75 — X 2 99.

C H A P.
LX.

Restoration of the emperor Isaac Angelus, and his son Alexius,
July 19.

But these generous deliverers were unwilling to release their hostage, till they had obtained from his father the payment, or at least the promise, of their recompense. They chose four ambassadors, Matthew of Montmorency, our historian the marshal of Champagne, and two Venetians, to congratulate the emperor. The gates were thrown open on their approach, the streets on both sides were lined with the battle-axes of the Danish and English guard: the presence-chamber glittered with gold and jewels, the false substitutes of virtue and power; by the side of the blind Isaac, his wife was seated, the sister of the king of Hungary; and by her appearance, the noble matrons of Greece were drawn from their domestic retirement, and mingled with the circle of senators and soldiers. The Latins, by the mouth of the marshal, spoke like men, conscious of their merits, but who respected the work of their own hands; and the emperor clearly understood, that his son's engagements with Venice and the pilgrims must be ratified without hesitation or delay. Withdrawing into a private chamber with the empress, a chamberlain, an interpreter, and the four ambassadors, the father of young Alexius enquired with some anxiety into the nature of his stipulations. The submission of the Eastern empire to the pope, the succour of the Holy Land, and a present contribution of two hundred thousand marks of silver—"These conditions are weighty," was his prudent reply; "they are hard to accept, and difficult to perform. But no conditions can exceed the measure of your services and deserts." After this satisfactory assurance, the barons mounted on horseback, and introduced the heir of Constantinople to the city and palace: his youth and marvellous adventures engaged every heart in his favour, and Alexius was solemnly crowned with his father in the dome of St. Sophia. In the last days of his reign, the people, already blessed

99. Nicetas in Alexio Comnen. l. iii. c. 10. p. 340—352. Dandolo, in Chron. p. 322. Geather, and his abbot Martin, were not yet returned from their obstinate pilgrimage to Jerusalem, or St. John d'Acre, where the greatest part of the company had died of the plague.

with

with the restoration of plenty and peace, was delighted by the joyful catastrophe of the tragedy; and the discontent of the nobles, their regret, and their fears, were covered by the polished surface of pleasure and loyalty. The mixture of two discordant nations in the same capital, might have been pregnant with mischief and danger; and the suburb of Galata, or Pera, was assigned for the quarters of the French and Venetians. But the liberty of trade and familiar intercourse was allowed between the friendly nations; and each day the pilgrims were tempted by devotion or curiosity to visit the churches and palaces of Constantinople. Their rude minds, insensible perhaps of the finer arts, were astonished by the magnificent scenery: and the poverty of their native towns enhanced the populousness and riches of the first metropolis of Christendom<sup>68</sup>. Descending from his state, young Alexius was prompted by interest and gratitude to repeat his frequent and familiar visits to his Latin allies; and in the freedom of the table, the gay petulance of the French sometimes forgot the emperor of the East<sup>69</sup>. In their more serious conferences, it was agreed, that the re-union of the two churches must be the result of patience and time; but avarice was less tractable than zeal; and a large sum was instantly disbursed to appease the wants, and silence the importunity, of the crusaders<sup>70</sup>. Alexius was alarmed by the approaching hour of their departure: their absence might have relieved him from the engagement which he was yet incapable of per-

C H A P.
LX.

<sup>68</sup> Compare, in the rude energy of Villehardouin (N<sup>o</sup> 66. 100.), the inside and outside views of Constantinople, and their impression on the minds of the pilgrims: cette ville (says he) que de toutes les autres ére souveraine. See the parallel passages of Fulcherius Carnotensis, Hist. Hierosol. l. i. c. 4. and Will. Tyr. ii. 3. xv. 26.

<sup>69</sup> As they played at dice, the Latins took off his diadem, and clapped on his head a woollen or hairy cap, το μεγαλαπεταλον παρὰ τὴν αὐτὴν ἀποκαταστάσιν (Nicephorus, p. 358.). If these merry companions were Venetians, it was the influence of trade and a commonwealth.

<sup>70</sup> Villehardouin, N<sup>o</sup> 101. Dandolo, p. 322. The doge affirms, that the Venetians were paid more slowly than the French; but he owns, that the histories of the two nations differed on that subject. Had he read Villehardouin? The Greeks complained, however, quòd totius Græciæ opes transfusisset (Gunther, Hist. C. P. c. 13.). See the lamentations and invectives of Nicephorus (p. 355.).

C H A P.
LX.

forming; but his friends would have left him, naked and alone, to the caprice and prejudice of a perfidious nation. He wished to bribe their stay, the delay of a year, by undertaking to defray their expence, and to satisfy, in their name, the freight of the Venetian vessels. The offer was agitated in the council of the barons; and, after a repetition of their debates and scruples, a majority of votes again acquiesced in the advice of the doge and the prayer of the young emperor. At the price of sixteen hundred pounds of gold, he prevailed on the marquis of Montferrat to lead him with an army round the provinces of Europe; to establish his authority, and pursue his uncle, while Constantinople was awed by the presence of Baldwin and his confederates of France and Flanders. The expedition was successful; the blind emperor exulted in the success of his arms, and listened to the predictions of his flatterers, that the same Providence which had raised him from the dungeon to the throne, would heal his gout, restore his sight, and watch over the long prosperity of his reign. Yet the mind of the suspicious old man was tormented by the rising glories of his son: nor could his pride conceal from his envy, that, while his own name was pronounced in faint and reluctant acclamations, the royal youth was the theme of spontaneous and universal praise<sup>71</sup>.

Quarrel of
the Greeks
and Latins.

By the recent invasion, the Greeks were awakened from a dream of nine centuries; from the vain presumption that the capital of the Roman empire was impregnable to foreign arms. The strangers of the West had violated the city, and bestowed the sceptre, of Constantine: their Imperial clients soon became as unpopular as themselves: the well-known vices of Isaac were rendered still more contemptible by his infirmities; and the young Alexius was hated as an apostate who had renounced the manners and religion of his country. His secret covenant with the Latins was divulged or suspected;

<sup>71</sup> The reign of Alexius Comnenus occupies three books in Nicetas, p. 291—352. The short restoration of Isaac and his son is dispatched in five chapters, p. 352—362.

pected; the people, and especially the clergy, were devoutly attached to their faith and superstition; and every convent, and every shop, refounded with the danger of the church and the tyranny of the pope<sup>72</sup>. An empty treasury could ill supply the demands of regal luxury and foreign extortion: the Greeks refused to avert, by a general tax, the impending evils of servitude and pillage; the oppression of the rich excited a more dangerous and personal resentment; and if the emperor melted the plate, and despoiled the images, of the sanctuary, he seemed to justify the complaints of heresy and sacrilege. During the absence of marquis Boniface and his Imperial pupil, Constantinople was visited with a calamity which might be justly imputed to the zeal and indiscretion of the Flemish pilgrims<sup>73</sup>. In one of their visits to the city, they were scandalized by the aspect of a mosque or synagogue, in which one God was worshipped, without a partner or a son. Their effectual mode of controversy was to attack the infidels with the sword, and their habitation with fire: but the infidels, and some Christian neighbours, presumed to defend their lives and properties; and the flames which bigotry had kindled consumed the most orthodox and innocent structures. During eight days and nights, the conflagration spread above a league in front, from the harbour to the Propontis, over the thickest and most populous regions of the city. It is not easy to count the stately churches and palaces that were reduced to a smoking ruin, to value the merchandise that perished in the trading streets, or to number the families that were involved in the common destruction. By this outrage, which the doge and the barons in vain affected to disclaim, <sup>72</sup> When Nicetas reproaches Alexius for his impious league, he bestows the hardest names on the pope's new religion; μίζη κ. α. ασιπυτατον... παρκερτοτα πηρι... των τε Πατρι προφητων καισμοι... μεταδισι... και μετασυστοι των πολλων Ρωμανων εβλ. (p. 348.). Such was the sincere language of every Greek to the last gasp of the empire.

<sup>73</sup> Nicetas (p. 355.) is positive in the charge, and specifies the Flemings φλνδρι..., though he is wrong in supposing it an ancient name. Villehardouin (N<sup>o</sup> 107.) exculpates the barons, and is ignorant (perhaps affectedly ignorant) of the names of the guilty.

the

C H A P.
LV.

the name of the Latins became still more unpopular; and the colony of that nation, above fifteen thousand persons, consulted their safety in a hasty retreat from the city to the protection of their standard in the suburb of Pera. The emperor returned in triumph; but the firmest and most dextrous policy would have been insufficient to steer him through the tempest, which overwhelmed the person and government of that unhappy youth. His own inclination, and his father's advice, attached him to his benefactors; but Alexius hesitated between gratitude and patriotism, between the fear of his subjects and of his allies<sup>74</sup>. By his feeble and fluctuating conduct he lost the esteem and confidence of both; and, while he invited the marquis of Montferrat to occupy the palace, he suffered the nobles to conspire, and the people to arm, for the deliverance of their country. Regardless of his painful situation, the Latin chiefs repeated their demands, resented his delays, suspected his intentions, and exacted a decisive answer of peace or war. The haughty summons was delivered by three French knights and three Venetian deputies, who girded their swords, mounted their horses, pierced through the angry multitude, and entered with a fearless countenance the palace and presence of the Greek emperor. In a peremptory tone, they recapitulated their services and his engagements; and boldly declared, that unless their just claims were fully and immediately satisfied, they should no longer hold him either as a sovereign or a friend. After this defiance, the first that had ever wounded an Imperial ear, they departed without betraying any symptoms of fear; but their escape from a servile palace and a furious city astonished the ambassadors themselves; and their return to the camp was the signal of mutual hostility.

The war renewed,
A. D. 1204.

Among the Greeks, all authority and wisdom were overborne by the impetuous multitude, who mistook their rage for valour, their numbers for strength, and their fanaticism for the support and inspiration of Heaven. In the eyes of both nations Alexius was false and contemptible: the base and spurious race of the Angeli was rejected with clamorous disdain; and the people of Constantinople encompassed the senate, to demand at their hands a more worthy emperor. To every senator, conspicuous by his birth or dignity, they successively presented the purple: by each senator the deadly garment was repulsed: the contest lasted three days; and we may learn from the historian Nicetas, one of the members of the assembly, that fear and weakness were the guardians of their loyalty. A phantom, who vanished in oblivion, was forcibly proclaimed by the crowd<sup>75</sup>; but the author of the tumult, and the leader of the war, was a prince of the house of Ducas; and his common appellation of Alexius must be discriminated by the epithet of Mourzoufle<sup>76</sup>, which in the vulgar idiom expressed the close junction of his black and shaggy eye-brows. At once a patriot and a courtier, the perfidious Mourzoufle, who was not destitute of cunning and courage, opposed the Latins both in speech and action, inflamed the passions and prejudices of the Greeks, and insinuated himself into the favour and confidence of Alexius, who trusted him with the office of great chamberlain, and tinged his buskins with the colours of royalty. At the dead of night he rushed into the bed-chamber with an affrighted aspect, exclaiming, that the palace was attacked by the people and betrayed by the guards. Starting from his couch, the unsuspecting prince threw himself into the arms of his enemy, who had contrived his escape by a private staircase. But that staircase terminated in a prison; Alexius was seized, stripped, and loaded with chains; and, after tasting some days the bitterness of death,

<sup>74</sup> Compare the suspicions and complaints of Nicetas (p. 359—362.) with the blunt charges of Baldwin of Flanders (Gesta Innocent. III. c. 92. p. 534.), cum patriarcha et mole nobilium, nobis promissis perjurus et mendax.

C H A P.
LX.

<sup>75</sup> His name was Nicholas Canabus; he deserved the praise of Nicetas and the vengeance of Mourzoufle (p. 362.).

<sup>76</sup> Villehardouin (N<sup>o</sup> 116.) speaks of him as a favourite, without knowing that he was a prince of the blood, Angelus and Ducas. Ducange, who pries into every corner, believes him to be the son of Isaac Ducas Sebastocrator, and second cousin of young Alexius.

C H A P.
LX.

Alexius and his father deposed by Mourzoufle,
February 8.

Second siege,
January—
April.

he was poisoned, or strangled, or beaten with clubs, at the command, and in the presence, of the tyrant. The emperor Isaac Angelus soon followed his son to the grave, and Mourzoufle, perhaps, might spare the superfluous crime of hastening the extinction of impotence and blindness.

The death of the emperors, and the usurpation of Mourzoufle, had changed the nature of the quarrel. It was no longer the disagreement of allies who over-valued their services, or neglected their obligations: the French and Venetians forgot their complaints against Alexius, dropt a tear on the untimely fate of their companion, and swore revenge against the perfidious nation who had crowned his assassin. Yet the prudent doge was still inclined to negotiate; he asked as a debt, a subsidy, or a fine, fifty thousand pounds of gold, about two millions sterling; nor would the conference have been abruptly broken, if the zeal, or policy, of Mourzoufle had not refused to sacrifice the Greek church to the safety of the state<sup>77</sup>. Amidst the invectives of his foreign and domestic enemies, we may discern, that he was not unworthy of the character which he had assumed, of the public champion: the second siege of Constantinople was far more laborious than the first; the treasury was replenished, and discipline was restored, by a severe inquisition into the abuses of the former reign; and Mourzoufle, an iron mace in his hand, visiting the posts, and affecting the port and aspect of a warrior, was an object of terror, to his soldiers, at least, and to his kinsmen. Before and after the death of Alexius, the Greeks made two vigorous and well-conducted attempts to burn the navy in the harbour; but the skill and courage of the Venetians repulsed the fire-ships; and the vagrant flames wasted themselves without injury in the sea<sup>78</sup>. In a

<sup>77</sup> This negotiation, probable in itself, and attested by Nicetas (p. 365.), is omitted as scandalous by the delicacy of Dandolo and Villehardouin.

<sup>78</sup> Baldwin mentions both attempts to fire

the fleet (Gest. c. 92. p. 534, 535.); Villehardouin (N<sup>o</sup> 113—115.) only describes the first. It is remarkable, that neither of these warriors observe any peculiar properties in the Greek fire.

nocturnal rally, the Greek emperor was vanquished by Henry, brother of the count of Flanders: the advantages of number and surprize aggravated the shame of his defeat; his buckler was found on the field of battle; and the Imperial standard<sup>79</sup>, a divine image of the Virgin, was presented, as a trophy and a relic, to the Cistercian monks, the disciples of St. Bernard. Near three months, without excepting the holy season of Lent, were consumed in skirmishes and preparations, before the Latins were ready or resolved for a general assault. The land-fortifications had been found impregnable; and the Venetian pilots represented, that, on the shore of the Propontis, the anchorage was unsafe, and the ships must be driven by the current far away to the streights of the Hellespont; a prospect not unpleasing to the reluctant pilgrims, who sought every opportunity of breaking the army. From the harbour, therefore, the assault was determined by the assailants, and expected by the besieged; and the emperor had placed his scarlet pavillions on a neighbouring height, to direct and animate the efforts of his troops. A fearless spectator, whose mind could entertain the ideas of pomp and pleasure, might have admired the long array of two embattled armies, which extended above half a league, the one on the ships and gallies, the other on the walls and towers raised above the ordinary level by several stages of wooden turrets. Their first fury was spent in the discharge of darts, stones, and fire, from the engines; but the water was deep; the French were bold; the Venetians were skilful; they approached the walls; and a desperate conflict of swords, spears, and battle-axes, was fought on the trembling bridges that grappled the floating, to the stable, batteries. In more than an hundred places, the assault was urged, and the defence was sustained; till the superiority of ground and numbers finally prevailed, and the Latin trumpets founded a retreat. On

C H A P.
LX.

<sup>79</sup> Ducange (N<sup>o</sup> 119.) pours forth a torrent of learning on the Gonfanon Imperial. This banner of the Virgin is shewn at Venice

as a trophy and relic: if it be genuine, the pious doge must have cheated the monks of Cîteaux.

C H A P.
LX.

the ensuing days, the attack was renewed with equal vigour and a similar event; and, in the night, the doge and the barons held a council, apprehensive only for the public danger: not a voice pronounced the words of escape or treaty; and each warrior, according to his temper, embraced the hope of victory or the assurance of a glorious death<sup>80</sup>. By the experience of the former siege, the Greeks were instructed, but the Latins were animated; and the knowledge, that Constantinople might be taken, was of more avail than the local precautions which that knowledge had inspired for its defence. In the third assault, two ships were linked together to double their strength; a strong north wind drove them on the shore; the bishops of Troyes and Soissons led the van; and the auspicious names of the pilgrim and the paradise resounded along the line<sup>81</sup>. The episcopal banners were displayed on the walls; an hundred marks of silver had been promised to the first adventurers; and if their reward was intercepted by death, their names have been immortalised by fame. Four towers were scaled; three gates were burst open; and the French knights, who might tremble on the waves, felt themselves invincible on horseback on the solid ground. Shall I relate that the thousands who guarded the emperor's person fled on the approach and before the lance of a single warrior? Their ignominious flight is attested by their countryman Nicetas; an army of phantoms marched with the French hero, and he was magnified to a giant in the eyes of the Greeks<sup>82</sup>. While the fugitives deserted their posts and cast away their arms, the Latins entered the city under the banners of their leaders; the streets and gates opened for <sup>80</sup> Villehardouin (N<sup>o</sup> 126) confesses, that mult ere grant peril; and Guntherus (Hist. C. P. c. 13.) affirms, that nulla spes victoriae aridere poterat. Yet the knight despises those who thought of flight, and the monk praises his countrymen who were resolved on death.

<sup>81</sup> Baldwin, and all the writers, honour the names of these two galleys, felici auspicio.

<sup>82</sup> With an allusion to Homer, Nicetas calls him επτα οργυρα, nine orgyre, or eighteen yards high, a stature which would indeed have excused the terror of the Greek. On this occasion, the historian seems fonder of the marvellous, than of his country, or perhaps of truth. Baldwin exclaims in the words of the psalmist, persequitur unus ex nobis centum alienos.

their

their passage; and either design or accident kindled a third conflagration, which consumed in a few hours the measure of three of the largest cities of France<sup>83</sup>. In the close of evening, the barons checked their troops and fortified their stations; they were awed by the extent and populousness of the capital, which might yet require the labour of a month, if the churches and palaces were conscious of their internal strength. But in the morning, a suppliant procession, with crosses and images, announced the submission of the Greeks, and deprecated the wrath of the conquerors: the usurper escaped through the golden gate; the palaces of Blachernæ and Boucoleon were occupied by the count of Flanders and the marquis of Montferrat; and the empire which still bore the name of Constantine, and the title of Roman, was subverted by the arms of the Latin pilgrims<sup>84</sup>.

C H A P.
LX.

Constantinople had been taken by storm; and no restraints, except those of religion and humanity, were imposed on the conquerors by the laws of war. Boniface marquis of Montferrat still acted as their general; and the Greeks, who revered his name as that of their future sovereign, were heard to exclaim in a lamentable tone, "Holy marquis-king, have mercy upon us!" His prudence or compassion opened the gates of the city to the fugitives; and he exhorted the soldiers of the cross to spare the lives of their fellow-Christians. The streams of blood that flow down the pages of Nicetas, may be reduced to the slaughter of two thousand of his unresisting countrymen<sup>85</sup>; and the greater part was massacred, not by
the

Pillage of Constantino-
ple.

<sup>83</sup> Villehardouin (N<sup>o</sup> 130.) is again ignorant of the authors of this more legitimate fire, which is ascribed by Gunther to a quidam comes Teutonicus (c. 14.). They seem ashamed, the incendiaries!

<sup>84</sup> For the second siege and conquest of Constantinople, see Villehardouin (N<sup>o</sup> 113—132.), Baldwin's 1.<sup>d</sup> Epistle to Innocent III. (Gesta, c. 92. p. 534—537.), with the whole reign of Mourzoufle, in Nicetas (p. 363—375.); and borrow some hints from Dandolo (Chron. Venet. p. 323—330.) and Gunther (Hist. C. P. c. 14—18.), who add the decorations of prophecy and vision. The former produces an oracle of the Pythæan sybil, of a great armament on the Adriatic, under a blind chief, against Byzantium, &c. Curious enough, were the prediction anterior to the fact.

<sup>85</sup> Ceciderunt tamen eâ die civium quasi duo

C H A P.
LX.

the strangers, but by the Latins, who had been driven from the city, and who exercised the revenge of a triumphant faction. Yet of these exiles, some were less mindful of injuries than of benefits; and Nicetas himself was indebted for his safety to the generosity of a Venetian merchant. Pope Innocent the third accuses the pilgrims of respecting, in their lust, neither age nor sex, nor religious profession; and bitterly laments that the deeds of darkness, fornication, adultery, and incest, were perpetrated in open day; and that noble matrons and holy nuns were polluted by the grooms and peasants of the Catholic camp<sup>86</sup>. It is indeed probable that the licence of victory prompted and covered a multitude of sins: but it is certain, that the capital of the East contained a stock of venal or willing beauty, sufficient to satiate the desires of twenty thousand pilgrims; and female prisoners were no longer subject to the right or abuse of domestic slavery. The marquis of Montferrat was the patron of discipline and decency; the count of Flanders was the mirror of chastity: they had forbidden, under pain of death, the rape of married women, or virgins, or nuns; and the proclamation was sometimes invoked by the vanquished<sup>87</sup> and respected by the victors. Their cruelty and lust were moderated by the authority of the chiefs, and feelings of the soldiers; for we are no longer describing an irruption of the northern savages; and however ferocious they might still appear, time, policy, and religion, had civilized the manners of the French, and still more of the Italians. But a free scope was allowed to their avarice, which was glutted, even in the holy week, by the pillage of Constantinople. The right of victory, unshackled duo millia, &c. (Gunther, c. 18.) Arithmetic is an excellent touchstone to try the amplifications of passion and rhetoric.

<sup>86</sup> Quidam (says Innocent III. Gesta, c. 94. p. 538.) nec religioni, nec, ætati nec sexui pepercerunt: sed fornicationes, adulteria, et incestus in oculis omnium exercentes, non solum maritatas et viduas, sed et ma-

tronas et virgines Deoque dicatas, exposuerunt spurcitiis garcionum. Villehardouin takes no notice of these common incidents.

<sup>87</sup> Nicetas saved, and afterwards married, a noble virgin (p. 380.), whom a soldier επιμαρτυσει πολλας ανδων επιβραμωμενος, had almost violated in spite of the εντολαι, ενταλματα εν γενοισταν.

by

by any promise or treaty, had confiscated the public and private wealth of the Greeks; and every hand, according to its size and strength, might lawfully execute the sentence and seize the forfeiture. A portable and universal standard of exchange was found in the coined and uncoined metals of gold and silver, which each captor at home or abroad might convert into the possessions most suitable to his temper and situation. Of the treasures, which trade and luxury had accumulated, the silks, velvets, furs, the gems, spices, and rich moveables, were the most precious, as they could not be procured for money in the ruder countries of Europe. An order of rapine was instituted; nor was the share of each individual abandoned to industry or chance. Under the tremendous penalties of perjury, excommunication and death, the Latins were bound to deliver their plunder into the common stock: three churches were selected for the deposit and distribution of the spoil: a single share was allotted to a foot soldier; two for a serjeant on horseback; four to a knight; and larger proportions according to the rank and merit of the barons and princes. For violating this sacred engagement, a knight belonging to the count of St. Paul was hanged with his shield and coat of arms round his neck: his example might render offenders more artful and discreet; but avarice was more powerful than fear; and it is generally believed, that the secret far exceeded the acknowledged plunder. Yet the magnitude of the prize surpassed the largest scale of experience or expectation<sup>88</sup>. After the whole had been equally divided between the French and Venetians, fifty thousand marks were deducted to satisfy the debts of the former and the demands of the latter. The residue of the French amounted to four hundred thousand marks of silver<sup>89</sup>, about eight hundred

C H A P.
LX.

Division of
the spoil.

<sup>88</sup> Of the general mass of wealth, Gunther observes, ut de pauperibus et advenis cives ditissimi redderentur (Hist. C. P. c. 18.); Villehardouin (N<sup>o</sup> 132.), that since the creation, ne fu tant gaaignié dans une ville; Baldwin (Gesta, c. 92.), ut tantum tota non videatur possidere Latinitas.

<sup>89</sup> Villehardouin, N<sup>o</sup> 133—135. Instead of 400,000, there is a various reading of 500,000. The Venetians had offered to take the

C H A P.
LX.

hundred thousand pounds sterling; nor can I better appreciate the value of that sum in the public and private transactions of the age, than by defining it as seven times the annual revenue of the kingdom of England<sup>90</sup>.

Misery of the Greeks.

In this great revolution we enjoy the singular felicity of comparing the narratives of Villehardouin and Nicetas, the opposite feelings of the marshal of Champagne and the Byzantine senator<sup>91</sup>. At the first view it should seem that the wealth of Constantinople was only transferred from one nation to another; and that the loss and sorrow of the Greeks is exactly balanced by the joy and advantage of the Latins. But in the miserable account of war, the gain is never equivalent to the loss, the pleasure to the pain: the smiles of the Latins were transient and fallacious; the Greeks for ever wept over the ruins of their country; and their real calamities were aggravated by sacrilege and mockery. What benefits accrued to the conquerors from the three fires which annihilated so vast a portion of the buildings and riches of the city? What a stock of such things, as could neither be used nor transported, was maliciously or wantonly destroyed? How much treasure was idly wasted in gaming, debauchery, and riot? And what precious objects were bartered for a vile price by the impatience or ignorance of the soldiers, whose reward was stolen by the base industry of the last of the Greeks? These alone, who had nothing to lose, might derive some profit from the revolution; but the misery of the upper ranks of society is strongly painted in the personal adventures of Nicetas him-the whole booty, and to give 400 marks to each knight, 200 to each priest and horseman, and 100 to each foot-soldier: they would have been great losers (Le Beau, Hist. du Bas-Empire, tom. xx. p. 506. I know not from whence).

<sup>90</sup> At the council of Lyons (A. D. 1245), the English ambassadors stated the revenue of the crown as below that of the foreign clergy, which amounted to 60,000 marks a year (Matthew Paris, p. 451. Hume's History of England, vol. ii. p. 170.).

<sup>91</sup> The disorders of the sack of Constantinople, and his own adventures, are feelingly described by Nicetas, p. 367—369. and in the Status Urb. C. P. p. 375—384. His complaints even of sacrilege are justified by Innocent III. (Geita, c. 92.); but Villehardouin does not betray a symptom of pity or remorse.

self. His stately palace had been reduced to ashes in the second conflagration; and the senator, with his family and friends, found an obscure shelter in another house which he possessed near the church of St. Sophia. It was the door of this mean habitation that his friend the Venetian merchant guarded in the disguise of a soldier, till Nicetas could save, by a precipitate flight, the relics of his fortune and the chastity of his daughter. In a cold wintry season, these fugitives, nursed in the lap of prosperity, departed on foot; his wife was with child; the desertion of their slaves compelled them to carry their baggage on their own shoulders; and their women, whom they placed in the centre, were exhorted to conceal their beauty with dirt, instead of adorning it with paint and jewels. Every step was exposed to insult and danger: the threats of the strangers were less painful than the taunts of the plebeians, with whom they were now levelled; nor did the exiles breathe in safety till their mournful pilgrimage was concluded at Selymbria, above forty miles from the capital. On the way they overtook the patriarch, without attendance and almost without apparel, riding on an ass, and reduced to a state of apostolical poverty, which, had it been voluntary, might perhaps have been meritorious. In the mean while, his desolate churches were profaned by the licentiousness and party zeal of the Latins. After stripping the gems and pearls, they converted the chalices into drinking-cups; their tables, on which they gamed and feasted, were covered with the pictures of Christ and the saints; and they trampled under foot the most venerable objects of the Christian worship. In the cathedral of St. Sophia, the ample veil of the sanctuary was rent asunder for the sake of the golden fringe; and the altar, a monument of art and riches, was broken in pieces and shared among the captors. Their mules and horses were laden with the wrought silver and gilt carvings, which they tore down from the doors and pulpit; and if the beasts stumbled under the burthen, they were stabbed by their impatient drivers, and the holy pavement

C H A P.
LX.

Sacrilege and mockery.

C H A P.
LX.

streamed with their impure blood. A prostitute was seated on the throne of the patriarch; and that daughter of Belial, as she is styled, sung and danced in the church, to ridicule the hymns and processions of the Orientals. Nor were the repositories of the royal dead secure from violation: in the church of the apostles, the tombs of the emperors were rifled; and it is said, that after six centuries the corpse of Justinian was found without any signs of decay or putrefaction. In the streets, the French and Flemings clothed themselves and their horses in painted robes and flowing head-dresses of linen; and the coarse intemperance of their feasts<sup>92</sup> insulted the splendid sobriety of the East. To expose the arms of a people of scribes and scholars, they affected to display a pen, an ink-horn, and a sheet of paper, without discerning that the instruments of science and valour were alike feeble and useless in the hands of the modern Greeks.

Destruction
of the statues.

Their reputation and their language encouraged them, however, to despise the ignorance, and to overlook the progress, of the Latins<sup>93</sup>. In the love of the arts, the national difference was still more obvious and real; the Greeks preserved with reverence the works of their ancestors, which they could not imitate; and, in the destruction of the statues of Constantinople, we are provoked to join in the complaints and invectives of the Byzantine historian<sup>94</sup>. We have seen how the rising city was adorned by the vanity and despotism of the Imperial founder: in the ruins of paganism, some gods and heroes were saved from the axe of superstition; and the forum

<sup>92</sup> If I rightly apprehend the Greek of Nicetas's receipts, their favourite dishes were boiled buttocks of beef, salt pork and pease, and soup made of garlic and sharp or four herbs (p. 382.).

<sup>93</sup> Nicetas uses very harsh expressions, παρ' αγραμματος Βασιβαροις, και τελειον αναλφαιβητοις (Fragment. apud Fabric. Bibliot. Græc. tom. vi. p. 414.). This reproach, it is true, applies most strongly to their ignorance of Greek and of Homer. In their own language, the Latins of the xiith and xiiith centuries were not destitute of literature. See Harris's Philological Inquiries, p. iii. c. 9, 10, 11.

<sup>94</sup> Nicetas was of Chonæ in Phrygia (the old Colossæ of St. Paul): he raised himself to the honours of senator, judge of the veil, and great logothete; beheld the fall of the empire, retired to Nice, and composed an elaborate history from the death of Alexius Comnenus to the reign of Henry.

and.

and hippodrome were dignified with the relics of a better age. Several of these are described by Nicetas<sup>95</sup>, in a florid and affected style; and, from his descriptions, I shall select some interesting particulars. 1. The victorious charioteers were cast in bronze, at their own, or the public, charge, and fitly placed in the hippodrome: they stood aloft in their chariots, wheeling round the goal; the spectators could admire their attitude, and judge of the resemblance; and of these figures, the most perfect might have been transported from the Olympic stadium. 2. The sphynx, river-horse, and crocodile, denote the climate and manufacture of Egypt, and the spoils of that ancient province. 3. The she-wolf suckling Romulus and Remus; a subject alike pleasing to the old and the new Romans; but which could rarely be treated before the decline of the Greek sculpture. 4. An eagle holding and tearing a serpent in his talons; a domestic monument of the Byzantines, which they ascribed, not to a human artist, but to the magic power of the philosopher Apollonius, who, by this talisman, delivered the city from such venomous reptiles. 5. An ass and his driver; which were erected by Augustus in his colony of Nicopolis, to commemorate a verbal omen of the victory of Actium. 6. An equestrian statue; which passed, in the vulgar opinion, for Joshua, the Jewish conqueror, stretching out his hand to stop the course of the descending sun. A more classical tradition recognised the figures of Bellerophon and Pegasus; and the free attitude of the steed seemed to mark that he trod on air, rather than on the earth. 7. A square and lofty obelisk of brass; the sides were embossed with a variety of picturesque and rural scenes: birds singing; rustics labouring, or playing on their pipes; sheep bleating; lambs skipping; the sea, and a scene of fish and fishing; little naked cupids laughing, playing, and pelting each other with apples; and, on the summit, a female figure turning with the

<sup>95</sup> A manuscript of Nicetas in the Bodleian library, contains this curious fragment on the statues of Constantinople, which fraud, or shame, or rather carelessness, has dropt in the common editions. It is published by Fabricius (Bibliot. Græc. tom. vi. p. 405—416.), and immoderately praised by the late ingenious Mr. Harris of Salisbury (Philological Inquiries, p. iii. c. 5. p. 301—312.).

C H A P.
LX.

lightest breath, and thence denominated the wind's attendant. 8. The Phrygian shepherd presenting to Venus the prize of beauty, the apple of discord. 9. The incomparable statue of Helen; which is delineated by Nicetas in the words of admiration and love: her well-turned feet, snowy arms, rosy lips, bewitching smiles, swimming eyes, arched eye-brows, the harmony of her shape, the lightness of her drapery, and her flowing locks that waved in the wind: a beauty that might have moved her Barbarian destroyers to pity and remorse. 10. The manly or divine form of Hercules<sup>96</sup>, as he was restored to life by the master-hand of Lyfippus; of such magnitude, that his thumb was equal to the waist, his leg to the stature, of a common man<sup>97</sup>; his chest ample, his shoulders broad, his limbs strong and muscular, his hair curled, his aspect commanding. Without his bow, or quiver, or club, his lion's skin carelessly thrown over him, he was seated on an osier basket, his right leg and arm stretched to the utmost, his left knee bent, and supporting his elbow, his head reclining on his left hand, his countenance indignant and pensive. 11. A colossal statue of Juno, which had once adorned her temple of Samos; the enormous head by four yoke of oxen was laboriously drawn to the palace. 12. Another colossus, of Pallas or Minerva, thirty feet in height, and representing with admirable spirit the attributes and character of the martial maid. Before we accuse the Latins, it is just to remark, that this Pallas was destroyed after the first siege, by the fear and superstition of the Greeks themselves<sup>98</sup>. The other statues of brass which I have enumerated, were broken and melted by the unfeeling avarice of the crusaders: the cost and labour were consumed in a moment; the soul of genius evaporated in smoke; and the remnant of base metal was coined

<sup>96</sup> To illustrate the statue of Hercules, Mr. Harris quotes a Greek epigram, and engraves a beautiful gem, which does not however copy the attitude of the statue: in the latter, Hercules had not his club, and his right leg and arm were extended.

<sup>97</sup> I transcribe these proportions, which appear to me inconsistent with each other; and may possibly shew, that the boasted taste of Nicetas was no more than affectation and vanity.

<sup>98</sup> Nicetas in Isaaco Angelo et Alexio, c. 3. p. 359. 'The Latin editor very properly observes, that the historian, in his bombast style, produces ex pulice elephantem.

into money for the payment of the troops. Bronze is not the most durable of monuments: from the marble forms of Phidias and Praxiteles, the Latins might turn aside with stupid contempt<sup>99</sup>; but unless they were crushed by some accidental injury, those useless stones stood secure on their pedestals<sup>100</sup>. The most enlightened of the strangers, above the gross and sensual pursuits of their countrymen, more piously exercised the right of conquest in the search and seizure of the relics of the saints<sup>101</sup>. Immense was the supply of heads and bones, crosses and images, that were scattered by this revolution over the churches of Europe; and such was the increase of pilgrimage and oblation, that no branch, perhaps, of more lucrative plunder was imported from the East<sup>102</sup>. Of the writings of antiquity, many that still existed in the twelfth century are now lost. But the pilgrims were not solicitous to save or transport the volumes of an unknown tongue: the perishable substance of paper or parchment can only be preserved by the multiplicity of copies; the literature of the Greeks had almost centered in the metropolis; and, without computing the extent of our loss, we may drop a tear over the libraries that have perished in the triple fire of Constantinople<sup>103</sup>.

<sup>99</sup> In two passages of Nicetas (edit. Paris, p. 360. Fabric. p. 408.), the Latins are branded with the lively reproach of ὁ τῆς κέρως ἀνεπαύτου ἐπιβήτορας, and their avarice of brass is clearly expressed. Yet the Venetians had the merit of removing four bronze horses from Constantinople to the place of St. Mark (Sanuto, Vite del Doge, in Muratori, Script. Rerum Italicarum, tom. xxii. p. 534.).

<sup>100</sup> Winckelman, Hist. de l'Art, tom. iii. p. 269, 270.

<sup>101</sup> See the pious robbery of the abbot Martin, who transferred a rich cargo to his monastery of Paris, diocese of Basil (Gunter, Hist. C. P. c. 19. 23, 24.). Yet in secreting this booty, the saint incurred an excommunication, and perhaps broke his oath.

<sup>102</sup> Fleury, Hist. Eccles. tom. xvi. p. 139—145.

<sup>103</sup> I shall conclude this chapter with the notice of a modern history, which illustrates the taking of Constantinople by the Latins; but which has fallen somewhat late into my hands. Paolo Ramusio, the son of the compiler of voyages, was directed by the senate of Venice to write the history of the conquest; and this order, which he received in his youth, he executed in a mature age, by an elegant Latin work, de Bello Constantinopolitano et Imperatoribus Comnenis per Gallos et Venetos restitutis (Venet. 1635, in folio). Ramusio, or Rhamnufus, transcribes and translates sequitur ad unguem, a MS. of Villehardouin, which he possessed; but he enriches his narrative with Greek and Latin materials, and we are indebted to him for a correct state of the fleet, the names of the fifty Venetian nobles who commanded the galleys of the republic, and the patriot opposition of Pantaleon Barbus to the choice of the doge for emperor.

C H A P. LXI.

*Partition of the Empire by the French and Venetians.— Five Latin Emperors of the Houses of Flanders and Courtenay.—Their Wars against the Bulgarians and Greeks.—Weakness and Poverty of the Latin Empire.
—Recovery of Constantinople by the Greeks.—General Consequencs of the Crusades.*

C H A P.
LXI.

Election of
the emperor
Baldwin I.
A. D. 1204,
May 9—16.

AFTER the death of the lawful princes, the French and Venetians, confident of justice and victory, agreed to divide and regulate their future possessions'. It was stipulated by treaty, that twelve electors, six of either nation, should be nominated; that a majority should chuse the emperor of the East; and that, if the votes were equal, the decision of chance should ascertain the successful candidate. To him, with all the titles and prerogatives of the Byzantine throne, they assigned the two palaces of Boucoleon and Blachernæ, with a fourth part of the Greek monarchy. It was defined that the three remaining portions should be equally shared between the republic of Venice and the barons of France; that each feudatory, with an honourable exception for the doge, should acknowledge and perform the duties of homage and military service to the supreme head of the empire: that the nation which gave an emperor, should resign to their brethren the choice of a

' See the original treaty of partition, in his Observations, and the 3<sup>d</sup> book of his the Venetian Chronicle of Andrew Dandolo, Histoire de Constantinople sous l'Empire des p. 326—330. and the subsequent election in François. Villehardouin, N<sup>o</sup> 136—140. with Ducange patriarch;

patriarch ; and that the pilgrims, whatever might be their impatience to visit the Holy Land, should devote another year to the conquest and defence of the Greek provinces. After the conquest of Constantinople by the Latins, the treaty was confirmed and executed ; and the first and most important step was the creation of an emperor. The six electors of the French nation were all ecclesiastics, the abbot of Loces, the archbishop elect of Acre in Palestine, and the bishops of Troyes, Soissons, Halberstadt, and Bethlehem, the last of whom exercised in the camp the office of pope's legate : their profession and knowledge were respectable ; and as they could not be the objects, they were best qualified to be the authors, of the choice. The six Venetians were the principal servants of the state, and in this list the noble families of Querini and Contarini are still proud to discover their ancestors. The twelve assembled in the chapel of the palace ; and after the solemn invocation of the Holy Ghost, they proceeded to deliberate and vote. A just impulse of respect and gratitude prompted them to crown the virtues of the doge ; his wisdom had inspired their enterprise ; and the most youthful knights might envy and applaud the exploits of blindness and age. But the patriot Dandolo was devoid of all personal ambition, and fully satisfied that he had been judged worthy to reign. His nomination was over-ruled by the Venetians themselves : his countrymen, and perhaps his friends<sup>2</sup>, represented, with the eloquence of truth, the mischiefs that might arise to national freedom and the common cause, from the union of two incompatible characters, of the first magistrate of a republic and the emperor of the East. The exclusion of the doge left room for the more equal merits of Boniface and Baldwin ; and at their names all meaner candidates respectfully withdrew. The marquis of Montferrat was recommended

C H A P.
LXI.

<sup>2</sup> After mentioning the nomination of the doge by a French elector, his kinsman Andrew Dandolo approves his exclusion, quidam Venetorum fidelis et nobilis senex, usus ora-

tionis satis probabili, &c. which has been embroidered by modern writers from Blondus to Le Beau.

C H A P.
LXI.

by his mature age and fair reputation, by the choice of the adventurers and the wishes of the Greeks; nor can I believe that Venice, the mistress of the sea, could be seriously apprehensive of a petty lord at the foot of the Alps<sup>3</sup>. But the count of Flanders was the chief of a wealthy and warlike people; he was valiant, pious, and chaste; in the prime of life, since he was only thirty-two years of age; a descendant of Charlemagne, a cousin of the king of France, and a compeer of the prelates and barons who had yielded with reluctance to the command of a foreigner. Without the chapel, these barons, with the doge and marquis at their head, expected the decision of the twelve electors. It was announced by the bishop of Soissons, in the name of his colleagues: "Ye have sworn to obey the prince whom we should chuse; by our unanimous suffrage, Baldwin count of Flanders and Hainault is now your sovereign, and the emperor of the East." He was saluted with loud applause, and the proclamation was re-echoed through the city by the joy of the Latins and the trembling adulation of the Greeks. Boniface was the first to kiss the hand of his rival, and to raise him on the buckler; and Baldwin was transported to the cathedral, and solemnly invested with the purple buskins. At the end of three weeks he was crowned by the legate, in the vacancy of a patriarch; but the Venetian clergy soon filled the chapter of St. Sophia, seated Thomas Morosini on the ecclesiastical throne, and employed every art to perpetuate in their own nation the honours and benefices of the Greek church<sup>4</sup>. Without delay, the successor of Constantine instructed Palestine, France, and Rome, of this memorable revolution. To Palestine he sent, as a trophy, the gates of Constantinople, and the rosini to appoint no canons of St. Sophia, the lawful electors, except Venetians who had lived ten years at Venice, &c. But the foreign clergy was envious, the pope disapproved this national monopoly, and of the six Latin patriarchs of Constantinople, only the first and the last were Venetians.

<sup>3</sup> Nicetas (p. 384.), with the vain ignorance of a Greek, describes the marquis of Montferrat as a maritime power. λαμάρδαξ δὲ ἡρωϊκὸν πικρῶν. Was he deceived by the Byzantine theme of Lombardy, which extended along the coast of Calabria?

<sup>4</sup> They exacted an oath from Thomas Mo-

chain of the harbour<sup>5</sup>; and adopted, from the Assise of Jerusalem, the laws or customs best adapted to a French colony and conquest in the East. In his epistles, the natives of France are encouraged to swell that colony, and to secure that conquest, to people a magnificent city and a fertile land, which will reward the labours both of the priest and the soldier. He congratulates the Roman pontiff on the restoration of his authority in the East; invites him to extinguish the Greek schism by his presence in a general council; and implores his blessing and forgiveness for the disobedient pilgrims. Prudence and dignity are blended in the answer of Innocent<sup>6</sup>. In the subversion of the Byzantine empire, he arraigns the vices of man, and adores the providence of God: the conquerors will be absolved or condemned by their future conduct; the validity of their treaty depends on the judgment of St. Peter; but he inculcates their most sacred duty of establishing a just subordination of obedience and tribute, from the Greeks to the Latins, from the magistrate to the clergy, and from the clergy to the pope.

C H A P.
LXI.

In the division of the Greek provinces<sup>7</sup>, the share of the Venetians was more ample than that of the Latin emperor. No more than one fourth was appropriated to his domain; a clear moiety of the remainder was reserved for Venice; and the other moiety was distributed among the adventurers of France and Lombardy. The venerable Dandolo was proclaimed despot of Romania, and invested after the Greek fashion with the purple buskins. He ended at Constantinople his long and glorious life; and if the prerogative was personal, the title was used by his successors till the middle of the fourteenth century, with the singular though true addition of

Division of the Greek
empire.

<sup>5</sup> Nicetas, p. 383.

<sup>6</sup> The Epistles of Innocent III. are a rich fund for the ecclesiastical and civil institution of the Latin empire of Constantinople; and the most important of these epistles (of which the collection in 2 vols. in folio, is published by Stephen Baluze) are inserted in his Gesta, in Muratori, Script. Rerum

Italicarum, tom. iii. p. i. c. 94—105.

<sup>7</sup> In the treaty of partition, most of the names are corrupted by the scribes: they might be restored, and a good map suited to the last age of the Byzantine empire, would be an improvement of geography. But, alas! d'Anville is no more!

C. H. A. P.
I. I.

lords of one fourth and a half of the Roman empire<sup>8</sup>. The doge, a slave of state, was seldom permitted to depart from the helm of the republic; but his place was supplied by the bail or regent, who exercised a supreme jurisdiction over the colony of Venetians: they possessed three of the eight quarters of the city; and his independent tribunal was composed of six judges, four counsellors, two chamberlains, two fiscal advocates, and a constable. Their long experience of the Eastern trade enabled them to select their portion with discernment: they had rashly accepted the dominion and defence of Adrianople; but it was the more reasonable aim of their policy to form a chain of factories, and cities, and islands, along the maritime coast, from the neighbourhood of Ragusa to the Hellespont and the Bosphorus. The labour and cost of such extensive conquests exhausted their treasury: they abandoned their maxims of government, adopted a feudal system, and contented themselves with the homage of their nobles<sup>9</sup>, for the possessions which these private vassals undertook to reduce and maintain. And thus it was, that the family of Sanut acquired the dutchy of Naxos, which involved the greatest part of the Archipelago. For the price of ten thousand marks, the republic purchased of the marquis of Montferrat the fertile island of Crete or Candia with the ruins of an hundred cities<sup>10</sup>; but its improvement was stinted by the proud and narrow spirit of an aristocracy<sup>11</sup>; and the wisest senators would

<sup>8</sup> Their style was dominus quartæ partis et dimidiæ imperii Romani, till Giovanni Dolino who was elected doge in the year 1356 (Sanuto, p. 530. 641.). For the government of Constantinople, see Ducange, Histoire de C. P. i. 37.

<sup>9</sup> Ducange (Hist. de C. P. ii. 6.) has marked the conquests made by the state or nobles of Venice of the islands of Candia, Corfu, Cephalonia, Zante, Naxos, Paros, Melos, Andros, Mycone, Scyro, Cea, and Lemnos.

<sup>10</sup> Boniface sold the isle of Candia, August

12, A. D. 1204. See the act in Sanuto, p. 533.: but I cannot understand how it could be his mother's portion, or how she could be the daughter of an emperor Alexius.

<sup>11</sup> In the year 1212, the doge Peter Zani sent a colony to Candia, drawn from every quarter of Venice. But in their savage manners and frequent rebellions, the Candiots may be compared to the Corsicans under the yoke of Genoa; and when I compare the accounts of Belon and Tournefort, I cannot discern much difference between the Venetian and the Turkish island.

confess that the sea, not the land, was the treasury of St. Mark. In the moiety of the adventurers, the marquis Boniface might claim the most liberal reward; and, besides the isle of Crete, his exclusion from the throne was compensated by the royal title and the provinces beyond the Hellespont. But he prudently exchanged that distant and difficult conquest for the kingdom of Theffalonica or Macedonia, twelve days journey from the capital, where he might be supported by the neighbouring powers of his brother-in-law the king of Hungary. His progress was hailed by the voluntary or reluctant acclamations of the natives; and Greece, the proper and ancient Greece, again received a Latin conqueror<sup>12</sup>, who trod with indifference that classic ground. He viewed with a careless eye the beauties of the valley of Tempe; traversed with a cautious step the streights of Thermopylæ; occupied the unknown cities of Thebes, Athens, and Argos; and assaulted the fortifications of Corinth and Napoli<sup>13</sup>, which resisted his arms. The lots of the Latin pilgrims were regulated by chance, or choice, or subsequent exchange; and they abused, with intemperate joy, their triumph over the lives and fortunes of a great people. After a minute survey of the provinces, they weighed in the scales of avarice the revenue of each district, the advantage of the situation, and the ample or scanty supplies for the maintenance of soldiers and horses. Their presumption claimed and divided the long-lost dependencies of the Roman sceptre: the Nile and Euphrates rolled through their imaginary realms; and happy was the warrior who drew for his prize the palace of the Turkish

<sup>12</sup> Villehardoin (N<sup>o</sup> 159, 160, 173—177.) and Nicetas (p. 387—394.) describe the expedition into Greece of the marquis Boniface. The Choniate might derive his information from his brother Michael, archbishop of Athens, whom he paints as an orator, a statesman, and a saint. His encomium of Athens, and the description of Tempe, should be published from the Bod-

leian MS. of Nicetas (Fabric. Biblioth. Græc. tom. vi. p. 405.), and would have deserved Mr. Harris's enquiries.

<sup>13</sup> Napoli di Romania, or Nauplia, the ancient sea-port of Argos, is still a place of strength and consideration, situate on a rocky peninsula, with a good harbour (Chandler's Travels into Greece, p. 227.).

C H A P.
LXI.

fultan of Iconium<sup>14</sup>. I shall not descend to the pedigree of families and the rent-roll of estates, but I wish to specify that the counts of Blois and St. Pol were invested with the duchy of Nice and the lordship of Demotica<sup>15</sup>: the principal siefs were held by the service of constable, chamberlain, cup-bearer, butler, and chief cook; and our historian, Jeffrey of Villehardouin, obtained a fair establishment on the banks of the Hebrus, and united the double office of marshal of Champagne and Romania. At the head of his knights and archers, each baron mounted on horseback to secure the possession of his share, and their first efforts were generally successful. But the public force was weakened by their dispersion; and a thousand quarrels must arise under a law, and among men, whose sole umpire was the sword. Within three months after the conquest of Constantinople, the emperor and the king of Thessalonica drew their hostile followers into the field; they were reconciled by the authority of the doge, the advice of the marshal, and the firm freedom of their peers<sup>16</sup>.

Revolt of the
Greeks,
A. D. 1204,
&c.

Two fugitives, who had reigned at Constantinople, still asserted the title of emperor; and the subjects of their fallen throne might be moved to pity by the misfortunes of the elder Alexius, or excited to revenge by the spirit of Mourzoufle. A domestic alliance, a common interest, a similar guilt, and the merit of extinguishing his enemies, a brother and a nephew, induced the more recent usurper to unite with the former the relics of his power. Mourzoufle was received with smiles and honours in the camp of his father Alexius;

<sup>14</sup> I have softened the expression of Nice-tas, who strives to expose the presumption of the Franks. See de Rebus post C. P. expugnatam, p. 375—384.

<sup>15</sup> A city surrounded by the river Hebrus, and six leagues to the south of Adrianople, received from its double wall the Greek name of Didymoteichos, insensibly corrupted into Demotica and Dimot. I have preferred the more convenient and modern appellation of Demotica. This place was the last Turkish residence of Charles XII.

<sup>16</sup> Their quarrel is told by Villehardouin (N<sup>o</sup> 146—158.) with the spirit of freedom. The merit and reputation of the marshal are acknowledged by the Greek historian (p. 387.), μικρα παρὰ τῶν Λατίνων διὰ τὴν στρατιάν: unlike some modern heroes, whose exploits are only visible in their own memoirs.

but

but the wicked can never love, and should rarely trust, their fellow-criminals: he was seized in the bath, deprived of his eyes, stripped of his troops and treasures, and turned out to wander an object of horror and contempt to those who with more propriety could hate, and with more justice could punish, the assassin of the emperor Isaac, and his son. As the tyrant, pursued by fear or remorse, was stealing over to Asia, he was seized by the Latins of Constantinople, and condemned, after an open trial, to an ignominious death. His judges debated the mode of his execution, the axe, the wheel, or the stake; and it was resolved that Mourzoufle<sup>17</sup> should ascend the Theodosian column, a pillar of white marble of one hundred and forty-seven feet in height<sup>18</sup>. From the summit he was cast down headlong, and dashed in pieces on the pavement, in the presence of innumerable spectators, who filled the forum of Taurus, and admired the accomplishment of an old prediction, which was explained by this singular event<sup>19</sup>. The fate of Alexius is less tragical: he was sent by the marquis a captive to Italy, and a gift to the king of the Romans; but he had not much to applaud his fortune, if the sentence of imprisonment and exile were changed from a fortress in the Alps to a monastery in Asia. But his daughter, before the national calamity, had been given in marriage to a young hero who continued the succession, and restored the throne, of the Greek princes<sup>20</sup>. The valour of Theodore Lascaris was signa-

C H A P.
LXI.

Theodore Lascaris, emperor of Nice

<sup>17</sup> See the fate of Mourzoufle, in Nicetas (p. 393.), Villehardouin (N<sup>o</sup> 141—145. 163.), and Guntherus (c. 20, 21.). Neither the marshal nor the monk afford a grain of pity for a tyrant or rebel, whose punishment, however, was more unexampled than his crime.

<sup>18</sup> The column of Arcadius, which represents in basso-relievo his victories, or those of his father Theodosius, is still extant at Constantinople. It is described and measured, Gyllius (Topograph. iv. 7.), Banduri (ad l. i. Antiquit. C. P. p. 507, &c.), and Tournefort (Voyage du Levant, tom. ii. lettre xii. p. 231.).

<sup>19</sup> The nonsense of Gunther and the modern Greeks concerning this columna fatidica, is unworthy of notice: but it is singular enough, that fifty years before the Latin conquest, the poet Tzuzes (Chiliad, ix. 277.) relates the dream of a matron, who saw an army in the forum, and a man sitting on the column, clapping his hands, and uttering a loud exclamation.

<sup>20</sup> The dynasties of Nice, Trebizond, and Epirus

C H A P.
LXI.
A. D.
1204—1222.

lived in the two sieges of Constantinople. After the flight of Mourzoufle, when the Latins were already in the city, he offered himself as their emperor to the soldiers and people: and his ambition, which might be virtuous, was undoubtedly brave. Could he have infused a soul into the multitude, they might have crushed the strangers under their feet: their abject despair refused his aid, and Theodore retired to breathe the air of freedom in Anatolia, beyond the immediate view and pursuit of the conquerors. Under the title, at first of despot, and afterwards of emperor, he drew to his standard the bolder spirits, who were fortified against slavery by the contempt of life; and as every means was lawful for the public safety, implored without scruple the alliance of the Turkish sultan. Nice, where Theodore established his residence, Prusa and Philadelphia, Smyrna and Ephesus, opened their gates to their deliverer: he derived strength and reputation from his victories, and even from his defeats; and the successor of Constantine preserved a fragment of the empire from the banks of the Mæander to the suburbs of Nicomedia, and at length of Constantinople. Another portion, distant and obscure, was possessed by the lineal heir of the Comneni, a son of the virtuous Manuel, a grandson of the tyrant Andronicus. His name was Alexius; and the epithet of great was applied perhaps to his stature, rather than to his exploits. By the indulgence of the Angeli, he was appointed governor or duke of Trebizond<sup>21</sup>: his birth gave him ambition, the revolution independence; and without changing his title, he reigned in peace from Sinope to the Phasis, along the coast of the Black Sea. His nameless son and successor is described

The dukes and emperors of Trebi-
zond.

Epirus (of which Nicetas saw the origin without much pleasure or hope), are learnedly explored, and clearly represented, in the Familia Byzantina of Ducange.

<sup>21</sup> Except some facts in Pachymer and Nicephorus Gregoras, which will hereafter be used, the Byzantine writers disdain to speak of the empire of Trebizond, or principality of the Lazi; and among the Latins, it is conspicuous only in the romances of the xivth or xvth centuries. Yet the indefatigable Ducange has dug out (Fam. Byz. p. 192.) two authentic passages in Vincent of Beauvais (l. xxxi. c. 144.), and the protonotary Ogerius (apud Wading, A. D. 1279, N<sup>o</sup> 4.).

as the vassal of the sultan, whom he served with two hundred lances ; that Comnenian prince was no more than duke of Trebizond, and the title of emperor was first assumed by the pride and envy of the grandson of Alexius. In the West, a third fragment was saved from the common shipwreck by Michael, a bastard of the house of Angeli, who, before the revolution, had been known as an hostage, a soldier, and a rebel. His flight from the camp of the marquis Boniface secured his freedom ; by his marriage with the governor's daughter, he commanded the important place of Durazzo, assumed the title of despot, and founded a strong and conspicuous principality in Epirus, Ætolia, and Thessaly, which have ever been peopled by a warlike race. The Greeks, who had offered their service to their new sovereigns, were excluded by the haughty Latins<sup>22</sup> from all civil and military honours, as a nation born to tremble and obey. Their resentment prompted them to shew that they might have been useful friends, since they could be dangerous enemies : their nerves were braced by adversity : whatever was learned or holy, whatever was noble or valiant, rolled away into the independent states of Trebizond, Epirus, and Nice ; and a single patrician is marked by the ambiguous praise of attachment and loyalty to the Franks. The vulgar herd of the cities and the country, would have gladly submitted to a mild and regular servitude ; and the transient disorders of war would have been obliterated by some years of industry and peace. But peace was banished, and industry was crushed, in the disorders of the feudal system. The Roman emperors of Constantinople, if they were endowed with abilities, were armed with power for the protection of their subjects : their laws were wise, and their administration was simple. The Latin throne was filled by a titular prince, the chief, and often the

C H A P.
LXI.

The despots of Epirus.

<sup>22</sup> The portrait of the French Latins, is drawn in Nicetas by the hand of prejudice and resentment: ἡδὲ τῶν ἄλλων εἶναι εἰς ἄρως ἐργα παρασυμβέβλησθαι κινηοῦτο, ἀλλ' ἡδὲ τις τῶν χρημάτων ἢ τῶν

μισῶν παρὰ τῆς βαρβαρίας τῶν τοῦ ἐπιβουλεύοντος, καὶ παρὰ τῶν τοῦ οὐρανοῦ τῶν οὐρανῶν ἀντιθέσεων, καὶ τῶν ἁλῶν ἡδὲ τῶν ἀγῶν ἡδὲ τῶν ἡδονῶν.

servant,

C. H. A. P.
LXI.

servant, of his licentious confederates: the fiefs of the empire, from a kingdom to a castle, were held and ruled by the sword of the barons: and their discord, poverty, and ignorance, extended the ramifications of tyranny to the most sequestered villages. The Greeks were oppressed by the double weight of the priest, who was invested with temporal power, and of the soldier, who was inflamed by fanatic hatred; and the insuperable bar of religion and language for ever separated the stranger and the native. As long as the crusaders were united at Constantinople, the memory of their conquest, and the terror of their arms, imposed silence on the captive land: their dispersion betrayed the smallness of their numbers and the defects of their discipline; and some failures and mischances revealed the secret, that they were not invincible. As the fear of the Greeks abated, their hatred encreased. They murmured; they conspired; and before a year of slavery had elapsed, they implored, or accepted, the succour of a Barbarian, whose power they had felt, and whose gratitude they trusted<sup>23</sup>.

The Bulgarian war,
A. D. 1205.

The Latin conquerors had been saluted with a solemn and early embassy from John, or Joannice, or Calo-John, the revolted chief of the Bulgarians and Walachians. He deemed himself their brother, as the votary of the Roman pontiff, from whom he had received the regal title and an holy banner; and in the subversion of the Greek monarchy, he might aspire to the name of their friend and accomplice. But Calo-John was astonished to find, that the count of Flanders had assumed the pomp and pride of the successors of Constantine; and his ambassadors were dismissed with an haughty message, that the rebel must deserve a pardon, by touching with his forehead the footstool of the Imperial throne. His resentment<sup>24</sup>

<sup>23</sup> I here begin to use, with freedom and confidence, the eight books of the Histoire de C. P. sous l'Empire des François, which Ducange has given as a supplement to Villehardouin; and which, in a barbarous style, deserves the praise of an original and classic work.

<sup>24</sup> In Calo-John's answer to the pope, we may find his claims and complaints (Gesta Innocent. III. c. 108, 109.); he was cherished at Rome as the prodigal son.

would have exhaled in acts of violence and blood ; his cooler policy watched the rising discontent of the Greeks ; affected a tender concern for their sufferings ; and promised, that their first struggles for freedom should be supported by his person and kingdom. The conspiracy was propagated by national hatred, the firmest band of association and secrecy : the Greeks were impatient to sheath their daggers in the breasts of the victorious strangers ; but the execution was prudently delayed, till Henry, the emperor's brother, had transported the flower of his troops beyond the Hellespont. Most of the towns and villages of Thrace were true to the moment and the signal : and the Latins, without arms or suspicion, were slaughtered by the vile and merciless revenge of their slaves. From Demotica, the first scene of the massacre, the surviving vassals of the count of St. Pol escaped to Adrianople ; but the French and Venetians, who occupied that city, were slain or expelled by the furious multitude ; the garrisons that could effect their retreat, fell back on each other towards the metropolis ; and the fortresses, that separately stood against the rebels, were ignorant of each other's and of their sovereign's fate. The voice of fame and fear announced the revolt of the Greeks and the rapid approach of their Bulgarian ally ; and Calo-John, not depending on the forces of his own kingdom, had drawn from the Scythian wilderness a body of fourteen thousand Comans, who drank, as it was said, the blood of their captives, and sacrificed the Christians on the altars of their gods<sup>25</sup>.

Alarmed by this sudden and growing danger, the emperor dispatched a swift messenger to recall count Henry and his troops ; and had Baldwin expected the return of his gallant brother, with a supply of twenty thousand Armenians, he might have encountered the invader with equal numbers and a decisive superiority of arms and <sup>25</sup> The Comans were a Tartar or Turkman hord, which encamped in the xith and xiith centuries on the verge of Moldavia. The greater part were pagans, but some were Mahometans, and the whole hord was converted to Christianity (A. D. 1370) by Lewis king of Hungary.

C H A P.
LXI.
March.

discipline. But the spirit of chivalry could seldom discriminate caution from cowardice; and the emperor took the field with an hundred and forty knights, and their train of archers and serjeants. The marshal, who dissuaded and obeyed, led the vanguard in their march to Adrianople; the main body was commanded by the count of Blois; the aged doge of Venice followed with the rear; and their scanty numbers were increased from all sides by the fugitive Latins. They undertook to besiege the rebels of Adrianople; and such was the pious tendency of the crusades, that they employed the holy week in pillaging the country for their subsistence, and in framing engines for the destruction of their fellow-christians. But the Latins were soon interrupted and alarmed by the light cavalry of the Comans, who boldly skirmished to the edge of their imperfect lines: and a proclamation was issued by the marshal of Romania, that, on the trumpet's sound, the cavalry should mount and form; but that none, under pain of death, should abandon themselves to a desultory and dangerous pursuit. This wise injunction was first disobeyed by the count of Blois, who involved the emperor in his rashness and ruin. The Comans, of the Parthian or Tartar school, fled before their first charge; but after a career of two leagues, when the knights and their horses were almost breathless, they suddenly turned, rallied, and encompassed the heavy squadrons of the Franks. The count was slain on the field; the emperor was made prisoner; and if the one disdained to fly, if the other refused to yield, their personal bravery made a poor atonement for their ignorance, or neglect, of the duties of a general<sup>26</sup>.

Defeat and captivity of Baldwin,
A. D. 1205,
April 15.

Proud of his victory and his royal prize, the Bulgarian advanced to relieve Adrianople and achieve the destruction of the Latins. They must inevitably have been destroyed, if the marshal of Ro-

<sup>26</sup> Nicetas, from ignorance or malice, imputes the defeat to the cowardice of Dandolo (p. 383.); but Villehardouin shares his own glory with his venerable friend, qui vielz lionie ére et gote ne veoit, mais mult ére fages et preus et vigueros (N<sup>o</sup> 193.).

mania had not displayed a cool courage and consummate skill; uncommon in all ages, but most uncommon in those times, when war was a passion, rather than a science. His grief and fears were poured into the firm and faithful bosom of the doge; but in the camp he diffused an assurance of safety, which could only be realized by the general belief. All day he maintained his perilous station between the city and the Barbarians: Villehardouin decamped in silence, at the dead of night; and his masterly retreat of three days would have deserved the praise of Xenophon and the ten thousand. In the rear, the marshal supported the weight of the pursuit; in the front, he moderated the impatience of the fugitives; and wherever the Comans approached, they were repelled by a line of impenetrable spears. On the third day, the weary troops beheld the sea, the solitary town of Rodosto<sup>27</sup>, and their friends, who had landed from the Asiatic shore. They embraced, they wept; but they united their arms and counsels; and, in his brother's absence, count Henry assumed the regency of the empire, at once in a state of childhood and caducity<sup>28</sup>. If the Comans withdrew from the summer heats, seven thousand Latins, in the hour of danger, deserted Constantinople, their brethren, and their vows. Some partial success was overbalanced by the loss of one hundred and twenty knights in the field of Rufium; and of the Imperial domain, no more was left, than the capital, with two or three adjacent fortresses on the shores of Europe and Asia. The king of Bulgaria was resistless and inexorable; and Calo-John respectfully eluded the demands of the pope, who conjured his new proselyte to restore peace and the emperor to the afflicted Latins. The deliverance of Baldwin was no longer,

C H A P.
LXI.Retreat of
the Latins.

<sup>27</sup> The truth of geography, and the original text of Villehardouin (N<sup>o</sup> 194.), place Rodosto three days journey (trois journées) from Adrianople; but Vigenere, in his version, has most absurdly substituted trois heures; and this error, which is not corrected by Ducange, has entrapped several moderns, whose names I shall spare.

<sup>28</sup> The reign and end of Baldwin are related by Villehardouin and Nicetas (p. 386—416.); and their omissions are supplied by Ducange in his Observations, and to the end of his first book.

C. H. A. P.
LXI.
Death of the emperor.

he said, in the power of man : that prince had died in prison ; and the manner of his death is variously related by ignorance and credulity. The lovers of a tragic legend will be pleased to hear, that the royal captive was tempted by the amorous queen of the Bulgarians ; that his chaste refusal exposed him to the falsehood of a woman and the jealousy of a savage ; that his hands and feet were severed from his body ; that his bleeding trunk was cast among the carcases of dogs and horses ; and that he breathed three days, before he was devoured by the birds of prey<sup>29</sup>. About twenty years afterwards, in a wood of the Netherlands, an hermit announced himself as the true Baldwin, the emperor of Constantinople, and lawful sovereign of Flanders. He related the wonders of his escape, his adventures, and his penance, among a people prone to believe and to rebel ; and, in the first transport, Flanders acknowledged her long-lost sovereign. A short examination before the French court detected the impostor, who was punished with an ignominious death ; but the Flemings still adhered to the pleasing error ; and the countess Jane is accused by the gravest historians of sacrificing to her ambition the life of an unfortunate father<sup>30</sup>.

Reign and
character of Henry,
A. D. 1206,
August 20—
A. D. 1216,
June 11.

In all civilized hostility, a treaty is established for the exchange or ransom of prisoners ; and if their captivity be prolonged, their condition is known, and they are treated according to their rank with humanity or honour. But the savage Bulgarian was a stranger to the laws of war ; his prisons were involved in darkness and silence ; and above a year elapsed before the Latins could be assured of the death of Baldwin, before his brother, the regent Henry, would consent to assume the title of emperor. His moderation was applauded

<sup>29</sup> After brushing away all doubtful and improbable circumstances, we may prove the death of Baldwin, 1. By the firm belief of the French barons (Villehardouin, N<sup>o</sup> 230.). 2. By the declaration of Calo-John himself, who excuses his not releasing the captive emperor, quia debitum carnis exsolverat cum carcere teneretur (Gesta Innocent. III. c. 109.).

<sup>30</sup> See the story of this impostor from the French and Flemish writers in Ducange, Hist. de C. P. iii. 9. and the ridiculous fables that were believed by the monks of St. Alban's, in Matthew Paris, Hist. Major, p. 271, 272.

by the Greeks as an act of rare and inimitable virtue. Their light and perfidious ambition was eager to seize or anticipate the moment of a vacancy, while a law of succession, the guardian both of the prince and people, was gradually defined and confirmed in the hereditary monarchies of Europe. In the support of the Eastern empire, Henry was gradually left without an associate, as the heroes of the crusade retired from the world or from the war. The doge of Venice, the venerable Dandolo, in the fulness of years and glory, sunk into the grave. The marquis of Montferrat was slowly recalled from the Peloponnesian war to the revenge of Baldwin and the defence of Thessalonica. Some nice disputes of feudal homage and service, were reconciled in a personal interview between the emperor and the king: they were firmly united by mutual esteem and the common danger; and their alliance was sealed by the nuptial of Henry with the daughter of the Italian prince. He soon deplored the loss of his friend and father. At the persuasion of some faithful Greeks, Boniface made a bold and successful inroad among the hills of Rhodope: the Bulgarians fled on his approach; they assembled to harass his retreat. On the intelligence that his rear was attacked, without waiting for any defensive armour, he leaped on horseback, couched his lance, and drove the enemies before him; but in the rash pursuit he was pierced with a mortal wound; and the head of the king of Thessalonica was presented to Calo-John, who enjoyed the honours, without the merit, of victory. It is here, at this melancholy event, that the pen or the voice of Jeffrey of Villehardouin seems to drop or to expire<sup>31</sup>; and if he still exercised his military office of marshal of Romania, his subsequent exploits are buried in oblivion<sup>32</sup>. The character of Henry was not unequal

C H A P.
LXI.

to

<sup>31</sup> Villehardouin, N° 257. I quote, with regret, this lamentable conclusion, where we lose at once the original history, and the rich illustrations of Ducange. The last pages may derive some light from Henry's two

Epistles to Innocent III. (Gesta, c. 106, 107.)

<sup>32</sup> The marshal was alive in 1212, but he probably died soon afterwards, without returning to France (Ducange, Observations sur

sur

C H A P.
LXI.

to his arduous situation: in the siege of Constantinople, and beyond the Hellespont, he had deserved the fame of a valiant knight and a skilful commander; and his courage was tempered with a degree of prudence and mildness unknown to his impetuous brother. In the double war against the Greeks of Asia and the Bulgarians of Europe, he was ever the foremost on shipboard or on horseback; and though he cautiously provided for the success of his arms, the drooping Latins were often roused by his example to save and to second their fearless emperor. But such efforts, and some supplies of men and money from France, were of less avail than the errors, the cruelty, and death, of their most formidable adversary. When the despair of the Greek subjects invited Calo-John as their deliverer, they hoped that he would protect their liberty and adopt their laws: they were soon taught to compare the degrees of national ferocity, and to execrate the savage conqueror, who no longer dissembled his intention of dispeopling Thrace, of demolishing the cities, and of transplanting the inhabitants beyond the Danube. Many towns and villages of Thrace were already evacuated: an heap of ruins marked the place of Philippopolis, and a similar calamity was expected at Demotica and Adrianople, by the first authors of the revolt. They raised a cry of grief and repentance to the throne of Henry; the emperor alone had the magnanimity to forgive and trust them. No more than four hundred knights, with their serjeants and archers, could be assembled under his banner; and with this slender force he fought and repulsed the Bulgarian, who, besides his infantry, was at the head of forty thousand horse. In this expedition, Henry felt the difference between an hostile and a friendly country; the remaining cities were preserved by his arms; and the savage, with shame and loss, was compelled to relinquish his prey. The siege of Thessalonica was the last of the evils which for Villehardouin, p. 238.). His siege of the time of Ammianus Marcellinus, among Messinople, the gift of Boniface, was the the cities of Thrace (N<sup>o</sup> 141.). ancient Maximianopolis, which flourished in Calo-John inflicted or suffered: he was stabbed in the night in his tent; and the general, perhaps the assassin, who found him weltering in his blood, ascribed the blow with general applause to the lance of St. Demetrius<sup>33</sup>. After several victories, the prudence of Henry concluded an honourable peace with the successor of the tyrant, and with the Greek princes of Nice and Epirus. If he ceded some doubtful limits, an ample kingdom was reserved for himself and his feudatories; and his reign, which lasted only ten years, afforded a short interval of prosperity and peace. Far above the narrow policy of Baldwin and Boniface, he freely entrusted to the Greeks the most important offices of the state and army: and this liberality of sentiment and practice, was the more seasonable, as the princes of Nice and Epirus had already learned to seduce and employ the mercenary valour of the Latins. It was the aim of Henry to unite and reward his deserving subjects of every nation and language; but he appeared less solicitous to accomplish the impracticable union of the two churches. Pelagius, the pope's legate, who acted as the sovereign of Constantinople, had interdicted the worship of the Greeks, and sternly imposed the payment of tithes, the double procession of the Holy Ghost, and a blind obedience to the Roman pontiff. As the weaker party, they pleaded the duties of conscience, and implored the rights of toleration: "Our bodies," they said, "are Cæsar's, but our souls belong only to God." The persecution was checked by the firmness of the emperor<sup>34</sup>; and if we can believe that the same prince was poisoned by the Greeks themselves, we must entertain a contemptible idea of the sense and gratitude of mankind. His valour was a vulgar attribute, which he shared with ten thousand knights; but Henry possessed the superior courage to oppose, in a superstitious age, the pride and avarice of the clergy. In the cathedral of St.

C H A P.
LXI.

<sup>33</sup> The church of this patron of Thessalonica was served by the canons of the holy sepulchre, and contained a divine ointment which distilled daily and stupendous miracles

(Ducange, Hist. de C. P. ii. 4.).

<sup>34</sup> Acropolita (c. 17.) observes the persecution of the legate, and the toleration of Henry (Έφν as he calls him), καὶ δὲ κατὰ κράτος

C H A P.
LXI.

Sophia he presumed to place his throne on the right-hand of the patriarch; and this presumption excited the sharpest censure of pope Innocent the third. By a salutary edict, one of the first examples of the laws of mortmain, he prohibited the alienation of fiefs; many of the Latins, desirous of returning to Europe, resigned their estates to the church for a spiritual or temporal reward; these holy lands were immediately discharged from military service; and a colony of soldiers would have been gradually transformed into a college of priests<sup>35</sup>.

Peter of Courtenay,
emperor of Constantino-
ple,
A. D. 1217,
April 9.

The virtuous Henry died at Thessalonica, in the defence of that kingdom, and of an infant, the son of his friend Boniface. In the two first emperors of Constantinople the male line of the counts of Flanders was extinct. But their sister Yolande was the wife of a French prince, the mother of a numerous progeny; and one of her daughters had married Andrew king of Hungary, a brave and pious champion of the cross. By seating him on the Byzantine throne, the barons of Romania would have acquired the forces of a neighbouring and warlike kingdom; but the prudent Andrew revered the laws of succession; and the princess Yolande, with her husband Peter of Courtenay, count of Auxerre, was invited by the Latins to assume the empire of the East. The royal birth of his father, the noble origin of his mother, recommended to the barons of France the first cousin of their king. His reputation was fair, his possessions were ample, and, in the bloody crusade against the Albigeois, the soldiers and the priests had been abundantly satisfied of his zeal and valour. Vanity might applaud the elevation of a French emperor of Constantinople; but prudence must pity, rather than envy, his treacherous and imaginary greatness. To assert and adorn his title, he was reduced to sell or mortgage the best of his patrimony. By these expedients, the liberality of his royal kinsman Philip Augustus, and the national spirit of chivalry, he was enabled to pass the Alps at the head of one hundred and forty knights, and five thousand five hundred serjeants and archers. After some hesitation, pope Honorius the third was persuaded to crown the successor of Constantine; but he performed the ceremony in a church without the walls, lest he should seem to imply or to bestow any right of sovereignty over the ancient capital of the empire. The Venetians had engaged to transport Peter and his forces beyond the Adriatic, and the empress, with her four children, to the Byzantine palace; but they required, as the price of their service, that he should recover Durazzo from the despot of Epirus. Michael Angelus, or Comnenus, the first of his dynasty, had bequeathed the succession of his power and ambition to Theodore, his legitimate brother, who already threatened and invaded the establishments of the Latins. After discharging his debt by a fruitless assault, the emperor raised the siege to prosecute a long and perilous journey over land from Durazzo to Theffalonica. He was soon lost in the mountains of Epirus: the passes were fortified; his provisions exhausted: he was delayed and deceived by a treacherous negotiation; and, after Peter of Courtenay and the Roman legate had been arrested in a banquet, the French troops, without leaders or hopes, were eager to exchange their arms for the delusive promise of mercy and bread. The Vatican thundered; and the impious Theodore was threatened with the vengeance of earth and heaven; but the captive emperor and his soldiers were forgotten, and the reproaches of the pope are confined to the imprisonment of his legate. No sooner was he satisfied by the deliverance of the priest and a promise of spiritual obedience, than he pardoned and protected the despot of Epirus. His peremptory commands suspended the ardour of the Venetians and the king of Hungary; and it was only by a

<sup>35</sup> See the reign of HENRY, in Ducange (Hist. de C. P. l. i. c. 35—41. l. ii. c. 1—22.), who is much indebted to the Epistles of the Popes. Le Beau (Hist. du Bas-Empire, tom. xxi. p. 120—122.) has found, perhaps in Doutreman, some laws of Henry, which determined the service of fiefs, and the prerogatives of the emperor.

C H A P.
LXI.

His captivity
and death,
A. D.
1217—1219.

C H A P.
LXI.

Robert emperor of Constantinople,
A. D.
1221—1228.

natural or untimely death<sup>36</sup> that Peter of Courtenay was released from his hopeless captivity<sup>37</sup>.

The long ignorance of his fate, and the presence of the lawful sovereign, of Yolande, his wife or widow, delayed the proclamation of a new emperor. Before her death, and in the midst of her grief, she was delivered of a son, who was named Baldwin, the last and most unfortunate of the Latin princes of Constantinople. His birth endeared him to the barons of Romania; but his childhood would have prolonged the troubles of a minority, and his claims were superseded by the elder claims of his brethren. The first of these, Philip of Courtenay, who derived from his mother the inheritance of Namur, had the wisdom to prefer the substance of a marquisate to the shadow of an empire; and on his refusal, Robert, the second of the sons of Peter and Yolande, was called to the throne of Constantinople. Warned by his father's mischance, he pursued his slow and secure journey through Germany and along the Danube: a passage was opened by his sister's marriage with the king of Hungary; and the emperor Robert was crowned by the patriarch in the cathedral of St. Sophia. But his reign was an æra of calamity and disgrace; and the colony, as it was styled, of NEW FRANCE yielded on all sides to the Greeks of Nice and Epirus. After a victory, which he owed to his perfidy rather than his courage, Theodore Angelus entered the kingdom of Thessalonica, expelled the feeble Demetrius, the son of the marquis Boniface, erected his standard on the walls of Adrianople; and added, by his vanity, a third or a fourth name to the list of rival emperors. The relics of the Asiatic province were swept away by John Vataces, the son-in-law and successor of Theodore Lascaris, and who, in a triumphant reign of thirty-three years,

<sup>36</sup> Acropolita (c. 14.) affirms, that Peter of Courtenay died by the sword (ὑπομαχλήν ἐκ τῆς μάχης): but from his dark expressions, I should conclude a previous captivity, ὡς πάντας ἀπὸν δεσμώτας πικρῶν σὺν πᾶσι σκῆμασι. The Chronicle of Auxerre delays the emperor's death till the year 1219; and Auxerre is in the neighbourhood of Courtenay.

<sup>37</sup> See the reign and death of Peter of Courtenay, in Ducange (Hist. de C. P. 1. ii. c. 22—28.), who feebly strives to excuse the neglect of the emperor by Honorius III.

displayed the virtues both of peace and war. Under his discipline the swords of the French mercenaries were the most effectual instrument of his conquests, and their desertion from the service of their country was at once a symptom and a cause of the rising ascendant of the Greeks. By the construction of a fleet, he obtained the command of the Hellespont, reduced the islands of Lesbos and Rhodes, attacked the Venetians of Candia, and intercepted the rare and parsimonious succours of the West. Once, and once only, the Latin emperor sent an army against Vataces; and in the defeat of that army, the veteran knights, the last of the original conquerors, were left on the field of battle. But the success of a foreign enemy was less painful to the pusillanimous Robert than the insolence of his Latin subjects, who confounded the weakness of the emperor and of the empire. His personal misfortunes will prove the anarchy of the government and the ferociousness of the times. The amorous youth had neglected his Greek bride, the daughter of Vataces, to introduce into the palace a beautiful maid, of a private, though noble, family of Artois; and her mother had been tempted by the lustre of the purple to forfeit her engagements with a gentleman of Burgundy. His love was converted into rage; he assembled his friends, forced the palace gates, threw the mother into the sea, and inhumanly cut off the nose and lips of the wife or concubine of the emperor. Instead of punishing the offender, the barons avowed and applauded the savage deed<sup>38</sup>, which, as a prince and as a man, it was impossible that Baldwin should forgive. He escaped from the guilty city to implore the justice or compassion of the pope: the emperor was coolly exhorted to return to his station; before he could obey, he sunk under the weight of grief, shame, and impotent resentment<sup>39</sup>.

<sup>38</sup> Marius Sanutus (Secreta Fidelium emplum. Yet he acknowledges the same for the lawful wife of Robert.
Cruis, l. ii. p. iv. c. 18. p. 73.) is so much delighted with this bloody deed, that he has transcribed it in his margin as a bonum exemplum. See the reign of Robert, in Durand's Hist. de C. P. l. iii. c. 1—11.

C H A P.
LXI.

Baldwin II.
and John of Brienne, em-perors of Constantinople,

A. D.
1228—1237.

It was only in the age of chivalry, that valour could ascend from a private station to the thrones of Jerusalem and Constantinople. The titular kingdom of Jerusalem had devolved to Mary, the daughter of Isabella and Conrad of Montferrat, and the granddaughter of Almeric or Amaury. She was given to John of Brienne, of a noble family in Champagne, by the public voice, and the judgment of Philip Augustus, who named him as the most worthy champion of the Holy Land<sup>40</sup>. In the fifth crusade, he led an hundred thousand Latins to the conquest of Egypt; by him the siege of Damietta was achieved; and the subsequent failure was justly ascribed to the pride and avarice of the legate. After the marriage of his daughter with Frederic the second<sup>41</sup>, he was provoked by the emperor's ingratitude to accept the command of the army of the church; and though advanced in life and despoiled of royalty, the sword and spirit of John of Brienne were still ready for the service of Christendom. In the seven years of his brother's reign, Baldwin of Courtenay had not emerged from a state of childhood, and the barons of Romania felt the strong necessity of placing the sceptre in the hands of a man and an hero. The veteran king of Jerusalem might have disdained the name and office of regent; they agreed to invest him for his life with the title and prerogatives of emperor, on the sole condition, that Baldwin should marry his second daughter, and succeed at a mature age to the throne of Constantinople. The expectation, both of the Greeks and Latins, was kindled by the renown, the choice, and the presence of John of Brienne: and they admired his martial aspect, his green and vigorous age of more than fourscore years, and his size and stature, which surpassed the common measure of mankind<sup>42</sup>. But avarice, and the love of ease, appear to have chilled the ardour of enterprize: his troops were disbanded, and two years rolled away without action or honour, till he was awakened by the dangerous alliance of Vataces emperor of Nice, and of Azan king of Bulgaria. They besieged Constantinople by sea and land, with an army of one hundred thousand men, and a fleet of three hundred ships of war; while the entire force of the Latin emperor was reduced to one hundred and sixty knights, and a small addition of serjeants and archers. I tremble to relate, that instead of defending the city, the hero made a folly at the head of his cavalry; and that of forty-eight squadrons of the enemy, no more than three escaped from the edge of his invincible sword. Fired by his example, the infantry and the citizens boarded the vessels that anchored close to the walls; and twenty-five were dragged in triumph into the harbour of Constantinople. At the summons of the emperor, the vassals and allies armed in her defence; broke through every obstacle that opposed their passage; and, in the succeeding year, obtained a second victory over the same enemies. By the rude poets of the age, John of Brienne is compared to Hector, Roland, and Judas Machabæus<sup>43</sup>: but their credit, and his glory, receives some abatement from the silence of the Greeks. The empire was soon deprived of the last of her champions; and the dying monarch was ambitious to enter paradise in the habit of a Franciscan friar<sup>44</sup>.

<sup>40</sup> Rex igitur Francie, deliberatione habitâ respondit nuntiis, se daturum hominem Syriæ partibus aptum; in armis probum (preux), in bellis securum, in agendis providum, Johannem comitem Brennensem. Sannut. Secret. Fidelium, l. iii. p. xi. c. 4.

p. 205. Matthew Paris, p. 159.

<sup>41</sup> Giannone (Istoria Civile, tom. ii. l. xvi. p. 380—385.) discusses the marriage of Frederic II. with the daughter of John of Brienne, and the double union of the crowns of Naples and Jerusalem.

C H A P.
LXI.

<sup>42</sup> Acropolis, c. 27. The historian was at that time a boy, and educated at Constantinople. In 1233, when he was eleven years old, his father broke the Latin chain, left a splendid fortune, and escaped to the Greek court of Nice, where his son was raised to the highest honours.

<sup>43</sup> Philip Moufkes, bishop of Tournay (A.D. 1274—1282), has composed a poem, or rather a string of verses, in bad old Flemish French, on the Latin emperors of Constantinople, which Ducange has published at the end of Villehardouin; see p. 224. for the proofs of John of Brienne.

N'Aie, Ector, Roll' ne Ogiers
Ne Judas Machabeus li fiers
Tant ne fit d'armes en eïlors
Com fist li Rois Jehans cel jors
Et il defors et il dedans
La paru sa force et ses sens
Et li hardiment qu'il avoit.

<sup>44</sup> See the reign of John de Brienne, in Ducange, Hist. de C. P. l. iii. c. 13—26.

C H A P.
LXI.

Baldwin II.
A. D. 1237,
March 23—
A. D. 1261,
July 25.

In the double victory of John of Brienne, I cannot discover the name or exploits of his pupil Baldwin; who had attained the age of military service, and who succeeded to the Imperial dignity on the decease of his adoptive father<sup>45</sup>. The royal youth was employed on a commission more suitable to his temper; he was sent to visit the Western courts, of the pope more especially, and of the king of France; to excite their pity by the view of his innocence and distress; and to obtain some supplies of men or money, for the relief of the sinking empire. He thrice repeated these mendicant visits, in which he seemed to prolong his stay and postpone his return; of the five-and-twenty years of his reign, a greater number were spent abroad than at home; and in no place did the emperor deem himself less free and secure, than in his native country, and his capital. On some public occasions, his vanity might be soothed by the title of Augustus, and by the honours of the purple; and at the general council of Lyons, when Frederic the second was excommunicated and deposed, his Oriental colleague was enthroned on the right-hand of the pope. But how often was the exile, the vagrant, the Imperial beggar, humbled with scorn, insulted with pity, and degraded in his own eyes and those of the nations? In his first visit to England, he was stopped at Dover, by a severe reprimand, that he should presume, without leave, to enter an independent kingdom. After some delay, Baldwin however was permitted to pursue his journey, was entertained with cold civility, and thankfully departed with a present of seven hundred marks<sup>46</sup>. From the avarice of Rome, he could only obtain the proclamation of a crusade and a treasure of indulgences; a coin, whose currency was depreciated by too frequent and indiscriminate abuse. His birth and misfortunes recommended him to the generosity of his cousin Louis the ninth ; but the martial zeal of the saint was diverted from Constantinople to Egypt and Palestine ; and the public and private poverty of Baldwin was alleviated, for a moment, by the alienation of the marquisate of Namur and the lordship of Courtenay, the last remains of his inheritance<sup>47</sup>. By such shameful or ruinous expedients, he once more returned to Romania, with an army of thirty thousand soldiers, whose numbers were doubled in the apprehension of the Greeks. His first dispatches to France and England announced his victories and his hopes : he had reduced the country round the capital to the distance of three days journey ; and if he succeeded against an important, though nameless, city (most probably Chiorli), the frontier would be safe and the passage accessible. But these expectations (if Baldwin was sincere) quickly vanished like a dream ; the troops and treasures of France melted away in his unskilful hands ; and the throne of the Latin emperor was protected by a dishonourable alliance with the Turks and Comans. To secure the former, he consented to bestow his niece on the unbelieving sultan of Cegni ; to please the latter, he complied with their Pagan rites ; a dog was sacrificed between the two armies ; and the contracting parties tasted each other's blood, as a pledge of their fidelity<sup>48</sup>. In the palace or prison of Constantinople, the successor of Augustus demolished the vacant houses for winter-fuel, and stripped the lead from the churches for the daily expence of his family. Some usurious loans were dealt with a scanty hand by the merchants of Italy ; and Philip, his son and heir, was pawned at Venice as the security for a debt<sup>49</sup>. Thirst, hunger, and nakedness, are positive evils ; but wealth is relative ;

<sup>45</sup> See the reign of Baldwin II. till his expulsion from Constantinople, in Ducange, Hist. de C. P. l. ix. c. 1—34. the end l. v. c. 1—33.

<sup>46</sup> Matthew Paris relates the two visits of Baldwin II. to the English court, p. 376. 637.: his return to Greece amara matru, p. 407.: his letters of his nomen formidabile, &c. p. 481. (a passage which had escaped Ducange): his expulsion, p. 530.

C H A P.
LXI.
~~~~~

<sup>47</sup> Louis IX. disapproved and stopped the alienation of Courtenay (Ducange, l. iv. c. 23.). It is now annexed to the royal demesne, but granted for a term (engagé) to the family of Boulainvilliers. Courtenay, in the election of Nemours in the Isle de France, is a town of 900 inhabitants with the remains of a castle (Melanges tirés d'une grand Bibliothèque, tom. xlv. p. 74—77.

<sup>48</sup> Joinville, p. 104. edit. du Louvre. A Coman prince, who died without baptism, was buried at the gates of Constantinople with a live retinue of slaves and horses.

<sup>49</sup> Sanut. Secret. Fidel. Crucis, l. ii. p. iv. c. 18. p. 73.

and

C H A P.
LXI.

The holy crown of thorns.

and a prince, who would be rich in a private station, may be exposed by the encrease of his wants to all the anxiety and bitterness of poverty.

But in this abject distress, the emperor and empire were still possessed of an ideal treasure, which drew its fantastic value from the superstition of the Christian world. The merit of the true cross was somewhat impaired by its frequent division; and a long captivity among the infidels might shed some suspicion on the fragments that were produced in the East and West. But another relic of the Passion was preserved in the Imperial chapel of Constantinople; and the crown of thorns which had been placed on the head of Christ was equally precious and authentic. It had formerly been the practice of the Egyptian debtors to deposit, as a security, the mummies of their parents; and both their honour and religion were bound for the redemption of the pledge. In the same manner, and in the absence of the emperor, the barons of Romania borrowed the sum of thirteen thousand one hundred and thirty-four pieces of gold<sup>50</sup>, on the credit of the holy crown: they failed in the performance of their contract; and a rich Venetian, Nicholas Querini, undertook to satisfy their impatient creditors, on condition that the relic should be lodged at Venice, to become his absolute property, if it were not redeemed within a short and definite term. The barons apprised their sovereign of the hard treaty and impending loss; and as the empire could not afford a ransom of seven thousand pounds sterling, Baldwin was anxious to snatch the prize from the Venetians, and to vest it with more honour and emolument in the hands of the most Christian king<sup>51</sup>. Yet the negotiation was attended with some delicacy. In the purchase of relics, the faint

<sup>50</sup> Under the words, Perparus, Perpera, Hyperperum, Ducange is short and vague: Monetæ genus. From a corrupt passage of Guntherus (Hist. C. P. c. 8. p. 10.), I guess, that the Perpera was the nummus aureus, the fourth part of a mark of silver, or about ten shillings sterling in value. In lead, it would be too contemptible.

<sup>51</sup> For the translation of the holy crown, &c. from Constantinople to Paris, see Ducange (Hist. de C. P. l. iv. c. 11—14. 24. 35.) and Fleury (Hist. Eccles. tom. xvii. p. 201—204.).

would have started at the guilt of simony; but if the mode of expression were changed, he might lawfully repay the debt, accept the gift, and acknowledge the obligation. His ambassadors, two Dominicans, were dispatched to Venice, to redeem and receive the holy crown, which had escaped the dangers of the sea and the gallees of Vataces. On opening a wooden box, they recognised the seals of the doge and barons, which were applied on a shrine of silver: and within this shrine, the monument of the Passion was inclosed in a golden vase. The reluctant Venetians yielded to justice and power: the emperor Frederic granted a free and honourable passage; the court of France advanced as far as Troyes in Champagne, to meet with devotion this inestimable relic: it was borne in triumph through Paris by the king himself, barefoot, and in his shirt; and a free gift of ten thousand marks of silver reconciled Baldwin to his loss. The success of this transaction tempted the Latin emperor to offer with the same generosity the remaining furniture of his chapel<sup>52</sup>; a large and authentic portion of the true cross; the baby-linen of the Son of God; the lance, the sponge, and the chain, of his Passion; the rod of Moses, and part of the skull of St. John the baptist. For the reception of these spiritual treasures, twenty thousand marks were expended by St. Louis on a stately foundation, the holy chapel of Paris, on which the muse of Boileau has bestowed a comic immortality. The truth of such remote and ancient relics, which cannot be proved by any human testimony, must be admitted by those who believe in the miracles which they have performed. About the middle of the last age, an inveterate ulcer was touched and cured by an holy prickle of the holy crown<sup>53</sup>: the prodigy is attested by the most pious and enlightened Christians of France; nor

<sup>52</sup> Melanges tirés d'une grande Bibliothèque, tom. xliii. p. 201—205. The Lutrin of Boileau exhibits the inside, the soul and manners of the Sainte Chapelle; and many facts relative to the institution are collected and explained by his commentators, Broffette and de St. Marc.

<sup>53</sup> It was performed A.D. 1656, March 24, on the niece of Pascal; and that superior genius, with Arnauld, Nicole, &c. were on the spot to believe and attest a miracle which confounded the Jesuits, and saved Port Royal (Oeuvres de Racine, tom. vi. p. 176—187. in his eloquent History of Port Royal).

C H A P.
LXI.

Progress of the Greeks,
A. D.
1237—1261.

will the fact be easily disproved, except by those who are armed with a general antidote against religious credulity<sup>54</sup>.

The Latins of Constantinople<sup>55</sup> were on all sides encompassed and pressed: their sole hope, the last delay of their ruin, was in the division of their Greek and Bulgarian enemies; and of this hope they were deprived by the superior arms and policy of Vataces emperor of Nice. From the Propontis to the rocky coast of Pamphylia, Asia was peaceful and prosperous under his reign: and the events of every campaign extended his influence in Europe. The strong cities of the hills of Macedonia and Thrace, were rescued from the Bulgarians; and their kingdom was circumscribed by its present and proper limits, along the southern banks of the Danube. The sole emperor of the Romans could no longer brook that a lord of Epirus, a Comnenian prince of the West, should presume to dispute or share the honours of the purple; and the humble Demetrius changed the colour of his buskins, and accepted with gratitude the appellation of despot. His own subjects were exasperated by his baseness and incapacity: they implored the protection of their supreme lord. After some resistance, the kingdom of Thessalonica was united to the empire of Nice; and Vataces reigned without a competitor from the Turkish borders to the Adriatic gulf. The princes of Europe revered his merit and power; and had he subscribed an orthodox creed, it should seem that the pope would have abandoned without reluctance the Latin throne of Constantinople. But the death of Vataces, the short and busy reign of Theodore his son, and the helpless infancy of his grandson John, suspended the restoration of

<sup>54</sup> Voltaire (Siecle de Louis XIV. c. 37. Oeuvres, tom. ix. p. 178, 179) strives to invalidate the fact: but Hume (Essays, vol. ii. p. 483, 484.), with more skill and success, seizes the battery, and turns the cannon against his enemies.

<sup>55</sup> The gradual losses of the Latins may be traced in the third, fourth, and fifth books of the compilation of Ducange: but of the Greek conquests he has dropped many circumstances, which may be recovered from the larger history of George Acropolita, and the three first books of Nicephorus Gregoras, two writers of the Byzantine series, who have had the good fortune to meet with learned editors, Leo Allatius at Rome, and John Boivin in the Academy of Inscriptions of Paris.

the Greeks. In the next chapter, I shall explain their domestic revolutions; in this place, it will be sufficient to observe, that the young prince was oppressed by the ambition of his guardian and colleague Michael Palæologus, who displayed the virtues and vices that belong to the founder of a new dynasty. The emperor Baldwin had flattered himself, that he might recover some provinces or cities by an impotent negotiation. His ambassadors were dismissed from Nice with mockery and contempt. At every place which they named, Palæologus alleged some special reason, which rendered it dear and valuable in his eyes: in the one he was born; in another he had been first promoted to military command; and in a third he had enjoyed, and hoped long to enjoy, the pleasures of the chase. "And what then do you propose to give us?" said the astonished deputies. "Nothing," replied the Greek, "not a foot of land. If your master be desirous of peace, let him pay me as an annual tribute, the sum which he receives from the trade and customs of Constantinople. On these terms, I may allow him to reign. If he refuses, it is war. I am not ignorant of the art of war, and I trust the event to God and my sword<sup>56</sup>." An expedition against the despot of Epirus was the first prelude of his arms. If a victory was followed by a defeat; if the race of the Comneni or Angeli survived in those mountains his efforts and his reign; the captivity of Villehardouin, prince of Achaia, deprived the Latins of the most active and powerful vassal of their expiring monarchy. The republics of Venice and Genoa disputed, in the first of their naval wars, the command of the sea and the commerce of the East. Pride and interest attached the Venetians to the defence of Constantinople; their rivals were tempted to promote the designs of her enemies, and the alliance of the Genoese with the schismatic conqueror provoked the indignation of the Latin church<sup>57</sup>.

C H A P.
LXI.

Michael Palæologus, the Greek emperor, A. D. 1259, December 1.

Intent

<sup>56</sup> George Acropolita, c. 78. p. 89, 90. edit. Paris.

<sup>57</sup> The Greeks, ashamed of any foreign aid, disguise the alliance and succour of the

C H A P.
LXI.

Constantinople recovered by the Greeks,
A. D. 1261,
July 25.

Intent on his great object, the emperor Michael visited in person and strengthened the troops and fortifications of Thrace. The remains of the Latins were driven from their last possessions: he assaulted without success the suburb of Galata; and corresponded with a perfidious baron, who proved unwilling, or unable, to open the gates of the metropolis. The next spring, his favourite general, Alexius Strategopulus, whom he had decorated with the title of Cæsar, passed the Hellespont with eight hundred horse and some infantry<sup>58</sup>, on a secret expedition. His instructions enjoined him to approach, to listen, to watch, but not to risk any doubtful or dangerous enterprise against the city. The adjacent territory between the Propontis and the Black Sea, was cultivated by an hardy race of peasants and outlaws, exercised in arms, uncertain in their allegiance, but inclined by language, religion, and present advantage, to the party of the Greeks. They were styled the volunteers<sup>59</sup>, and by their free service, the army of Alexius, with the regulars of Thrace and the Coman auxiliaries<sup>60</sup>, was augmented to the number of five-and-twenty thousand men. By the ardour of the volunteers, and by his own ambition, the Cæsar was stimulated to disobey the precise orders of his master, in the just confidence that success would plead his pardon and reward. The weakness of Constantinople, and the distress and terror of the Latins, were familiar to the observation of the volunteers: and they represented the present moment as the most propitious to surprise and conquest. A rash youth, the new go-

Genoese; but the fact is proved by the testimony of J. Villani (Chron. l. vi. c. 71. in Muratori, Script. Rerum Italicarum, tom. xiii. p. 202, 203.) and William de Nangis (Annales de St. Louis, p. 248. in the Louvre Joinville), two impartial foreigners; and Urban IV. threatened to deprive Genoa of her archbishop.

<sup>58</sup> Some precautions must be used in reconciling the discordant numbers; the 800 soldiers of Nicetas, the 25,000 of Spandugino (apud Ducange, l. v. c. 24.); the Greeks and Scythians of Acropolita, and the numerous army of Michael, in the Epistles of Pope Urban IV. (l. i. c. 129.)

<sup>59</sup> Θελήματα. They are described and named by Pachymer (l. ii. c. 14.).

<sup>60</sup> It is needless to seek these Comans in the deserts of Tartary, or even of Moldavia. A part of the hord had submitted to John Vataces, and was probably settled as a nursery of soldiers on some waste lands of Thrace (Cantacuzen, l. i. c. 2.).

governor of the Venetian colony, had sailed away with thirty galleys and the best of the French knights, on a wild expedition to Daphnia, a town on the Black Sea, at the distance of forty leagues; and the remaining Latins were without strength or suspicion. They were informed that Alexius had passed the Hellespont; but their apprehensions were lulled by the smallness of his original numbers; and their imprudence had not watched the subsequent increase of his army. If he left his main body to second and support his operations, he might advance unperceived in the night with a chosen detachment. While some applied scaling-ladders to the lowest part of the walls, they were secure of an old Greek, who would introduce their companions through a subterraneous passage into his house; they could soon on the inside break an entrance through the golden gate, which had been long obstructed; and the conqueror would be in the heart of the city, before the Latins were conscious of their danger. After some debate, the Cæsar resigned himself to the faith of the volunteers; they were trusty, bold, and successful; and in describing the plan, I have already related the execution and success<sup>64</sup>. But no sooner had Alexius passed the threshold of the golden gate, than he trembled at his own rashness; he paused, he deliberated; till the desperate volunteers urged him forwards, by the assurance that in retreat lay the greatest and most inevitable danger. Whilst the Cæsar kept his regulars in firm array, the Comans dispersed themselves on all sides; an alarm was sounded, and the threats of fire and pillage compelled the citizens to a decisive resolution. The Greeks of Constantinople remembered their native sovereigns; the Genoese merchants their recent alliance and Venetian foes; every quarter was in arms; and the air resounded with a general acclamation of “Long life and victory to Michael and John, the august

<sup>64</sup> The loss of Constantinople is briefly told by the Latins: the conquest is described with more satisfaction by the Greeks; by Acropolita (c. 85.), Pachymer (l. ii. c. 26, 27.), Nicephorus Gregoras (l. iv. c. 1, 2.). See Ducange, Hist. de C. P. l. v. c. 19—27.

<sup>65</sup> emperors

C H A. P. L. X I. "emperors of the Romans!" Their rival, Baldwin, was awakened by the sound; but the most pressing danger could not prompt him to draw his sword in the defence of a city which he deserted, perhaps, with more pleasure than regret: he fled from the palace to the sea-shore, where he descried the welcome sails of the fleet returning from the vain and fruitless attempt on Daphnusia. Constantinople was irrecoverably lost; but the Latin emperor and the principal families embarked on board the Venetian galleys, and steered for the isle of Eubœa, and afterwards for Italy, where the royal fugitive was entertained by the pope and Sicilian king with a mixture of contempt and pity. From the loss of Constantinople to his death, he consumed thirteen years, soliciting the Catholic powers to join in his restoration; the lesson had been familiar to his youth; nor was his last exile more indigent or shameful than his three former pilgrimages to the courts of Europe. His son Philip was the heir of an ideal empire; and the pretensions of his daughter Catherine were transported by her marriage to Charles of Valois, the brother of Philip the Fair king of France. The house of Courtenay was represented in the female line by successive alliances, till the title of emperor of Constantinople, too bulky and sonorous for a private name, modestly expired in silence and oblivion<sup>62</sup>.

General consequences of the crusades.

After this narrative of the expeditions of the Latins to Palestine and Constantinople, I cannot dismiss the subject without revolving the general consequences on the countries that were the scene, and on the nations that were the actors, of these memorable crusades<sup>63</sup>. As soon as the arms of the Franks were withdrawn, the impression, <sup>62</sup> See the three last books (l. v.—viii.), and the genealogical tables of Ducange. In the year 1382, the titular emperor of Constantinople was James de Baux, duke of Andria in the kingdom of Naples, the son of Margaret, daughter of Catherine de Valois, daughter of Catherine, daughter of Philip, son of Baldwin II. (Ducange, l. viii. c. 37, 38.).

It is uncertain whether he left any posterity. <sup>63</sup> Abulfeda, who saw the conclusion of the crusades, speaks of the kingdoms of the Franks, and those of the Negroes, as equally unknown (Prolegom. ad Geograph.). Had he not disdained the Latin language, how easily might the Syrian prince have found books and interpreters?

though

though not the memory, was crazed in the Mahometan realms of Egypt and Syria. The faithful disciples of the prophet were never tempted by a prophane desire to study the laws or language of the idolators; nor did the simplicity of their primitive manners receive the slightest alteration from their intercourse in peace and war with the unknown strangers of the West. The Greeks, who thought themselves proud, but who were only vain, shewed a disposition somewhat less inflexible. In the efforts for the recovery of their empire, they emulated the valour, discipline, and tactics, of their antagonists. The modern literature of the West they might justly despise; but its free spirit would instruct them in the rights of man; and some institutions of public and private life were adopted from the French. The correspondence of Constantinople and Italy diffused the knowledge of the Latin tongue; and several of the fathers and classics were at length honoured with a Greek version<sup>64</sup>. But the national and religious prejudices of the Orientals were inflamed by persecution; and the reign of the Latins confirmed the separation of the two churches.

If we compare, at the æra of the crusades, the Latins of Europe with the Greeks and Arabians, their respective degrees of knowledge, industry, and art, our rude ancestors must be content with the third rank in the scale of nations. Their successive improvement and present superiority may be ascribed to a peculiar energy of character, to an active and imitative spirit, unknown to their more polished rivals, who at that time were in a stationary or retrograde state. With such a disposition, the Latins should have derived the most early and essential benefits from a series of events which opened to their eyes the prospect of the world, and introduced them to a long and frequent intercourse with the more cultivated regions of the 1327—1353), has translated Cæsar's Commentaries, the Somnium Scipionis, the Metamorphoses and Heroides of Ovid, &c. (Fabric. Bib. Græc. tom. x. p. 533.)

C H A P
LXI.

<sup>64</sup> A short and superficial account of these versions from Latin into Greek, is given by Huet (de Interpretatione et de claris Interpretibus, p. 131—135.). Maximus Planudes, a monk of Constantinople (A. D.

C H A P.
LXI.

East. The first and most obvious progress was in trade and manufactures, in the arts which are strongly prompted by the thirst of wealth, the calls of necessity, and the gratification of the sense or vanity. Among the crowd of unthinking fanatics, a captive or a pilgrim might sometimes observe the superior refinements of Cairo and Constantinople: the first importer of wind-mills<sup>65</sup> was the benefactor of nations; and if such blessings are enjoyed without any grateful remembrance, history has condescended to notice the more apparent luxuries of silk and sugar, which were transported into Italy from Greece and Egypt. But the intellectual wants of the Latins were more slowly felt and supplied; the ardour of studious curiosity was awakened in Europe by different causes and more recent events; and, in the age of the crusades, they viewed with careless indifference the literature of the Greeks and Arabians. Some rudiments of mathematical and medicinal knowledge might be imparted in practice and in figures; necessity might produce some interpreters for the grosser business of merchants and soldiers; but the commerce of the Orientals had not diffused the study and knowledge of their languages in the schools of Europe<sup>66</sup>. If a similar principle of religion repulsed the idiom of the Koran, it should have excited their patience and curiosity to understand the original text of the Gospel; and the same grammar would have unfolded the sense of Plato and the beauties of Homer. Yet in a reign of sixty years the Latins of Constantinople disdained the speech and learning of their subjects; and the manuscripts were the only treasures which the natives might enjoy without rapine or envy. Aristotle was indeed the oracle of the Western universities; but it was a barbarous Aristotle; and, instead of ascending to the fountain-head, his Latin <sup>65</sup> Windmills, first invented in the dry country of Asia Minor, were used in Normandy as early as the year 1105 (Vie privée des François, tom. i. p. 42, 43. Ducange, Gloss. Latin. tom. iv. p. 474.). (Biographia Britannica, vol. i. p. 418. Kippis's edition). If Bacon himself, or Gerbert, understood some Greeks, they were prodigies, and owed nothing to the commerce of the East.

<sup>66</sup> See the complaints of Roger Bacon

votaries humbly accepted a corrupt and remote version from the Jews and Moors of Andalusia. The principle of the crusades was a savage fanaticism; and the most important effects were analogous to the cause. Each pilgrim was ambitious to return with his sacred spoils, the relics of Greece and Palestine<sup>67</sup>; and each relic was preceded and followed by a train of miracles and visions. The belief of the Catholics was corrupted by new legends, their practice by new superstitions; and the establishment of the inquisition, the mendicant orders of monks and friars, the last abuse of indulgences, and the final progress of idolatry, flowed from the baleful fountain of the holy war. The active spirit of the Latins preyed on the vitals of their reason and religion; and if the ninth and tenth centuries were the times of darkness, the thirteenth and fourteenth were the age of absurdity and fable.

In the profession of Christianity, in the cultivation of a fertile land, the northern conquerors of the Roman empire insensibly mingled with the provincials, and rekindled the embers of the arts of antiquity. Their settlements about the age of Charlemagne had acquired some degree of order and stability, when they were overwhelmed by new swarms of invaders, the Normans, Saracens<sup>68</sup>, and Hungarians, who replunged the western countries of Europe into their former state of anarchy and barbarism. About the eleventh century, the second tempest had subsided by the expulsion or conversion of the enemies of Christendom: the tide of civilization, which had so long ebbed, began to flow with a steady and accelerated course; and a fairer prospect was opened to the hopes and efforts of the rising generations. Great was the increase, and rapid <sup>67</sup> Such was the opinion of the great Leibnitz (Oeuvres de Fontenelle, tom. v. p. 458.). a master of the history of the middle ages. I shall only instance the pedigree of the Carmelites, and the flight of the house of Loretto, which were both derived from Palestine.

<sup>68</sup> If I rank the Saracens with the Barbarians, it is only relative to their wars, or rather inroads, in Italy and France, where their sole purpose was to plunder and destroy.

C H A P.
LXI.

the progress, during the two hundred years of the crusades; and some philosophers have applauded the propitious influence of these holy wars, which appear to me to have checked rather than forwarded the maturity of Europe<sup>69</sup>. The lives and labours of millions, which were buried in the East, would have been more profitably employed in the improvement of their native country: the accumulated stock of industry and wealth would have overflowed in navigation and trade; and the Latins would have been enriched and enlightened by a pure and friendly correspondence with the climates of the East. In one respect I can indeed perceive the accidental operation of the crusades, not so much in producing a benefit as in removing an evil. The larger portion of the inhabitants of Europe was chained to the soil, without freedom, or property, or knowledge; and the two orders of ecclesiastics and nobles, whose numbers were comparatively small, alone deserved the name of citizens and men. This oppressive system was supported by the arts of the clergy and the swords of the barons. The authority of the priests operated in the darker ages as a salutary antidote: they prevented the total extinction of letters, mitigated the fierceness of the times, sheltered the poor and defenceless, and preserved or revived the peace and order of civil society. But the independence, rapine, and discord, of the feudal lords were unmixed with any semblance of good; and every hope of industry and improvement was crushed by the iron weight of the martial aristocracy. Among the causes that undermined that Gothic edifice, a conspicuous place must be allowed to the crusades. The estates of the barons were dissipated, and their race was often extinguished, in these costly and perilous expeditions. Their poverty extorted from their pride those charters of freedom which unlocked the fetters of the slave, secured the farm of the peasant and the shop of the artificer, and gradually restored a substance and a soul to the most numerous and useful part of the community. The conflagration which destroyed the tall and barren trees of the forest gave air and scope to the vegetation of the smaller and nutritive plants of the soil.

<sup>69</sup> On this interesting subject, the progress of society in Europe, a strong ray of philosophic light has broke from Scotland in our own times; and it is with private, as well as public regard, that I repeat the names of Hume, Robertson, and Adam Smith.

C H A P.
LXI.

Digression on the Family of Courtenay.

THE purple of three emperors, who have reigned at Constantinople, will authorise or excuse a digression on the origin and singular fortunes of the house of COURTENAY<sup>70</sup>, in the three principal branches, I. Of Edeffa; II. Of France; and, III. Of England, of which the last only has survived the revolutions of eight hundred years.

I. Before the introduction of trade, which scatters riches, and of knowledge, which dispels prejudice, the prerogative of birth is most strongly felt and most humbly acknowledged. In every age, the laws and manners of the Germans have discriminated the ranks of society: the dukes and counts, who shared the empire of Charlemagne, converted their office to an inheritance; and to his children, each feudal lord bequeathed his honour and his sword. The proudest families are content to lose in the darkness of the middle ages, the tree of their pedigree, which, however deep and lofty, must ultimately rise from a plebeian root; and their historians must descend ten centuries below the Christian æra, before they can ascertain any lineal succession by the evidence of surnames, of arms, and of authentic

Origin of the family of Courtenay,
A. D. 1020.

<sup>70</sup> I have applied, but not confined, myself to A genealogical History of the noble and illustrious Family of Courtenay, by Ezra Cleavelland, Tutor to Sir William Courtenay, and Rector of Honiton; Exon. 1735. in folio. The first part is extracted from William of Tyre, the second from Bouchet's French history;

and the third from various memorials, public, provincial, and private, of the Courtenays of Devonshire. The rector of Honiton has more gratitude than industry, and more industry than criticism.

C H A P.
LXI.

I The counts of Edessa, 1101—1152.

records. With the first rays of light<sup>71</sup>, we discern the nobility and opulence of Atho, a French knight: his nobility, in the rank and title of a nameless father; his opulence, in the foundation of the castle of Courtenay in the district of Gatinois, about fifty-six miles to the south of Paris. From the reign of Robert, the son of Hugh Capet, the barons of Courtenay are conspicuous among the immediate vassals of the crown; and Joscelin, the grandson of Atho and a noble dame, is enrolled among the heroes of the first crusade. A domestic alliance (their mothers were sisters) attached him to the standard of Baldwin of Bruges, the second count of Edessa: a princely sief, which he was worthy to receive, and able to maintain, announces the number of his martial followers: and after the departure of his cousin, Joscelin himself was invested with the county of Edessa on both sides of the Euphrates. By the œconomy in peace, his territories were replenished with Latin and Syrian subjects; his magazines with corn, wine, and oil; his castles with gold and silver, with arms and horses. In a holy warfare of thirty years, he was alternately a conqueror and a captive; but he died like a foldier, in an horse-litter at the head of his troops; and his last glance beheld the flight of the Turkish invaders who had presumed on his age and infirmities. His son and successor, of the same name, was less deficient in valour than in vigilance; but he sometimes forgot that dominion is acquired and maintained by the same arts. He challenged the hostility of the Turks, without securing the friendship of the prince of Antioch; and, amidst the peaceful luxury of Turbessel, in Syria<sup>72</sup>, Joscelin neglected the defence of the Christian frontier beyond the Euphrates. In his absence, Zenghi, the first of the Atabeks, besieged and stormed his capital, Edessa, which was feebly defended by a timorous and disloyal crowd of

<sup>71</sup> The primitive record of the family, is a passage of the continuator of Aimoin, a monk of Fleury, who wrote in the xiiith century. See his Chronicle, in the Historians of France (tom. xi. p. 276.).

<sup>72</sup> Turbessel, or as it is now styled Telbether, is fixed by d'Arville four-and-twenty miles from the great passage over the Euphrates at Zeugma.

Oriental: the Franks were oppressed in a bold attempt for its recovery, and Courtenay ended his days in the prison of Aleppo. He still left a fair and ample patrimony. But the victorious Turks oppressed on all sides the weakness of a widow and orphan; and, for the equivalent of an annual pension, they resigned to the Greek emperor the charge of defending, and the shame of losing, the last relics of the Latin conquest. The countess-dowager of Edessa retired to Jerusalem with her two children: the daughter, Agnes, became the wife and mother of a king; the son, Joscelin the third, accepted the office of senechal, the first of the kingdom, and held his new estates in Palestine by the service of fifty knights. His name appears with honour in all the transactions of peace and war; but he finally vanishes in the fall of Jerusalem; and the name of Courtenay, in this branch of Edessa, was lost by the marriage of his two daughters with a French and a German baron<sup>73</sup>.

C H A P.
LXI.

II. While Joscelin reigned beyond the Euphrates, his elder brother Milo, the son of Joscelin, the son of Atho, continued, near the Seine, to possess the castle of their fathers, which was at length inherited by Rainaud, or Reginald, the youngest of his three sons. Examples of genius or virtue must be rare in the annals of the oldest families; and, in a remote age, their pride will embrace a deed of rapine and violence; such, however, as could not be perpetrated without some superiority of courage, or, at least, of power. A descendant of Reginald of Courtenay may blush for the public robber, who stripped and imprisoned several merchants, after they had satisfied the king's duties, at Sens and Orleans. He will glory in the offence, since the bold offender could not be compelled to obedience and restitution till the regent and the count of Champagne prepared to march against him at the head of an army<sup>74</sup>. Reginald bestowed

II. The Courtenays
of France.

<sup>73</sup> His possessions are distinguished in the Assises of Jerusalem (c. 326.) among the feudal tenures of the kingdom, which must therefore have been collected between the years 1153 and 1187. His pedigree may be found in the Lignages d'Outremer, c. 16.

<sup>74</sup> The rapine and satisfaction of Reginald de Courtenay, are preposterously arranged in the

C H A P.
LXI.

—
Their alliance with the royal family,
A. D. 1150.

bestowed his estates on his eldest daughter, and his daughter on the seventh son of king Louis the Fat; and their marriage was crowned with a numerous offspring. We might expect that a private should have merged in a royal name; and that the descendants of Peter of France and Elizabeth of Courtenay would have enjoyed the title and honours of princes of the blood. But this legitimate claim was long neglected and finally denied; and the causes of their disgrace will represent the story of this second branch. 1. Of all the families now extant, the most ancient, doubtless, and the most illustrious, is the house of France, which has occupied the same throne above eight hundred years, and descends, in a clear and lineal series of males, from the middle of the ninth century<sup>75</sup>. In the age of the crusades, it was already revered both in the East and West. But from Hugh Capet to the marriage of Peter, no more than five reigns or generations had elapsed; and so precarious was their title, that the eldest sons, as a necessary precaution, were previously crowned during the lifetime of their fathers. The peers of France have long maintained their precedency before the younger branches of the royal line; nor had the princes of the blood, in the twelfth century, acquired that hereditary lustre which is now diffused over the most remote candidates for the succession. 2. The barons of Courtenay must have stood high in their own estimation, and in that of the the Epistles of the abbot and regent Suger (civ. cxvi.), the best memorials of the age (Duchefne, Scriptores Hist. Franc. tom. iv. p. 530.).

<sup>75</sup> In the beginning of the xth century, after naming the father and grandfather of Hugh Capet, the monk Glaber is obliged to add, cujus genus valde in-ante reperitur obscurum. Yet we are assured that the great grandfather of Hugh Capet was Robert the Strong, count of Anjou (A. D. 863—873), a noble Frank of Neustria, Neustrius . . . generosæ stirpis, who was slain in the defence of his country against the Normans, dum patriæ fines tuebatur. Beyond Robert, all is conjecture or fable. It is a probable conjecture, that the third race descended from the second by Childebrand, the brother of Charles Martel. It is an absurd fable, that the second was allied to the first by the marriage of Ansbert, a Roman senator and the ancestor of St. Arnoul, with Blitilde, a daughter of Clotaire I. The Saxon origin of the house of France is an ancient but incredible opinion. See a judicious memoir of M. de Foncemagne (Memoires de l'Academie des Inscriptions, tom. xx. p. 548—579.). He had promised to declare his own opinion in a second memoir, which has never appeared.

world, since they could impose on the son of a king the obligation of adopting for himself and all his descendants the name and arms of their daughter and his wife. In the marriage of an heiress with her inferior or her equal, such exchange was often required and allowed: but as they continued to diverge from the regal stem, the sons of Louis the Fat were insensibly confounded with their maternal ancestors; and the new Courtenays might deserve to forfeit the honours of their birth, which a motive of interest had tempted them to renounce. 3. The shame was far more permanent than the reward, and a momentary blaze was followed by a long darkness. The eldest son of these nuptials, Peter of Courtenay, had married, as I have already mentioned, the sister of the counts of Flanders, the two first emperors of Constantinople: he rashly accepted the invitation of the barons of Romania; his two sons, Robert and Baldwin, successively held and lost the remains of the Latin empire in the East, and the grand-daughter of Baldwin the second again mingled her blood with the blood of France and of Valois. To support the expences of a troubled and transitory reign, their patrimonial estates were mortgaged or sold; and the last emperors of Constantinople depended on the annual charity of Rome and Naples.

While the elder brothers dissipated their wealth in romantic adventures, and the castle of Courtenay was profaned by a plebeian owner, the younger branches of that adopted name were propagated and multiplied. But their splendour was clouded by poverty and time: after the decease of Robert, great butler of France, they descended from princes to barons; the next generations were confounded with the simple gentry; the descendants of Hugh Capet could no longer be visible in the rural lords of Tanlay and of Champignelles. The more adventurous embraced without dishonour the profession of a soldier: the least active and opulent might sink, like their cousins of the branch of Dreux, into the condition of peasants. Their royal descent, in a dark period of four hundred years,

C H A P.
LXI.

years, became each day more obsolete and ambiguous: and their pedigree, instead of being enrolled in the annals of the kingdom, must be painfully searched by the minute diligence of heralds and genealogists. It was not till the end of the sixteenth century on the accession of a family, almost as remote as their own, that the princely spirit of the Courtenays again revived; and the question of the nobility, provoked them to assert the royalty, of their blood. They appealed to the justice and compassion of Henry the fourth; obtained a favourable opinion from twenty lawyers of Italy and Germany, and modestly compared themselves to the descendants of king David, whose prerogatives were not impaired by the lapse of ages or the trade of a carpenter<sup>76</sup>. But every ear was deaf, and every circumstance was adverse, to their lawful claims. The Bourbon kings were justified by the neglect of the Valois: the princes of the blood more recent and lofty, disdained the alliance of this humble kindred: the parliament, without denying their proofs, eluded a dangerous precedent by an arbitrary distinction, and established St. Louis as the first father of the royal line<sup>77</sup>. A repetition of complaints and protests was repeatedly disregarded: and the hopeless pursuit was terminated in the present century by the death of the last male of the family<sup>78</sup>. Their painful and anxious situation was alleviated by the pride

<sup>76</sup> Of the various petitions, apologies, &c. published by the princes of Courtenay, I have seen the three following, all in octavo: 1. De Stirpe et Origine Domus de Courtenay: addita sunt Responſa celeberrimorum Europæ Jurisconſultorum: Paris, 1607. 2. Représentation du Procédé tenu à l'instance faite devant le Roi, par Meſſieurs de Courtenay, pour la conſervation de l'Honneur et Dignité de leur Maïſon, branche de la royalle Maïſon de France: à Paris, 1613. 3. Représentation du ſubject qui a porté Meſſieurs de Salles et de Fraville, de la Maïſon de Courtenays, à ſe retirer hors du Royaume, 1614. It was an homicide, for which the Courtenays expected to be pardoned, or tried, as princes of the blood.

<sup>77</sup> The ſenſe of the parliaments is thus expreſſed by Thuann: Principis nomen nuſquam in Galliâ tributum, niſi iis qui per mares e regiſibus noſtris originem repetunt: qui nunc tantum a Ludovico nono beata memoriæ numerantur: nam Courtinai et Droccæſes, a Ludovico crasſo genus ducentes, hodie inter eos minime recenſentur. A diſtinction of expediency, rather than juſtice. The ſanctity of Louis IX. could not inveſt him with any ſpecial prerogative, and all the deſcendants of Hugh Capet muſt be included in his original compact with the French nation.

<sup>78</sup> The laſt male of the Courtenays was Charles Roger, who died in the year 1730, without leaving any ſons. The laſt female pride of conscious virtue: they sternly rejected the temptations of fortune and favour; and a dying Courtenay would have sacrificed his son, if the youth could have renounced, for any temporal interest, the right and title of a legitimate prince of the blood of France<sup>79</sup>.

C H A P.
LXI.

III. According to the old register of Ford Abbey, the Courtenays of Devonshire are descended from prince Florus, the second son of Peter, and the grandson of Louis the 1st<sup>80</sup>. This fable of the grateful or venal monks was too respectfully entertained by our antiquaries, Cambden<sup>81</sup> and Dugdale<sup>82</sup>: but it is so clearly repugnant to truth and time, that the rational pride of the family now refuses to accept this imaginary founder. Their most faithful historians believe, that after giving his daughter to the king's son, Reginald of Courtenay abandoned his possessions in France, and obtained from the English monarch a second wife and a new inheritance. It is certain, at least, that Henry the second distinguished in his camps and councils, a Reginald, of the name and arms, and, as it may be fairly presumed, of the genuine race, of the Courtenays of France. The right of wardship enabled a feudal lord to reward his vassal with the marriage and estate of a noble heiress; and Reginald of Courtenay acquired a fair establishment in Devonshire, where his posterity has been seated above six hundred years<sup>83</sup>. From a Norman baron, Baldwin

III. The Courtenays
of England.

was Helene de Courtenay, who married Louis de Beaufremont. Her title of Princesse du Sang Royal de France, was suppressed (February 7th, 1737) by an arrêt of the parliament of Paris.

<sup>79</sup> The singular anecdote to which I allude, is related in the Recueil des Pieces interessantes et peu connues (Maeffricht, 1786, in 4 vols. 12<sup>mo</sup>); and the unknown editor quotes his author, who had received it from Helene de Courtenay, marquise de Beaufremont.

<sup>80</sup> Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, vol. i. p. 786. Yet this fable must have been invented before the reign of Edward III. The profuse devotion of the three first generations to Ford abbey, was followed by oppression on one side and ingratitude on the other; and in the sixth generation, the monks ceased to register the births, actions, and deaths of their patrons.

<sup>81</sup> In his Britannia, in the list of the earls of Devonshire. His expression, e regio sanguine ortos credunt, betrays however some doubt or suspicion.

<sup>82</sup> In his Baronage, P. i. p. 634. he refers to his own Monasticon. Should he not have corrected the register of Ford abbey, and annihilated the phantom Florus, by the unquestionable evidence of the French historians?

<sup>83</sup> Besides the third and most valuable book of

C H A P.
LXI.

The earls of Devonshire.

Baldwin de Brioniis, who had been invested by the Conqueror, Hawise, the wife of Reginald, derived the honour of Okehampton, which was held by the service of ninety-three knights; and a female might claim the manly offices of hereditary viscount or sheriff, and of captain of the royal castle of Exeter. Their son Robert married the sister of the earl of Devon; at the end of a century, on the failure of the family of Rivers<sup>84</sup>, his great-grandson, Hugh the second, succeeded to a title which was still considered as a territorial dignity; and twelve earls of Devonshire, of the name of Courtenay, have flourished in a period of two hundred and twenty years. They were ranked among the chief of the barons of the realm; nor was it till after a strenuous dispute, that they yielded to the sief of Arundel, the first place in the parliament of England: their alliances were contracted with the noblest families, the Veres, Despensers, St. Johns, Talbots, Bohuns, and even the Plantagenets themselves; and in a contest with John of Lancaster, a Courtenay, bishop of London, and afterwards archbishop of Canterbury, might be accused of profane confidence in the strength and number of his kindred. In peace, the earls of Devon resided in their numerous castles and manors of the west: their ample revenue was appropriated to devotion and hospitality; and the epitaph of Edward, surnamed, from his misfortune, the blind, from his virtues, the good, earl, inculcates with much ingenuity a moral sentence, which may however be abused by thoughtless generosity. After a grateful commemoration of the fifty-five years of union and happiness, which he enjoyed with Mabel his wife, the good earl thus speaks from the tomb:

What we gave, we have;
What we spent, we had;
What we left, we lost<sup>85</sup>.

But

of Cleaveland's History, I have consulted Dugdale, the father of our genealogical science (Baronage, P. i. p. 634—643.).

<sup>84</sup> This great family, de Ripuariis, de Redvers, de Rivers, ended, in Edward the First's time, in Isabella de Fortibus, a famous and potent dowager, who long survived her brother and husband (Dugdale, Baronage, P. i. p. 254—257.).

<sup>85</sup> Cleaveland, p. 142. By some, it is assigned

But their lives, in this sense, were far superior to their gifts and expences; and their heirs, not less than the poor, were the objects of their paternal care. The sums which they paid for livery and feisin, attest the greatness of their possessions; and several estates have remained in their family since the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. In war, the Courtenays of England fulfilled the duties, and deserved the honours, of chivalry. They were often entrusted to levy and command the militia of Devonshire and Cornwall; they often attended their supreme lord to the borders of Scotland; and in foreign service, for a stipulated price, they sometimes maintained fourscore men at arms and as many archers. By sea and land they fought under the standard of the Edwards and Henries: their names are conspicuous in battles, in tournaments, and in the original list of the order of the garter; three brothers shared the Spanish victory of the Black Prince; and in the lapse of six generations, the English Courtenays had learned to despise the nation and country from which they derived their origin. In the quarrel of the two roses, the earls of Devon adhered to the house of Lancaster, and three brothers successively died, either in the field or on the scaffold. Their honours and estates were restored by Henry the seventh; a daughter of Edward the fourth was not disgraced by the nuptials of a Courtenay; their son, who was created marquis of Exeter, enjoyed the favour of his cousin Henry the eighth; and in the camp of Cloth of Gold, he broke a lance against the French monarch. But the favour of Henry was the prelude of disgrace; his disgrace was the signal of death; and of the victims of the jealous tyrant, the marquis of Exeter is one of the most noble and guiltless. His son Edward lived a prisoner in the Tower, and died an exile at Padua; and the secret love of queen Mary, whom he slighted, perhaps for the princess Elizabeth, has shed a romantic colour on the story of this beautiful youth. The relics of his patrimony were conveyed into strange families by the marriages of his four aunts; and assigned to a Rivers earl of Devon: but the English denotes the xvth, rather than the xiiith, century.

C H A P.
LVI.

C H A P.
LXI.

his personal honours, as if they had been legally extinct, were revived by the patents of succeeding princes. But there still survived a lineal descendant of Hugh the first earl of Devon, a younger branch of the Courtenays, who have been seated at Powderham castle above four hundred years from the reign of Edward the third to the present hour. Their estates have been increased by the grant and improvement of lands in Ireland, and they have been recently restored to the honours of the peerage. Yet the Courtenays still retain the plaintive motto, which asserts the innocence, and deploras the fall, of their ancient house<sup>66</sup>. While they sigh for past greatness, they are doubtless sensible of present blessings: in the long series of the Courtenay annals, the most splendid æra is likewise the most unfortunate; nor can an opulent peer of Britain be inclined to envy the emperors of Constantinople, who wandered over Europe to solicit alms for the support of their dignity and the defence of their capital.

<sup>66</sup> Ubi lapsus! Quid feci? a motto which was probably adopted by the Powderham branch, after the loss of the earldom of Devonshire, &c. The primitive arms of the Courtenays were, er, three torteaux, gules, which seem to denote their affinity with Godfrey of Bouillon, and the ancient counts of Boulogne.

C H A P. LXII.

The Greek Emperors of Nice and Constantinople.—Elevation and Reign of Michael Palæologus.—His false Union with the Pope and the Latin Church.—Hostile Designs of Charles of Anjou.—Revolt of Sicily.—War of the Catalans in Asia and Greece.—Revolutions and present State of Athens.

THE loss of Constantinople restored a momentary vigour to the Greeks. From their palaces, the princes and nobles were driven into the field; and the fragments of the falling monarchy were grasped by the hands of the most vigorous or the most skilful candidates. In the long and barren pages of the Byzantine annals<sup>1</sup>, it would not be an easy task to equal the two characters of Theodore Lascaris and John Ducas Vataces<sup>2</sup>, who replanted and upheld the Roman standard at Nice in Bithynia. The difference of their virtues was happily suited to the diversity of their situation. In his first efforts, the fugitive Lascaris commanded only three cities and two thousand soldiers: his reign was the season of generous and active despair: in every military operation he staked his life and crown; and his enemies, of the Hellespont and the Mæander, were surpris'd by his

C H A P.
LXII.

Restoration of the Greek
empire.

Theodore
Lascaris,
A. D.
1204—1222.

<sup>1</sup> For the reigns of the Nicene emperors, more especially of John Vataces and his son, their minister, George Acropolita, is the only genuine contemporary: but George Pachymer returned to Constantinople with the Greeks, at the age of nineteen (Hænkius, de Script. Byzant. c. 33, 34. p. 564—573. Fabric. Bibliot. Græc. tom. vi. p. 448—460.). Yet the history of Nicephorus Gregoras, though of the sixth century, is a valuable narrative from the taking of Constantinople by the Latins.

<sup>2</sup> Nicephorus Gregoras (l. ii. c. 1.) distinguishes between the reigns of Lascaris, and the usurpation of Vataces. The two portraits are in a very good style.

celerity

C H A P.
LXII.

John Ducas
Vataces,
A. D.
1222—1255,
October 30.

celerity and subdued by his boldness. A victorious reign of eighteen years expanded the principality of Nice to the magnitude of an empire. The throne of his successor and son-in-law Vataces was founded on a more solid basis, a larger scope, and more plentiful resources; and it was the temper, as well as the interest, of Vataces to calculate the risk, to expect the moment, and to ensure the success, of his ambitious designs. In the decline of the Latins, I have briefly exposed the progress of the Greeks; the prudent and gradual advances of a conqueror, who, in a reign of thirty-three years, rescued the provinces from national and foreign usurpers, till he pressed on all sides the Imperial city, a leafless and sapless trunk which must fall at the first stroke of the axe. But his interior and peaceful administration is still more deserving of notice and praise<sup>3</sup>. The calamities of the times had wasted the numbers and the substance of the Greeks: the motives and the means of agriculture were extirpated; and the most fertile lands were left without cultivation or inhabitants. A portion of this vacant property was occupied and improved by the command, and for the benefit, of the emperor: a powerful hand and a vigilant eye supplied and surpassed, by a skilful management, the minute diligence of a private farmer: the royal domain became the garden and granary of Asia; and without impoverishing the people, the sovereign acquired a fund of innocent and productive wealth. According to the nature of the soil, his lands were sown with corn or planted with vines: the pastures were filled with horses and oxen, with sheep and hogs; and when Vataces presented to the empress a crown of diamonds and pearls, he informed her with a smile that this precious ornament arose from the sale of the eggs of his innumerable poultry. The produce of his domain was applied to the maintenance of his palace and hospitals, the calls of dignity and benevolence: the lesson was still more useful than the revenue: the plough was restored to its ancient security and honour; and the nobles were taught to seek a sure and independent revenue from their estates, instead of adorning their splendid beggary by the oppression of the people, or (what is almost the same) by the favours of the court. The superfluous stock of corn and cattle was eagerly purchased by the Turks, with whom Vataces preserved a strict and sincere alliance; but he discouraged the importation of foreign manufactures, the costly silks of the East, and the curious labours of the Italian looms. “The demands of nature and necessity,” was he accustomed to say, “are indispensable; but the influence of fashion may rise and sink at the breath of a monarch;” and both his precept and example recommended simplicity of manners and the use of domestic industry. The education of youth and the revival of learning were the most serious objects of his care; and, without deciding the precedency, he pronounced with truth, that a prince and a philosopher* are the two most eminent characters of human society. His first wife was Irene, the daughter of Theodore Lascaris, a woman more illustrious by her personal merit, the milder virtues of her sex, than by the blood of the Angeli and Comneni, that flowed in her veins, and transmitted the inheritance of the empire. After her death he was contracted to Anne or Constance, a natural daughter of the emperor Frederic the second; but as the bride had not attained the years of puberty, Vataces placed in his solitary bed an Italian damsel of her train; and his amorous weakness bestowed on the concubine the honours, though not the title, of lawful empress. His frailty was censured as a flagitious and damnable sin by the monks; and their rude invectives exercised and displayed the patience of the royal lover. A philosophic age may excuse a single vice, which was redeemed by a crowd of virtues; and in the review of his faults, and * Μουσι γὰρ ἀπαντα ἀνθρώπων νομοθετοῦσι βελτίονα καὶ φιλοσοφίᾳ (Greg. Acropol. c. 32.). The emperor, in a familiar conversation, examined and encouraged the studies of his future logothete.

<sup>3</sup> Pachymer, l. i. c. 23, 24. Nic. Greg. must observe how rarely we are indulged l. ii. c. 6. The reader of the Byzantines with such precious details.

C H A P.
LXII.

the more intemperate passions of Lascaris, the judgment of their contemporaries was softened by gratitude to the second founders of the empire<sup>5</sup>. The slaves of the Latins, without law or peace, applauded the happiness of their brethren who had resumed their national freedom; and Vataces employed the laudable policy of convincing the Greeks of every dominion that it was their interest to be enrolled in the number of his subjects.

Theodore
Lascaris II.
A. D. 1255,
October 30—
A. D. 1259,
August.

A strong shade of degeneracy is visible between John Vataces and his son Theodore; between the founder who sustained the weight, and the heir who enjoyed the splendour, of the Imperial crown<sup>6</sup>. Yet the character of Theodore was not devoid of energy; he had been educated in the school of his father, in the exercise of war and hunting: Constantinople was yet spared; but in the three years of a short reign, he thrice led his armies into the heart of Bulgaria. His virtues were sullied by a choleric and suspicious temper: the first of these may be ascribed to the ignorance of controul; and the second might naturally arise from a dark and imperfect view of the corruption of mankind. On a march in Bulgaria, he consulted on a question of policy his principal ministers; and the Greek logothete, George Acropolita, presumed to offend him by the declaration of a free and honest opinion. The emperor half-unsheathed his scymetar; but his more deliberate rage reserved Acropolita for a baser punishment. One of the first officers of the empire was ordered to dismount, stripped of his robes, and extended on the ground in the presence of the prince and army. In this posture he was chastised with so many and such heavy blows from the clubs of two guards or executioners, that when Theodore commanded them to cease, the great logothete was scarcely able to arise and crawl away

<sup>5</sup> Compare Acropolita (c. 18. 52.), and the two first books of Nicephorus Gregoras.

<sup>6</sup> A Persian saying, that Cyrus was the father, and Darius the master, of his subjects, was applied to Vataces and his son. But Pachymer (l. i. c. 23.) has mistaken the mild Darius for the cruel Cambyfes, despot or tyrant of his people. By the institution of taxes, Darius had incurred the less odious, but more contemptible, name of καπηλος, merchant or broker (Herodotus, iii. 89.).

to his tent. After a seclusion of some days, he was recalled by a peremptory mandate to his seat in council; and so dead were the Greeks to the sense of honour and shame, that it is from the narrative of the sufferer himself that we acquire the knowledge of his disgrace<sup>7</sup>. The cruelty of the emperor was exasperated by the pangs of sickness, the approach of a premature end, and the suspicion of poison and magic. The lives and fortunes, the eyes and limbs, of his kinsmen and nobles, were sacrificed to each folly of passion; and before he died, the son of Vataces might deserve from the people, or at least from the court, the appellation of tyrant. A matron of the family of the Palæologi had provoked his anger by refusing to bestow her beautiful daughter on the vile plebeian who was recommended by his caprice. Without regard to her birth or age, her body, as high as the neck, was inclosed in a sack with several cats, who were pricked with pins to irritate their fury against their unfortunate fellow-captive. In his last hours, the emperor testified a wish to forgive and be forgiven, a just anxiety for the fate of John his son and successor, who, at the age of eight years, was condemned to the dangers of a long minority. His last choice entrusted the office of guardian to the sanctity of the patriarch Arsenius, and to the courage of George Muzalon, the great domestic, who was equally distinguished by the royal favour and the public hatred. Since their connection with the Latins, the names and privileges of hereditary rank had insinuated themselves into the Greek monarchy; and the noble families<sup>8</sup> were provoked by the elevation of a worthless favourite, to whose influence they imputed the errors and ca-

C H A P.
LXII.

Minority of John Lafca-
ris,
A. D. 1250
August.

<sup>7</sup> Acropolita (c. 63.) seems to admire his own firmness in sustaining a beating, and not returning to council till he was called. He relates the exploits of Theodore, and his own services, from c. 53. to c. 74. of his history. See the third book of Nicephorus Gregoras.

<sup>8</sup> Pachymer (l. i. c. 21.) names and discriminates fifteen or twenty Greek families, καὶ ὅσαι αὐταῖς, ὅς ἡ μεγαλοφυῆς σείρα καὶ χρυσὴ συγκροτητοῦ. Does he mean, by this decoration, a figurative, or a real golden chain? Perhaps, both.

C H A P.
LXII.

lamities of the late reign. In the first council, after the emperor's death, Muzalon, from a lofty throne, pronounced a laboured apology of his conduct and intentions: his modesty was subdued by an unanimous assurance of esteem and fidelity; and his most inveterate enemies were the loudest to salute him as the guardian and favourer of the Romans. Eight days were sufficient to prepare the execution of the conspiracy. On the ninth, the obsequies of the deceased monarch were solemnised in the cathedral of Magnesia<sup>9</sup>, an Asiatic city, where he expired, on the banks of the Hermus and at the foot of mount Sipylus. The holy rites were interrupted by a sedition of the guards: Muzalon, his brothers, and his adherents, were massacred at the foot of the altar; and the absent patriarch was associated with a new colleague, with Michael Palæologus, the most illustrious, in birth and merit, of the Greek nobles<sup>10</sup>.

Family and
character of
Michael Palæologus.

Of those who are proud of their ancestors, the far greater part must be content with local or domestic renown; and few there are who dare trust the memorials of their family to the public annals of their country. As early as the middle of the eleventh century, the noble race of the Palæologi<sup>11</sup> stands high and conspicuous in the Byzantine history: it was the valiant George Palæologus who placed the father of the Comneni on the throne; and his kinsmen or descendants continue, in each generation, to lead the armies and councils of the state. The purple was not dishonoured by their alliance; and had the law of succession, and female succession, been strictly observed,

<sup>9</sup> The old geographers, with Cellarius and d'Anville, and our travellers, particularly Pocock and Chandler, will teach us to distinguish the two Magnesias of Asia Minor, of the Mæander and of Sipylus. The latter, our present object, is still flourishing for a Turkish city, and lies eight hours, or leagues, to the north-east of Smyrna (Tournefort, Voyage du Levant, tom. iii. lettre xxii. p. 365—370. Chandler's Travels into Asia Minor, p. 267.).

<sup>10</sup> See Acropolita (c. 75, 76, &c.), who lived too near the times; Pachymer (l. i. c. 13—25.), Gregoras (l. iii. c. 3, 4, 5.).

<sup>11</sup> The pedigree of Palæologus is explained by Ducange (Famil. Byzant. p. 230, &c.): the events of his private life are related by Pachymer (l. i. c. 7—12.) and Gregoras (l. ii. 8. l. iii. 2. 4. l. iv. 1.), with visible favour to the father of the reigning dynasty.

ferred, the wife of Theodore Lascaris must have yielded to her elder sister, the mother of Michael Palæologus, who afterwards raised his family to the throne. In his person, the splendour of birth was dignified by the merit of the soldier and statesman: in his early youth he was promoted to the office of constable or commander of the French mercenaries; the private expence of a day never exceeded three pieces of gold; but his ambition was rapacious and profuse; and his gifts were doubled by the graces of his conversation and manners. The love of the soldiers and people excited the jealousy of the court; and Michael thrice escaped from the dangers in which he was involved by his own imprudence or that of his friends. I. Under the reign of Justice and Vataces, a dispute arose<sup>12</sup> between two officers, one of whom accused the other of maintaining the hereditary right of the Palæologi. The cause was decided, according to the new jurisprudence of the Latins, by single combat: the defendant was overthrown; but he persisted in declaring that himself alone was guilty; and that he had uttered these rash or treasonable speeches without the approbation or knowledge of his patron. Yet a cloud of suspicion hung over the innocence of the constable: he was still pursued by the whispers of malevolence; and a subtle courtier, the archbishop of Philadelphia, urged him to accept the judgment of God in the fiery proof of the ordeal<sup>13</sup>. Three days before the trial, the patient's arm was enclosed in a bag, and secured by the royal signet; and it was incumbent on him to bear a red-hot ball of iron three times from the altar to the rails of the sanctuary, without artifice and without injury. Palæologus eluded the dangerous experiment with sense and pleasantry. "I am a soldier," said he, "and will boldly enter the lists with my accusers: but a <sup>12</sup> Acropolita (c. 50.) relates the circumstances of this curious adventure, which seem to have escaped the more recent writers.

<sup>13</sup> Pachymer (l. i. c. 12.), who speaks with proper contempt of this barbarous trial, affirms, that he had seen in his youth many persons who had sustained, without injury, the fiery ordeal. As a Greek, he is credulous: but the ingenuity of the Greeks might furnish some remedies of art or fraud against their own superstition, or that of their tyrant

C H A P.
LXII.

“ layman, a sinner like myself, is not endowed with the gift of miracles. Your piety, most holy prelate, may deserve the interposition of heaven, and from your hands I will receive the fiery globe, the pledge of my innocence.” The archbishop started; the emperor smiled; and the absolution or pardon of Michael was approved by new rewards and new services. II. In the succeeding reign, as he held the government of Nice, he was secretly informed, that the mind of the absent prince was poisoned with jealousy; and that death, or blindness, would be his final reward. Instead of awaiting the return and sentence of Theodore, the constable, with some followers, escaped from the city and the empire; and though he was plundered by the Turkmans of the desert, he found an hospitable refuge in the court of the sultan. In the ambiguous state of an exile, Michael reconciled the duties of gratitude and loyalty: drawing his sword against the Tartars; admonishing the garrisons of the Roman limit; and promoting by his influence, the restoration of peace, in which his pardon and recall were honourably included. III. While he guarded the West against the despot of Epirus, Michael was again suspected and condemned in the palace; and such was his loyalty or weakness, that he submitted to be led in chains above six hundred miles from Durazzo to Nice. The civility of the messenger alleviated his disgrace; the emperor’s sickness dispelled his danger; and the last breath of Theodore, which recommended his infant son, at once acknowledged the innocence and the power of Paleologus.

His elevation
to the throne.

But his innocence had been too unworthily treated, and his power was too strongly felt, to curb an aspiring subject in the fair field that was opened to his ambition<sup>24</sup>. In the council after the death of Theodore, he was the first to pronounce, and the first to violate, the

<sup>24</sup> Without comparing Pachymer to Theophrastus or Tacitus, I will praise his narrative (l. i. c. 13—32. l. ii. c. 1—7), which pursues the ascent of Paleologus with elegance, perspicuity, and tolerable freedom. Acropolita is more cautious, and Gregoras more concise.

oath of allegiance to Muzalon; and so dextrous was his conduct, that he reaped the benefit, without incurring the guilt, or at least the reproach, of the subsequent massacre. In the choice of a regent, he balanced the interests and passions of the candidates; turned their envy and hatred from himself against each other, and forced every competitor to own, that after his own claims, those of Palæologus were best entitled to the preference. Under the title of great duke, he accepted or assumed, during a long minority, the active powers of government; the patriarch was a venerable name; and the factious nobles were seduced, or oppressed, by the ascendant of his genius. The fruits of the œconomy of Vataces were deposited in a strong castle on the banks of the Hermus, in the custody of the faithful Varangians: the constable retained his command or influence over the foreign troops; he employed the guards to possess the treasure, and the treasure to corrupt the guards; and whatsoever might be the abuse of the public money, his character was above the suspicion of private avarice. By himself, or by his emissaries, he strove to persuade every rank of subjects, that their own prosperity would rise in just proportion to the establishment of his authority. The weight of taxes was suspended, the perpetual theme of popular complaint; and he prohibited the trials by the ordeal and judicial combat. These Barbaric institutions were already abolished or undermined in France<sup>15</sup> and England<sup>16</sup>; and the appeal to the sword offended the sense of a civilized<sup>17</sup>, and the temper of an unwarlike, people.

C H A P.
LXII.

<sup>15</sup> The judicial combat was abolished by St. Louis in his own territories; and his example and authority were at length prevalent in France (Esprit des Loix, l. xviii. c. 29.).

<sup>16</sup> In civil cases Henry II. gave an option to the defendant: Glanville prefers the proof by evidence, and that by judicial combat is reprobated in the Plota. Yet the trial by battle has never been abrogated in the English law, and it was ordered by the judges as late as the beginning of the last century.

<sup>17</sup> Yet an ingenious friend has urged to me in mitigation of this practice, 1. That in nations emerging from barbarism, it moderates the licence of private war and arbitrary revenge. 2. That it is less absurd than the trials by the ordeal, or boiling water, or the cross, which it has contributed to abolish. 3. That it served at least as a test of personal courage; a quality so seldom united with a base disposition, that the danger of the trial might be some check to a malicious persecu-

C H A P.
LXII.

people. For the future maintenance of their wives and children, the veterans were grateful: the priest and the philosopher applauded his ardent zeal for the advancement of religion and learning; and his vague promise of rewarding merit, was applied by every candidate to his own hopes. Conscious of the influence of the clergy, Michael successfully laboured to secure the suffrage of that powerful order. Their expensive journey from Nice to Magnesia, afforded a decent and ample pretence: the leading prelates were tempted by the liberality of his nocturnal visits; and the incorruptible patriarch was flattered by the homage of his new colleague, who led his mule by the bridle into the town, and removed to a respectful distance the importunity of the crowd. Without renouncing his title by royal descent, Palæologus encouraged a free discussion into the advantages of elective monarchy; and his adherents asked, with the insolence of triumph, what patient would trust his health, or what merchant would abandon his vessel, to the hereditary skill of a physician or a pilot? The youth of the emperor, and the impending dangers of a minority, required the support of a mature and experienced guardian; of an associate, raised above the envy of his equals, and invested with the name and prerogatives of royalty. For the interest of the prince and people, without any selfish views for himself or his family, the great duke consented to guard and instruct the son of Theodore; but he sighed for the happy moment when he might restore to his firmer hands the administration of his patrimony, and enjoy the blessings of a private station. He was first invested with the title and prerogatives of despot, which bestowed the purple ornaments, and the second place in the Roman monarchy. It was afterwards agreed that John and Michael should be proclaimed as joint-emperors, and raised on the buckler, but that the pre-eminence should be reserved for the birth-right of the former. A ter, and an useful barrier against injustice have escaped his unmerited fate, had not his supported by power. The gallant and un- demand of the combat against his accuser fortunate earl of Surrey might probably been over-ruled.

mutual

mutual league of amity was pledged between the royal partners; and in case of a rupture, the subjects were bound, by their oath of allegiance, to declare themselves against the aggressor, an ambiguous name, the seed of discord and civil war. Palæologus was content; but on the day of the coronation, and in the cathedral of Nice, his zealous adherents most vehemently urged the just priority of his age and merit. The unseasonable dispute was eluded by postponing to a more convenient opportunity the coronation of John Lafcaris; and he walked with a slight diadem in the train of his guardian, who alone received the Imperial crown from the hands of the patriarch. It was not without extreme reluctance that Arsenius abandoned the cause of his pupil; but the Varangians brandished their battle-axes; a sign of assent was extorted from the trembling youth; and some voices were heard, that the life of a child should no longer impede the settlement of the nation. A full harvest of honours and employments was distributed among his friends by the grateful Palæologus. In his own family he created a despot and two Sebastocrators; Alexius Strategopulus was decorated with the title of Cæsar; and that veteran commander soon repaid the obligation, by restoring Constantinople to the Greek emperor.

C H A P.
LXII.

Michael Palæologus emperor,
A. D. 1260,
January 1.

It was in the second year of his reign, while he resided in the palace and gardens of Nymphæum<sup>18</sup> near Smyrna, that the first messenger arrived at the dead of night; and the stupendous intelligence was imparted to Michael, after he had been gently waked by the tender precaution of his sister Eulogia. The man was unknown or obscure; he produced no letters from the victorious Cæsar; nor could it easily be credited after the defeat of Vataces and the recent failure of Palæologus himself, that the capital had been surpris'd by a detachment of eight hundred soldiers. As an hostage, the doubt-

Recovery of Constantinople,
A. D. 1261,
July 25.

<sup>18</sup> The site of Nymphæum is not clearly defined in ancient or modern geography. But from the last hours of Vataces (Acropolis, c. 52.), it is evident the palace and gardens of his favourite residence were in the neighbourhood of Smyrna. Nymphæum might be loosely placed in Lydia (Gregoras, l. vi. 6.).

C H A P.
LXII.

ful author was confined, with the assurance of death or an ample recompense; and the court was left some hours in the anxiety of hope and fear, till the messengers of Alexius arrived with the authentic intelligence, and displayed the trophies of the conquest, the sword and sceptre<sup>19</sup>, the buskins and bonnet<sup>20</sup>, of the usurper Baldwin, which he had dropt in his precipitate flight. A general assembly of the bishops, senators, and nobles, was immediately convened, and never perhaps was an event received with more heartfelt and universal joy. In a studied oration, the new sovereign of Constantinople congratulated his own and the public fortune. “ There “ was a time,” said he, “ a far distant time, when the Roman em- “ pire extended to the Adriatic, the Tigris, and the confines of “ Æthiopia. After the loss of the provinces, our capital itself, in “ these last and calamitous days, has been wrested from our hands “ by the Barbarians of the West. From the lowest ebb, the tide of “ prosperity has again returned in our favour; but our prosperity “ was that of fugitives and exiles; and when we were asked, which “ was the country of the Romans, we indicated with a blush the “ climate of the globe and the quarter of the heavens. The divine “ Providence has now restored to our arms the city of Constantine, “ the sacred seat of religion and empire; and it will depend on our “ valour and conduct to render this important acquisition the pledge “ and omen of future victories.” So eager was the impatience of the prince and people, that Michael made his triumphal entry into Constantinople only twenty days after the expulsion of the Latins. The golden gate was thrown open at his approach; the devout conqueror dismounted from his horse; and a miraculous image of

Return of the Greek emperor,
A. D. 1261,
August 14.

<sup>19</sup> This sceptre, the emblem of justice and power, was a long staff, such as was used by the heroes in Homer. By the latter Greeks it was named Dicatrice, and the Imperial sceptre was distinguished as usual by the red or purple colour.

<sup>20</sup> Acropolita affirms (c. 87.), that this bonnet was after the French fashion; but from the ruby at the point or summit, Duncange (Hist. de C. P. l. v. c. 28, 29.) believes that it was the high-crowned hat of the Greeks. Could Acropolita mistake the dress of his own court?

Mary the Conductress was borne before him, that the divine Virgin in person might appear to conduct him to the temple of her son, the cathedral of St. Sophia. But after the first transport of devotion and pride, he sighed at the dreary prospect of solitude and ruin. The palace was defiled with smoke and dirt, and the gross intemperance of the Franks; whole streets had been consumed by fire, or were decayed by the injuries of time; the sacred and profane edifices were stripped of their ornaments; and, as if they were conscious of their approaching exile, the industry of the Latins had been confined to the work of pillage and destruction. Trade had expired under the pressure of anarchy and distress; and the numbers of inhabitants had decreased with the opulence of the city. It was the first care of the Greek monarch to reinstate the nobles in the palaces of their fathers; and the houses or the ground which they occupied were restored to the families that could exhibit a legal right of inheritance. But the far greater part was extinct or lost; the vacant property had devolved to the lord; he repopled Constantinople by a liberal invitation to the provinces; and the brave volunteers were seated in the capital which had been recovered by their arms. The French barons and the principal families had retired with their emperor; but the patient and humble crowd of Latins was attached to the country, and indifferent to the change of masters. Instead of banishing the factories of the Pisans, Venetians, and Genoese, the prudent conqueror accepted their oaths of allegiance, encouraged their industry, confirmed their privileges, and allowed them to live under the jurisdiction of their proper magistrates. Of these nations, the Pisans and Venetians preserved their respective quarters in the city; but the services and power of the Genoese deserved at the same time the gratitude and the jealousy of the Greeks. Their independent colony was first planted at the sea-port town of Heraclea in Thrace. They were speedily recalled and settled in the exclusive possession of the

C H A P.
LXII.

Palæologus
blinds and banishes the young emperor,
A. D. 1261,
Dec. 25.

suburb of Galata, an advantageous post, in which they revived the commerce, and insulted the majesty, of the Byzantine empire<sup>21</sup>.

The recovery of Constantinople was celebrated as the era of a new empire: the conqueror, alone, and by the right of the sword, renewed his coronation in the church of St. Sophia; and the name and honours of John Lascaris, his pupil and lawful sovereign, were insensibly abolished. But his claims still lived in the minds of the people; and the royal youth must speedily attain the years of manhood and ambition. By fear or conscience, Palæologus was restrained from dipping his hands in innocent and royal blood; but the anxiety of an usurper and a parent urged him to secure his throne, by one of those imperfect crimes so familiar to the modern Greeks. The loss of sight incapacitated the young prince for the active business of the world: instead of the brutal violence of tearing out his eyes, the visual nerve was destroyed by the intense glare of a red-hot bason<sup>22</sup>, and John Lascaris was removed to a distant castle, where he spent many years in privacy and oblivion. Such cool and deliberate guilt may seem incompatible with remorse; but if Michael could trust the mercy of heaven, he was not inaccessible to the reproaches and vengeance of mankind, which he had provoked by cruelty and treason. His cruelty imposed on a servile court the duties of applause or silence; but the clergy had a right to speak in the name of their invisible master; and their holy legions were led by a prelate, whose character was above the temptations of hope or fear. After a short abdication of his dignity, Arsenius<sup>23</sup> had confented

<sup>21</sup> See Pachymer (l. ii. c. 28—33.), Acropolita (c. 88.), Nicephorus Gregoras (l. iv. 7.), and for the treatment of the subject Latins, Ducange (l. v. c. 30, 31.).

<sup>22</sup> This milder invention for extinguishing the sight, was tried by the philosopher Democritus on himself, when he sought to withdraw his mind from the visible world: a foolish story! The word abacinare, in Latin and Italian, has furnished Ducange (Gloss. Latin.) with an opportunity to review the various modes of blinding: the more violent were scooping, burning with an iron, or hot vinegar, and binding the head with a strong cord till the eyes burst from their sockets. Ingenious tyrants!

<sup>23</sup> See the first retreat and restoration of Arsenius, in Pachymer (l. ii. c. 15. l. iii.

ented to ascend the ecclesiastical throne of Constantinople, and to preside in the restoration of the church. His pious simplicity was long deceived by the arts of Palæologus; and his patience and submission might soothe the usurper and protect the safety of the young prince. On the news of his inhuman treatment, the patriarch unsheathed the spiritual sword; and superstition, on this occasion, was enlisted in the cause of humanity and justice. In a synod of bishops, who were stimulated by the example of his zeal, the patriarch pronounced a sentence of excommunication; though his prudence still repeated the name of Michael in the public prayers. The eastern prelates had not adopted the dangerous maxims of ancient Rome; nor did they presume to enforce their censures, by deposing princes, or absolving nations from their oaths of allegiance. But the Christian, who had been separated from God and the church, became an object of horror; and, in a turbulent and fanatic capital, that horror might arm the hand of an assassin, or inflame a sedition of the people. Palæologus felt his danger, confessed his guilt, and deprecated his judge: the act was irretrievable; the prize was obtained; and the most rigorous penance, which he solicited, would have raised the sinner to the reputation of a saint. The unrelenting patriarch refused to announce any means of atonement or any hopes of mercy; and condescended only to pronounce, that, for so great a crime, great indeed must be the satisfaction. "Do you require," said Michael, "that I should abdicate the empire?" And at these words, he offered, or seemed to offer, the sword of state. Arsenius eagerly grasped this pledge of sovereignty; but when he perceived that the emperor was unwilling to purchase absolution at so dear a rate, he indignantly escaped to his cell, and left the royal sinner kneeling and weeping before the door<sup>24</sup>.

C H A P.
LXII.

is excommunicated by the patriarch Arsenius, A. D. 1262—1263.

c. 1, 2.), and Nicephorus Gregoras (l. iii. c. 1. l. iv. c. 1.). Posterity justly accused the αὐτοκρατορ and ἐπίσκοπος of Arsenius, the virtues of an hermit, the vices of a minister (l. xiii. c. 2.).

<sup>24</sup> The crime and excommunication of Michael are fairly told by Pachymer (l. iii. c. 10. 11. 19, &c.) and Gregoras (l. iv. c. 4.). His confession and penance restored their freedom.

C H A P.
LXII.

Schism of the Arsenites,
A. D.
1266—1312.

The danger and scandal of this excommunication subsisted above three years, till the popular clamour was assuaged by time and repentance; till the brethren of Arsenius condemned his inflexible spirit, so repugnant to the unbounded forgiveness of the gospel. The emperor had artfully insinuated, that, if he were still rejected at home, he might seek, in the Roman pontiff, a more indulgent judge; but it was far more easy and effectual to find or to place that judge at the head of the Byzantine church. Arsenius was involved in a vague rumour of conspiracy and disaffection; some irregular steps in his ordination and government were liable to censure; a synod deposed him from the episcopal office; and he was transported under a guard of soldiers to a small island of the Propontis. Before his exile, he sullenly requested that a strict account might be taken of the treasures of the church; boasted that his sole riches, three pieces of gold, had been earned by transcribing the psalms; continued to assert the freedom of his mind; and denied, with his last breath, the pardon which was implored by the royal sinner<sup>25</sup>. After some delay, Gregory, bishop of Adrianople, was translated to the Byzantine throne; but his authority was found insufficient to support the absolution of the emperor; and Joseph, a reverend monk, was substituted to that important function. This edifying scene was represented in the presence of the senate and people; at the end of six years, the humble penitent was restored to the communion of the faithful; and humanity will rejoice, that a milder treatment of the captive Lascaris was stipulated as a proof of his remorse. But the spirit of Arsenius still survived in a powerful faction of the monks and clergy, who persevered above forty-eight years in an obstinate schism. Their scruples were treated with tenderness and respect by Michael and his son; and the reconciliation of the Arsenites was the serious labour of the church and state. In the confidence of fanaticism, they had proposed to try their cause by a miracle; and when the two papers, that contained their own and the adverse cause, were cast into a fiery brazier, they expected that the Catholic verity would be respected by the flames. Alas! the two papers were indiscriminately consumed, and this unforeseen accident produced the union of a day, and renewed the quarrel of an age<sup>26</sup>. The final treaty displayed the victory of the Arsenites: the clergy abstained during forty days from all ecclesiastical functions; a slight penance was imposed on the laity; the body of Arsenius was deposited in the sanctuary; and in the name of the departed saint, the prince and people were released from the sins of their fathers<sup>27</sup>.

<sup>25</sup> Pachymer relates the exile of Arsenius (l. iv. c. 1—16.): he was one of the commissaries who visited him in the desert island.

The last testament of the unforgiving patriarch is still extant (Dupin, Bibliothèque Ecclesiastique, tom. x. p. 95.).

The establishment of his family was the motive, or at least the pretence, of the crime of Palæologus; and he was impatient to confirm the succession, by sharing with his eldest son the honours of the purple. Andronicus, afterwards surnamed the Elder, was proclaimed and crowned emperor of the Romans, in the fifteenth year of his age; and, from the first æra of a prolix and inglorious reign, he held that august title nine years as the colleague, and fifty as the successor, of his father. Michael himself, had he died in a private station, would have been thought more worthy of the empire: and the assaults of his temporal and spiritual enemies, left him few moments to labour for his own fame or the happiness of his subjects. He wrested from the Franks several of the noblest islands of the Archipelago, Lesbos, Chios, and Rhodes: his brother Constantine was sent to command in Malvasia and Sparta; and the eastern side of the Morea, from Argos and Napoli to Cape Tænarus, was repossessed by the Greeks. This effusion of Christian blood was loudly

C H A P.
LXII.

Reign of Michael Palæologus,
A. D. 1259,
Dec. 1—
A. D. 1282,
Dec. 11.
Reign of Andronicus
the Elder.
A. D. 1273,
Nov. 8—
A. D. 1332,
February 13.

<sup>26</sup> Pachymer (l. vii. c. 22.) relates this miraculous trial like a philosopher, and treats with similar contempt a plot of the Arsenites, to hide a revelation in the coffin of some old saint (l. vii. c. 13.). He compensates this incredulity by an image that weeps, another that bleeds (l. vii. c. 30.), and the miraculous cures of a deaf and a mute patient (l. xi. c. 32.).

<sup>27</sup> The story of the Arsenites is spread through the thirteen books of Pachymer. Their union and triumph are reserved for Nicephorus Gregoras (l. vii. 9.), who neither loves nor esteems these sectaries.

C H A P.
LXII.

condemned by the patriarch; and the insolent priest presumed to interpose his fears and scruples between the arms of princes. But in the prosecution of these western conquests, the countries beyond the Hellespont were left naked to the Turks; and their depredations verified the prophecy of a dying senator, that the recovery of Constantinople would be the ruin of Asia. The victories of Michael were achieved by his lieutenants; his sword rusted in the palace; and in the transactions of the emperor with the popes and the king of Naples, his political arts were stained with cruelty and fraud<sup>28</sup>.

His union with the Latin church,
A. D.
1274—1277.

I. The Vatican was the most natural refuge of a Latin emperor, who had been driven from his throne; and pope Urban the fourth appeared to pity the misfortunes, and vindicate the cause, of the fugitive Baldwin. A crusade, with plenary indulgence, was preached by his command against the schismatic Greeks; he excommunicated their allies and adherents; solicited Louis the ninth in favour of his kinsman; and demanded a tenth of the ecclesiastic revenues of France and England for the service of the holy war<sup>29</sup>. The subtle Greek, who watched the rising tempest of the West, attempted to suspend or soothe the hostility of the pope, by suppliant embassies and respectful letters; but he insinuated that the establishment of peace must prepare the reconciliation and obedience of the Eastern church. The Roman court could not be deceived by so gross an artifice; and Michael was admonished, that the repentance of the son should precede the forgiveness of the father; and that faith (an ambiguous word) was the only basis of friendship and alliance. After a long and affected delay, the approach of danger, and the importunity of Gregory the tenth, compelled him to enter on a more serious negotiation: he alleged the example of the great Va-

<sup>28</sup> Of the xiii books of Pachymer, the first six (as the 1th and 1th of Nicephorus Gregoras) contain the reign of Michael, at the time of whose death he was forty years of age. Instead of breaking, like his editor the Pere Pouffin, his history into two parts, I follow Ducange and Cousin, who number the xiii books in one series.

<sup>29</sup> Ducange, Hist. de C. P. l. v. c. 33, &c. from the Epistles of Urban IV.

taces; and the Greek clergy, who understood the intentions of their prince, were not alarmed by the first steps of reconciliation and respect. But when he pressed the conclusion of the treaty, they strenuously declared, that the Latins, though not in name, were heretics in fact, and that they despised those strangers as the vilest and most despicable portion of the human race<sup>30</sup>. It was the task of the emperor to persuade, to corrupt, to intimidate, the most popular ecclesiastics, to gain the vote of each individual, and alternately to urge the arguments of Christian charity and the public welfare. The texts of the fathers and the arms of the Franks were balanced in the theological and political scale; and without approving the addition to the Nicene creed, the most moderate were taught to confess, that the two hostile propositions of proceeding from the Father BY the Son, and of proceeding from the Father AND the Son, might be reduced to a safe and Catholic sense<sup>31</sup>. The supremacy of the pope was a doctrine more easy to conceive, but more painful to acknowledge; yet Michael represented to his monks and prelates, that they might submit to name the Roman bishop as the first of the patriarchs; and that their distance and discretion would guard the liberties of the Eastern church from the mischievous consequences of the right of appeal. He protested that he would sacrifice his life and empire, rather than yield the smallest point of orthodox faith or national independence; and this declaration was sealed and ratified by a golden bull. The patriarch Joseph withdrew to a monastery, to resign or resume his throne, according to the event of the treaty: the letters of union and obedience were subscribed by the emperor, his son Andronicus, and thirty-five archbishops and

<sup>30</sup> From their mercantile intercourse with the Venetians and Genoese, they branded the Latins as καπηλαιο and βραχυστοι (Pachymer, l. v. c. 10.). "Some are heretics in name; others, like the Latins, in fact," said the learned Veccus (l. v. c. 12.), who soon afterwards became a convert (c. 15, 16.) and a patriarch (c. 24.).

<sup>31</sup> In this class, we may place Pachymer himself, whose copious and candid narrative occupies the 5th and 6th books of his history. Yet the Greek is silent on the council of Lyons, and seems to believe that the popes always resided in Rome and Italy (l. v. c. 17. 21.).

C H A P.
LXII.

metropolitans, with their respective synods; and the episcopal list was multiplied by many dioceses which were annihilated under the yoke of the infidels. An embassy was composed of some trusty ministers and prelates; they embarked for Italy, with rich ornaments and rare perfumes, for the altar of St. Peter; and their secret orders authorised and recommended a boundless compliance. They were received in the general council of Lyons, by pope Gregory the tenth, at the head of five hundred bishops<sup>32</sup>. He embraced with tears his long-lost and repentant children; accepted the oath of the ambassadors, who abjured the schism in the name of the two emperors; adorned the prelates with the ring and mitre; chaunted in Greek and Latin the Nicene creed with the addition of filioque; and rejoiced in the union of the East and West, which had been reserved for his reign. To consummate this pious work, the Byzantine deputies were speedily followed by the pope's nuncios; and their instruction discloses the policy of the Vatican, which could not be satisfied with the vain title of supremacy. After viewing the temper of the prince and people, they were enjoined to absolve the schismatic clergy, who should subscribe and swear their abjuration and obedience; to establish in all the churches the use of the perfect creed; to prepare the entrance of a cardinal legate, with the full powers and dignity of his office; and to instruct the emperor in the advantages which he might derive from the temporal protection of the Roman pontiff<sup>33</sup>.

His persecution of the Greeks.

A. D.
1277—1282.

But they found a country without a friend, a nation in which the names of Rome and Union were pronounced with abhorrence. The patriarch Joseph was indeed removed; his place was filled by Veccus, an ecclesiastic of learning and moderation; and the emperor

<sup>32</sup> See the acts of the council of Lyons in the year 1274. Fleury, Hist. Ecclesiastique, tom. xviii. p. 181—199. Dupin, Bibliot. Eccles. tom. x. p. 135.

<sup>33</sup> This curious instruction, which has been drawn with more or less honesty by Wading and Leo Allatius from the archives of the Vatican, is given in an abstract or version by Fleury (tom. xviii. p. 252—258.).

was still urged by the same motives, to persevere in the same professions. But in his private language, Palæologus affected to deplore the pride, and to blame the innovations, of the Latins; and while he debased his character by this double hypocrisy, he justified and punished the opposition of his subjects. By the joint suffrage of the new and the ancient Rome, a sentence of excommunication was pronounced against the obstinate schismatics: the censures of the church were executed by the sword of Michael; on the failure of persuasion, he tried the arguments of prison and exile, of whipping and mutilation; those touch-stones, says an historian, of cowards and the brave. Two Greeks still reigned in Ætolia, Epirus, and Thes-saly, with the appellation of despots: they had yielded to the sovereign of Constantinople, but they rejected the chains of the Roman pontiff, and supported their refusal by successful arms. Under their protection, the fugitive monks and bishops assembled in hostile synods; and retorted the name of heretic with the galling addition of apostate: the prince of Trebizond was tempted to assume the forfeit title of emperor; and even the Latins of Negropont, Thebes, Athens, and the Morea, forgot the merits of the convert, to join, with open or clandestine aid, the enemies of Palæologus. His favourite generals, of his own blood and family, successively deserted, or betrayed, the sacrilegious trust. His sister Eulogia, a niece, and two female cousins, conspired against him; another niece, Mary queen of Bulgaria, negotiated his ruin with the sultan of Egypt; and, in the public eye, their treason was consecrated as the most sublime virtue<sup>34</sup>. To the pope's nuncios, who urged the consummation of the work, Palæologus exposed a naked recital of all that he had done and suffered for their sake. They were assured that the

C H A P
LXII.

<sup>34</sup> This frank and authentic confession of Michael's distress, is exhibited in barbarous Latin by Ogerius, who signs himself Protototarius Interpretum, and transcribed by Wading from the MSS. of the Vatican (A. D. 1278, N<sup>o</sup> 3.). His Annals of the Franciscan order, the Fratres Minores, in xvii volumes in folio (Rome, 1741), I have now accidentally seen among the waste paper of a bookseller.

C H A P.
LXII.

guilty sectaries, of both sexes and every rank, had been deprived of their honours, their fortunes, and their liberty; a spreading list of confiscation and punishment, which involved many persons, the dearest to the emperor, or the best deserving of his favour. They were conducted to the prison, to behold four princes of the royal blood chained in the four corners, and shaking their fetters in an agony of grief and rage. Two of these captives were afterwards released; the one by submission, the other by death: but the obstinacy of their two companions was chastised by the loss of their eyes; and the Greeks, the least adverse to the union, deplore that cruel and inauspicious tragedy<sup>35</sup>. Persecutors must expect the hatred of those whom they oppress; but they commonly find some consolation in the testimony of their conscience, the applause of their party, and, perhaps, the success of their undertaking. But the hypocrisy of Michael, which was prompted only by political motives, must have forced him to hate himself, to despise his followers, and to esteem and envy the rebel champions by whom he was detested and despised. While his violence was abhorred at Constantinople, at Rome his slowness was arraigned and his sincerity suspected; till at length pope Martin the fourth excluded the Greek emperor from the pale of a church, into which he was striving to reduce a schismatic people. No sooner had the tyrant expired, than the union was dissolved, and abjured by unanimous consent; the churches were purified; the penitents were reconciled; and his son Andronicus, after weeping the sins and errors of his youth, most piously denied his father the burial of a prince and a Christian<sup>36</sup>.

The union dissolved,
A. D. 1283.

Charles of Anjou subdues Naples and Sicily,

II. In the distress of the Latins, the walls and towers of Constantinople had fallen to decay: they were restored and fortified by the speech of Andronicus the elder (l. xii. c. 2.) is a curious record, which proves, that if the Greeks were the slaves of the emperor, the emperor was not less the slave of superstition and the clergy, policy

<sup>35</sup> See the sixth book of Pachymer, particularly the chapters, 1. 11. 16. 13. 24—27. He is the more credible, as he speaks of this persecution with less anger than sorrow.

<sup>36</sup> Pachymer, l. vii. c. 1—11. 17. The

policy of Michael, who deposited a plenteous store of corn and salt provisions, to sustain the siege which he might hourly expect from the resentment of the Western powers. Of these, the sovereign of the two Sicilies was the most formidable neighbour; but as long as they were possessed by Mainfroy, the bastard of Frederic the second, his monarchy was the bulwark rather than the annoyance of the Eastern empire. The usurper, though a brave and active prince, was sufficiently employed in the defence of his throne: his proscription by successive popes had separated Mainfroy from the common cause of the Latins; and the forces that might have besieged Constantinople, were detained in a crusade against the domestic enemy of Rome. The prize of her avenger, the crown of the two Sicilies, was won and worn by the brother of St. Louis, by Charles count of Anjou and Provence, who led the chivalry of France on this holy expedition<sup>37</sup>. The disaffection of his Christian subjects compelled Mainfroy to enlist a colony of Saracens whom his father had planted in Apulia: and this odious succour will explain the defiance of the Catholic hero, who rejected all terms of accommodation. “Bear this message,” said Charles, “to the sultan of Nocera, that God and the sword are umpire between us; and that he shall either send me to paradise, or I will send him to the pit of hell.” The armies met, and though I am ignorant of Mainfroy’s doom in the other world, in this he lost his friends, his kingdom, and his life, in the bloody battle of Benevento. Naples and Sicily were immediately peopled with a warlike race of French nobles; and their aspiring leader embraced the future conquest of Africa, Greece, and Palestine. The most specious reasons might point his first arms against the Byzantine empire; and Palæologus, dissident of his own strength,

C H A P.
LXII.A. D. 1266,
February 26.

<sup>37</sup> The best accounts, the nearest the time, the most full and entertaining, of the conquest of Naples by Charles of Anjou, may be found in the Florentine Chronicles of Ricordano Malespina (c. 175—193.) and Giovanni Villani (l. vii. c. 1—10. 25—30.), which are published by Muratori in the viiith and xiiith volumes of the historians of Italy. In his Annals (tom. xi. p. 56—72.), he has abridged these great events, which are likewise described in the Historia Civile of Giannone, tom. ii. l. xix. tom. iii. l. xx.

C H A P.
LXVII.

repeatedly appealed from the ambition of Charles to the humanity of St. Louis, who still preserved a just ascendant over the mind of his ferocious brother. For a while the attention of that brother was confined at home by the invasion of Conradin, the last heir of the Imperial house of Swabia: but the hapless boy sunk in the unequal conflict; and his execution on a public scaffold taught the rivals of Charles to tremble for their heads as well as their dominions. A second respite was obtained by the last crusade of St. Louis to the African coast; and the double motive of interest and duty urged the king of Naples to assist, with his powers and his presence, the holy enterprise. The death of St. Louis released him from the importunity of a virtuous censor; the king of Tunis confessed himself the tributary and vassal of the crown of Sicily; and the boldest of the French knights were free to enlist under his banner against the Greek empire. A treaty and a marriage united his interest with the house of Courtenay; his daughter Beatrice was promised to Philip, son and heir of the emperor Baldwin; a pension of six hundred ounces of gold was allowed for his maintenance; and his generous father distributed among his allies the kingdoms and provinces of the East, reserving only Constantinople, and one day's journey round the city, for the Imperial domain<sup>38</sup>. In this perilous moment, Palæologus was the most eager to subscribe the creed, and implore the protection, of the Roman pontiff, who assumed, with propriety and weight, the character of an angel of peace, the common father of the Christians. By his voice, the sword of Charles was chained in the scabbard; and the Greek ambassadors beheld him, in the pope's antichamber, biting his ivory sceptre in a transport of fury, and deeply resenting the refusal to enfranchise and consecrate his arms. He appears to have respected the disinterested mediation of Gregory the tenth; but Charles was insensibly disgusted by the pride and partiality of Nicholas the third; and his attachment to his kindred, the Ursini

Threatens
the Greek
empire,
A. D. 1270,
&c.

<sup>38</sup> Ducange, Hist. de C. P. l. v. c. 49— c. 29. l. v. c. 7—10. 25. l. vi. c. 30. 32, 33. 50. l. vi. c. 1—13. See Pachymer, l. iv. and Nicephorus Gregoras, l. iv. 5. l. v. 1. 6.

family, alienated the most strenuous champion from the service of the church. The hostile league against the Greeks, of Philip the Latin emperor, the king of the two Sicilies, and the republic of Venice, was ripened into execution; and the election of Martin the fourth, a French pope, gave a sanction to the cause. Of the allies, Philip supplied his name, Martin, a bull of excommunication, the Venetians, a squadron of forty galleys; and the formidable powers of Charles consisted of forty counts, ten thousand men at arms, a numerous body of infantry, and a fleet of more than three hundred ships and transports. A distant day was appointed for assembling this mighty force in the harbour of Brindisi: and a previous attempt was risked with a detachment of three hundred knights, who invaded Albania and besieged the fortress of Belgrade. Their defeat might amuse with a triumph the vanity of Constantinople; but the more sagacious Michael, despairing of his arms, depended on the effects of a conspiracy; on the secret workings of a rat, who gnawed the bow-string<sup>39</sup> of the Sicilian tyrant.

Among the proscribed adherents of the house of Swabia, John of Procida forfeited a small island of that name in the bay of Naples. His birth was noble, but his education was learned; and in the poverty of exile, he was relieved by the practice of physic, which he had studied in the school of Salerno. Fortune had left him nothing to lose, except life; and to despise life is the first qualification of a rebel. Procida was endowed with the art of negotiation, to enforce his reasons, and disguise his motives; and in his various transactions with nations and men, he could persuade each party that he laboured solely for their interest. The new kingdoms of Charles were afflicted by every species of fiscal and military oppression<sup>40</sup>; and the lives and fortunes of his Italian subjects were sacrificed

C H A P.
LXXII.

Palæologus
instigates
the revolt of Sicily,
A. D. 1282.

<sup>39</sup> The reader of Herodotus will recollect how miraculously the Assyrian host of Sennacherib was disarmed and destroyed (l. ii. c. 141.).

<sup>40</sup> According to Sabas Malaspina (Hist. Sicula, l. iii. c. 16. in Muratori, tom. viii. p. 832.), a zealous Guelph, the subjects of Charles, who had reviled Mainzroy as a wolf, began

C H A P.
LXVII.

ficed to the greatness of their master and the licentiousness of his followers. The hatred of Naples was repressed by his presence; but the loose government of his vicegerents excited the contempt, as well as the aversion, of the Sicilians: the island was roused to a sense of freedom by the eloquence of Procida; and he displayed to every baron his private interest in the common cause. In the confidence of foreign aid, he successively visited the courts of the Greek emperor, and of Peter king of Arragon<sup>41</sup>, who possessed the maritime countries of Valencia and Catalonia. To the ambitious Peter a crown was presented, which he might justly claim by his marriage with the sister of Mainfroy, and by the dying voice of Conradin, who from the scaffold had cast a ring to his heir and avenger. Palæologus was easily persuaded to divert his enemy from a foreign war by a rebellion at home; and a Greek subsidy of twenty-five thousand ounces of gold was most profitably applied to arm a Catalan fleet, which sailed under an holy banner to the specious attack of the Saracens of Africa. In the disguise of a monk or beggar, the indefatigable missionary of revolt flew from Constantinople to Rome, and from Sicily to Saragossa: the treaty was sealed with the signet of pope Nicholas himself, the enemy of Charles; and his deed of gift transferred the fiefs of St. Peter from the house of Anjou to that of Arragon. So widely diffused and so freely circulated, the secret was preserved above two years with impenetrable discretion; and each of the conspirators imbibed the maxim of Peter, who declared that he would cut off his left-hand if it were conscious of the intentions of his right. The mine was prepared with deep and dangerous artifice; but it may be questioned, whether the instant explosion of Palermo were the effect of accident or design.

began to regret him as a lamb: and he justifies their discontent by the oppressions of the French government (l. vi. c. 2. 7.). See the Sicilian manifesto in Nicholas Specialis (l. i. c. 11. in Muratori, tom. x. p. 930.).

<sup>41</sup> See the character and counsels of Peter king of Arragon, in Mariana (Hist. Hispan. l. xiv. c. 6. tom. ii. p. 133.). The reader forgives the Jesuit's defects, in favour, always of his style, and often of his sense.

On the vigil of Easter, a procession of the disarmed citizens visited a church without the walls; and a noble damsel was rudely insulted by a French soldier<sup>42</sup>. The ravisher was instantly punished with death; and if the people was at first scattered by a military force, their numbers and fury prevailed: the conspirators seized the opportunity; the flame spread over the island; and eight thousand French were exterminated in a promiscuous massacre, which has obtained the name of the SICILIAN VESPERS<sup>43</sup>. From every city the banners of freedom and the church were displayed: the revolt was inspired by the presence or the soul of Procida; and Peter of Arragon, who sailed from the African coast to Palermo, was saluted as the king and saviour of the isle. By the rebellion of a people on whom he had so long trampled with impunity, Charles was astonished and confounded; and in the first agony of grief and devotion, he was heard to exclaim, "O God! if thou has decreed to humble me, grant me at least a gentle and gradual descent from the pinnacle of greatness!" His fleet and army, which already filled the sea-ports of Italy, were hastily recalled from the service of the Grecian war; and the situation of Messina exposed that town to the first storm of his revenge. Feeble in themselves, and yet hopeless of foreign succour, the citizens would have repented, and submitted on the assurance of full pardon and their ancient privileges. But the pride of the monarch was already rekindled; and the most fervent intreaties of the legate could extort no more than a promise, that he would forgive the remainder, after a chosen list of eight hundred rebels had been yielded to his discretion. The despair of the Messinese renewed their courage: Peter of Arragon approached

C H A P.
LXII.

The Sicilian
Vespers,
A. D. 1282,
March 30.

<sup>42</sup> After enumerating the sufferings of his country, Nicholas Specialis adds, in the true spirit of Italian jealousy, Quæ omnia et graviora quidem, ut arbitror, patienti animo Siculi tolerassent, nisi (quod primum cunctis dominantibus cavendum est), alienas fœminas invasissent (l. i. c. 2. p. 924.).

<sup>43</sup> The French were long taught to remember this bloody lesson: "If I am provoked (said Henry the fourth), I will breakfast at Milan, and dine at Naples." Your majesty (replied the Spanish ambassador) may perhaps arrive in Sicily for "vespers."

C H A P.
LXII.

Defeat of Charles,
October 2.

to their relief<sup>44</sup>; and his rival was driven back by the failure of provision and the terrors of the equinox to the Calabrian shore. At the same moment, the Catalan admiral, the famous Roger de Loria, swept the channel with an invincible squadron: the French fleet, more numerous in transports than in galleys, was either burnt or destroyed; and the same blow assured the independence of Sicily and the safety of the Greek empire. A few days before his death, the emperor Michael rejoiced in the fall of an enemy whom he hated and esteemed; and perhaps he might be content with the popular judgment, that had they not been matched with each other, Constantinople and Italy must speedily have obeyed the same master<sup>45</sup>. From this disastrous moment, the life of Charles was a series of misfortunes; his capital was insulted, his son was made prisoner, and he sunk into the grave without recovering the isle of Sicily, which, after a war of twenty years, was finally severed from the throne of Naples, and transferred, as an independent kingdom, to a younger branch of the house of Arragon<sup>46</sup>.

The service and war of the Catalans in the Greek empire,

A. D.
1303—1307.

I shall not, I trust, be accused of superstition: but I must remark, that, even in this world, the natural order of events will sometimes afford the strong appearances of moral retribution. The first Palæologus had saved his empire by involving the kingdoms of the West in rebellion and blood; and from these seeds of discord, arose a generation of iron men, who assaulted and endangered the empire of his son. In modern times, our debts and taxes are the secret poison, which still corrodes the bosom of peace;

<sup>44</sup> This revolt, with the subsequent victory, are related by two national writers, Bartholæmy à Neocastro (in Muratori, tom. xiii.) and Nicholas Specialis (in Muratori, tom. x.), the one a contemporary, the other of the next century. The patriot Specialis disclaims the name of rebellion, and all previous correspondence with Peter of Arragon (nullo communicato consilio), who happened to be with a fleet and army on the African coast (l. i. c. 4. 9.).

<sup>45</sup> Nicephorus Gregoras (l. v. c. 6.) admires the wisdom of Providence in this equal balance of states and princes. For the honour of Palæologus, I had rather this balance had been observed by an Italian writer.

<sup>46</sup> See the Chronicle of Villani, the xiith volume of the Annali d'Italia of Muratori, and the xxth and xx<sup>ist</sup> books of the Istoria Civile of Giannone.

but

but in the weak and disorderly government of the middle ages, it was agitated by the present evil of the disbanded armies. Too idle to work, too proud to beg, the mercenaries were accustomed to a life of rapine: they could rob with more dignity and effect under a banner and a chief; and the sovereign, to whom their service was useless and their presence importunate, endeavoured to discharge the torrent on some neighbouring countries. After the peace of Sicily, many thousands of Genoese, Catalans<sup>47</sup>, &c. who had fought, by sea and land, under the standard of Anjou or Arragon, were blended into one nation by the resemblance of their manners and interest. They heard that the Greek provinces of Asia were invaded by the Turks: they resolved to share the harvest of pay and plunder; and Frederic king of Sicily most liberally contributed the means of their departure. In a warfare of twenty years, a ship, or a camp, was become their country; arms were their sole profession and property; valour was the only virtue which they knew; their women had imbibed the fearless temper of their lovers and husbands: it was reported, that, with a stroke of their broad-sword, the Catalans could cleave a horseman and an horse; and the report itself was a powerful weapon. Roger de Flor was the most popular of their chiefs; and his personal merit overshadowed the dignity of his prouder rivals of Arragon. The offspring of a marriage between a German gentleman of the court of Frederic the second and a damsel of Brindisi, Roger was successively a templar, an apostate, a pirate, and at length the richest and most powerful admiral of the Mediterranean. He sailed from Messina to Constantinople, with eighteen gallees, four great ships, and eight thousand adventurers; and his previous treaty was faithfully accomplished by Andronicus the elder, who accepted with joy and terror this formidable succour. A palace was allotted

C H A P.
LXII.

<sup>47</sup> In this motley multitude, the Catalans and Spaniards, the bravest of the soldiery, were stiled, by themselves and the Greeks, Amogavares. Moncada derives their origin from the Goths, and Pachymer (l. xi. c. 22.) from the Arabs; and in spite of national and religious pride, I am afraid the latter is in the right.

© H. A. P.
 LXII.

for his reception, and a niece of the emperor was given in marriage to the valiant stranger, who was immediately created great duke or admiral of Romania. After a decent repose, he transported his troops over the Propontis, and boldly led them against the Turks: in two bloody battles thirty thousand of the Moslems were slain: he raised the siege of Philadelphia, and deserved the name of the deliverer of Asia. But after a short season of prosperity, the cloud of slavery and ruin again burst on that unhappy province. The inhabitants escaped (says a Greek historian) from the smoke into the flames; and the hostility of the Turks was less pernicious than the friendship of the Catalans. The lives and fortunes which they had rescued, they considered as their own: the willing or reluctant maid was saved from the race of circumcision for the embraces of a Christian soldier: the exaction of fines and supplies was enforced by licentious rapine and arbitrary executions; and, on the resistance of Magnesia, the great duke besieged a city of the Roman empire<sup>48</sup>. These disorders he excused by the wrongs and passions of a victorious army; nor would his own authority or person have been safe, had he dared to punish his faithful followers, who were defrauded of the just and covenanted price of their services. The threats and complaints of Andronicus disclosed the nakedness of the empire. His golden bull had invited no more than five hundred horse and a thousand foot soldiers; yet the crowds of volunteers, who migrated to the East, had been enlisted and fed by his spontaneous bounty. While his bravest allies were content with three byzants, or pieces of gold, for their monthly pay, an ounce, or even two ounces, of gold were assigned to the Catalans, whose annual pension would thus amount to near an hundred pounds sterling: one of their chiefs had modestly rated at three hundred thousand crowns the value of his future merits; and above a million had been issued from the treasury for the maintenance of these costly mercenaries. A cruel tax had been imposed on the corn of the husbandman: one third was retrenched from the salaries of the public officers; and the standard of the coin was so shamefully debased, that of the four-and-twenty parts only five were of pure gold<sup>49</sup>. At the summons of the emperor, Roger evacuated a province which no longer supplied the materials of rapine; but he refused to disperse his troops; and while his style was respectful, his conduct was independent and hostile. He protested, that if the emperor should march against him, he would advance forty paces to kiss the ground before him, but in rising from this prostrate attitude Roger had a life and sword at the service of his friends. The great duke of Romania condescended to accept the title and ornaments of Cæsar; but he rejected the new proposal of the government of Asia with a subsidy of corn and money, on condition that he should reduce his troops to the harmless number of three thousand men. Assassination is the last resource of cowards. The Cæsar was tempted to visit the royal residence of Adrianople: in the apartment, and before the eyes, of the empress, he was stabbed by the Alani guards; and, though the deed was imputed to their private revenge, his countrymen, who dwelt at Constantinople in the security of peace, were involved in the same proscription by the prince or people. The loss of their leader intimidated the crowd of adventurers, who hoisted the sails of flight, and were soon scattered round the coasts of the Mediterranean. But a veteran band of fifteen hundred Catalans or French stood firm in the strong fortress of Gallipoli on the Hellespont, displayed the

<sup>48</sup> Some idea may be formed of the population of these cities, from the 36,000 inhabitants of Tralles, which, in the preceding reign, was rebuilt by the emperor, and ruined by the Turks (Pachymer, l. vi. c. 20, 21.).

C H A P.
LXII.

<sup>49</sup> I have collected these pecuniary circumstances from Pachymer (l. xi. c. 21. l. xii. c. 4, 5. 8. 14. 19.), who describes the progressive degradation of the gold coin. Even in the prosperous times of John Ducas Vatatzes, the byzants were composed in equal proportions of the pure and the baser metal. The poverty of Michael Palæologus compelled him to strike a new coin, with nine parts, or carats, of gold, and fifteen of copper alloy. After his death, the standard rose to ten cartas, till in the public distress it was reduced to the moiety. The prince was relieved for a moment, while credit and commerce were for ever blasted. In France, the gold coin is of twenty-two carats (one-twelfth alloy), and the standard of England and Holland is still higher.

C H A P.
LXII.

banners of Arragon, and offered to revenge and justify their chief by an equal combat of ten or an hundred warriors. Instead of accepting this bold defiance, the emperor Michael, the son and colleague of Andronicus, resolved to oppress them with the weight of multitudes: every nerve was strained to form an army of thirteen thousand horse and thirty thousand foot; and the Propontis was covered with the ships of the Greeks and Genoese. In two battles by sea and land, these mighty forces were encountered and overthrown by the despair and discipline of the Catalans; the young emperor fled to the palace; and an insufficient guard of light-horse was left for the protection of the open country. Victory renewed the hopes and numbers of the adventurers: every nation was blended under the name and standard of the great company; and three thousand Turkish proselytes deserted from the Imperial service to join this military association. In the possession of Gallipoli, the Catalans intercepted the trade of Constantinople and the Black Sea, while they spread their devastations on either side of the Hellespont over the confines of Europe and Asia. To prevent their approach, the greatest part of the Byzantine territory was laid waste by the Greeks themselves: the peasants and their cattle retired into the city; and myriads of sheep and oxen, for which neither place nor food could be procured, were unprofitably slaughtered on the same day. Four times the emperor Andronicus sued for peace, and four times he was inflexibly repulsed, till the want of provisions, and the discord of the chiefs, compelled the Catalans to evacuate the banks of the Hellespont and the neighbourhood of the capital. After their separation from the Turks, the remains of the great company pursued their march through Macedonia and Thessaly, to seek a new establishment in the heart of Greece<sup>50</sup>.

After

<sup>50</sup> The Catalan war is most copiously related by Pachymer, in the xith, xiith, and xiiith books, till he breaks off in the year 1308.

Nicephorus Gregoras (l. vii. 3-6.) is more concise and complete. Ducange, who adopts these adventurers as French, has hunted their footsteps

After some ages of oblivion, Greece was awakened to new misfortunes by the arms of the Latins. In the two hundred and fifty years between the first and the last conquest of Constantinople, that venerable land was disputed by a multitude of petty tyrants; without the comforts of freedom and genius, her ancient cities were again plunged in foreign and intestine war; and, if servitude be preferable to anarchy, they might repose with joy under the Turkish yoke. I shall not pursue the obscure and various dynasties, that rose and fell on the continent or in the isles; but our silence on the fate of ATHENS<sup>51</sup>, would argue a strange ingratitude to the first and purest school of liberal science and amusement. In the partition of the empire, the principality of Athens and Thebes was assigned to Otho de la Roche, a noble warrior of Burgundy<sup>52</sup>, with the title of great duke<sup>53</sup>, which the Latins understood in their own sense, and the Greeks more foolishly derived from the age of Constantine<sup>54</sup>. Otho followed the standard of the marquis of Montferrat; the ample state which he acquired by a miracle of conduct or fortune<sup>55</sup>, was peaceably inherited by his son and two grandsons, till the family, though

C H A P.
LXII.
Revolutions
of Athens,
A. D.
1204—1456.

footsteps with his usual diligence (Hist. de C. P. l. vi. c. 22—46.). He quotes an Arragonesé history, which I have read with pleasure, and which the Spaniards extol as a model of style and composition (Expedicion de los Catalanes y Arragoneses contra Turcos y Griegos; Barcelona, 1623, in quarto; Madrid, 1777, in octavo). Don Francisco de Moncada, Conde de Osona, may imitate Cæsar or Sallust; he may transcribe the Greek or Italian contemporaries: but he never quotes his authorities, and I cannot discern any national records of the exploits of his countrymen.

<sup>51</sup> See the laborious history of Ducange, whose accurate table of the French dynasties, recapitulates the thirty-five passages in which he mentions the dukes of Athens.

<sup>52</sup> He is twice mentioned by Villehardouin with honour (N<sup>o</sup> 151. 235.); and under the first passage, Ducange observes all that can be known of his person and family.

<sup>53</sup> From these Latin princes of the sixteenth century, Boccace, Chaucer, and Shakespeare, have borrowed their Theseus duke of Athens. An ignorant age transfers its own language and manners to the most distant times.

<sup>54</sup> The same Constantine gave to Sicily a king, to Russia the magnus dapifer of the empire, to Thebes the primicerius: and these absurd fables are properly lashed by Ducange (ad Nicephor. Greg. l. vii. c. 5.). By the Latins, the Lord of Thebes was styled by corruption the Megas Kurios, or Grand Sire!

<sup>55</sup> Quodam miraculo, says Alberic. He was probably received by Michael Choniates, the archbishop who had defended Athens against the tyrant Leo Sgurus (Nicetas in Baldwino). Michael was the brother of the historian Nicetas; and his encomium of Athens is still extant in MS. in the Bodleian library (Fabric. Bibliot. Græc. tom. vi. p. 405.).

C H A P.
LXII.

not the nation, was changed, by the marriage of an heiress, into the elder branch of the house of Brienne. The son of that marriage, Walter de Brienne, succeeded to the duchy of Athens; and, with the aid of some Catalan mercenaries, whom he invested with fiefs, reduced above thirty castles of the vassal or neighbouring lords. But when he was informed of the approach and ambition of the great company, he collected a force of seven hundred knights, six thousand four hundred horse, and eight thousand foot, and boldly met them on the banks of the river Cephissus in Bœotia. The Catalans amounted to no more than three thousand five hundred horse, and four thousand foot: but the deficiency of numbers was compensated by stratagem and order. They formed round their camp an artificial inundation: the duke and his knights advanced without fear or precaution on the verdant meadow: their horses plunged into the bog; and he was cut in pieces, with the greatest part of the French cavalry. His family and nation were expelled; and his son Walter de Brienne, the titular duke of Athens, the tyrant of Florence, and the constable of France, lost his life in the field of Poitiers. Attica and Bœotia were the rewards of the victorious Catalans: they married the widows and daughters of the slain; and during fourteen years, the great company was the terror of the Grecian states. Their factions drove them to acknowledge the sovereignty of the house of Arragon; and during the remainder of the fourteenth century, Athens, as a government or an appanage, was successively bestowed by the kings of Sicily. After the French and Catalans, the third dynasty was that of the Accaioli, a family, plebeian at Florence, potent at Naples, and sovereign in Greece. Athens, which they embellished with new buildings, became the capital of a state, that extended over Thebes, Argos, Corinth, Delphi, and a part of Thessaly; and their reign was finally determined by Mahomet the second, who strangled the last duke, and educated his sons in the discipline and religion of the seraglio.

Athens<sup>56</sup>, though no more than the shadow of her former self, still contains about eight or ten thousand inhabitants: of these, three-fourths are Greeks in religion and language; and the Turks, who compose the remainder, have relaxed, in their intercourse with the citizens, somewhat of the pride and gravity of their national character. The olive-tree, the gift of Minerva, flourishes in Attica; nor has the honey of mount Hymettus lost any part of its exquisite flavour<sup>57</sup>: but the languid trade is monopolised by strangers; and the agriculture of a barren land is abandoned to the vagrant Wallachians. The Athenians are still distinguished by the subtlety and acuteness of their understandings: but these qualities, unless ennobled by freedom and enlightened by study, will degenerate into a low and selfish cunning: and it is a proverbial saying of the country, “From the Jews of Thessalonica, the Turks of Negropont, and the Greeks of Athens, good Lord deliver us!” This artful people has eluded the tyranny of the Turkish bashaws, by an expedient which alleviates their servitude and aggravates their shame. About the middle of the last century, the Athenians chose for their protector the Kislar Aga, or chief black eunuch of the seraglio. This Æthiopian slave, who possesses the sultan’s ear, condescends to accept the tribute of thirty thousand crowns: his lieutenant, the Waywode, whom he annually confirms, may reserve for his own about five or six thousand more; and such is the policy of the citizens, that they seldom fail to remove and punish an oppressive governor. Their private differences are decided by the archbishop, one of the richest prelates of the Greek church, since he possesses a revenue of one thousand

C H A P.
LXII.
Present state
of Athens.

<sup>56</sup> The modern account of Athens, and the Athenians, is extracted from Spon (Voyage en Grèce, tom. ii. p. 79—199.) and Wheeler (Travels into Greece, p. 337—414.), Stuart (Antiquities of Athens, passim) and Chandler (Travels into Greece, p. 23—172.). The first of these travellers visited Greece in the year 1676, the last 1765; and ninety years had not produced much difference in the tranquil scene.

<sup>57</sup> The ancients, or at least the Athenians, believed that all the bees in the world had been propagated from mount Hymettus. They taught, that health might be preserved, and life prolonged, by the external use of oil, and the internal use of honey (Geoponica, l. xv. c. 7. p. 1089—1094. edit. Niclas).

C H A P.
LXII.

pounds sterling; and by a tribunal of the eight geronti or elders, chosen in the eight quarters of the city: the noble families cannot trace their pedigree above three hundred years; but their principal members are distinguished by a grave demeanour, a fur-cap, and the lofty appellation of archon. By some, who delight in the contrast, the modern language of Athens is represented as the most corrupt and barbarous of the seventy dialects of the vulgar Greek<sup>58</sup>: this picture is too darkly coloured; but it would not be easy, in the country of Plato and Demosthenes, to find a reader, or a copy, of their works. The Athenians walk with supine indifference among the glorious ruins of antiquity; and such is the debasement of their character, that they are incapable of admiring the genius of their predecessors<sup>59</sup>.

<sup>58</sup> Ducange, Glossar. Græc. Præfat. p. 8. who quotes for his author Theodosius Zygomalas, a modern grammarian. Yet Spon (tom. ii. p. 194.) and Wheeler (p. 355.), no incompetent judges, entertain a more favourable opinion of the Attic dialect.

<sup>59</sup> Yet we must not accuse them of corrupting the name of Athens, which they still call Athini. From the εἰς τὴν Ἀθῆναιον, we have formed our own barbarism of Setines.

C H A P. LXIII.

Civil Wars, and Ruin of the Greek Empire.—Reigns of Andronicus, the Elder and Younger, and John Palæologus.—Regency, Revolt, Reign, and Abdication of John Cantacuzene.—Establishment of a Genoese Colony at Pera or Galata.—Their Wars with the Empire and City of Constantinople.

THE long reign of Andronicus' the elder is chiefly memorable, by the disputes of the Greek church, the invasion of the Catalans, and the rise of the Ottoman power. He is celebrated as the most learned and virtuous prince of the age; but such virtue, and such learning, contributed neither to the perfection of the individual, nor to the happiness of society. A slave of the most abject superstition, he was surrounded on all sides by visible and invisible enemies; nor were the flames of hell less dreadful to his fancy, than those of a Catalan or Turkish war. Under the reign of the Palæologi, the choice of the patriarch was the most important business of the state; the heads of the Greek church were ambitious and fanatic monks; and their vices or virtues, their learning or ignorance, were equally mischievous or contemptible. By his intemperate discipline, the patriarch Athanasius<sup>2</sup> excited the hatred of the

C H A P.
LXIII.

Superstition of Andronicus and the times,

A. D.
1282—1320.

<sup>1</sup> Andronicus himself will justify our freedom in the invective (Nicephorus Gregoras, l. i. c. 1.), which he pronounced against historic falsehood. It is true, that his censure is more pointedly urged against calumny than against adulation.

<sup>2</sup> For the anathema in the pigeon's nest,

see Pachymer (l. ix. c. 24.), who relates the general history of Athanasius (l. viii. c. 13—16. 20—24. l. x. c. 27—29. 31—36. l. xi. c. 1—3. 5, 6. l. xiii. c. 8. 10. 23. 35.), and is followed by Nicephorus Gregoras (l. vi. 5. 7. l. vii. c. 1. 9.), who includes the second retreat of this second Chrysolom.

C H A P.
LXIII.

clergy and people: he was heard to declare, that the sinner should swallow the last dregs of the cup of penance; and the foolish tale was propagated, of his punishing a sacrilegious ass that had tasted the lettuce of a convent garden. Driven from the throne by the universal clamour, Athanasius composed before his retreat two papers of a very opposite cast. His public testament was in the tone of charity and resignation; the private codicil breathed the direct anathemas against the authors of his disgrace, whom he excluded for ever from the communion of the holy trinity, the angels, and the faints. This last paper he inclosed in an earthen pot, which was placed, by his order, on the top of one of the pillars in the dome of St. Sophia, in the distant hope of discovery and revenge. At the end of four years, some youths, climbing by a ladder in search of pigeons nests, detected the fatal secret; and, as Andronicus felt himself touched and bound by the excommunication, he trembled on the brink of the abyss which had been so treacherously dug under his feet. A synod of bishops was instantly convened to debate this important question: the rashness of these clandestine anathemas was generally condemned; but as the knot could be untied only by the same hand, as that hand was now deprived of the crossier, it appeared that this posthumous decree was irrevocable by any earthly power. Some faint testimonies of repentance and pardon were extorted from the author of the mischief; but the conscience of the emperor was still wounded, and he desired, with no less ardour than Athanasius himself, the restoration of a patriarch, by whom alone he could be healed. At the dead of night, a monk rudely knocked at the door of the royal bed-chamber, announcing a revelation of plague and famine, of inundations and earthquakes. Andronicus started from his bed, and spent the night in prayer, till he felt, or thought that he felt, a slight motion of the earth. The emperor on foot led the bishops and monks to the cell of Athanasius; and, after a proper resistance, the saint, from whom this message had been sent, consented to absolve the prince, and govern the church, of Constantinople.

stantinople. Untamed by disgrace, and hardened by solitude, the shepherd was again odious to the flock; and his enemies contrived a singular, and as it proved a successful, mode of revenge. In the night, they stole away the footstool or foot-cloth of his throne, which they secretly replaced with the decoration of a satirical picture. The emperor was painted with a bridle in his mouth, and Athanasius leading the tractable beast to the feet of Christ. The authors of the libel were detected and punished; but as their lives had been spared, the Christian priest in fullen indignation retired to his cell; and the eyes of Andronicus, which had been opened for a moment, were again closed by his successor.

C H A P.
LXIII.

If this transaction be one of the most curious and important of a reign of fifty years, I cannot at least accuse the brevity of my materials, since I reduce into some few pages the enormous folios of Pachymer<sup>3</sup>, Cantacuzene<sup>4</sup>, and Nicephorus Gregoras<sup>5</sup>, who have composed the prolix and languid story of the times. The name and situation of the emperor John Cantacuzene might inspire the most lively curiosity. His memorials of forty years extend from the revolt of the younger Andronicus to his own abdication of the empire; and it is observed, that, like Moses and Cæsar, he was the principal actor in the scenes which he describes. But in this eloquent work, we should vainly seek the sincerity of an hero or a penitent. Retired in a cloyster from the vices and passions of the world, he presents not a confession, but an apology, of the life of an ambitious statesman. Instead of unfolding the true counsels and characters of men, <sup>3</sup> Pachymer, in seven books, 377 folio pages, describes the first twenty-six years of Andronicus the Elder; and marks the date of his composition by the current news or lye of the day (A. D. 1308). Either death or disgust prevented him from resuming the pen.

<sup>4</sup> After an interval of twelve years, from the conclusion of Pachymer, Cantacuzenus takes up the pen; and his first book (c. 1—59. p. 9—150.) relates the civil war, and the eight last years of the elder Andronicus. The ingenious comparison with Moses and Cæsar, is fancied by his French translator, the president Cousin.

<sup>5</sup> Nicephorus Gregoras more briefly includes the entire life and reign of Andronicus the Elder (l. vi. c. 1—l. x. c. 1. p. 96—291.). This is the part of which Cantacuzene complains as a false and malicious representation of his conduct.

C. H. A. P.
LXIII.

First disputes between the elder and younger An-dronicus,
A. D. 1320.

he displays the smooth and specious surface of events, highly varnished with his own praises and those of his friends. Their motives are always pure; their ends always legitimate: they conspire and rebel without any views of interest; and the violence which they inflict or suffer is celebrated as the spontaneous effect of reason and virtue.

After the example of the first of the Palæologi, the elder Andronicus associated his son Michael to the honours of the purple; and from the age of eighteen to his premature death, that prince was acknowledged, above twenty-five years, as the second emperor of the Greeks<sup>6</sup>. At the head of an army, he excited neither the fears of the enemy nor the jealousy of the court: his modesty and patience were never tempted to compute the years of his father; nor was that father compelled to repent of his liberality either by the virtues or vices of his son. The son of Michael was named Andronicus from his grandfather, to whose early favour he was introduced by that nominal resemblance. The blossoms of wit and beauty increased the fondness of the elder Andronicus; and, with the common vanity of age, he expected to realize in the second, the hope which had been disappointed in the first, generation. The boy was educated in the palace as an heir and a favourite; and, in the oaths and acclamations of the people, the august triad was formed by the names of the father, the son, and the grandson. But the younger Andronicus was speedily corrupted by his infant greatness, while he beheld with puerile impatience the double obstacle that hung, and might long hang, over his rising ambition. It was not to acquire fame, or to diffuse happiness, that he so eagerly aspired: wealth and impunity were in his eyes the most precious attributes of a monarch; and his first indiscreet demand was the sovereignty καὶ σχηματῶ, καὶ γρηγορῶ καὶ πίστει ἑθελον Λατίνος ἢ ἀναστῆναι. Nic. Greg. l. ix. c. 1.), and founded a dynasty of Italian princes, which was extinguished A. D. 1533 (Ducange, Fam. Byz. p. 249—253.).

<sup>6</sup> He was crowned May 21st, 1295, and died October 12th, 1320 (Ducange, Fam. Byz. p. 239.). His brother Theodore, by a second marriage, inherited the marquisate of Montferrat, apostatized to the religion and manners of the Latins (ὅτι καὶ γρηγορὴ καὶ πίστει

of some rich and fertile island, where he might lead a life of independence and pleasure. The emperor was offended by the loud and frequent intemperance which disturbed his capital: the sums which his parsimony denied were supplied by the Genoese usurers of Pera; and the oppressive debt, which consolidated the interest of a faction, could be discharged only by a revolution. A beautiful female, a matron in rank, a prostitute in manners, had instructed the younger Andronicus in the rudiments of love; but he had reason to suspect the nocturnal visits of a rival; and a stranger passing through the street was pierced by the arrows of his guards, who were placed in ambush at her door. That stranger was his brother, prince Manuel, who languished and died of his wound; and the emperor Michael, their common father, whose health was in a declining state, expired on the eighth day, lamenting the loss of both his children<sup>7</sup>. However guiltless in his intention, the younger Andronicus might impute a brother's and a father's death to the consequence of his own vices; and deep was the sigh of thinking and feeling men, when they perceived, instead of sorrow and repentance, his ill-dissembled joy on the removal of two odious competitors. By these melancholy events, and the increase of his disorders, the mind of the elder emperor was gradually alienated; and, after many fruitless reproofs, he transferred on another grandson<sup>8</sup> his hopes and affection. The change was announced by the new oath of allegiance to the reigning sovereign, and the person whom he should appoint for his successor; and the acknowledged heir, after a repetition of insults and complaints, was exposed to the indignity of a public trial. Before the sentence, which would probably have condemned him to a dungeon or a cell, the emperor was informed that the palace courts

C H A P.
LXIII.

<sup>7</sup> We are indebted to Nicephorus Gregoras (l. viii. c. 1.) for the knowledge of this tragic adventure; while Cantacuzene more discreetly conceals the vices of Andronicus the Younger, of which he was the witness, and perhaps the associate (l. i. c. 1, &c.).

<sup>8</sup> His destined heir was Michael Catharus, the bastard of Constantine his second son. In this project of excluding his grandson Andronicus, Nicephorus Gregoras (l. viii. c. 3.) agrees with Cantacuzene (l. i. c. 1, 2.).

C H A P.
LXIII.

Three civil wars between the two em-perors,
A. D. 1321,
April 20—
A. D. 1328,
May 24.

were filled with the armed followers of his grandson; the judgment was softened to a treaty of reconciliation; and the triumphant escape of the prince encouraged the ardour of the younger faction.

Yet the capital, the clergy, and the senate, adhered to the person, or at least to the government, of the old emperor; and it was only in the provinces, by flight, and revolt, and foreign succour, that the malecontents could hope to vindicate their cause and subvert his throne. The soul of the enterprise was the great domestic John Cantacuzene: the fall from Constantinople is the first date of his actions and memorials; and if his own pen be most descriptive of his patriotism, an unfriendly historian has not refused to celebrate the zeal and ability which he displayed in the service of the young emperor. That prince escaped from the capital under the pretence of hunting; erected his standard at Adrianople; and, in a few days, assembled fifty thousand horse and foot, whom neither honour nor duty could have armed against the Barbarians. Such a force might have saved or commanded the empire; but their counsels were discordant, their motions were slow and doubtful, and their progress was checked by intrigue and negotiation. The quarrel of the two Andronici was protracted, and suspended, and renewed, during a ruinous period of seven years. In the first treaty, the relics of the Greek empire were divided: Constantinople, Thessalonica, and the islands, were left to the elder, while the younger acquired the sovereignty of the greatest part of Thrace, from Philippi to the Byzantine limit. By the second treaty, he stipulated the payment of his troops, his immediate coronation, and an adequate share of the power and revenue of the state. The third civil war was terminated by the surprise of Constantinople, the final retreat of the old emperor, and the sole reign of his victorious grandson. The reasons of this delay may be found in the characters of the men and of the times. When the heir of the monarchy first pleaded his wrongs and his apprehensions, he was heard with pity and applause: and his adherents repeated on all sides the inconsistent promise, that he would

Coronation
of the younger An-dronicus,
A. D. 1325,
February 2.

increase

increase the pay of the soldiers and alleviate the burthens of the people. The grievances of forty years were mingled in his revolt; and the rising generation was fatigued by the endless prospect of a reign, whose favourites and maxims were of other times. The youth of Andronicus had been without spirit, his age was without reverence: his taxes produced an annual revenue of five hundred thousand pounds; yet the richest of the sovereigns of Christendom was incapable of maintaining three thousand horse and twenty galleys, to resist the destructive progress of the Turks. "How different," said the younger Andronicus, "is my situation from that of the son of Philip! Alexander might complain, that his father would leave him nothing to conquer: alas! my grandfire will leave me nothing to lose." But the Greeks were soon admonished, that the public disorders could not be healed by a civil war; and that their young favourite was not destined to be the favour of a falling empire. On the first repulse, his party was broken by his own levity, their intestine discord, and the intrigues of the ancient court, which tempted each malecontent to desert or betray the cause of rebellion. Andronicus the younger was touched with remorse, or fatigued with business, or deceived by negotiation: pleasure rather than power was his aim; and the licence of maintaining a thousand hounds, a thousand hawks, and a thousand huntsmen, was sufficient to fuly his fame and disarm his ambition.

Let us now survey the catastrophe of this busy plot, and the final situation of the principal actors<sup>10</sup>. The age of Andronicus was consumed in civil discord; and, amidst the events of war and treaty, his power and reputation continually decayed, till the fatal night in

C H A P.
LXIII.

The elder-Andronicus
abdicates the government,
A. D. 1328,
May 24

<sup>9</sup> See Nicephorus Gregoras, l. viii. c. 6. The younger Andronicus complained, that in four years and four months, a sum of 550,000 byzants of gold was due to him for the expenses of his household (Cantacuzen. l. i. c. 48). Yet he would have remitted the debt, if he might have been allowed to squeeze the farmers of the revenue.

<sup>10</sup> I follow the chronology of Nicephorus Gregoras, who is remarkably exact. It is proved, that Cantacuzene has mistaken the dates of his own actions, or rather that his text has been corrupted by ignorant transcribers.

which

C H A P.
LXIII.

which the gates of the city and palace were opened without resistance to his grandson. His principal commander scorned the repeated warnings of danger; and retiring to rest in the vain security of ignorance, abandoned the feeble monarch, with some priests and pages, to the terrors of a sleepless night. These terrors were quickly realized by the hostile shouts, which proclaimed the titles and victory of Andronicus the younger; and the aged emperor, falling prostrate before an image of the Virgin, dispatched a suppliant message to resign the sceptre, and to obtain his life at the hands of the conqueror. The answer of his grandson was decent and pious; at the prayer of his friends, the younger Andronicus assumed the sole administration; but the elder still enjoyed the name and pre-eminence of the first emperor, the use of the great palace, and a pension of twenty-four thousand pieces of gold, one half of which was assigned on the royal treasure, and the other on the fishery of Constantinople. But his impotence was soon exposed to contempt and oblivion; the vast silence of the palace was disturbed only by the cattle and poultry of the neighbourhood, which roved with impunity through the solitary courts; and a reduced allowance of ten thousand pieces of gold<sup>11</sup> was all that he could ask, and more than he could hope. His calamities were embittered by the gradual extinction of sight; his confinement was rendered each day more rigorous; and during the absence and sickness of his grandson, his inhuman keepers, by the threats of instant death, compelled him to exchange the purple for the monastic habit and profession. The monk Antony had renounced the pomp of the world: yet he had occasion for a coarse fur in the winter season, and as wine was forbidden by his confessor, and water by his physician, the sherbet of Egypt was his common drink. It was not without difficulty that the late emperor could procure three or four pieces to satisfy these simple wants; and if he bestowed the gold to relieve the more painful distress of a friend, the sacrifice is of some weight in the scale of humanity and religion. Four years after his abdication, Andronicus or Antony expired in a cell, in the seventy-fourth year of his age: and the last strain of adulation could only promise a more splendid crown of glory in heaven, than he had enjoyed upon earth<sup>12</sup>.

<sup>11</sup> I have endeavoured to reconcile the (l. ix. c. 2.); the one of whom wished to 4,000 pieces of Cantacuzene (l. ii. c. 1.) soften, the other to magnify, the hardships with the 10,000 of Nicephorus Gregoras of the old emperors.

C H A P.
LXIII.

His death,
A. D. 1332,
February 13.

Nor was the reign of the younger, more glorious or fortunate than that of the elder, Andronicus<sup>13</sup>. He gathered the fruits of ambition; but the taste was transient and bitter: in the supreme station he lost the remains of his early popularity; and the defects of his character became still more conspicuous to the world. The public reproach urged him to march in person against the Turks; nor did his courage fail in the hour of trial; but a defeat and a wound were the only trophies of his expedition in Asia, which confirmed the establishment of the Ottoman monarchy. The abuses of the civil government attained their full maturity and perfection: his neglect of forms, and the confusion of national dresses, are deplored by the Greeks as the fatal symptoms of the decay of the empire. Andronicus was old before his time: the intemperance of youth had accelerated the infirmities of age; and after being rescued from a dangerous malady by nature, or physic, or the Virgin, he was snatched away before he had accomplished his forty-fifth year. He was twice married; and as the progress of the Latins in arms and arts had softened the prejudices of the Byzantine court, his two wives were chosen in the princely houses of Germany and Italy. The first, Agnes at home, Irene in Greece, was daughter of the duke of

Reign of An-dronicus the younger,
A. D. 1328,
May 24—
A. D. 1341,
June 15.

His two wives.

<sup>12</sup> See Nicephorus Gregoras (l. ix. c. 6, 7, 8. 10. 14. l. x. c. 1.). The historian had tasted of the prosperity, and shared the retreat, of his benefactor; and that friendship, which "waits or to the scaffold or the cell," should not lightly be accused as "a

"hireling, a prostitute to praise."

<sup>13</sup> The sole reign of Andronicus the younger is described by Cantacuzene (l. ii. c. 1—40. p. 191—339.) and Nicephorus Gregoras (l. ix. c. 7—l. xi. c. 11. p. 262—361.).

C H A P.
LXIII.

Brunswick. Her father<sup>14</sup> was a petty lord<sup>15</sup> in the poor and savage regions of the north of Germany<sup>16</sup>: yet he derived some revenue from his silver-mines<sup>17</sup>; and his family is celebrated by the Greeks as the most ancient and noble of the Teutonic name<sup>18</sup>. After the death of this childless princefs, Andronicus fought in marriage Jane, the fifter of the count of Savoy<sup>19</sup>; and his fuit was preferred to that of the French king<sup>20</sup>. The count refpected in his fifter the fuperior majefty of a Roman emprefs: her retinue was compofed of <sup>14</sup> Agnes, or Irene, was the daughter of duke Henry the Wonderful, the chief of the houfe of Brunfwick, and the fourth in defcent from the famous Henry the Lion, duke of Saxony and Bavaria, and conqueror of the Slavi on the Baltic coaft. Her brother Henry was furnamed the Greek, from his two journies into the Eaft: but thefe journies were fubfequent to his fifter's marriage; and I am ignorant how Agnes was difcovered in the heart of Germany, and recommended to the Byzantine court (Rimius, Memoirs of the Houfe of Brunfwick, p. 126—137.).

<sup>15</sup> Henry the Wonderful was the founder of the branch of Grubenhagen, extinct in the year 1596 (Rimius, p. 287.). He refided in the caftle of Wolfenbittel, and poffeffed no more than a fixth part of the allodial eftates of Brunfwick and Luneburgh, which the Guelph family had faved from the confifcation of their great fiefs. The frequent partitions among brothers, had almoft ruined the princely houfes of Germany, till that juft, but pernicious, law was flowly fuperseded by the right of primogeniture. The principality of Grubenhagen, one of the laft remains of the Hercynian foreft, is a woody, mountainous, and barren tract (Bufching's Geography, vol. vi. p. 270—286. Engliffh tranflation).

<sup>16</sup> The royal author of the Memoirs of Brandenburg will teach us, how juftly, in a much later period, the north of Germany deferved the epithets of poor and barbarous (Eftai fur les Mœurs, &c.). In the year 1306, in the woods of Luneburgh, fome wild people of the Vened race were allowed to bury alive their infirm and ufelefs parents (Rimius, p. 136.).

<sup>17</sup> The affertion of Tacitus, that Germany was deftitute of the precious metals, muft be taken, even in his own time, with fome limitation (Germania, c. 5. Annal. xi. 20.). According to Spener (Hift. Germaniæ Pragmatica, tom. i. p. 351.), Argentifodinæ in Hercyniis montibus, imperante Othone magno (A. D. 968) primum apertæ, largam etiam opes augendi dederunt copiam: but Rimius (p. 258, 259.) defers till the year 1016 the difcovery of the filver mines of Grubenhagen, or the Upper Hartz, which were productive in the beginning of the xivth century, and which ftill yield a confiderable revenue to the houfe of Brunfwick.

<sup>18</sup> Cantacuzene has given a moft honourable testimony, καὶ δ' ἐκ Γερμανῶν αὐτῆς θυγατρὸς θεῶς ἐτι μαρτυρεῖται (the modern Greeks employ the η for the θ, and the μπ for the β, and the whole will read in the Italian idiom di Brunzuic), τὸ παρ' αὐτοῖς ἐπιφανέστατε, καὶ λαμπροτάτη πάντα τὰς ἡμετέρας ἐπιβλαβότατος τὴ γυναικί. The praife is juft in itfelf, and pleafing to an Engliffh ear.

<sup>19</sup> Anne, or Jane, was one of the four daughters of Amedée the Great, by a fecond marriage, and half fifter of his fucceffor Edward count of Savoy (Anderfon's Tables, p. 650.). See Cantacuzene (l. i. c. 40—42.).

<sup>20</sup> That king, if the fact be true, muft have been Charles the Fair, who in five years (1321—1326) was married to three wives (Anderfon, p. 628.). Anne of Savoy arrived at Conftantinople in February 1326.

knights

knights and ladies; she was regenerated and crowned in St. Sophia, under the more orthodox appellation of Anne; and, at the nuptial feast, the Greeks and Italians vied with each other in the martial exercises of tilts and tournaments.

C H A P.
LXIII.

The empress Anne of Savoy survived her husband: their son, John Palæologus, was left an orphan and an emperor, in the ninth year of his age; and his weakness was protected by the first and most deserving of the Greeks. The long and cordial friendship of his father for John Cantacuzene is alike honourable to the prince and the subject. It had been formed amidst the pleasures of their youth: their families were almost equally noble<sup>21</sup>; and the recent lustre of the purple was amply compensated by the energy of a private education. We have seen that the young emperor was saved by Cantacuzene from the power of his grandfather; and, after six years of civil war, the same favourite brought him back in triumph to the palace of Constantinople. Under the reign of Andronicus the younger, the great domestic ruled the emperor and the empire; and it was by his valour and conduct that the isle of Lesbos and the principality of Ætolia were restored to their ancient allegiance. His enemies confess, that, among the public robbers, Cantacuzene alone was moderate and abstemious; and the free and voluntary account which he produces of his own wealth<sup>22</sup> may sustain the presumption that it was devolved by inheritance, and not accumulated by rapine. He does not indeed specify the value of his money, plate, and jewels; yet, after a voluntary gift of two hundred vases of silver, after much had been secreted by his friends and plundered by his foes, his forfeit treasures were sufficient for the equipment of a fleet of seventy gallees. He does not measure the size and number of his estates; but

Reign of
John Palæo-
logus.
A. D. 1341,
June 15—
A. D. 1391.
Fortune of John Canta-
cuzenus.

<sup>21</sup> The noble race of the Cantacuzeni (illustrious from the xith century in the Byzantine annals) was drawn from the Paladins of France, the heroes of those romances which in the xiiith century were translated and read by the Greeks (Ducange, Fam. Byzant. p. 258.).

<sup>22</sup> See Cantacuzene (l. iii. c. 24. 30. 36.).

C H A P.
LXIII.

his granaries were heaped with an incredible store of wheat and barley; and the labour of a thousand yoke of oxen might cultivate, according to the practice of antiquity, about sixty-two thousand five hundred acres of arable land<sup>23</sup>. His pastures were stocked with two thousand five hundred brood mares, two hundred camels, three hundred mules, five hundred asses, five thousand horned cattle, fifty thousand hogs, and seventy thousand sheep<sup>24</sup>: a precious record of rural opulence, in the last period of the empire, and in a land, most probably in Thrace, so repeatedly wasted by foreign and domestic hostility. The favour of Cantacuzene was above his fortune. In the moments of familiarity, in the hour of sickness, the emperor was desirous to level the distance between them, and pressed his friend to accept the diadem and purple. The virtue of the great domestic, which is attested by his own pen, resisted the dangerous proposal; but the last testament of Andronicus the younger named him the guardian of his son, and the regent of the empire.

He is left regent of the empire.

His regency is attacked, A. D. 1341,

Had the regent found a suitable return of obedience and gratitude, perhaps he would have acted with pure and zealous fidelity in the service of his pupil<sup>25</sup>. A guard of five hundred soldiers watched over his person and the palace; the funeral of the late emperor was decently performed; the capital was silent and submissive; and five hundred letters, which Cantacuzene dispatched in the first month, informed the provinces of their loss and their duty. The prospect of a tranquil minority was blasted by the great duke or admiral <sup>23</sup> Saferna, in Gaul, and Columella, in Italy or Spain, allow two yoke of oxen, two drivers, and six labourers, for two hundred jugera (125 English acres) of arable land, and three more men must be added if there be much underwood (Columella de Re Rusticâ, l. ii. c. 13. p. 441. edit. Gesner).

<sup>24</sup> In this enumeration (l. iii. c. 30.), the French translation of the president Cousin is blotted with three palpable and essential errors. 1. He omits the 1000 yoke of working oxen. 2. He interprets the πεντακισχίλις πρὸς δεσφιδας, by the number of fifteen hundred. 3. He confounds myriads with chiliads, and gives Cantacuzene no more than 5000 hogs. Put not your trust in translations!

<sup>25</sup> See the regency and reign of John Cantacuzenus, and the whole progress of the civil war, in his own history (l. iii. c. 1—100. p. 348—700.), and in that of Nicephorus Gregoras (l. xii. c. 1—l. xv. c. 9. p. 353—492.).

Apocaucus; and to exaggerate his perfidy, the Imperial historian is pleased to magnify his own imprudence, in raising him to that office against the advice of his more sagacious sovereign. Bold and subtle, rapacious and profuse, the avarice and ambition of Apocaucus were by turns subservient to each other; and his talents were applied to the ruin of his country. His arrogance was heightened by the command of a naval force and an impregnable castle, and under the mask of oaths and flattery he secretly conspired against his benefactor. The female court of the empress was bribed and directed: he encouraged Anne of Savoy to assert, by the law of nature, the tutelage of her son; the love of power was disguised by the anxiety of maternal tenderness; and the founder of the Palæologi had instructed his posterity to dread the example of a perfidious guardian. The patriarch John of Apri, was a proud and feeble old man, encompassed by a numerous and hungry kindred. He produced an obsolete epistle of Andronicus, which bequeathed the prince and people to his pious care: the fate of his predecessor Arsenius prompted him to prevent, rather than punish, the crimes of an usurper; and Apocaucus smiled at the success of his own flattery, when he beheld the Byzantine priest assuming the state and temporal claims of the Roman pontiff<sup>26</sup>. Between three persons so different in their situation and character, a private league was concluded: a shadow of authority was restored to the senate; and the people was tempted by the name of freedom. By this powerful confederacy, the great domestic was assaulted at first with clandestine, at length with open, arms. His prerogatives were disputed; his opinions slighted; his friends persecuted; and his safety was threatened both in the camp and city. In his absence on the public service, he was accused of treason; proscribed as an enemy of the church and state;

C H A P.
LXIII.

by Apocau-
cus;

by the empress Anne of Savoy;

by the patriarch.

<sup>26</sup> He assumed the royal privilege of red shoes or buskins; placed on his head a mitre of silk and gold; subscribed his epistles with hyacinth or green ink, and claimed for the new, whatever Constantine had given to the ancient, Rome (Cantacuzen. l. iii. c. 36. Nic. Gregoras, l. xiv. c. 3.).

and

C H A P.
LXIII.

and delivered, with all his adherents, to the sword of justice, the vengeance of the people, and the power of the devil: his fortunes were confiscated; his aged mother was cast into prison; all his past services were buried in oblivion; and he was driven by injustice to perpetrate the crime of which he was accused<sup>27</sup>. From the review of his preceding conduct, Cantacuzene appears to have been guiltless of any treasonable designs; and the only suspicion of his innocence must arise from the vehemence of his protestations, and the sublime purity which he ascribes to his own virtue. While the empress and the patriarch still affected the appearances of harmony, he repeatedly solicited the permission of retiring to a private, and even a monastic, life. After he had been declared a public enemy, it was his fervent wish to throw himself at the feet of the young emperor, and to receive without a murmur the stroke of the executioner: it was not without reluctance that he listened to the voice of reason, which inculcated the sacred duty of saving his family and friends, and proved that he could only save them by drawing the sword and assuming the Imperial title.

Cantacuzene
assumes the purple,
A. D. 1341,
October 26.

In the strong city of Demotica, his peculiar domain, the emperor John Cantacuzenus was invested with the purple buskins: his right-leg was clothed by his noble kinsmen, the left by the Latin chiefs, on whom he conferred the order of knighthood. But even in this act of revolt, he was still studious of loyalty; and the titles of John Palæologus and Anne of Savoy were proclaimed before his own name and that of his wife Irene. Such vain ceremony is a thin disguise of rebellion, nor are there perhaps any personal wrongs that can authorise a subject to take arms against his sovereign: but the want of preparation and success may confirm the assurance of the usurper, that this decisive step was the effect of necessity rather than of choice. Constantinople adhered to the young emperor: the king of Bulgaria was invited to the relief of Adrianople: the principal cities of Thrace and Macedonia, after some hesitation, renounced their obedience to the great domestic; and the leaders of the troops and provinces were induced, by their private interest, to prefer the loose dominion of a woman and a priest. The army of Cantacuzene, in sixteen divisions, was stationed on the banks of the Melas to tempt or intimidate the capital: it was dispersed by treachery or fear; and the officers, more especially the mercenary Latins, accepted the bribes, and embraced the service, of the Byzantine court. After this loss, the rebel emperor (he fluctuated between the two characters) took the road of Thessalonica with a chosen remnant; but he failed in his enterprise on that important place; and he was closely pursued by the great duke, his enemy Apocaucus, at the head of a superior power by sea and land. Driven from the coast, in his march, or rather flight, into the mountains of Servia, Cantacuzene assembled his troops to scrutinize those who were worthy and willing to accompany his broken fortunes. A base majority bowed and retired; and his trusty band was diminished to two thousand, and at last to five hundred, volunteers. The cral<sup>28</sup>, or despot of the Servians, received him with generous hospitality; but the ally was insensibly degraded to a suppliant, an hostage, a captive; and, in this miserable dependence, he waited at the door of the Barbarian, who could dispose of the life and liberty of a Roman emperor. The most tempting offers could not persuade the cral to violate his trust; but he soon inclined to the stronger side; and his friend was dismissed without injury to a new vicissitude of hopes and perils.

<sup>27</sup> Nic. Gregoras (l. xii. c. 5.) confesses the innocence and virtues of Cantacuzenus, the guilt and flagitious vices of Apocaucus; nor does he dissemble the motive of his personal and religious enmity to the former; ου δε δια κακιαν αλλων, αιτιος ο πραοτατος της παρωλιας εληεν εναι φθορα;

<sup>28</sup> The princes of Servia (Ducange, Famil. Dalmaticæ, &c. c. 2, 3, 4. 9.) were styled Despots in Greek, and Cral, in their native idiom (Ducange, Gloss. Græc. p. 751.). That title, the equivalent of king, appears to be of Sclavonic origin, from whence it has been borrowed by the Hungarians, the modern Greeks, and even by the Turks (Lennævius, Pandect. Turc. p. 422.), who reserve the name of Padishah for the emperor. To obtain the latter in stead of the former, is the ambition of the French at Constantinople (Avertissement à l'histoire de Timur Bee, p. 39.).

C. H. A. P.
LXIII.

The civil war.

A. D.
1341—1347.

Victory of Cantacuzene.

Near six years the flame of discord burnt with various success and unabated rage : the cities were distracted by the faction of the nobles and the plebeians ; the Cantacuzeni and Palæologi : and the Bulgarians, the Servians, and the Turks, were invoked on both sides as the instruments of private ambition and the common ruin. The regent deplored the calamities, of which he was the author and victim : and his own experience might dictate a just and lively remark on the different nature of foreign and civil war. “ The former,” said he, “ is the external warmth of summer, always tolerable, and “ often beneficial ; the latter is the deadly heat of a fever, which “ consumes without a remedy the vitals of the constitution<sup>29</sup>.”

The introduction of barbarians and savages into the contests of civilized nations, is a measure pregnant with shame and mischief ; which the interest of the moment may compel, but which is reprobated by the best principles of humanity and reason. It is the practice of both sides to accuse their enemies of the guilt of the first alliances ; and those who fail in their negotiations, are loudest in their censure of the example which they envy, and would gladly imitate. The Turks of Asia were less barbarous perhaps than the shepherds of Bulgaria and Servia ; but their religion rendered them the implacable foes of Rome and Christianity. To acquire the friendship of their emirs, the two factions vied with each other in baseness and profusion : the dexterity of Cantacuzene obtained the preference : but the succour and victory were dearly purchased by the marriage of his daughter with an infidel, the captivity of many thousand Christians, and the passage of the Ottomans into Europe, the last and fatal stroke in the fall of the Roman empire. The inclining scale was decided in his favour by the death of Apocaucus, the just, though singular, retribution of his crimes. A crowd of nobles or plebeians, whom he feared or hated, had been seized by his orders in the capital and the provinces; and the old palace of Constantine was assigned for the place of their confinement. Some alterations in raising the walls, and narrowing the cells, had been ingeniously contrived to prevent their escape, and aggravate their misery; and the work was incessantly pressed by the daily visits of the tyrant. His guards watched at the gate, and as he stood in the inner-court to overlook the architects, without fear or suspicion, he was assaulted and laid breathless on the ground, by two resolute prisoners of the Palæologian race<sup>30</sup>, who were armed with sticks, and animated by despair. On the rumour of revenge and liberty, the captive multitude broke their fetters, fortified their prison, and exposed from the battlements the tyrant's head, presuming on the favour of the people and the clemency of the empress. Anne of Savoy might rejoice in the fall of an haughty and ambitious minister, but while she delayed to resolve or to act, the populace, more especially the mariners, were excited by the widow of the great duke to a sedition, an assault, and a massacre. The prisoners (of whom the far greater part were guiltless or inglorious of the deed) escaped to a neighbouring church: they were slaughtered at the foot of the altar; and in his death the monster was not less bloody and venomous than in his life. Yet his talents alone upheld the cause of the young emperor; and his surviving associates, suspicious of each other, abandoned the conduct of the war, and rejected the fairest terms of accommodation. In the beginning of the dispute, the empress felt and complained, that she was deceived by the enemies of Cantacuzene: the patriarch was employed to preach against the forgiveness of injuries; and her promise of immortal hatred was sealed by an oath, under the penalty of excommunication<sup>31</sup>. But Anne

<sup>29</sup> Nic. Gregoras, l. xii. c. 14. It is surprising, that Cantacuzene has not inserted this just and lively image in his own writings.

C H A P.
LXIII.

<sup>30</sup> The two avengers were both Palæologi, who might resent, with royal indignation, the shame of their chains. The tragedy of Apocaucus may deserve a peculiar reference to Cantacuzene (l. iii. c. 86.) and Nic. Gregoras (l. xiv. c. 10.).

<sup>31</sup> Cantacuzene accuses the patriarch, and spares the empress, the mother of his sovereign (l. iii. 33, 34.), against whom Nic. Gregoras expresses a particular animosity (l. xiv. 10, 11. xv. 5.). It is true, that they do not speak exactly of the same time.

C H A P.
LXIII.

soon learned to hate without a teacher: she beheld the misfortunes of the empire with the indifference of a stranger: her jealousy was exasperated by the competition of a rival empress; and on the first symptoms of a more yielding temper, she threatened the patriarch to convene a synod, and degrade him from his office. Their incapacity and discord would have afforded the most decisive advantage; but the civil war was protracted by the weakness of both parties; and the moderation of Cantacuzene has not escaped the reproach of timidity and indolence. He successively recovered the provinces and cities; and the realm of his pupil was measured by the walls of Constantinople; but the metropolis alone counterbalanced the rest of the empire; nor could he attempt that important conquest till he had secured in his favour the public voice and a private correspondence. An Italian, of the name of Facciolati<sup>32</sup>, had succeeded to the office of great duke: the ships, the guards, and the golden gate, were subject to his command; but his humble ambition was bribed to become the instrument of treachery; and the revolution was accomplished without danger or bloodshed. Destitute of the powers of resistance, or the hope of relief, the inflexible Anne would have still defended the palace, and have smiled to behold the capital in flames, rather than in the possession of a rival. She yielded to the prayers of her friends and enemies; and the treaty was dictated by the conqueror, who professed a loyal and zealous attachment to the son of his benefactor. The marriage of his daughter with John Palæologus was at length consummated: the hereditary right of the pupil was acknowledged; but the sole administration during ten years was vested in the guardian. Two emperors and three empresses were seated on the Byzantine throne; and a general amnesty quieted the apprehensions, and confirmed the property, of the most guilty subjects. The festival of the corona-

He re-enters Constanti-
nople,
A. D. 1347,
January 8.

<sup>32</sup> The traitor and treason are revealed by Nic. Gregoras (l. xv. c. 8.); but the name is more discreetly suppressed by his great accomplice (Cantacuzen, l. iii. c. 99-).

tion and nuptials was celebrated with the appearances of concord and magnificence, and both were equally fallacious. During the late troubles, the treasures of the state, and even the furniture of the palace, had been alienated or embezzled: the royal banquet was served in pewter or earthen-ware; and such was the proud poverty of the times, that the absence of gold and jewels was supplied by the paltry artifices of glass and gilt-leather<sup>33</sup>.

C H A P.
LXIII.

I hasten to conclude the personal history of John Cantacuzene<sup>34</sup>. He triumphed and reigned; but his reign and triumph were clouded by the discontent of his own and the adverse faction. His followers might style the general amnesty, an act of pardon for his enemies, and of oblivion for his friends<sup>35</sup>: in his cause, their estates had been forfeited or plundered; and as they wandered naked and hungry through the streets, they cursed the selfish generosity of a leader; who, on the throne of the empire, might relinquish without merit his private inheritance. The adherents of the empress blushed to hold their lives and fortunes by the precarious favour of an usurper; and the thirst of revenge was concealed by a tender concern for the succession, and even the safety, of her son. They were justly alarmed by a petition of the friends of Cantacuzene, that they might be released from their oath of allegiance to the Palæologi; and entrusted with the defence of some cautionary towns; a measure supported with argument and eloquence; and which was rejected (says the Imperial historian) “by my sublime, and almost incredible, “virtue.” His repose was disturbed by the sound of plots and seditions; and he trembled, lest the lawful prince should be stolen

Reign of John Canta-
cuzene,
A. D. 1347.
January 8—
A. D. 1355.
January.

<sup>33</sup> Nic. Greg. l. xv. 11. There were however some true pearls, but very thinly sprinkled. The rest of the stones had only παροδοτικὴν ἕρπον πρὸς τὸ διαυγεῖν.

<sup>34</sup> From his return to Constantinople, Cantacuzene continues his history, and that of the empire, one year beyond the abdication of his son Matthew, A. D. 1357 (l. iv. c. 1—50. p. 705—911.). Nicephorus Gregoras ends with the synod of Constantinople, in the year 1351 (l. xxii. c. 3. p. 660. the rest to the conclusion of the xxivth book, p. 717. is all controversy); and his fourteen last books are still MSS. in the king of France's library.

<sup>35</sup> The emperor (Cantacuzen, l. iv. c. 1.) represents his own virtues, and Nic. Gregoras (l. xv. c. 11.) the complaints of his friends, who suffered by it's effects. I have lent them the words of our poor cavaliers after the restoration.

C H A P.
LXIII.

away by some foreign or domestic enemy, who would inscribe his name and his wrongs in the banners of rebellion. As the son of Andronicus advanced in the years of manhood, he began to feel and to act for himself; and his rising ambition was rather stimulated than checked by the imitation of his father's vices. If we may trust his own professions, Cantacuzene laboured with honest industry to correct these fordid and sensual appetites, and to raise the mind of the young prince to a level with his fortune. In the Servian expedition, the two emperors shewed themselves in cordial harmony to the troops and provinces; and the younger colleague was initiated by the elder in the mysteries of war and government. After the conclusion of the peace, Palæologus was left at Thessalonica, a royal residence, and a frontier station, to secure by his absence the peace of Constantinople, and to withdraw his youth from the temptations of a luxurious capital. But the distance weakened the powers of control, and the son of Andronicus was surrounded with artful or unthinking companions, who taught him to hate his guardian, to deplore his exile, and to vindicate his rights. A private treaty with the cral or despot of Servia, was soon followed by an open revolt; and Cantacuzene, on the throne of the elder Andronicus, defended the cause of age and prerogative, which in his youth he had so vigorously attacked. At his request, the empress mother undertook the voyage of Thessalonica, and the office of mediation: she returned without success; and unless Anne of Savoy was instructed by adversity, we may doubt the sincerity, or at least the fervour, of her zeal. While the regent grasped the sceptre with a firm and vigorous hand, she had been instructed to declare, that the ten years of his legal administration would soon elapse; and that after a full trial of the vanity of the world, the emperor Cantacuzene sighed for the repose of a cloyster, and was ambitious only of an heavenly crown. Had these sentiments been genuine, his voluntary abdication would have restored the peace of the empire, and his conscience would have been relieved by an act of justice. Palæologus alone was responsible for his future government; and whatever might be his vices, they were were surely less formidable than the calamities of a civil war, in which the Barbarians and infidels were again invited to assist the Greeks in their mutual destruction. By the arms of the Turks, who now struck a deep and everlasting root in Europe, Cantacuzene prevailed in the third contest in which he had been involved; and the young emperor, driven from the sea and land, was compelled to take shelter among the Latins of the isle of Tenedos. His insolence and obstinacy provoked the victor to a step which must render the quarrel irreconcilable: and the association of his son Matthew, whom he invested with the purple, established the succession in the family of the Cantacuzeni. But Constantinople was still attached to the blood of her ancient princes: and this last injury accelerated the restoration of the rightful heir. A noble Genoese espoused the cause of Palæologus, obtained a promise of his sister, and achieved the revolution with two galleys and two thousand five hundred auxiliaries. Under the pretence of distress, they were admitted into the lesser port; a gate was opened, and the Latin shout of, "long life" and victory to the emperor, John Palæologus!" was answered by a general rising in his favour. A numerous and loyal party yet adhered to the standard of Cantacuzene: but he asserts in his history (does he hope for belief?) that his tender conscience rejected the assurance of conquest; that, in free obedience to the voice of religion and philosophy, he descended from the throne, and embraced with pleasure the monastic habit and profession<sup>36</sup>. So soon as he ceased to be a prince, his successor was not unwilling that he should be a saint: the remainder of his life was devoted to piety and learning; in the cells of Constantinople and mount Athos, the monk Joasaph was respected as the temporal and spiritual father of the emperor; and if he issued from his retreat, it was as the minister of

C H A P.
LXIII.

John Palæo-logus takes up arms against him,
A. D. 1353.

Abdication
of Cantacuzene,
A. D. 1355,
January.

<sup>36</sup> The awkward apology of Cantacuzene (l. iv. c. 39—42.), who relates, with visible confusion, his own downfall, may be supplied by the less accurate, but more honest narratives of Matthew Villani (l. iv. c. 46. in the Script. Rerum Ital. tom. xiv. p. 268.) and Ducas (c. 10, 11.).

peace,

C H A P.
LXIII.

Dispute concerning the light of mount Thabor,

A. D.
1341—1351.

peace, to subdue the obstinacy, and solicit the pardon, of his rebellious son<sup>37</sup>.

Yet in the cloyster, the mind of Cantacuzene was still exercised by theological war. He sharpened a controversial pen against the Jews and Mahometans<sup>38</sup>; and in every state, he defended with equal zeal the divine light of mount Thabor, a memorable question which consummates the religious follies of the Greeks. The fakirs of India<sup>39</sup>, and the monks of the Oriental church, were alike persuaded, that, in total abstraction of the faculties of the mind and body, the purer spirit may ascend to the enjoyment and vision of the Deity. The opinion and practice of the monasteries of mount Athos<sup>40</sup> will be best represented in the words of an abbot, who flourished in the eleventh century. “When thou art alone in thy cell,” says the ascetic teacher, “shut thy door, and seat thyself in a corner; raise “thy mind above all things vain and transitory; recline thy beard “and chin on thy breast; turn thy eyes and thy thought towards “the middle of thy belly, the region of the navel; and search the “place of the heart, the seat of the soul. At first, all will be dark “and comfortless; but if you persevere day and night, you will “feel an ineffable joy; and no sooner has the soul discovered the “place of the heart, than it is involved in a mystic and ethereal “light.” This light, the production of a distempered fancy, the creature of an empty stomach and an empty brain, was adored by

<sup>37</sup> Cantacuzene, in the year 1375, was honoured with a letter from the pope (Fleury, Hist. Eccles. tom. xx. p. 250.). His death is placed by respectable authority on the 20th of November 1411 (Ducange, Fam. Byzant. p. 260.). But if he were of the age of his companion Andronicus the Younger, he must have lived 116 years; a rare instance of longevity, which in so illustrious a person would have attracted universal notice.

<sup>38</sup> His four discourses, or books, were printed at Basil 1543 (Fabric. Bibliot. Græc. tom. vi. p. 473.). He composed them to satisfy a profelyte who was assaulted with letters from his friends of Ispahan. Cantacuzene had read the Koran; but I understand from Maracci, that he adopts the vulgar prejudices and fables against Mahomet and his religion.

<sup>39</sup> See the Voyages de Bernier, tom. i. p. 127.

<sup>40</sup> Mosheim, Institut. Hist. Eccles. p. 522, 523. Fleury, Hist. Eccles. tom. xx. p. 22. 24. 107—114, &c. The former unfolds the causes with the judgment of a philosopher, the latter transcribes and translates with the prejudices of a Catholic priest.

the Quietists as the pure and perfect essence of God himself; and as long as the folly was confined to mount Athos, the simple solitaries were not inquisitive how the divine essence could be a material substance, or how an immaterial substance could be perceived by the eyes of the body. But in the reign of the younger Andronicus, these monasteries were visited by Barlaam<sup>41</sup>, a Calabrian monk, who was equally skilled in philosophy and theology; who possessed the languages of the Greeks and Latins; and whose versatile genius could maintain their opposite creeds, according to the interest of the moment. The indiscretion of an ascetic revealed to the curious traveller the secrets of mental prayer; and Barlaam embraced the opportunity of ridiculing the Quietists, who placed the soul in the navel; of accusing the monks of mount Athos of heresy and blasphemy. His attack compelled the more learned to renounce or dissemble the simple devotion of their brethren; and Gregory Palamas introduced a scholastic distinction between the essence and operation of God. His inaccessible essence dwells in the midst of an uncreated and eternal light; and this beatific vision of the saints had been manifested to the disciples on mount Thabor, in the transfiguration of Christ. Yet this distinction could not escape the reproach of polytheism; the eternity of the light of Thabor was fiercely denied; and Barlaam still charged the Palamites with holding two eternal substances, a visible and an invisible God. From the rage of the monks of mount Athos, who threatened his life, the Calabrian retired to Constantinople, where his smooth and specious manners introduced him to the favour of the great domestic and the emperor. The court and the city were involved in this theological dispute, which flamed amidst the civil war; but the

<sup>41</sup> Bafnage (in Canisii Antiq. Lestiones, tom. iv. p. 363—368.) has investigated the character and story of Barlaam. The duplicity of his opinions had inspired some doubts of the identity of his person. See likewise Fabricius (Bibliot. Græc. tom. x. p. 427—432.).

C. H. A. P.
LXIII.

doctrine of Barlaam was disgraced by his flight and apostacy: the Palamites triumphed; and their adversary, the patriarch John of Apri, was deposed by the consent of the adverse factions of the state. In the character of emperor and theologian, Cantacuzene presided in the synod of the Greek church, which established, as an article of faith, the uncreated light of mount Thabor; and, after so many insults, the reason of mankind was slightly wounded by the addition of a single absurdity. Many rolls of paper or parchment have been blotted; and the impenitent sectaries, who refused to subscribe the orthodox creed, were deprived of the honours of Christian burial; but in the next age the question was forgotten; nor can I learn that the axe or the faggot were employed for the extirpation of the Barlaamite heresy<sup>42</sup>.

Establishment of the Genoese at Pera or Galata,
A. D.
1261—1347.

For the conclusion of this chapter, I have reserved the Genoese war, which shook the throne of Cantacuzene, and betrayed the debility of the Greek empire. The Genoese, who, after the recovery of Constantinople, were seated in the suburb of Pera or Galata, received that honourable sief from the bounty of the emperor. They were indulged in the use of their laws and magistrates; but they submitted to the duties of vassals and subjects: the forcible word of liegemen<sup>43</sup> was borrowed from the Latin jurisprudence; and their podesta, or chief, before he entered on his office, saluted the emperor with loyal acclamations and vows of fidelity. Genoa sealed a firm alliance with the Greeks; and, in case of a defensive war, a supply of fifty empty galleys, and a succour of fifty galleys completely armed and manned, was promised library, have added some facts and documents.

<sup>42</sup> See Cantacuzene (l. ii. c. 39, 40. l. iv. c. 3. 23, 24, 25.), and Nic. Gregoras (l. xi. c. 10. l. xv. 3, 7, &c.), whose last books, from the xixth to the xxivth, are almost confined to a subject so interesting to the authors. Boivin (in Vit. Nic. Gregoræ), from the unpublished books, and Fabricius (Bibliot. Græc. tom. x. p. 462—473.), or rather Montfauçon, from the MSS. of the Coislin

<sup>43</sup> Pachymer (l. v. c. 10.) very properly explains λιγίος (ligios) by διδεσ. The use of these words in the Greek and Latin of the feudal times, may be amply understood from the Glossaries of Ducange (Græc. p. 811, 812. Latin. tom. iv. p. 109—111.).

by the republic to the empire. In the revival of a naval force, it was the aim of Michael Palæologus to deliver himself from a foreign aid; and his vigorous government contained the Genoese of Galata within those limits which the insolence of wealth and freedom provoked them to exceed. A sailor threatened that they should soon be masters of Constantinople, and slew the Greek who resented this national affront; and an armed vessel, after refusing to salute the palace, was guilty of some acts of piracy in the Black Sea. Their countrymen threatened to support their cause; but the long and open village of Galata was instantly surrounded by the Imperial troops; till, in the moment of the assault, the prostrate Genoese implored the clemency of their sovereign. The defenceless situation which secured their obedience, exposed them to the attack of their Venetian rivals, who, in the reign of the elder Andronicus, presumed to violate the majesty of the throne. On the approach of their fleets, the Genoese, with their families and effects, retired into the city: their empty habitations were reduced to ashes; and the feeble prince, who had viewed the destruction of his suburb, expressed his resentment, not by arms, but by ambassadors. This misfortune, however, was advantageous to the Genoese, who obtained, and imperceptibly abused, the dangerous licence of surrounding Galata with a strong wall; of introducing into the ditch the waters of the sea; of erecting lofty turrets; and of mounting a train of military engines on the rampart. The narrow bounds in which they had been circumscribed, were insufficient for the growing colony; each day they acquired some addition of landed property; and the adjacent hills were covered with their villas and castles, which they joined and protected by new fortifications††. The navigation and trade of the Euxine was the patri-

C H A P.
LXIII.

†† The establishment and progress of the Genoese at Pera, or Galata, is described by Ducange (C. P. Christiana, l. i. p. 68, 69.) from the Byzantine historians, Pachymer (l. ii. c. 35. l. v. 10. 30. l. ix. 15. l. xii. 6. 9.), Nicephorus Gregoras (l. v. c. 4. l. vi. c. 11. l. ix. c. 5. l. xi. c. 1. l. xv. c. 1. 6.), and Cantacuzene (l. i. c. 12. l. ii. c. 29, &c.).

C H A P.
LXIII.

Their trade and info-lence.

mony of the Greek emperors, who commanded the narrow entrance, the gates, as it were, of that inland sea. In the reign of Michael Palæologus, their prerogative was acknowledged by the sultan of Egypt, who solicited and obtained the liberty of sending an annual ship for the purchase of slaves in Circassia and the Lesser Tartary; a liberty pregnant with mischief to the Christian cause; since these youths were transformed by education and discipline into the formidable Mamalukes<sup>45</sup>. From the colony of Pera, the Genoese engaged with superior advantage in the lucrative trade of the Black Sea; and their industry supplied the Greeks with fish and corn; two articles of food almost equally important to a superstitious people. The spontaneous bounty of nature appears to have bestowed the harvests of the Ukraine, the produce of a rude and savage husbandry; and the endless exportation of salt fish and caviar is annually renewed by the enormous sturgeons that are caught at the mouth of the Don or Tanais, in their last station of the rich mud and shallow water of the Mæotis<sup>46</sup>. The waters of the Oxus, the Caspian, the Volga, and the Don, opened a rare and laborious passage for the gems and spices of India; and, after three months march, the caravans of Carizme met the Italian vessels in the harbours of Crimæa<sup>47</sup>. These various branches of trade were monopolised by the diligence and power of the Genoese. Their rivals of Venice and Pisa were forcibly expelled; the natives were awed by the castles and cities, which arose on the foundations of their humble factories; and their were sometimes twenty-four or twenty-six feet long, weighed eight or nine hundred pounds, and yielded three or four quintals of caviar. The corn of the Bosphorus had supplied the Athenians in the time of Demosthenes.

<sup>45</sup> Both Pachymer (l. iii. c. 3, 4, 5.) and Nic. Gregoras (l. iv. c. 7.) understand and deplore the effects of this dangerous indulgence. Bibars, sultan of Egypt, himself a Tartar, but a devout Musulman, obtained from the children of Zingis the permission to build a stately mosque in the capital of Crimæa (de Guignes, Hist. des Huns, tom. iii. p. 343.).

<sup>46</sup> Chardin (Voyages en Perse, tom. i. p. 48.) was assured at Caffa, that these fishes

<sup>47</sup> De Guignes, Hist. des Huns, tom. iii. p. 343, 344. Viaggi di Ramusio, tom. i. fol. 400. But this land or water carriage could only be practicable when Tartary was united under a wise and powerful monarch.

principal principal establishment of Caffa<sup>48</sup> was besieged without effect by the Tartar powers. Destitute of a navy, the Greeks were oppressed by these haughty merchants, who fed, or famished, Constantinople, according to their interest. They proceeded to usurp the customs, the fishery, and even the toll, of the Bosphorus; and while they derived from these objects a revenue of two hundred thousand pieces of gold, a remnant of thirty thousand was reluctantly allowed to the emperor<sup>49</sup>. The colony of Pera or Galata acted, in peace and war, as an independent state; and, as it will happen in distant settlements, the Genoese podesta too often forgot that he was the servant of his own masters.

C H A P.
LXIII.

Their war with the emperor Cantacuzene,
A. D. 1348.

These usurpations were encouraged by the weakness of the elder Andronicus, and by the civil wars that afflicted his age and the minority of his grandson. The talents of Cantacuzene were employed to the ruin, rather than the restoration, of the empire; and after his domestic victory, he was condemned to an ignominious trial, whether the Greeks or the Genoese should reign in Constantinople. The merchants of Pera were offended by his refusal of some contiguous lands, some commanding heights, which they proposed to cover with new fortifications; and in the absence of the emperor, who was detained at Demotica by sickness, they ventured to brave the debility of a female reign. A Byzantine vessel, which had presumed to fish at the mouth of the harbour, was sunk by these audacious strangers; the fishermen were murdered. Instead of suing for pardon, the Genoese demanded satisfaction; required in an haughty strain, that the Greeks should renounce the exercise of navigation; and encountered with regular arms the first sallies of the popular indignation. They instantly occupied the debateable land; and by the labour of a whole people, of either sex and of every age, the days, he saw above 400 sail employed in the corn and fish trade (Voyages en Perse, tom. i. p. 46—48.).

<sup>48</sup> Nic. Gregoras (l. xiii. c. 12.) is judicious and well-informed on the trade and colonies of the Black Sea. Chardin describes the present ruins of Caffa, where, in forty

<sup>49</sup> See Nic. Gregoras, l. xvii. c. 1.

C H A P.
LXIII.

Destruction
of his fleet,
A. D. 1349.

wall was raised, and the ditch was sunk, with incredible speed. At the same time, they attacked and burnt two Byzantine galleys; while the three others, the remainder of the Imperial navy, escaped from their hands: the habitations without the gates, or along the shore, were pillaged and destroyed; and the care of the regent, of the empress Irene, was confined to the preservation of the city. The return of Cantacuzene dispelled the public consternation: the emperor inclined to peaceful counsels; but he yielded to the obstinacy of his enemies, who rejected all reasonable terms, and to the ardour of his subjects, who threatened, in the style of scripture, to break them in pieces like a potter's vessel. Yet they reluctantly paid the taxes, that he imposed for the construction of ships, and the expences of the war; and as the two nations were masters, the one of the land, the other of the sea, Constantinople and Pera were pressed by the evils of a mutual siege. The merchants of the colony, who had believed that a few days would terminate the war, already murmured at their losses; the succours from their mother-country were delayed by the factions of Genoa; and the most cautious embraced the opportunity of a Rhodian vessel to remove their families and effects from the scene of hostility. In the spring, the Byzantine fleet, seven galleys and a train of smaller vessels, issued from the mouth of the harbour, and steered in a single line along the shore of Pera; unskilfully presenting their sides to the beaks of the adverse squadron. The crews were composed of peasants and mechanics; nor was their ignorance compensated by the native courage of Barbarians: the wind was strong, the waves were rough; and no sooner did the Greeks perceive a distant and inactive enemy, than they leaped headlong into the sea, from a doubtful, to an inevitable, peril. The troops that marched to the attack of the lines of Pera were struck at the same moment with a similar panic; and the Genoese were astonished, and almost ashamed, at their double victory. Their triumphant vessels, crowned with flowers, and dragging after them
the

the captive galleys, repeatedly passed and repassed before the palace: the only virtue of the emperor was patience; and the hope of revenge his sole consolation. Yet the distress of both parties interposed a temporary agreement; and the shame of the empire was disguised by a thin veil of dignity and power. Summoning the chiefs of the colony, Cantacuzene affected to despise the trivial object of the debate; and, after a mild reproof, most liberally granted the lands, which had been previously resigned to the seeming custody of his officers<sup>50</sup>.

C H A P.
LXIII.

But the emperor was soon solicited to violate the treaty, and to join his arms with the Venetians, the perpetual enemies of Genoa and her colonies. While he compared the reasons of peace and war, his moderation was provoked by a wanton insult of the inhabitants of Pera, who discharged from their rampart a large stone that fell in the midst of Constantinople. On his just complaint, they coldly blamed the imprudence of their engineer; but the next day the insult was repeated, and they exulted in a second proof that the royal city was not beyond the reach of their artillery. Cantacuzene instantly signed his treaty with the Venetians; but the weight of the Roman empire was scarcely felt in the balance of these opulent and powerful republics<sup>51</sup>. From the straits of Gibraltar to the mouth of the Tanais, their fleets encountered each other with various success; and a memorable battle was fought in the narrow sea, under the walls of Constantinople. It would not be an easy task to reconcile the accounts of the Greeks, the Venetians, and the Genoese<sup>52</sup>; and while I depend on the narrative of an impartial

Victory of the Genoese over the Venetians and Greeks,
A. D. 1352,
February 13.

<sup>50</sup> The events of this war are related by Cantacuzene (l. iv. c. 11.) with obscurity and confusion, and by Nic. Gregoras (l. xvii. c. 1—7.) in a clear and honest narrative. The priest was less responsible than the prince for the defeat of the fleet.

<sup>51</sup> This second war is darkly told by Cantacuzene (l. iv. c. 18. p. 24, 25. 28—32.), who wishes to disguise what he dares not deny. I regret this part of Nic. Gre-

goras, which is still in MS. at Paris.

<sup>52</sup> Muratori (Annali d'Italia, tom. xii. p. 144.) refers to the most ancient Chronicles of Venice (Caresinus, the continuator of Andrew Dandulus, tom. xii. p. 421, 422.) and Genoa (George Stella, Annales Genuenses, tom. xvii. p. 1091, 1092.); both which I have diligently consulted in his great Collection of the Historians of Italy.

historian,

C H A P.
LXIII.

historian<sup>53</sup>, I shall borrow from each nation the facts that redound to their own disgrace, and the honour of their foes. The Venetians, with their allies the Catalans, had the advantage of number; and their fleet, with the poor addition of eight Byzantine galleys, amounted to seventy-five sail: the Genoese did not exceed sixty-four; but in those times their ships of war were distinguished by the superiority of their size and strength. The names and families of their naval commanders, Pisani and Doria, are illustrious in the annals of their country; but the personal merit of the former was eclipsed by the fame and abilities of his rival. They engaged in tempestuous weather; and the tumultuary conflict was continued from the dawn to the extinction of light. The enemies of the Genoese applaud their prowess: the friends of the Venetians are dissatisfied with their behaviour; but all parties agree in praising the skill and boldness of the Catalans, who, with many wounds, sustained the brunt of the action. On the separation of the fleets, the event might appear doubtful; but the thirteen Genoese galleys, that had been sunk or taken, were compensated by a double loss of the allies; of fourteen Venetians, ten Catalans, and two Greeks; and even the grief of the conquerors expressed the assurance and habit of more decisive victories. Pisani confessed his defeat, by retiring into a fortified harbour, from whence, under the pretext of the orders of the senate, he steered with a broken and flying squadron for the isle of Candia, and abandoned to his rivals the sovereignty of the sea. In a public epistle, addressed to the doge and senate, Petrarch employs his eloquence to reconcile the maritime powers, the two luminaries of Italy. The orator celebrates the valour and victory of the Genoese, the first of men in the exercise of naval war: he drops a tear on the misfortunes of their Venetian brethren; but he exhorts them to pursue with fire and sword the base and perfidious Greeks; to purge the metropolis of the East from the heresy with which it was infected. Deserted by their friends, the Greeks were incapable of resistance; and three months after the battle, the emperor Cantacuzene solicited and subscribed a treaty, which for ever banished the Venetians and Catalans, and granted to the Genoese a monopoly of trade, and almost a right of dominion. The Roman empire (I smile in transcribing the name) might soon have sunk into a province of Genoa, if the ambition of the republic had not been checked by the ruin of her freedom and naval power. A long contest of one hundred and thirty years was determined by the triumph of Venice; and the factions of the Genoese compelled them to seek for domestic peace under the protection of a foreign lord, the duke of Milan, or the French king. Yet the spirit of commerce survived that of conquest; and the colony of Pera still awed the capital and navigated the Euxine, till it was involved by the Turks in the final servitude of Constantinople itself.

<sup>53</sup> See the Chronicle of Matteo Villani of Florence, l. ii. c. 59, 60. p. 145—147. c. 74, 75. p. 156, 157. in Muratori's Collection, tom. xiv.

<sup>54</sup> The Abbé de Sade (Memoires sur la Vie de Petrarque, tom. iii. p. 257—263.)

translates this letter, which he had copied from a MS. in the king of France's library. Though a servant of the duke of Milan, Petrarch pours forth his astonishment and grief at the defeat and despair of the Genoese in the following year (p. 323—332.).

C H A P.
LXIII.

Their treaty with the empire,
May 6.

C H A P. LXIV.

Conquests of Zingis Khan and the Moguls from China to Poland.—Escape of Constantinople and the Greeks.—Origin of the Ottoman Turks in Bithynia.—Reigns and Victories of Othman, Orchan, Amurath the First, and Bajazet the First.—Foundation and Progress of the Turkish Monarchy in Asia and Europe.—Danger of Constantinople and the Greek Empire.

C H A P.
LXIV.

FROM the petty quarrels of a city and her suburbs, from the cowardice and discord of the falling Greeks, I shall now ascend to the victorious Turks; whose domestic slavery was ennobled by martial discipline, religious enthusiasm, and the energy of the national character. The rise and progress of the Ottomans, the present sovereigns of Constantinople, are connected with the most important scenes of modern history: but they are founded on a previous knowledge of the great eruption of the Moguls and Tartars; whose rapid conquests may be compared with the primitive convulsions of nature, which have agitated and altered the surface of the globe. I have long since asserted my claim to introduce the nations, the immediate or remote authors of the fall of the Roman empire; nor can I refuse myself to those events, which, from their uncommon magnitude, will interest a philosophic mind in the history of blood.

* The reader is invited to review the chapters of the second and third volumes; the manners of pastoral nations, the conquests of Attila and the Huns, which were composed at a time when I entertained the wish, rather than the hope, of concluding my history.

From the spacious highlands between China, Siberia, and the Caspian Sea, the tide of emigration and war has repeatedly been poured. These ancient seats of the Huns and Turks were occupied in the twelfth century by many pastoral tribes, of the same descent and similar manners, which were united and led to conquest by the formidable Zingis. In his ascent to greatness, that Barbarian (whose private appellation was Temugin) had trampled on the necks of his equals. His birth was noble: but it was in the pride of victory, that the prince or people deduced his seventh ancestor from the immaculate conception of a virgin. His father had reigned over thirteen hords, which composed about thirty or forty thousand families: above two-thirds refused to pay tithes or obedience to his infant son; and at the age of thirteen, Temugin fought a battle against his rebellious subjects. The future conqueror of Asia was reduced to fly and to obey: but he rose superior to his fortune, and in his fortieth year he had established his fame and dominion over the circumjacent tribes. In a state of society, in which policy is rude and valour is universal, the ascendant of one man must be founded on his power and resolution to punish his enemies and recompense his friends. His first military league was ratified by the simple rites of sacrificing an horse and tasting of a running stream: Temugin pledged himself to divide with his followers the sweets and the bitters of life; and, when he had shared among them his horses and apparel, he was rich in their gratitude and his own hopes. After his first victory, he placed seventy chaldrons on the fire, and seventy of the most guilty rebels were cast headlong into the boiling water. The sphere of his attraction was continually enlarged by the ruin of the proud and the submission of the prudent; and the boldest chieftains might tremble, when they beheld, enchased in silver, the skull of the khan of the Keraites<sup>2</sup>; who, under the name of Prester

John,

C H A P.
LXIV.
Zingis Khan,
first emperor of the Moguls and Tartars,
A. D.
1206—1227.

<sup>2</sup> The khans of the Keraites were most probably incapable of reading the pompous epistles composed in their name by the Nestorian missionaries, who endowed them with

C H A P.
LXIV.

John, had corresponded with the Roman pontiff and the princes of Europe. The ambition of Temugin condescended to employ the arts of superstition; and it was from a naked prophet, who could ascend to heaven on a white horse, that he accepted the title of Zingis<sup>3</sup>, the most great; and a divine right to the conquest and dominion of the earth. In a general couroultai, or diet, he was seated on a felt, which was long afterwards revered as a relic, and solemnly proclaimed great khan, or emperor, of the Moguls<sup>4</sup> and Tartars<sup>5</sup>. Of these kindred, though rival, names, the former had given birth to the Imperial race; and the latter has been extended, by accident or error, over the spacious wilderness of the north.

His laws.

The code of laws which Zingis dictated to his subjects, was adapted to the preservation of domestic peace, and the exercise of foreign hostility. The punishment of death was inflicted on the crimes of adultery, murder, perjury, and the capital thefts of an horse or ox; and the fiercest of men were mild and just in their intercourse with each other. The future election of the great khan was vested in the princes of his family and the heads of the tribes; and the regulations of the chace were essential to the pleasures and plenty of a Tartar camp. The victorious nation was held sacred from all servile labours, which were abandoned to slaves and strangers;

the fabulous wonders of an Indian kingdom. Perhaps these Tartars (the Presbyter or Priest John) had submitted to the rites of baptism and ordination (Asseman, Bibliot. Orient. tom. iii. P. ii. p. 487—503.).

<sup>3</sup> Since the history and tragedy of Voltaire, Gengis, at least in French, seems to be the more fashionable spelling: but Abulghazi Khan must have known the true name of his ancestor. His etymology appears just: Zin, in the Mogul tongue, signifies great, and gis is the superlative termination (Hist. Genealogique des Tartars, part iii. p. 194, 195.). From the same idea of magnitude, the appellation of Zingis is bestowed on the ocean.

<sup>4</sup> The name of Moguls has prevailed among the Orientals, and still adheres to the titular sovereign, the Great Mogul, of Hindostan.

<sup>5</sup> The Tartars (more properly Tatars) were descended from Tatar Khan, the brother of Mogul Khan (see Abulghazi, part i and ii.), and once formed a hord of 70,000 families on the borders of Kitay (p. 103—112.). In the great invasion of Europe (A. D. 1238), they seem to have led the vanguard; and the similitude of the name of Tartari, recommended that of Tartars to the Latins (Matt. Paris, p. 398, &c.).

and every labour was servile except the profession of arms. The service and discipline of the troops, who were armed with bows, scymetars, and iron maces, and divided by hundreds, thousands, and ten thousands, were the institutions of a veteran commander. Each officer and soldier was made responsible, under pain of death, for the safety and honour of his companions; and the spirit of conquest breathed in the law, that peace should never be granted unless to a vanquished and suppliant enemy. But it is the religion of Zingis that best deserves our wonder and applause. The Catholic inquisitors of Europe, who defended nonsense by cruelty, might have been confounded by the example of a Barbarian, who anticipated the lessons of philosophy<sup>6</sup>, and established by his laws a system of pure theism and perfect toleration. His first and only article of faith was the existence of one God, the author of all good; who fills by his presence the heavens and earth, which he has created by his power. The Tartars and Moguls were addicted to the idols of their peculiar tribes; and many of them had been converted by the foreign missionaries to the religions of Moses, of Mahomet, and of Christ. These various systems in freedom and concord, were taught and practised within the precincts of the same camp; and the Bonze, the Imam, the Rabbi, the Nestorian and the Latin priest, enjoyed the same honourable exemption from service and tribute: in the mosque of Bochara, the insolent victor might trample the koran under his horses feet, but the calm legislator respected the prophets and pontiffs of the most hostile sects. The reason of Zingis was not informed by books; the khan could neither read nor write; and, except the tribe of the Igours, the greatest part of the Moguls and Tartars were as illiterate as their sovereign. The memory of their exploits was preserved by tradition : sixty-eight years after the death of Zingis, these traditions were collected and transcribed<sup>7</sup>; the brevity of their domestic annals may be supplied by the Chinese<sup>8</sup>, Persians<sup>9</sup>, Armenians<sup>10</sup>, Syrians<sup>11</sup>, Arabians<sup>12</sup>, Greeks<sup>13</sup>, Russians<sup>14</sup>, Poles<sup>15</sup>,

<sup>6</sup> A singular conformity may be found between the religious laws of Zingis Khan and of Mr. Locke (Constitutions of Carolina, in his works, vol. iv. p. 535. 4th edition, 1777).

C H A P.
LXIV.

<sup>7</sup> In the year 1294, by the command of Cazan, Khan of Persia, the fourth in descent from Zingis. From these traditions, his vizir Fadlallah composed a Mogul history in the Persian language, which has been used by Petit de la Creix (Hist. de Genghizcan, p. 537—539). The Histoire Genealogique des Tatars (à Leyde, 1726, in 12<sup>mo</sup>, 2 tomes) was translated by the Swedish prisoners in Siberia from the Mogul MS. of Abulghafi Bahadur Khan, a descendant of Zingis, who reigned over the Uibeks of Charafin, or Carizme (A. D. 1644—1663). He is of most value and credit for the names, pedigrees, and manners of his nation. Of his nine parts, the 1st descends from Adam to Mogul Khan; the 2<sup>d</sup>, from Mogul to Zingis; the 3<sup>d</sup>, is the life of Zingis; the 4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th, the general history of his four sons, and their posterity; the 8th and 9th, the particular history of the descendants of Sheibani Khan, who reigned in Maurenahar and Charafin.

<sup>8</sup> Histoire de Genghifcan, et de toute la Dynastie des Mongous ses Successeurs, Conquerans de la Chine; tirée de l'Histoire de la Chine, par le R. P. Gaubil, de la Société de Jésus, Missionnaire à Peking; à Paris, 1739, in 4<sup>to</sup>. This translation is stamped with the Chinese character of domestic accuracy and foreign ignorance.

<sup>9</sup> See the Histoire du Grand Genghizcan, premier Empereur des Mogols et Tartares, par M. Petit de la Croix, à Paris, 1710, in 12<sup>mo</sup>: a work of ten years labour, chiefly drawn from the Persian writers, among whom Nisavi, the secretary of sultan Gelaleddin, has the merit and prejudices of a contemporary. A slight air of romance is the fault of the originals, or the compiler. See likewise the articles of Genghizcan, Mohammed,

Gelaleddin, &c. in the Bibliothèque Orientale of d'Herbelot.

<sup>10</sup> Haithonus, or Aithonus, an Armenian prince, and afterwards a monk of Premontré (Fabric. Bibliot. Lat. medii Ævi, tom. i. p. 34.), dictated in the French language, his book de Tartaris, his old fellow-foldiers. It was immediately translated into Latin, and is inserted in the Novus Orbis of Simon Grynaeus (Basil, 1555, in folio).

<sup>11</sup> Zingis Khan, and his first successors, occupy the conclusion of the 9th Dynasty of Abulpharagius (vers. Pocock, Oxon. 1663, in 4<sup>to</sup>); and his 10th Dynasty is that of the Moguls of Persia. Assemannus (Bibliot. Orient. tom. ii.) has extracted some facts from his Syriac writings, and the lives of the Jacobite maphrians, or primates of the East.

<sup>12</sup> Among the Arabians, in language and religion, we may distinguish Abulfeda, sultan of Hamah in Syria, who fought in person, under the Mamaluke standard, against the Moguls.

<sup>13</sup> Nicephorus Gregoras (l. ii. c. 5, 6.) has felt the necessity of connecting the Scythian and Byzantine histories. He describes with truth and elegance the settlement and manners of the Moguls of Persia, but he is ignorant of their origin, and corrupts the names of Zingis and his sons.

<sup>14</sup> M. Levesque (Histoire de Russie, tom. ii.) has described the conquest of Russia by the Tartars, from the patriarch Nikon, and the old chronicles.

<sup>15</sup> For Poland, I am content with the Sarmatia Asiatica et Europea of Matthew à Michou, or de Michoviâ, a canon and physician of Cracow (A. D. 1506), inserted in the Novus Orbis of Grynaeus. Fabric. Bibliot. Latinæ medicæ et infimæ Ætatis, tom. v. p. 56.

Hungarians.

Hungarians<sup>16</sup>, and Latins<sup>17</sup>; and each nation will deserve credit in the relation of their own disasters and defeats<sup>18</sup>.

The arms of Zingis and his lieutenants successively reduced the hords of the desert, who pitched their tents between the wall of China and the Volga; and the Mogul emperor became the monarch of the pastoral world, the lord of many millions of shepherds and soldiers, who felt their united strength, and were impatient to rush on the mild and wealthy climates of the south. His ancestors had been the tributaries of the Chinese emperors; and Temugin himself had been disgraced by a title of honour and servitude. The court of Pekin was astonished by an embassy from its former vassal, who, in the tone of the king of nations, exacted the tribute and obedience which he had paid, and who affected to treat the son of heaven as the most contemptible of mankind. An haughty answer disguised their secret apprehensions; and their fears were soon justified by the march of innumerable squadrons, who pierced on all sides the feeble rampart of the great wall. Ninety cities were stormed, or starved, by the Moguls; ten only escaped; and Zingis, from a knowledge of the filial piety of the Chinese, covered his

C. H. A. P.
LXIV.

His invasion of China,
A. D.
1210—1217

<sup>16</sup> I should quote Thuroczius, the oldest general historian (pars ii. c. 74. p. 150.), in the 1st volume of the Scriptores Rerum Hungaricarum, did not the same volume contain the original narrative of a contemporary, an eye-witness, and a sufferer (M. Rogerii, Hungari, Varadiensis Capituli Canonici, Carmen miserabile, seu Historia super Destructione Regni Hungaricæ, Temporibus Be læ IV. Regis per Tartaros facta, p. 292—321.): the best picture that I have ever seen of all the circumstances of a Barbaric invasion.

<sup>17</sup> Matthew Paris has represented, from authentic documents, the danger and distress of Europe (consult the word Tartari in his copious Index). From motives of zeal and curiosity, the court of the great Khan, in the XIIIth century, was visited by two friars,

John de Plano Carpini, and William Rubruquis, and by Marco Polo, a Venetian gentleman. The Latin relations of the two former are inserted in the 1st volume of Hackluyt; the Italian original or version of the third (Fabric. Bibliot. Latin. mediæ ævi, tom. ii. p. 198. tom. v. p. 25.) may be found in the 2<sup>d</sup> tome of Ramusio.

<sup>18</sup> In his great History of the Huns, M. de Guignes has most amply treated of Zingis Khan and his successors. See tom. iii. l. xv—xix. and in the collateral articles of the Seljukians of Roum, tom. ii. l. xi. the Carizmians, l. xiv. and the Mamalukes, tom. iv. l. xxi.: consult likewise the tables of the 1st volume. He is ever learned and accurate; yet I am only indebted to him for a general view, and some passages of Abulfeda, which are still latent in the Arabic text.

C. H. A. P.
LXIV.

vanguard with their captive parents; an unworthy, and by degrees a fruitless, abuse of the virtue of his enemies. His invasion was supported by the revolt of an hundred thousand Khitans, who guarded the frontier: yet he listened to a treaty; and a princess of China, three thousand horses, five hundred youths and as many virgins, and a tribute of gold and silk, were the price of his retreat. In his second expedition, he compelled the Chinese emperor to retire beyond the yellow river to a more southern residence. The siege of Peking<sup>12</sup> was long and laborious: the inhabitants were reduced by famine to decimate and devour their fellow-citizens; when their ammunition was spent, they discharged ingots of gold and silver from their engines; but the Moguls introduced a mine to the centre of the capital; and the conflagration of the palace burnt above thirty days. China was desolated by Tartar war and domestic faction; and the five northern provinces were added to the empire of Zingis.

of Carizme, Transoxiana, and Persia,
A. D.
1218—1224.

In the West, he touched the dominions of Mohammed sultan of Carizme, who reigned from the Persian Gulf to the borders of India and Turkestan; and who, in the proud imitation of Alexander the Great, forgot the servitude and ingratitude of his fathers to the house of Seljuk. It was the wish of Zingis to establish a friendly and commercial intercourse with the most powerful of the Moslem princes; nor could he be tempted by the secret solicitations of the caliph of Bagdad, who sacrificed to his personal wrongs the safety of the church and state. A rash and inhuman deed provoked and justified the Tartar arms in the invasion of the southern Asia. A caravan of three ambassadors and one hundred and fifty merchants, was arrested and murdered at Otrar, by the command of Moham-

<sup>12</sup> More properly Yen-king, an ancient city, whose ruins still appear some furlongs to the south-east of the modern Pekin, which was built by Cublai Khan (Gaubel, p. 146). Pe-king and Nan-king are vague titles, the courts of the north and of the south. The identity and change of names perplex the most skilful readers of the Chinese geography (p. 177).

med; nor was it till after a demand and denial of justice, till he had prayed and fasted three nights on a mountain, that the Mogul emperor appealed to the judgment of God and his sword. Our European battles, says a philosophic writer<sup>29</sup>, are petty skirmishes, if compared to the numbers that have fought and fallen in the fields of Asia. Seven hundred thousand Moguls and Tartars are said to have marched under the standard of Zingis and his four sons. In the vast plains that extend to the north of the Sihon or Jaxartes, they were encountered by four hundred thousand soldiers of the fultan; and in the first battle, which was suspended by the night, one hundred and sixty thousand Carizmians were slain. Mohammed was astonished by the multitude and valour of his enemies: he withdrew from the scene of danger, and distributed his troops in the frontier towns, trusting that the Barbarians, invincible in the field, would be repulsed by the length and difficulty of so many regular sieges. But the prudence of Zingis had formed a body of Chinese engineers, skilled in the mechanic arts, informed perhaps of the secret of gunpowder, and capable, under his discipline, of attacking a foreign country with more vigour and success than they had defended their own. The Persian historians will relate the sieges and reduction of Otrar, Cogende, Bochara, Samarcand, Carizme, Herat, Merou, Nisabour, Balch, and Candahar; and the conquest of the rich and populous countries of Transoxiana, Carizme, and Chorasan. The destructive hostilities of Attila and the Huns have long since been elucidated by the example of Zingis and the Moguls; and in this more proper place I shall be content to observe, that, from the Caspian to the Indus, they ruined a tract of many hundred miles, which was adorned with the habitations and labours of mankind, and that five centuries have not been sufficient to repair the ravages of four years. The Mogul emperor encouraged or indulged the fury of his troops:

<sup>29</sup> M. de Voltaire, Essai sur l'Histoire Generale, tom. iii. c. 60. p. 8. His account of Zingis and the Moguls contains, as usual, much general sense and truth, with some particular errors.

C H A P.
LXIV.

the hope of future possession was lost in the ardour of rapine and slaughter; and the cause of the war exasperated their native fierceness by the pretence of justice and revenge. The downfall and death of the sultan Mohammed, who expired unpitied and alone, in a desert island of the Caspian Sea, is a poor atonement for the calamities of which he was the author. Could the Carizmian empire have been saved by a single hero, it would have been saved by his son Gelaleddin, whose active valour repeatedly checked the Moguls in the career of victory. Retreating, as he fought, to the banks of the Indus, he was oppressed by their innumerable host, till, in the last moment of despair, Gelaleddin spurred his horse into the waves, swam one of the broadest and most rapid rivers of Asia, and extorted the admiration and applause of Zingis himself. It was in this camp that the Mogul conqueror yielded with reluctance to the murmurs of his weary and wealthy troops, who fought for the enjoyment of their native land. Incumbered with the spoils of Asia, he slowly measured back his footsteps, betrayed some pity for the misery of the vanquished, and declared his intention of rebuilding the cities which had been swept away by the tempest of his arms. After he had repassed the Oxus and Jaxartes, he was joined by two generals, whom he had detached with thirty thousand horse, to subdue the western provinces of Persia. They had trampled on the nations which opposed their passage, penetrated through the gates of Derbend, traversed the Volga and the Desert, and accomplished the circuit of the Caspian Sea, by an expedition which had never been attempted, and has never been repeated. The return of Zingis was signalized by the overthrow of the rebellious or independent kingdoms of Tartary; and he died in the fulness of years and glory, with his last breath exhorting and instructing his sons to achieve the conquest of the Chinese empire.

His death,
A. D. 1227.

Conquests of the Moguls under the successors of Zingis,

The haram of Zingis was composed of five hundred wives and concubines; and of his numerous progeny, four sons, illustrious by their their birth and merit, exercised under their father the principal offices of peace and war. Toufhi was his great huntsman, Zagatai<sup>21</sup> his judge, Octai his minister, and Tuli his general; and their names and actions are often conspicuous in the history of his conquests. Firmly united for their own and the public interest, the three brothers and their families were content with dependent sceptres; and Octai, by general consent, was proclaimed great khan, or emperor of the Moguls and Tartars. He was succeeded by his son Gayuk, after whose death the empire devolved to his cousins Mangou and Cublai, the sons of Tuli, and the grandsons of Zingis. In the sixty-eight years of his four first successors, the Mogul subdued almost all Asia, and a large portion of Europe. Without confining myself to the order of time, without expatiating on the detail of events, I shall present a general picture of the progress of their arms; I. In the East; II. In the South; III. In the West; and IV. In the North.

C H A P.
LXIV.
A. D.
1227—1295

I. Before the invasion of Zingis, China was divided into two empires or dynasties of the North and South<sup>22</sup>; and the difference of origin and interest was smoothed by a general conformity of laws, language, and national manners. The Northern empire, which had been dismembered by Zingis, was finally subdued seven years after his death. After the loss of Pekin, the emperor had fixed his residence at Kaifong, a city many leagues in circumference, and which contained, according to the Chinese annals, fourteen hundred thousand families of inhabitants and fugitives. He escaped from thence with only seven horsemen, and made his last stand in a third capital,

Of the northern empire of China,
A. D. 1234.

<sup>21</sup> Zagatai gave his name to his dominions of Maurenahar, or Transoxiana; and the Moguls of Hindostan, who emigrated from that country, are styled Zagatais by the Persians. This certain etymology, and the similar example of Uzbek, Nogai, &c. may warn us not absolutely to reject the derivations of a national, from a personal, name.

graphers, the names of Cathay and Mangi distinguish the northern and southern empires, which, from A. D. 1234 to 1279, were those of the Great Khan, and of the Chinese. The search of Cathay, after China had been found, excited and misled our navigators of the sixteenth century, in their attempts to discover the north-east passage.

<sup>22</sup> In Marco Polo, and the Oriental geo-

C H A P.
LXIV.

till at length the hopeless monarch, protesting his innocence and accusing his fortune, ascended a funeral pile, and gave orders, that, as soon as he had stabbed himself, the fire should be kindled by his attendants. The dynasty of the Song, the native and ancient sovereigns of the whole empire, survived about forty-five years the fall of the northern usurpers; and the perfect conquest was reserved for the arms of Cublai. During this interval, the Moguls were often diverted by foreign wars; and, if the Chinese seldom dared to meet their victors in the field, their passive courage presented an endless succession of cities to storm and of millions to slaughter. In the attack and defence of places, the engines of antiquity and the Greek fire were alternately employed: the use of gunpowder in cannon and bombs appears as a familiar practice<sup>23</sup>; and the sieges were conducted by the Mahometans and Franks, who had been liberally invited into the service of Cublai. After passing the great river, the troops and artillery were conveyed along a series of canals, till they invested the royal residence of Hamcheu, or Quinsay, in the country of silk, the most delicious climate of China. The emperor, a defenceless youth, surrendered his person and sceptre; and before he was sent in exile into Tartary he struck nine times the ground with his forehead, to adore in prayer or thanksgiving the mercy of the great khan. Yet the war (it was now styled a rebellion) was still maintained in the southern provinces from Hamcheu to Canton; and the obstinate remnant of independence and hostility was transported from the land to the sea. But when the fleet of the Song was surrounded and oppressed by a superior armament, their last cham-

Of the fourth-cent,
A. D. 1279.

<sup>23</sup> I depend on the knowledge and fidelity of the Pere Gaubil, who translates the Chinese text of the Annals of the Moguls or Yuen (p. 71. 93. 153.); but I am ignorant at what time these annals were composed and published. The two uncles of Marco Polo, who served as engineers at the siege of Siengyang-fou (l. ii. c. 61. in Ramusio, tom. ii. See Gaubil, p. 155. 157.), must have felt and related the effects of this destructive powder, and their silence is a weighty, and almost decisive, objection. I entertain a suspicion, that the recent discovery was carried from Europe to China by the caravans of the xvth century, and falsely adopted as an old national discovery before the arrival of the Portuguese and Jesuits in the xvth. Yet the Pere Gaubil affirms, that the use of gunpowder has been known to the Chinese above 1600 years.

pion leaped into the waves with his infant emperor in his arms. "It is more glorious," he cried, "to die a prince, than to live a flave." An hundred thousand Chinese imitated his example; and the whole empire, from Tonkin to the great wall, submitted to the dominion of Cublai. His boundless ambition aspired to the conquest of Japan: his fleet was twice shipwrecked; and the lives of an hundred thousand Moguls and Chinese were sacrificed in the fruitless expedition. But the circumjacent kingdoms, Corea, Tonkin, Cochinchina, Pegu, Bengal, and Thibet, were reduced in different degrees of tribute and obedience by the effort or terror of his arms. He explored the Indian ocean with a fleet of a thousand ships: they failed in sixty-eight days, most probably to the isle of Borneo, under the equinoctial line; and though they returned not without spoil or glory, the emperor was dissatisfied that the savage king had escaped from their hands.

C H A P.
LXIV.

II. The conquest of Hindostan by the Moguls, was reserved in a later period for the house of Timour; but that of Iran, or Persia, was achieved by Holagou Khan, the grandson of Zingis, the brother and lieutenant of the two successive emperors, Mangou and Cublai. I shall not enumerate the crowd of sultans, emirs, and atabeks, whom he trampled into dust: but the extirpation of the Affassins, or Ismaelians<sup>24</sup> of Persia, may be considered as a service to mankind. Among the hills to the south of the Caspian, these odious sectaries had reigned with impunity above an hundred and sixty years; and their prince, or Imam, established his lieutenant to lead and govern the colony of mount Libanus, so famous and formidable in the history of the crusades<sup>25</sup>. With the fanaticism of the Koran, the Ismaelians had blended the Indian transmigration, and the vi-

Of Persia, and the empire of the caliphs,
A. D. 1258.

<sup>24</sup> All that can be known of the Assassins of Persia and Syria, is poured from the copious, and even profuse, erudition of M. Falconet, in two memoires read before the Academy of Inscriptions (tom. xvii. p. 127-170.).

<sup>25</sup> The Ismaelians of Syria, 40,000 Assassins, had acquired or founded ten castles in the hills above Tortosa. About the year 1280, they were extirpated by the Mamelukes.

C H A P.
 LXIV.

fions of their own prophets: and it was their first duty to devote their souls and bodies in blind obedience to the vicar of God. The daggers of his missionaries were felt both in the East and West: the Christians and the Moslems enumerate, and perhaps multiply, the illustrious victims that were sacrificed to the zeal, avarice, or resentment of the old man (as he was corruptly styled) of the mountain. But these daggers, his only arms, were broken by the sword of Holagou, and not a vestige is left of the enemies of mankind, except the word assassin, which, in the most odious sense, has been adopted in the languages of Europe. The extinction of the Abbassides cannot be indifferent to the spectators of their greatness and decline. Since the fall of their Seljukian tyrants, the caliphs had recovered their lawful dominion of Bagdad and the Arabian Irak; but the city was distracted by theological factions, and the commander of the faithful was lost in a haram of seven hundred concubines. The invasion of the Moguls he encountered with feeble arms and haughty embassies. "On the divine decree," said the caliph Mostafem, "is founded the throne of the sons of Abbas: and their foes shall surely be destroyed in this world and in the next. Who is this Holagou that dares to arise against them? If he be desirous of peace, let him instantly depart from the sacred territory; and perhaps he may obtain from our clemency the pardon of his fault." This presumption was cherished by a perfidious vizir, who assured his master, that, even if the Barbarians had entered the city, the women and children, from the terraces, would be sufficient to overwhelm them with stones. But when Holagou touched the phantom, it instantly vanished into smoke. After a siege of two months, Bagdad was stormed and sacked by the Moguls: and their savage commander pronounced the death of the caliph Mostafem, the last of the temporal successors of Mahomet; whose noble kinsmen, of the race of Abbas, had reigned in Asia above five hundred years. Whatever might be the designs of the conqueror, the holy cities cities of Mecca and Medina<sup>26</sup> were protected by the Arabian desert; but the Moguls spread beyond the Tigris and Euphrates, pillaged Aleppo and Damascus, and threatened to join the Franks in the deliverance of Jerusalem. Egypt was lost, had she been defended only by her feeble offspring: but the Mamalukes had breathed in their infancy the keenness of a Scythian air: equal in valour, superior in discipline, they met the Moguls in many a well-fought field; and drove back the stream of hostility to the eastward of the Euphrates. But it overflowed with resistless violence the kingdoms of Armenia and Anatolia, of which the former was possessed by the Christians, and the latter by the Turks. The sultans of Iconium opposed some resistance to the Mogul arms, till Azzadin sought a refuge among the Greeks of Constantinople, and his feeble successors, the last of the Seljukian dynasty, were finally extirpated by the khans of Persia.

C H A P.
LXIV.

Of Anatolia,
A. D.
1242—1272.

III. No sooner had Oçtai subverted the northern empire of China, than he resolved to visit with his arms, the most remote countries of the West. Fifteen hundred thousand Moguls and Tartars were inscribed on the military roll; of these the great khan selected a third, which he entrusted to the command of his nephew Batou, the son of Tuli; who reigned over his father's conquests to the north of the Caspian Sea. After a festival of forty days, Batou set forwards on this great expedition; and such was the speed and ardour of his innumerable squadrons, that in less than six years they had measured a line of ninety degrees of longitude, a fourth part of the circumference of the globe. The great rivers of Asia and Europe, the Volga and Kama, the Don and Borysthenes, the Vistula and Danube, they either swam with their horses, or passed on the ice, or traversed in leathern boats, which followed the camp, and transported their waggons and artillery. By the first victories of Batou, the remains of national freedom

Of Kipzak,
Russia, Poland, Hungary, &c.
A. D.

1235—1245.

<sup>26</sup> As a proof of the ignorance of the Chinese in foreign transactions, I must observe, that some of their historians extend the conquests of Zingis himself to Medina, the country of Mahomet (Gaubil, p. 42).

were

C H A P.
 LXIV.

were eradicated in the immense plains of Turkestan and Kipzak<sup>27</sup>. In his rapid progress, he overran the kingdoms, as they are now styled, of Astracan and Cazan; and the troops which he detached towards mount Caucasus, explored the most secret recesses of Georgia and Circassia. The civil discord of the great dukes, or princes, of Russia, betrayed their country to the Tartars. They spread from Livonia to the Black Sea, and both Moscow and Kiow, the modern and the ancient capitals, were reduced to ashes; a temporary ruin, less fatal than the deep, and perhaps indelible, mark, which a ferocity of two hundred years has imprinted on the character of the Russians. The Tartars ravaged with equal fury the countries which they hoped to possess, and those which they were hastened to leave. From the permanent conquest of Russia, they made a deadly, though transient, inroad into the heart of Poland, and as far as the borders of Germany. The cities of Lublin and Cracow were obliterated: they approached the shores of the Baltic; and in the battle of Lignitz, they defeated the dukes of Silesia, the Polish palatines, and the great master of the Teutonic order, and filled nine sacks with the right-ears of the slain. From Lignitz, the extreme point of their western march, they turned aside to the invasion of Hungary; and the preference or spirit of Batou inspired the host of five hundred thousand men: the Carpathian hills could not be long impervious to their divided columns; and their approach had been fondly disbelieved till it was irresistibly felt. The king, Bela the fourth, assembled the military force of his counts and bishops: but he had alienated the nation by adopting a vagrant hord of forty thousand families of Comans, and these savage guests were provoked to revolt by the suspicion of treachery and the murder of their prince. The whole country north of the Danube was lost in a day, and depopulated in a summer; and the ruins of cities and churches were overspread

<sup>27</sup> The Dzshé Kipzak, or plain of Kipzak, thenes, and is supposed to contain the primitive name and nation of the Cossacks. extends on either side of the Volga, in a boundless space towards the Jask and Boryf-

with the bones of the natives, who expiated the sins of their Turkish ancestors. An ecclesiastic, who fled from the sack of Waradin, describes the calamities which he had seen or suffered; and the sanguinary rage of sieges and battles is far less atrocious than the treatment of the fugitives, who had been allured from the woods under a promise of peace and pardon, and who were coolly slaughtered as soon as they had performed the labours of the harvest and vintage. In the winter, the Tartars passed the Danube on the ice, and advanced to Gran or Strigonium, a German colony, and the metropolis of the kingdom. Thirty engines were planted against the walls; the ditches were filled with sacks of earth and dead bodies; and after a promiscuous massacre, three hundred noble matrons were slain in the presence of the khan. Of all the cities and fortresses of Hungary, three alone survived the Tartar invasion, and the unfortunate Bata hid his head among the islands of the Adriatic.

The Latin world was darkened by this cloud of savage hostility: a Russian fugitive carried the alarm to Sweden; and the remote nations of the Baltic and the ocean trembled at the approach of the Tartars<sup>23</sup>, whom their fear and ignorance were inclined to separate from the human species. Since the invasion of the Arabs in the eighth century, Europe had never been exposed to a similar calamity; and if the disciples of Mahomet would have oppressed her religion and liberty, it might be apprehended that the shepherds of Scythia would extinguish her cities, her arts, and all the institutions of civil society. The Roman pontiff attempted to appease and convert these invincible Pagans by a mission of Franciscan and Dominican friars; but he was astonished by the reply of the khan,

<sup>23</sup> In the year 1238, the inhabitants of Gothia (Sweden) and Frise were prevented, by their fear of the Tartars, from sending, as usual, their ships to the herring-fishery on the coast of England; and as there was no exportation, forty or fifty of these fish were fold for a shilling (Matthew Paris, p. 396.). It is whimsical enough, that the orders of a Mogul khan, who reigned on the borders of China, should have lowered the price of herrings in the English market.

that

C H A P.
LXIV.

that the fons of God and of Zingis were invested with a divine power to subdue or extirpate the nations; and that the pope would be involved in the universal destruction, unless he visited in person, and as a suppliant, the royal hord. The emperor Frederic the second embraced a more generous mode of defence; and his letters to the kings of France and England, and the princes of Germany, represented the common danger, and urged them to arm their vassals in this just and rational crusade<sup>29</sup>. The Tartars themselves were awed by the fame and valour of the Franks: the town of Newstadt in Austria was bravely defended against them by fifty knights and twenty cross-bows; and they raised the siege on the appearance of a German army. After wasting the adjacent kingdoms of Servia, Bosnia, and Bulgaria, Batou slowly retreated from the Danube to the Volga to enjoy the rewards of victory in the city and palace of Serai, which started at his command from the midst of the desert.

Of Siberia,
A. D. 1242,
&c.

IV. Even the poor and frozen regions of the North attracted the arms of the Moguls: Sheibani Khan, the brother of the great Batou, led an hord of fifteen thousand families into the wilds of Siberia; and his descendants reigned at Tobolskoy above three centuries, till the Russian conquest. The spirit of enterprise which pursued the course of the Oby and Yenisei must have led to the discovery of the icy sea. After brushing away the monstrous fables, of men with dogs heads and cloven feet, we shall find, that, fifteen years after the death of Zingis, the Moguls were informed of the name and manners of the Samoyedes in the neighbourhood of the polar circle, who dwelt in subterraneous huts, and derived their furs and their food from the sole occupation of hunting<sup>30</sup>.

<sup>29</sup> I shall copy his characteristic or flattering epithets of the different countries of Europe: Furens ac fervens ad arma Germania, strenuæ militiæ genetrix et alumna Francia, bellicosa et audax Hispania, virtuosa viris et classe munita fertilis Anglia, impetuosis bellatoribus referta Alemannia, navalis Dacia, indomita Italia, pacis ignara Burgundia, iniqua

Apulia, cum maris Græci, Adriatici et Tyrreni insulis pyratibus et invictis, Cretâ, Cypro, Siciliâ, cum Oceano conterminis insulis, et regionibus, cruenta Hybernia, cum agili Wallia, palustris Scotia, glacialis Norwegia suam electam militiam sub vexillo Crucis destinabunt, &c. (Matthew Paris, p. 498.).

While China, Syria, and Poland, were invaded at the same time by the Moguls and Tartars, the authors of the mighty mischief were content with the knowledge and declaration, that their word was the sword of death. Like the first caliphs, the first successors of Zingis seldom appeared in person at the head of their victorious armies. On the banks of the Onon and Selinga, the royal or golden bord exhibited the contrast of simplicity and greatness; of the roasted sheep and mare's milk which composed their banquets; and of a distribution in one day of five hundred waggons of gold and silver. The ambassadors and princes of Europe and Asia were compelled to undertake this distant and laborious pilgrimage; and the life and reign of the great dukes of Russia, the kings of Georgia and Armenia, the sultans of Iconium, and the emirs of Persia, were decided by the frown or smile of the great khan. The sons and grandsons of Zingis had been accustomed to the pastoral life; but the village of Caracorum<sup>31</sup> was gradually ennobled by their election and residence. A change of manners is implied in the removal of Octai and Mangou from a tent to an house; and their example was imitated by the princes of their family and the great officers of the empire. Instead of the boundless forest, the inclosure of a park afforded the more indolent pleasures of the chace; their new habitations were decorated with painting and sculpture; their superfluous treasures were cast in fountains, and basons, and statues of massy silver; and the artists of China and Paris vied with each other in the service of the great khan<sup>32</sup>. Caracorum contained two streets,

the

C H A P.
LXIV.

The successors of Zingis,
A. D.
1227—1259.

<sup>30</sup> See Carpin's relation in Hackluyt, vol. i. p. 30. The pedigree of the khans of Siberia is given by Abulghazi (part viii. p. 485—495). Have the Russians found no Tartar chronicles at Tobolskoi?

<sup>31</sup> The Map of d'Anville, and the Chinese Itineraries (de Guignes, tom. i. part ii. p. 57.).

seem to mark the position of Holin, or Caracorum, about six hundred miles to the north-west of Peking. The distance between Selinginsky and Peking is near 2000 Russian versts, between 1300 and 1400 English miles (Bell's Travels, vol. ii. p. 67.).

<sup>32</sup> Rubraquis found at Caracoram his countryman

C. H. A. P.
LXIV.

adopt the manners of China,
A. D.
1259—1368.

the one of Chinese mechanics, the other of Mahometan traders; and the places of religious worship, one Nestorian church, two moschs, and twelve temples of various idols, may represent in some degree the number and division of inhabitants. Yet a French missionary declares, that the town of St. Denys, near Paris, was more considerable than the Tartar capital; and that the whole palace of Mangou was scarcely equal to a tenth part of that Benedictine abbey. The conquests of Russia and Syria might amuse the vanity of the great khans; but they were seated on the borders of China; the acquisition of that empire was the nearest and most interesting object; and they might learn from their pastoral œconomy, that it is for the advantage of the shepherd to protect and propagate his flock. I have already celebrated the wisdom and virtue of a Mandarin, who prevented the desolation of five populous and cultivated provinces. In a spotless administration of thirty years, this friend of his country and of mankind continually laboured to mitigate, or suspend, the havoc of war; to save the monuments, and to rekindle the flame, of science; to restrain the military commander by the restoration of civil magistrates; and to instill the love of peace and justice into the minds of the Moguls. He struggled with the barbarism of the first conquerors; but his salutary lessons produced a rich harvest in the second generation. The northern, and by degrees the southern, empire, acquiesced in the government of Cublai, the lieutenant, and afterwards the successor, of Mangou; and the nation was loyal to a prince who had been educated in the manners of China. He restored the forms of her venerable constitution; and the victors submitted to the laws, the fashions, and even the prejudices, of the vanquished people. This peaceful triumph, which has been more than once repeated, may be ascribed in a great measure to the numbers and servitude of the Chinese. The Mogul army was dissolved in a vast and populous country; and countryman Guillaume Boucher orfèvre de tjeeking four different liquors. Abulghazi Paris, who had executed for the khan a (part iv. p. 366.) mentions the painters of silver tea, supported by four lions, and Kitay or China.

their

their emperors adopted with pleasure a political system, which gives to the prince the solid substance of despotism, and leaves to the subject the empty names of philosophy, freedom, and filial obedience. Under the reign of Cublai, letters and commerce, peace and justice, were restored; the great canal, of five hundred miles, was opened from Nankin to the capital; he fixed his residence at Pekin; and displayed in his court the magnificence of the greatest monarch of Asia. Yet this learned prince declined from the pure and simple religion of his great ancestor; he sacrificed to the idol Fo; and his blind attachment to the lamas of Thibet and the bonzes of China<sup>33</sup> provoked the censure of the disciples of Confucius. His successors polluted the palace with a crowd of eunuchs, physicians, and astrologers, while thirteen millions of their subjects were consumed in the provinces by famine. One hundred and forty years after the death of Zingis, his degenerate race, the dynasty of the Yuen, was expelled by a revolt of the native Chinese; and the Mogul emperors were lost in the oblivion of the desert. Before this revolution, they had forfeited their supremacy over the dependent branches of their house, the khans of Kipzak and Russia, the khans of Zagatai or Transoxiana, and the khans of Iran or Persia. By their distance and power these royal lieutenants had soon been released from the duties of obedience; and, after the death of Cublai, they scorned to accept a sceptre or a title from his unworthy successors. According to their respective situation they maintained the simplicity of the pastoral life, or assumed the luxury of the cities of Asia; but the princes and their hords were alike disposed for the reception of a foreign worship. After some hesitation between the Gospel and the Koran, they conformed to the

C. H. A. P.
LXIV.

Division of the Mogul
empire,
A. D.
1259—1302.

<sup>33</sup> The attachment of the khans, and the hatred of the mandarins, to the bonzes and lamas (Duhalde, Hist. de la Chine, tom. i. p. 502. 503.) seems to represent them as the priests of the same god, of the Indian Fo, whose worship prevails among the sects of Hindostan, Siam, Thibet, China, and Japan. But this mysterious subject is still lost in a cloud, which the researches of our Asiatic Society may gradually dispel.

C H A P.
LXIV.

religion of Mahomet; and while they adopted for their brethren the Arabs and Persians, they renounced all intercourse with the ancient Moguls, the idolaters of China.

Escape of Constantinople and the Greek empire from the Moguls,
A. D.
1240—1304.

In this shipwreck of nations, some surprisè may be excited by the escape of the Roman empire, whose relics, at the time of the Mogul invasion, were dismembered by the Greeks and Latins. Less potent than Alexander, they were pressed, like the Macedonian, both in Europe and Asia, by the shepherds of Scythia; and had the Tartars undertaken the siege, Constantinople must have yielded to the fate of Pekin, Samarcand, and Bagdad. The glorious and voluntary retreat of Batou from the Danube was insulted by the vain triumph of the Franks and Greeks<sup>34</sup>; and in a second expedition death surprisèd him in full march to attack the capital of the Cæsars. His brother Borga carried the Tartar arms into Bulgaria and Thrace; but he was diverted from the Byzantine war by a visit to Novogorod, in the fifty-seventh degree of latitude, where he numbered the inhabitants and regulated the tributes of Russia. The Mogul khan formed an alliance with the Mamalukes against his brethren of Persia: three hundred thousand horse penetrated through the gates of Derbend; and the Greeks might rejoice in the first example of domestic war. After the recovery of Constantinople, Michael Palæologus<sup>35</sup>, at a distance from his court and army, was surprisèd and surrounded in a Thracian castle by twenty thousand Tartars. But the object of their march was a private interest: they came to the deliverance of Azzadin, the Turkish sultan; and were content with his person and the treasure of the emperor. Their general Noga, whose name is perpetuated in the hords of Astracan, raised a formidable rebellion against Mengo Timour, the third of the khans of Kipzak; obtained in marriage Maria the natural daughter of

<sup>34</sup> Some repulse of the Moguls in Hungary (Matthew Paris, p. 545, 546.) might propagate and colour the report of the union and victory of the kings of the Franks on the confines of Bulgaria. Abulpharagius (Dynaft. p. 310.), after forty years, beyond the Tigris, might be easily deceived.

<sup>35</sup> See Pachymer, l. iii. c. 25. and l. ix. c. 26, 27.: and the false alarm at Nice, l. iii. c. 27. Nicephorus Gregoras, l. iv. c. 6.

Palæologus; and guarded the dominions of his friend and father. The subsequent invasions of a Scythian cast were those of outlaws and fugitives; and some thousands of Alani and Comans, who had been driven from their native seats, were reclaimed from a vagrant life, and enlisted in the service of the empire. Such was the influence in Europe of the invasion of the Moguls. The first terror of their arms secured, rather than disturbed, the peace of the Roman Asia. The sultan of Iconium solicited a personal interview with John Vataces; and his artful policy encouraged the Turks to defend their barrier against the common enemy<sup>35</sup>. That barrier indeed was soon overthrown; and the servitude and ruin of the Seljukians exposed the nakedness of the Greeks. The formidable Holagou threatened to march to Constantinople at the head of four hundred thousand men; and the groundless panic of the citizens of Nice will present an image of the terror which he had inspired. The accident of a procession, and the sound of a doleful litany, “From the fury of the Tartars, good Lord deliver us,” had scattered the hasty report of an assault and massacre. In the blind credulity of fear, the streets of Nice were crowded with thousands of both sexes, who knew not from what or to whom they fled; and some hours elapsed before the firmness of the military officers could relieve the city from this imaginary foe. But the ambition of Holagou and his successors was fortunately diverted by the conquest of Bagdad, and a long vicissitude of Syrian wars; their hostility to the Moslems inclined them to unite with the Greeks and Franks<sup>37</sup>; and their generosity or contempt had offered the kingdom of Anatolia as the reward of an Armenian vassal. The fragments of the Seljukian monarchy were disputed by the emirs who had occupied the cities

C H A P.
LXIV.

<sup>36</sup> G. Acropolita, p. 36, 37. Nic. Gregoras, l. ii. c. 6. l. iv. c. 5.

<sup>37</sup> Abulpharagius, who wrote in the year 1234, declares, that the Moguls, since the fabulous defeat of Batou, had not attacked either the Franks or Greeks; and of this he is a competent witness. Hayton, likewise the Armenian prince, celebrates their friendship for himself and his nation.

C. H. A. P.
LXIV.

Decline of the Mogul khans of Persia,
A. D. 1304,
May 21.

Origin of the Ottomans,
A. D. 1270,
&c.

or the mountains; but they all confessed the supremacy of the khans of Persia; and he often interposed his authority, and sometimes his arms, to check their depredations, and to preserve the peace and balance of his Turkish frontier. The death of Cazan<sup>38</sup>, one of the greatest and most accomplished princes of the house of Zingis, removed this salutary control; and the decline of the Moguls gave a free scope to the rise and progress of the OTTOMAN EMPIRE<sup>39</sup>.

After the retreat of Zingis, the sultan Gelaledin of Carizme had returned from India to the possession and defence of his Persian kingdoms. In the space of eleven years, that hero fought in person fourteen battles; and such was his activity, that he led his cavalry in seventeen days from Teflis to Kerman, a march of a thousand miles. Yet he was oppressed by the jealousy of the Moslem princes, and the innumerable armies of the Moguls; and after his last defeat, Gelaledin perished ignobly in the mountains of Curdistan. His death dissolved a veteran and adventurous army, which included under the name of Carizmians or Corasmins many Turkman hords, that had attached themselves to the sultan's fortune. The bolder and more powerful chiefs invaded Syria, and violated the holy sepulchre of Jerusalem: the more humble engaged in the service of Aladin, sultan of Iconium; and among these were the obscure fathers of the Ottoman line. They had formerly pitched their tents near the southern banks of the Oxus, in the plains of Mahan and Nefa; and it is somewhat remarkable, that the same spot should have produced the first authors of the Parthian and Turkish empires.

<sup>38</sup> Pachymer gives a splendid character of Cazan Khan, the rival of Cyrus and Alexander (l. xii. c. 1). In the conclusion of his history (l. viii. c. 36.), he bores much from the arrival of 30,000 Tochars or Tartars, who were ordered by the successor of Cazan to restrain the Turks of Bithynia, A. D. 1308.

<sup>39</sup> The origin of the Ottoman dynasty is illustrated by the critical learning of M. M. de Guignes (Hist. des Huns, tom. iv. p. 329 — 337.) and d'Anville (Empire Turc, p. 14 — 22.), two inhabitants of Paris, from whom the Orientals may learn the history and geography of their own country.

At the head, or in the rear, of a Carizmian army, Soliman Shah was drowned in the passage of the Euphrates: his son Orthogrul became the soldier and subject of Aladin, and established at Surgut, on the banks of the Sangar, a camp of four hundred families or tents, whom he governed fifty-two years both in peace and war. He was the father of Thaman, or Athman, whose Turkish name has been melted into the appellation of the caliph Othman; and if we describe that pastoral chief as a shepherd and a robber, we must separate from those characters all idea of ignominy and baseness. Othman possessed, and perhaps surpassed, the ordinary virtues of a soldier; and the circumstances of time and place were propitious to his independence and success. The Seljukian dynasty was no more; and the distance and decline of the Mogul khans soon enfranchised him from the control of a superior. He was situate on the verge of the Greek empire: the Koran sanctified his gazi, or holy war, against the infidels; and their political errors unlocked the passes of mount Olympus, and invited him to descend into the plains of Bithynia. Till the reign of Palæologus, these passes had been vigilantly guarded by the militia of the country, who were repaid by their own safety and an exemption from taxes. The emperor abolished their privilege and assumed their office; but the tribute was rigorously collected, the custody of the passes was neglected, and the hardy mountaineers degenerated into a trembling crowd of peasants without spirit or discipline. It was on the twenty-seventh of July, in the year twelve hundred and ninety-nine of the Christian æra, that Othman first invaded the territory of Nicomedia<sup>42</sup>; and the singular accuracy of the date seems to disclose some foresight of the rapid and destructive growth of the monster. The annals of the twenty-seven years of his reign would exhibit a repetition of the same inroads; and his hereditary troops were multiplied in each campaign by the accession

C H A P.
LXIV.Reign of Othman,
A. D.
1299—1326.

<sup>42</sup> See Pathymer, l. x. c. 25, 26. l. xiii. Gregoras, l. vii. c. 1. and the 1st book of c. 33, 34. 36.; and concerning the guard of Laonicus Chalcocondyles, the Athenian. the mountains, l. i. c. 3—6.: Nicephorus

C H A P.
LXIV.

of captives and volunteers. Instead of retreating to the hills, he maintained the most useful and defensible posts; fortified the towns and castles which he had first pillaged; and renounced the pastoral life for the baths and palaces of his infant capitals. But it was not till Othman was oppressed by age and infirmities, that he received the welcome news of the conquest of Prusa, which had been surrendered by famine or treachery to the arms of his son Orchan. The glory of Othman is chiefly founded on that of his descendants; but the Turks have transcribed or composed a royal testament of his last counsels of justice and moderation<sup>41</sup>.

Reign of Orchan,
A. D.
1326—1360.

From the conquest of Prusa, we may date the true æra of the Ottoman empire. The lives and possessions of the Christian subjects were redeemed by a tribute or ransom of thirty thousand crowns of gold; and the city, by the labours of Orchan, assumed the aspect of a Mahometan capital; Prusa was decorated with a mosque, a college, and an hospital, of royal foundation; the Seljukian coin was changed for the name and impression of the new dynasty: and the most skilful professors, of human and divine knowledge, attracted the Persian and Arabian students from the ancient schools of Oriental learning. The office of vizir was instituted for Aladin, the brother of Orchan; and a different habit distinguished the citizens from the peasants, the Moslems from the infidels. All the troops of mir partly draws his materials from the Synopsis of Saadi Effendi of Larissa, dedicated in the year 1696 to sultan Mustapha, and a valuable abridgment of the original historians. In one of the Ramblers, Dr. Johnson praises Knolles (a General History of the Turks to the present Year. London, 1603) as the first of historians, unhappy only in the choice of his subject. Yet I much doubt whether a partial and verbose compilation from Latin writers, thirteen hundred folio pages of speeches and battles, can either instruct or amuse an enlightened age, which requires from the historian some tincture of philosophy and criticism.

<sup>41</sup> I am ignorant whether the Turks have any writers older than Mahomet II. nor can I reach beyond a meagre chronicle (Annales Turcici ad Annum 1550), translated by John Gaudier, and published by Leunclavius (ad calcem Laonic. Chalcond. p. 311—350.), with copious pandects, or commentaries. The History of the Growth and Decay (A. D. 1300—1683) of the Othman Empire, was translated into English from the Latin MS. of Demetrius Cantemir, prince of Moldavia (London, 1734, in folio). The author is guilty of strange blunders in Oriental history; but he was conversant with the language, the annals, and institutions of the Turks.

C H A P.
LXIV.

Othman had consisted of loose squadrons of Turkman cavalry; who served without pay and fought without discipline: but a regular body of infantry was first established and trained by the prudence of his son. A great number of volunteers was enrolled with a small stipend, but with the permission of living at home, unless they were summoned to the field: their rude manners, and seditious temper, disposed Orchan to educate his young captives as his soldiers and those of the prophet; but the Turkish peasants were still allowed to mount on horseback, and follow his standard, with the appellation and the hopes of freebooters. By these arts he formed an army of twenty-five thousand Moslems: a train of battering engines was framed for the use of sieges; and the first successful experiment was made on the cities of Nice and Nicomedia. Orchan granted a safe-conduct to all who were desirous of departing with their families and effects; but the widows of the slain were given in marriage to the conquerors; and the sacrilegious plunder, the books, the vases, and the images, were sold or ransomed at Constantinople. The emperor Andronicus the younger was vanquished and wounded by the son of Othman<sup>42</sup>: he subdued the whole province or kingdom of Bithynia, as far as the shores of the Bosphorus and Hellespont; and the Christians confessed the justice and clemency of a reign, which claimed the voluntary attachment of the Turks of Asia. Yet Orchan was content with the modest title of emir; and in the list of his compeers, the princes of Roum or Anatolia<sup>43</sup>, his military forces were surpassed by the emirs of Ghermian and Caramania, each of whom could bring into the field an army of forty thousand men. Their dominions were situate in the heart of the Seljukian kingdom: but the holy warriors, though of inferior note, who

His conquest
of Bithynia,
A. D.
1326—1339.

Division of Anatolia
among the Turkish
emirs,
A. D. 1300,
&c.

<sup>42</sup> Cantacuzene, though he relates the battle and heroic flight of the younger Andronicus (l. ii. c. 6, 7, 8.), dissembles by his silence the loss of Prusa, Nice, and Nicomedia, which are fairly confessed by Nicephorus Gregoras (l. viii. 15. ix. 9. 13. xi. 6.). It appears that Nice was taken by Orchan in 1330, and Nicomedia in 1339, which are somewhat different from the Turkish dates.

<sup>43</sup> The partition of the Turkish emirs is extracted from two contemporaries, the Greek Nicephorus Gregoras (l. vii. 1.) and the Arabian Marakefchi (de Guignes, tom. ii. P. ii. p. 76, 77.). See likewise the first book of Laonicus Chacondyles.

C H A P.
LXIV.

Loss of the Asiatic provinces,
A. D. 1312,
&c.

The knights of Rhodes,
A. D. 1310,
August 15—
A. D. 1523,
January 1.

formed new principalities on the Greek empire, are more conspicuous in the light of history. The maritime country from the Propontis to the Mæander and the isle of Rhodes, so long threatened and so often pillaged, was finally lost about the thirtieth year of Andronicus the elder<sup>44</sup>. Two Turkish chieftains, Sarukhan and Aidin, left their names to their conquests, and their conquests to their posterity. The captivity or ruin of the seven churches of Asia was consummated; and the barbarous lords of Ionia and Lydia still trample on the monuments of classic and Christian antiquity. In the loss of Ephesus, the Christians deplored the fall of the first angel, the extinction of the first candlestick, of the revelations<sup>45</sup>: the desolation is complete; and the temple of Diana, or the church of Mary, will equally elude the search of the curious traveller. The circus and three stately theatres of Laodicea are now peopled with wolves and foxes; Sardes is reduced to a miserable village; the God of Mahomet, without a rival or a son, is invoked in the mosques of Thyatira and Pergamus; and the populousness of Smyrna is supported by the foreign trade of the Franks and Armenians. Philadelphia alone has been saved by prophecy, or courage. At a distance from the sea, forgotten by the emperors, encompassed on all sides by the Turks, her valiant citizens defended their religion and freedom above fourscore years; and at length capitulated with the proudest of the Ottomans. Among the Greek colonies and churches of Asia, Philadelphia is still erect; a column in a scene of ruins; a pleasing example, that the paths of honour and safety may sometimes be the same. The servitude of Rhodes was delayed above two centuries by the establishment of the knights of St. John of Jerusalem<sup>46</sup>: under the discipline of the order, that island emerged into fame and opulence; the noble and warlike

<sup>44</sup> Pachymer, l. xiii. c. 13.

<sup>45</sup> See the Travels of Wheeler and Spon, of Pococke and Chandler, and more particularly Smith's Survey of the Seven Churches of Asia, p. 205—276. The more pious antiquaries labour to reconcile the promises and threats of the author of the Revelations with the present state of the seven cities. Perhaps it would be more prudent to confine his predictions to the characters and events of his own times.

<sup>46</sup> Consult the ivth book of the Histoire de l'Ordre de Malthe, par l'Abbé de Vertot. That pleasing writer betrays his ignorance, in supposing that Othman, a freebooter of the Bithynian hills, could besiege Rhodes by sea and land.

monks were renowned by land and sea ; and the bulwark of Christendom provoked, and repelled, the arms of the Turks and Saracens.

C H A P.
LXIV.

First passage of the Turks
into Europe,
A. D.
1341—1347.

The Greeks, by their intestine divisions, were the authors of their final ruin. During the civil wars of the elder and younger Andronicus, the son of Othman achieved, almost without resistance, the conquest of Bithynia; and the same disorders encouraged the Turkish emirs of Lydia and Ionia to build a fleet, and to pillage the adjacent islands and the sea-coast of Europe. In the defence of his life and honour, Cantacuzene was tempted to prevent, or imitate, his adversaries; by calling to his aid the public enemies of his religion and country. Amir, the son of Aidin, concealed under a Turkish garb the humanity and politeness of a Greek; he was united with the great domestic by mutual esteem and reciprocal services; and their friendship is compared, in the vain rhetoric of the times, to the perfect union of Orestes and Pylades<sup>47</sup>. On the report of the danger of his friend, who was persecuted by an ungrateful court, the prince of Ionia assembled at Smyrna a fleet of three hundred vessels, with an army of twenty-nine thousand men; sailed in the depth of winter, and cast anchor at the mouth of the Hebrus. From thence, with a chosen band of two thousand Turks, he marched along the banks of the river, and rescued the empress, who was besieged in Demotica by the wild Bulgarians. At that disastrous moment, the life or death of his beloved Cantacuzene was concealed by his flight into Servia: but the grateful Irene, impatient to behold her deliverer, invited him to enter the city, and accompanied her message with a present of rich apparel, and an hundred horses. By a peculiar strain of delicacy, the gentle Barbarian refused, in the absence of an unfortunate friend, to visit his wife, or to taste the luxuries of the palace; sustained in his tent the rigour of the winter; and rejected the hospitable gift, that he might share the hardships of two <sup>47</sup> Nicephorus Gregoras has expatiated with pleasure on this amiable character (l. xii. 7. xiii. 4. 10. xiv. 1. 9. xvi. 6.). Cantacuzene speaks with honour and esteem of his ally (l. iii. c. 56, 57, 63, 64, 66, 67, 68. 86. 89. 95, 96.); but he seems ignorant of his own sentimental passion for the Turk, and indirectly denies the possibility of such unnatural friendship (l. iv. c. 40.).

C H A P.
LXIV.

thousand companions, all as deserving as himself of that honour and distinction. Necessity and revenge might justify his prædatory excursions by sea and land: he left nine thousand five hundred men for the guard of his fleet; and persevered in the fruitless search of Cantacuzene, till his embarkation was hastened by a fictitious letter, the severity of the season, the clamours of his independent troops, and the weight of his spoil and captives. In the prosecution of the civil war, the prince of Ionia twice returned to Europe; joined his arms with those of the emperor; besieged Thessalonica, and threatened Constantinople. Caumny might affix some reproach on his imperfect aid, his hasty departure, and a bribe of ten thousand crowns, which he accepted from the Byzantine court; but his friend was satisfied; and the conduct of Amir is excused by the more sacred duty of defending against the Latins his hereditary dominions. The maritime power of the Turks had united the pope, the king of Cyprus, the republic of Venice, and the order of St. John, in a laudable crusade; their galleys invaded the coast of Ionia; and Amir was slain with an arrow, in the attempt to wrest from the Rhodian knights the citadel of Smyrna<sup>48</sup>. Before his death, he generously recommended another ally of his own nation; not more sincere or zealous than himself, but more able to afford a prompt and powerful succour, by his situation along the Propontis and in the front of Constantinople. By the prospect of a more advantageous treaty, the Turkish prince of Bithynia was detached from his engagements with Anne of Savoy; and the pride of Orchan dictated the most solemn protestations, that if he could obtain the daughter of Cantacuzene, he would invariably fulfil the duties of a subject and a son. Parental tenderness was silenced by the voice of ambition; the Greek clergy connived at the marriage of a Christian princess with a sectary of Mahomet; and the father of Theodora describes, with shameful satisfaction, the dishonour of the purple<sup>49</sup>. A body of Turkish cavalry attended

Marriage of Orchan with a Greek princess,
A. D. 1346.

<sup>48</sup> After the conquest of Smyrna by the Latins, the defence of this fortress was imposed by pope Gregory XI. on the knights of Rhodes (see Vertot, l. v.).
<sup>49</sup> See Cantacuzenus, l. iii. c. 95. Nicephorus Gregoras, who, for the light of mount Thabor, attended the ambaffadors, who difembarked from thirty veffels before his camp of Selybria. A ftately pavillon was erected, in which the emprefs Irene paffed the night with her daughters. In the morning, Theodora afcended a throne, which was furrounded with curtains of filk and gold: the troops were under arms; but the emperor alone was on horfeback. At a fignal the curtains were fuddenly withdrawn, to difclofe the bride, or the victim, encircled by kneeling eunuchs and hymenæal torches: the found of flutes and trumpets proclaimed the joyful event; and her pretended happinefs was the theme of the nuptial fong, which was chaunted by fuch poets as the age could produce. Without the rites of the church, Theodora was delivered to her barbarous lord: but it had been ftipulated, that fhe fhould preferve her religion in the haram of Burfa; and her father celebrates her charity and devotion in this ambiguous fituation. After his peaceful eftablifhment on the throne of Conftantinople, the Greek emperor vifited his Turkish ally, who with four fons, by various wives, expected him at Scutari, on the Afatic fhore. The two princes partook, with feeming cordiality, of the pleafures of the banquet and the chace; and Theodora was permitted to repafs the Bosphorus, and to enjoy fome days in the fociety of her mother. But the friendship of Orchan was fubfervient to his religion and intereft; and in the Genoefe war he joined without a blufh the enemies of Cantacuzene.

C H A P.
LXIV.

In the treaty with the emprefs Anne, the Ottoman prince had inferted a fingular condition, that it fhould be lawful for him to fell his prifoners at Conftantinople, or transport them into Afia. A naked crowd of Chriftians of both fexes and every age, of priefts and monks, of matrons and virgins, was expofed in the public market; the whip was frequently ufed to quicken the charity of re-

Eftablifh-
ment of the Ottomans in Europe,
A. D. 1353.

Thabor, brands the emperor with the names of tyrant and Herod, excufes, rather than blames, this Turkish marriage, and alleges the paffion and power of Orchan, εγγυτατος, και τη δυναμει της κατ' αυτον νηη Περονου (Turkish) υπεραισαν Σατραπας (l. xv. 5.). He afterwards celebrates his kingdom and armies. See his reign in Cantemir, p. 24—30.

C H A P. LXIV. demption; and the indigent Greeks deplored the fate of their brethren, who were led away to the worst evils of temporal and spiritual bondage<sup>50</sup>. Cantacuzene was reduced to subscribe the same terms; and their execution must have been still more pernicious to the empire: a body of ten thousand Turks had been detached to the assistance of the emperor Anne; but the entire forces of Orchan were exerted in the service of his father. Yet these calamities were of a transient nature; as soon as the storm had passed away, the fugitives might return to their habitations; and at the conclusion of the civil and foreign wars, Europe was completely evacuated by the Moslems of Asia. It was in his last quarrel with his pupil that Cantacuzene inflicted the deep and deadly wound, which could never be healed by his successors, and which is poorly expiated by his theological dialogues against the prophet Mahomet. Ignorant of their own history, the modern Turks confound their first and their final passage of the Hellespont<sup>51</sup>, and describe the son of Orchan as a nocturnal robber, who, with eighty companions, explores by stratagem an hostile and unknown shore. Soliman, at the head of ten thousand horse, was transported in the vessels, and entertained as the friend, of the Greek emperor. In the civil wars of Romania, he performed some service and perpetrated more mischief; but the Chersonesus was insensibly filled with a Turkish colony; and the Byzantine court solicited in vain the restitution of the fortresses of Thrace. After some artful delays between the Ottoman prince and his son, their ransom was valued at sixty thousand crowns, and the first payment had been made, when an earthquake shook the walls and cities of the provinces; the dismantled places were occupied by the Turks; and Gallipoli, the key of the Hellespont, was rebuilt

<sup>50</sup> The most lively and concise picture of this captivity, may be found in the history of Ducas (c. 8.), who fairly describes what Cantacuzene confesses with a guilty blush!

<sup>51</sup> In this passage, and the first conquests in Europe, Cantemir (p. 27, &c.) gives a miserable idea of his Turkish guides; nor am I much better satisfied with Chalcondyles (l. i. p. 12, &c.). They forget to consult the most authentic record, the ivth book of Cantacuzene. I likewise regret the last books, which are still manuscript, of Nicephorus Gregoras.

and repopled by the policy of Soliman. The abdication of Cantacuzene dissolved the feeble bands of domestic alliance; and his last advice admonished his countrymen to decline a rash contest, and to compare their own weakness with the numbers and valour, the discipline and enthusiasm, of the Moslems. His prudent counsels were despised by the headstrong vanity of youth, and soon justified by the victories of the Ottomans. But as he practised in the field the exercise of the jerid, Soliman was killed by a fall from his horse; and the aged Orchan wept and expired on the tomb of his valiant son.

C H A P.
LXIV.

Death of Orchan and his son Soli-man.

But the Greeks had not time to rejoice in the death of their enemies; and the Turkish scymetar was wielded with the same spirit by Amurath the first, the son of Orchan and the brother of Soliman. By the pale and fainting light of the Byzantine annals<sup>52</sup>, we can discern, that he subdued without resistance the whole province of Romania or Thrace, from the Hellespont to mount Hæmus, and the verge of the capital; and that Adrianople was chosen for the royal seat of his government and religion in Europe. Constantinople, whose decline is almost coeval with her foundation, had often, in the lapse of a thousand years, been assaulted by the Barbarians of the East and West; but never till this fatal hour had the Greeks been surrounded, both in Asia and Europe, by the arms of the same hostile monarchy. Yet the prudence or generosity of Amurath postponed for a while this easy conquest; and his pride was satisfied with the frequent and humble attendance of the emperor John Palæologus and his four sons, who followed at his summons the court and camp of the Ottoman prince. He marched against the Slavonian nations between the Danube and the Adriatic, the Bulgarians, Servians, Bosnians, and Albanians; and these warlike

The reign and European conquests of Amurath I.
A. D.
1360—1389
September.

<sup>52</sup> After the conclusion of Cantacuzene and Gregoras, there follows a dark interval of an hundred years. George Phranza, Michael Ducas, and Laonicus Chalcondyles, all three wrote after the taking of Constantinople.

tribes,

C H A P.
 LXIV.

tribes, who had so often insulted the majesty of the empire, were repeatedly broken by his destructive inroads. Their countries did not abound either in gold or silver; nor were their rustic hamlets and townships enriched by commerce or decorated by the arts of luxury. But the natives of the soil have been distinguished in every age by their hardiness of mind and body; and they were converted by a prudent institution into the firmest and most faithful supporters of the Ottoman greatness<sup>53</sup>. The vizir of Amurath reminded his sovereign that, according to the Mahometan law, he was entitled to a fifth part of the spoil and captives; and that the duty might easily be levied, if vigilant officers were stationed at Gallipoli, to watch the passage, and to select for his use the stoutest and most beautiful of the Christian youth. The advice was followed; the edict was proclaimed; many thousands of the European captives were educated in religion and arms; and the new militia was consecrated and named by a celebrated dervish. Standing in the front of their ranks, he stretched the sleeve of his gown over the head of the foremost foldier, and his blessing was delivered in these words: "Let them
 " be called janizaries (Yengi cberi, or new foldiers); may their coun" tenance be ever bright! their hand victorious! their sword keen!
 " may their spear always hang over the heads of their enemies! and " wherefoever they go, may they return with a white face<sup>54</sup>!"
 Such was the origin of these haughty troops, the terror of the nations, and sometimes of the sultans themselves. Their valour has declined, their discipline is relaxed, and their tumultuary array is incapable of contending with the order and weapons of modern tactics; but at the time of their institution, they possessed a decisive superiority in war; since a regular body of infantry, in constant exercise and pay, was not maintained by any of the princes of in the Turkish language. Hic niger est, hunc tu Romane caveto, was likewise a Latin sentence.

The Janizaries.

<sup>53</sup> See Cantemir, p. 37—41. with his own large and curious annotations.

<sup>54</sup> White and black face are common and proverbial expressions of praise and reproach

Christendom. The Janizaries fought with the zeal of profelytes against their idolatrours countrymen; and in the battle of Cossova, the league and independence of the Selavonian tribes was finally crushed. As the conqueror walked over the field, he observed that the greatest part of the slain consisted of beardless youths; and listened to the flattering reply of his vizir, that age and wisdom would have taught them not to oppose his irresistible arms. But the sword of his Janizaries could not defend him from the dagger of despair; a Servian soldier started from the crowd of dead bodies, and Amurath was pierced in the belly with a mortal wound. The grandson of Othman was mild in his temper, modest in his apparel, and a lover of learning and virtue; but the Moslems were scandalised at his absence from public worship; and he was corrected by the firmness of the mufti, who dared to reject his testimony in a civil cause: a mixture of servitude and freedom not unfrequent in Oriental history<sup>55</sup>.

C H A P.
LXIV.

The character of Bajazet, the son and successor of Amurath, is strongly expressed in his surname of Ilderim, or the lightning; and he might glory in an epithet, which was drawn from the fiery energy of his soul and the rapidity of his destructive march. In the fourteen years of his reign<sup>56</sup>, he incessantly moved, at the head of his armies, from Bourfa to Adrianople, from the Danube to the Euphrates; and, though he strenuously laboured for the propagation of the law, he invaded, with impartial ambition, the Christian and Mahometan princes of Europe and Asia. From Angora to Amasia and Erzeroum, the northern regions of Antolia were re-

The reign of Bajazet I.
Ilderim,
A. D.
1389—1403,
March 9.

His conquests, from the Euphrates to the Danube.

<sup>55</sup> See the life and death of Morad, or Amurath I. in Cantemir (p. 33—45.), the 1st book of Chalcondyles, and the Annales Turcici of Leunclavius. According to another story, the sultan was stabbed by a Croat in his tent: and this accident was alleged to Bulbequius (Epist. i. p. 98.) as an excuse for the unworthy precaution of pinioning, as it were, between two attendants, an ambassador's arms, when he is introduced to the royal presence. <sup>56</sup> The reign of Bajazet I. or Ilderim Bayazid, is contained in Cantemir (p. 46.), the 2<sup>d</sup> book of Chalcondyles, and the Annales Turcici. The surname of Ilderim, or lightning, is an example, that the conquerors and poets of every age have fit the truth of a system which derives the sublime from the principle of terror.

C H A P.
LXIV.

duced to his obedience: he stripped of their hereditary possessions, his brother emirs of Ghermian and Caramania, of Aidin and Sarukhan; and after the conquest of Iconium, the ancient kingdom of the Seljukians again revived in the Ottoman dynasty. Nor were the conquests of Bajazet less rapid or important in Europe. No sooner had he imposed a regular form of servitude on the Servians and Bulgarians, than he passed the Danube to seek new enemies and new subjects in the heart of Moldavia<sup>57</sup>. Whatever yet adhered to the Greek empire in Thrace, Macedonia, and Thessaly, acknowledged a Turkish master: an obsequious bishop led him through the gates of Thermopylæ into Greece; and we may observe, as a singular fact, that the widow of a Spanish chief, who possessed the ancient seat of the oracle of Delphi, deserved his favour by the sacrifice of a beautiful daughter. The Turkish communication between Europe and Asia had been dangerous and doubtful, till he stationed at Gallipoli a fleet of galleys, to command the Hellespont and intercept the Latin succours of Constantinople. While the monarch indulged his passions in a boundless range of injustice and cruelty, he imposed on his soldiers the most rigid laws of modesty and abstinence; and the harvest was peaceably reaped and sold within the precincts of his camp. Provoked by the loose and corrupt administration of justice, he collected in a house the judges and lawyers of his dominions, who expected that in a few moments the fire would be kindled to reduce them to ashes. His ministers trembled in silence: but an Æthiopian buffoon presumed to insinuate the true cause of the evil; and future venality was left without excuse, by annexing an adequate salary to the office of cadhi<sup>58</sup>. The humble title of emir was no longer suitable to the Ottoman

<sup>57</sup> Cantemir, who celebrates the victories of the great Stephen over the Turks (p. 47.), had composed the ancient and modern state of his principality of Moldavia, which has been long promised, and is still unpublished.

<sup>58</sup> Leunclav. Annal. Turcici, p. 318, 319. The venality of the cadhis has long been an object of scandal and satire; and if we distrust the Ottoman greatness; and Bajazet condescended to accept a patent of sultan from the caliphs who served in Egypt under the yoke of the Mamalukes<sup>59</sup>: a last and frivolous homage that was yielded by force to opinion; by the Turkish conquerors to the house of Abbas and the successors of the Arabian prophet. The ambition of the sultan was inflamed by the obligation of deserving this august title; and he turned his arms against the kingdom of Hungary, the perpetual theatre of the Turkish victories and defeats. Sigismund, the Hungarian king, was the son and brother of the emperors of the West: his cause was that of Europe and the church: and, on the report of his danger, the bravest knights of France and Germany were eager to march under his standard and that of the cross. In the battle of Nicopolis, Bajazet defeated a confederate army of an hundred thousand Christians, who had proudly boasted, that if the sky should fall they could uphold it on their lances. The far greater part were slain or driven into the Danube; and Sigismund, escaping to Constantinople by the river and the Black Sea, returned after a long circuit to his exhausted kingdom<sup>60</sup>. In the pride of victory, Bajazet threatened that he would besiege Buda; that he would subdue the adjacent countries of Germany and Italy; and that he would feed his horse with a bushel of oats on the altar of St. Peter at Rome. His progress was checked, not by the miraculous interposition of the apostle, not by a crusade of the Christian powers, but by a long and painful fit of the gout. The disorders of the moral, are sometimes corrected by those of the physical, world; and an acrimonious humour falling on a single fibre of one man, may prevent or suspend the misery of nations.

C H A P.
LXIV.

Battle of Nicopolis,
A. D. 1396,
Sept. 28.

the observations of our travellers, we may consult the feeling of the Turks themselves (d'Herbelot, Biblioth. Orientale, p. 216, 217, 229, 230.).

<sup>59</sup> The fact, which is attested by the Arabic history of Ben Schounah, a contemporary Syrian (de Guignes, Hist. des Huns, tom. iv. p. 336.), destroys the testimony of Saad Efendi and Cantemir (p. 14, 15.), of the election of Othman to the dignity of sultan.

<sup>60</sup> See the Decades Rerum Hungaricarum (Dec. iii. l. ii. p. 372.) of Bonfinius, an Italian, who, in the xvth century, was invited into Hungary to compose an elegant history of that kingdom. Yet, if it be constant and accessible, I should give the preference to some homely chronicle of the time and country.

C H A P.
LXIV.

Crusade and captivity of the French
princes,

A. D.
1396—1398.

Such is the general idea of the Hungarian war; but the disastrous adventure of the French has procured us some memorials which illustrate the victory and character of Bajazet<sup>61</sup>. The duke of Burgundy, sovereign of Flanders, and uncle of Charles the sixth, yielded to the ardour of his son, John count of Nevers; and the fearless youth was accompanied by four princes, bis cousins, and those of the French monarch. Their inexperience was guided by the sire de Coucy, one of the best and oldest captains of Christendom<sup>62</sup>; but the constable, admiral, and marshal, of France<sup>63</sup> commanded an army which did not exceed the number of a thousand knights and squires. These splendid names were the source of presumption and the bane of discipline. So many might aspire to command, that none were willing to obey; their national spirit despised both their enemies and their allies; and in the persuasion that Bajazet would fly, or must fall, they began to compute how soon they should visit Constantinople and deliver the holy sepulchre. When their scouts announced the approach of the Turks, the gay and thoughtless youths were at table, already heated with wine; they instantly clasped their armour, mounted their horses, rode full speed to the vanguard, and resented as an affront the advice of Sigismond, which would have deprived them of the right and honour of the foremost attack. The battle of Nicopolis would not have been lost, if the French would have obeyed the prudence of the Hungarians: but it

<sup>61</sup> I should not complain of the labour of this work, if my materials were always derived from such books as the chronicle of honest Froissard (vol. iv. c. 67. 69. 72. 74. 79—83. 85. 87. 89.), who read little, enquired much, and believed all. The original Memoirs of the marechal de Boucicault (Partiei. c. 22—28.); add some facts, but they are dry and deficient, if compared with the pleasant garrulity of Froissard.

<sup>62</sup> An accurate memoir on the life of Enquerrand VII. sire de Coucy, has been given by the baron de Zurlauben (Hist. de l'Academie des Inscriptions, tom. xxv.). His rank and possessions were equally considerable in France and England; and, in 1375, he led an army of adventurers into Switzerland, to recover a large patrimony which he claimed in right of his grandmother, the daughter of the emperor Albert I. of Austria (Sinner, Voyage dans la Suisse Occidentale, tom. i. p. 118—124.).

<sup>63</sup> That military office, so respectable at present, was still more conspicuous when it was divided between two persons (Daniel, Hist. de la Milice Française, tom. ii. p. 5.). One of these, the marshal of the crusade, was the famous Boucicault, who afterwards defended Constantinople, governed Genoa, invaded the coast of Asia, and died in the field of Azincour.

might have been gloriously won, had the Hungarians imitated the valour of the French. They dispersed the first line, consisting of the troops of Asia; forced a rampart of stakes, which had been planted against the cavalry; broke, after a bloody conflict, the Janizaries themselves; and were at length overwhelmed by the numerous squadrons that issued from the woods, and charged on all sides this handful of intrepid warriors. In the speed and secrecy of his march, in the order and evolutions of the battle, his enemies felt and admired the military talents of Bajazet. They accuse his cruelty in the use of victory. After reserving the count of Nevers, and four-and-twenty lords, whose birth and riches were attested by his Latin interpreters, the remainder of the French captives, who had survived the slaughter of the day, were led before his throne; and, as they refused to abjure their faith, were successively beheaded in his presence. The sultan was exasperated by the loss of his bravest Janizaries; and if it be true, that, on the eve of the engagement, the French had massacred their Turkish prisoners<sup>64</sup>, they might impute to themselves the consequences of a just retaliation. A knight, whose life had been spared, was permitted to return to Paris, that he might relate the deplorable tale, and solicit the ransom of the noble captives. In the mean while, the count of Nevers, with the princes and barons of France, were dragged along in the marches of the Turkish camp, exposed as a grateful trophy to the Moslems of Europe and Asia, and strictly confined at Bourfa, as often as Bajazet resided in his capital. The sultan was pressed each day to expiate with their blood the blood of his martyrs; but he had pronounced, that they should live, and either for mercy or destruction his word was irrevocable. He was assured of their value and importance by the return of the messenger, and the gifts and intercessions of the kings of France and of Cyprus. Lusignan presented him with

C H A P.
LXIV.

<sup>64</sup> For this odious fact, the Abbé de Ver- I. xvi. c. 10, 11. (Ordre de Malthe, tom. ii. tot quotes the Hist. Anonyme de St. Denys, p. 310.)

C H A P.
LXIV.

a goid salt-cellar of curious workmanship, and of the price of ten thousand ducats; and Charles the sixth dispatched by the way of Hungary a cast of Norwegian hawks, and six horse-loads of scarlet cloth, of fine linen of Rheims, and of Arras tapestry, representing the battles of the great Alexander. After much delay, the effect of distance rather than of art, Bajazet agreed to accept a ransom of two hundred thousand ducats for the count of Nevers and the surviving princes and barons: the marshal Boucicault, a famous warrior, was of the number of the fortunate; but the admiral of France had been slain in the battle; and the constable, with the sire de Coucy, died in the prison of Bourfa. This heavy demand, which was doubled by incidental costs, fell chiefly on the duke of Burgundy, or rather on his Flemish subjects, who were bound by the feudal laws to contribute for the knighthood and captivity of the eldest son of their lord. For the faithful discharge of the debt, some merchants of Genoa gave security to the amount of five times the sum; a lesson to those warlike times, that commerce and credit are the links of the society of nations. It had been stipulated in the treaty, that the French captives should swear never to bear arms against the person of their conqueror; but the ungenerous restraint was abolished by Bajazet himself. "I despise," said he to the heir of Burgundy, "thy oaths and thy arms. Thou art young, and mayest be ambitious of effacing the disgrace or misfortune of thy first chivalry. Assemble thy powers, proclaim thy design, and be assured that Bajazet will rejoice to meet thee a second time in a field of battle." Before their departure, they were indulged in the freedom and hospitality of the court of Bourfa. The French princes admired the magnificence of the Ottoman, whose hunting and hawking equipage was composed of seven thousand huntsmen and seven thousand falconers<sup>1</sup>. In their presence, and at his command, the belly

<sup>1</sup> Sherefeddin Ali (Hist. de Timour Bec, of 12,000 officers and servants of the chase. l. v. c. 13.) allows Bajazet a round number. A part of his spoils was afterwards displayed in belly of one of his chamberlains was cut open, on a complaint against him for drinking the goats-milk of a poor woman. The strangers were astonished by this act of justice; but it was the justice of a sultan who disdains to balance the weight of evidence or to measure the degrees of guilt.

C H A P.
LXIV.

After his enfranchisement from an oppressive guardian, John Palæologus remained thirty-six years, the helpless, and as it should seem, the careless, spectator, of the public ruin<sup>66</sup>. Love, or rather lust, was his only vigorous passion; and in the embraces of the wives and virgins of the city, the Turkish slave forgot the dishonour of the emperor of the Romans. Andronicus, his eldest son, had formed, at Adrianople, an intimate and guilty friendship with Sauzes the son of Amurath; and the two youths conspired against the authority and lives of their parents. The presence of Amurath in Europe soon discovered and dissipated their rash counsels; and, after depriving Sauzes of his sight, the Ottoman threatened his vassal with the treatment of an accomplice and an enemy, unless he inflicted a similar punishment on his own son. Palæologus trembled and obeyed; and a cruel precaution involved in the same sentence the childhood and innocence of John the son of the criminal. But the operation was so mildly, or so unskilfully, performed, that the one retained the sight of an eye, and the other was afflicted only with the infirmity of squinting. Thus excluded from the succession, the two princes were confined in the tower of Anema; and the piety of Manuel, the second son of the reigning monarch, was rewarded with the gift of the Imperial crown. But at the end of two years, the turbulence of the Latins and the levity of the Greeks produced a revolution; and the two emperors were buried in the tower from

The emperor
John Palæo-
logus,
A. D. 1355,
January 8—
A. D. 1391.

Discord of
the Greeks.

in a hunting-match of Timour: 1. hounds with fatten housings; 2. leopards with collars set with jewels; 3. Grecian greyhounds; and, 4. dogs from Europe, as strong as African lions (idem, l. vi. c. 15). Bajazet was particularly fond of flying his hawks at cranes (Chalcondyles, l. ii. p. 35.).

<sup>66</sup> For the reigns of John Palæologus and his son Manuel, from 1354 to 1402, see Ducas, c. 9—15. Phranza, l. i. c. 16—21. and the 1st and 2<sup>d</sup> books of Chalcondyles, whose proper subject is drowned in a sea of epistle.

C H A P.
LXIV.

whence the two prisoners were exalted to the throne. Another period of two years afforded Palæologus and Manuel the means of escape: it was contrived by the magic, or subtlety, of a monk, who was alternately named the angel or the devil: they fled to Scutari; their adherents armed in their cause; and the two Byzantine factions displayed the ambition and animosity, with which Cæsar and Pompey had disputed the empire of the world. The Roman world was now contracted to a corner of Thrace, between the Propontis and the Black Sea, about fifty miles in length and thirty in breadth; a space of ground not more extensive than the lesser principalities of Germany or Italy, if the remains of Constantinople had not still represented the wealth and populousness of a kingdom. To restore the public peace, it was found necessary to divide this fragment of the empire; and while Palæologus and Manuel were left in possession of the capital, almost all that lay without the walls was ceded to the blind princes, who fixed their residence at Rhodosto and Selybria. In the tranquil slumber of royalty, the passions of John Palæologus survived his reason and his strength; he deprived his favourite and heir of a blooming princess of Trebizond; and while the feeble emperor laboured to consummate his nuptials, Manuel, with an hundred of the noblest Greeks, was sent on a peremptory summons to the Ottoman porte. They served with honour in the wars of Bajazet; but a plan of fortifying Constantinople excited his jealousy: he threatened their lives; the new works were instantly demolished; and we shall bestow a praise, perhaps above the merit of Palæologus, if we impute this last humiliation as the cause of his death.

The emperor
Manuel,
A. D.
1391—1425,
July 25.

The earliest intelligence of that event was communicated to Manuel, who escaped with speed and secrecy from the palace of Bourfa to the Byzantine throne. Bajazet affected a proud indifference at the loss of this valuable pledge; and while he pursued his conquests in Europe and Asia, he left the emperor to struggle with his blind cousin cousin John of Selybria, who, in eight years of civil war, asserted his right of primogeniture. At length the ambition of the victorious sultan pointed to the conquest of Constantinople; but he listened to the advice of his vizir, who represented, that such an enterprise might unite the powers of Christendom in a second and more formidable crusade. His epistle to the emperor was conceived in these words: "By the divine clemency, our invincible scymetar has reduced to our obedience almost all Asia, with many and large countries in Europe, excepting only the city of Constantinople; for beyond the walls thou hast nothing left. Resign that city; stipulate thy reward; or tremble, for thyself and thy unhappy people, at the consequences of a rash refusal." But his ambassadors were instructed to soften their tone, and to propose a treaty, which was subscribed with submission and gratitude. A truce of ten years was purchased by an annual tribute of thirty thousand crowns of gold: the Greeks deplored the public toleration of the law of Mahomet, and Bajazet enjoyed the glory of establishing a Turkish cadhi, and founding a royal mosch in the metropolis of the Eastern church<sup>67</sup>. Yet this truce was soon violated by the restless sultan: in the cause of the prince of Selybria, the lawful emperor, an army of Ottomans, again threatened Constantinople; and the distress of Manuel implored the protection of the king of France. His plaintive embassy obtained much pity and some relief; and the conduct of the succour was entrusted to the marshal Boucicault<sup>68</sup>, whose religious chivalry was inflamed by the desire of revenging his captivity on the infidels. He sailed with four ships of war, from Aiguemortes to the Hellespont; forced the passage, which was guarded by seventeen Turkish gallies; landed at Constantinople a supply of six hundred men at arms and sixteen hundred archers; and reviewed them in the ad-

C H A P.
LXIV.

Distress of Constantinople,
A. D.
1395—1402.

<sup>67</sup> Cantemir, p. 50—53. Of the Greeks, Ducas alone (c. 13. 15.) acknowledges the Turkish cadhi at Constantinople. Yet even Ducas dissembles the mosch.

<sup>68</sup> Memoirs du bon Messire Jean le Maingre, dit Boucicault, Maréchal de France, partie 1<sup>re</sup>, c. 30—35.

C H A P.
LXIV.

jaçant plain, without condescending to number or array the multitude of Greeks. By his presence, the blockade was raised both by sea and land; the flying squadrons of Bajazet were driven to a more respectful distance; and several castles in Europe and Asia were stormed by the emperor and the marshal, who fought with equal valour by each other's side. But the Ottomans soon returned with an increase of numbers; and the intrepid Boucicault, after a year's struggle, resolved to evacuate a country which could no longer afford either pay or provisions for his soldiers. The marshal offered to conduct Manuel to the French court, where he might solicit in person a supply of men and money; and advised in the mean while, that, to extinguish all domestic discord, he should leave his blind competitor on the throne. The proposal was embraced: the prince of Selybria was introduced to the capital; and such was the public misery, that the lot of the exile seemed more fortunate than that of the sovereign. Instead of applauding the success of his vassal, the Turkish sultan claimed the city as his own; and on the refusal of the emperor John, Constantinople was more closely pressed by the calamities of war and famine. Against such an enemy, prayers and resistance were alike unavailing; and the savage would have devoured his prey, if, in the fatal moment, he had not been overthrown by another savage stronger than himself. By the victory of Timour or Tamerlane, the fall of Constantinople was delayed about fifty years; and this important, though accidental, service may justly introduce the life and character of the Mogul conqueror.

C H A P. LXV.

Elevation of Timour or Tamerlane to the Throne of Samarcand.—His Conquests in Persia, Georgia, Tartary, Russia, India, Syria, and Anatolia.—His Turkish War.—Defeat and Captivity of Bajazet.—Death of Timour.—Civil War of the Sons of Bajazet.—Restoration of the Turkish Monarchy by Mahomet the First.—Siege of Constantinople by Amurath the Second.

THE conquest and monarchy of the world was the first object of the ambition of TIMOUR. To live in the memory and esteem of future ages was the second wish of his magnanimous spirit. All the civil and military transactions of his reign were diligently recorded in the journals of his secretaries<sup>1</sup>: the authentic narrative was revised by the persons best informed of each particular transaction; and it is believed in the empire and family of Timour, that the monarch himself composed the commentaries<sup>2</sup> of his life,

C H A P.
LXV.Histories of TIMOUR, OR Tamerlane.

<sup>1</sup> These journals were communicated to Sherefeddin, or Cherefeddin Ali, a native, who composed in the Persian language a history of Timour Beg, which has been translated into French by M. Petis de la Croix (Paris, 1722, in 4 vols. 12<sup>mo</sup>), and has always been my faithful guide. His geography and chronology are wonderfully accurate; and he may be trusted for public facts, though he fervently praises the virtue and fortune of the hero. Timour's attention to procure intelligence from his own and foreign countries, may be seen in the Institutions, p. 215. 217. 349. 351.

<sup>2</sup> These Commentaries are yet unknown in Europe: but Mr. White gives some hope, that they may be imported and translated by his friend Major Davy, who had read in the East this "minute and faithful narrative of an interesting and eventful period."

C H A P.
LXV.

and the institutions<sup>3</sup> of his government<sup>4</sup>. But these cares were ineffectual for the preservation of his fame, and these precious memorials in the Mogul or Persian language were concealed from the world, or at least from the knowledge of Europe. The nations which he vanquished exercised a base and impotent revenge; and ignorance has long repeated the tale of calumny<sup>5</sup>, which had disfigured the birth and character, the person, and even the name, of Tamerlane<sup>6</sup>. Yet his real merit would be enhanced, rather than debased, by the elevation of a peasant to the throne of Asia; nor can his lameness be a theme of reproach, unless he had the weakness to blush at a natural, or perhaps an honourable, infirmity.

In the eyes of the Moguls, who held the indefeasible succession of the house of Zingis, he was doubtless a rebel subject; yet he sprang from the noble tribe of Berlas: his fifth ancestor, Carasbar Nevian, had been the vizir of Zagatai, in his new realm of Transoxiana; and in the ascent of some generations, the branch of Timour is <sup>3</sup> I am ignorant whether the original institution, in the Turki or Mogul language, be still extant. The Persian version, with an English translation and most valuable index, was published (Oxford, 1783, in 4<sup>to</sup>) by the joint labours of Major Davy, and Mr. White the Arabic professor. This work has been since translated from the Persian into French (Paris, 1787) by M. Langlès, a learned Orientalist, who has added the life of Timour, and many curious notes.

<sup>4</sup> Shaw Allum, the present Mogul, reads, values, but cannot imitate, the institutions of his great ancestor. The English translator relies on their internal evidence: but if any suspicions should arise of fraud and fiction, they will not be dispelled by Major Davy's letter. The Orientals have never cultivated the art of criticism; the patronage of a prince, less honourable perhaps, is not less lucrative than that of a bookseller: nor can it be deemed incredible, that a Persian, the real author, should renounce the credit, to raise the value and price, of the work.

<sup>5</sup> The original of the tale is found in the following work, which is much esteemed for its florid elegance of style: Ahmedis Arabiadæ (Ahmed Ebn Arabshah) Vitæ et Rerum gestarum Timuri. Arabice et Latine. Edidit Samuel Henricus Manger. Franequeræ, 1767, 2 tom. in 4<sup>to</sup>. This Syrian author is ever a malicious, and often an ignorant, enemy: the very titles of his chapters are injurious; as how the wicked, as how the impious, as how the viper, &c. The copious article of TIMUR, in Bibliothèque Orientale, is of a mixed nature, as d'Herbelot indifferently draws his materials (p. 877—888.) from Khondemir, Ebn Schounah, and the Leb-tarikh.

<sup>6</sup> Demir, or Timour, signifies, in the Turkish language, Iron; and Beg is the appellation of a lord or prince. By the change of a letter or accent, it is changed into Lenc, or lame; and a European corruption confounds the two words in the name of Tamerlane.

confounded, confounded, at least by the females<sup>7</sup>, with the Imperial stem<sup>8</sup>. He was born forty miles to the south of Samarcand, in the village of Sebzar, in the fruitful territory of Cash, of which his fathers were the hereditary chiefs, as well as of a toman of ten thousand horse<sup>9</sup>. His birth<sup>10</sup> was cast on one of those periods of anarchy which announce the fall of the Asiatic dynasties, and open a new field to adventurous ambition. The khans of Zagatai were extinct; the emirs aspired to independence; and their domestic feuds could only be suspended by the conquest and tyranny of the khans of Kashgar, who, with an army of Getes or Calmucks<sup>11</sup>, invaded the Transoxian kingdom. From the twelfth year of his age, Timour had entered the field of action; in the twenty-fifth, he stood forth as the deliverer of his country; and the eyes and wishes of the people were turned towards an hero who suffered in their cause. The chiefs of the law and of the army had pledged their salvation to support him with their lives and fortunes; but in the hour of danger they were silent and afraid; and, after waiting seven days on the hills of Samarcand, he retreated to the desert with only sixty

C H A P.
LXV.

His first adventures,
A. D.
1361—1370.

<sup>7</sup> After relating some false and foolish tales of Timour Lenc, Arabhah is compelled to speak truth, and to own him for a kinsman of Zingis, per mulieres (as he peevishly adds) laqueos Satanæ (pars i. c. 1. p. 25.). The testimony of Abulghazi Khan (P. ii. c. 5. P. v. c. 4.) is clear, unquestionable, and decisive.

<sup>8</sup> According to one of the pedigrees, the fourth ancestor of Zingis, and the ninth of Timour, were brothers; and they agreed, that the posterity of the elder should succeed to the dignity of khan, and that the descendants of the younger should fill the office of their minister and general. This tradition was at least convenient to justify the first steps of Timour's ambition (Institutions, p. 24, 25. from the MS. fragments of Timour's history).

<sup>9</sup> See the preface of Sherefeddin, and Abulfeda's Geography (Chorasmitæ, &c. Descriptio, p. 60, 61.), in the iii<sup>d</sup> volume of Hudson's Minor Greek Geographers.

<sup>10</sup> See his nativity in Dr. Hyde (Syntagma Dissertat. tom. ii. p. 466.), as it was cast by the astrologers of his grandson Ulugh Beg. He was born A. D. 1336, April 9, 11° 57' P. M. lat. 36. I know not whether they can prove the great conjunction of the planets from whence, like other conquerors and prophets, Timour derived the surname of Saheb Keran, or master of the conjunctions (Bibliot. Orient. p. 878.).

<sup>11</sup> In the Institutions of Timour, these subjects of the khan of Kashgar are most improperly styled Ouzbeks, or Uzbeks, a name which belongs to another branch and country of Tartars (Abulghazi, P. v. c. 5. P. vii. c. 5.). Could I be sure that this word is in the Turkish original, I would boldly pronounce, that the Institutions were framed a century after the death of Timour, since the establishment of the Uzbeks in Transoxiana,

C H A P.
LXV.

horsemen. The fugitives were overtaken by a thousand Getes, whom he repulsed with incredible slaughter, and his enemies were forced to exclaim, "Timour is a wonderful man: fortune and the divine favour are with him." But in this bloody action his own followers were reduced to ten, a number which was soon diminished by the desertion of three Carizmians. He wandered in the desert with his wife, seven companions, and four horses; and sixty-two days was he plunged in a loathsome dungeon, from whence he escaped by his own courage, and the remorse of the oppressor. After swimming the broad and rapid stream of the Jihoon, or Oxus, he led, during some months, the life of a vagrant and outlaw, on the borders of the adjacent states. But his fame shone brighter in adversity; he learned to distinguish the friends of his person, the associates of his fortune, and to apply the various characters of men for their advantage, and above all for his own. On his return to his native country, Timour was successively joined by the parties of his confederates, who anxiously sought him in the desert; nor can I refuse to describe, in his pathetic simplicity, one of their fortunate encounters. He presented himself as a guide to three chiefs, who were at the head of seventy horse. "When their eyes fell upon me," says Timour, "they were overwhelmed with joy; and they alighted from their horses; and they came and kneeled; and they kissed my stirrup. I also came down from my horse, and took each of them in my arms. And I put my turban on the head of the first chief; and my girdle, rich in jewels and wrought with gold, I bound on the loins of the second; and the third, I clothed in my own coat. And they wept, and I wept also; and the hour of prayer was arrived, and we prayed. And we mounted our horses, and came to my dwelling; and I collected my people, and made a feast." His trusty bands were soon increased by the bravest of the tribes; he led them against a superior foe; and after some vicissitudes of war, the Getes were finally driven from from the kingdom of Tranfoxiana. He had done much for his own glory; but much remained to be done, much art to be exerted, and some blood to be spilt, before he could teach his equals to obey him as their master. The birth and power of emir Houffein compelled him to accept a vicious and unworthy colleague, whose sister was the best beloved of his wives. Their union was short and jealous; but the policy of Timour, in their frequent quarrels, exposed his rival to the reproach of injustice and perfidy: and, after a final defeat, Houffein was slain by some sagacious friends, who presumed, for the last time, to disobey the commands of their lord. At the age of thirty-four<sup>12</sup>, and in a general diet or cou-routai, he was invested with Imperial command, but he affected to revere the house of Zingis; and while the emir Timour reigned over Zagatai and the East, a nominal khan served as a private officer in the armies of his servant. A fertile kingdom, five hundred miles in length and in breadth, might have satisfied the ambition of a subject; but Timour aspired to the dominion of the world; and before his death, the crown of Zagatai was one of the twenty-seven crowns which he had placed on his head. Without expatiating on the victories of thirty-five campaigns; without describing the lines of march, which he repeatedly traced over the continent of Asia; I shall briefly represent his conquests in, I. Persia, II. Tartary, and, III. India<sup>13</sup>, and from thence proceed to the more interesting narrative of his Ottoman war.

C H A P.
LXV.

He ascends
the throne of Zagatai,
A. D. 1370,
April.

I. For every war, a motive of safety or revenge, of honour or zeal, of right or convenience, may be readily found in the jurisprudence of conquerors. No sooner had Timour re-united to the patrimony of Zagatai the dependent countries of Carizme and Can-

His con-
quests,
A. D.
1370—1400.
I. Of Persia,
A. D.
1380—1393.

<sup>12</sup> The ist book of Sherefeddin is employed on the private life of the hero; and he himself, or his secretary (Institutions, p. 3—77.), enlarges with pleasure on the thirteen designs and enterprises which most truly constitute his personal merit. It even shines through the dark colouring of Arabshah, P. i. c. 1—12.

<sup>13</sup> The conquests of Persia, Tartary, and India, are represented in the ii<sup>d</sup> and iii<sup>d</sup> books of Sherefeddin, and by Arabshah, c. 13—55. Consult the excellent Indexes to the Institutions.

C H A P.
LXV.

dahar, than he turned his eyes towards the kingdoms of Iran or Persia. From the Oxus to the Tigris, that extensive country was left without a lawful sovereign since the death of Aboufaid, the last of the descendants of the great Holacou. Peace and justice had been banished from the land above forty years; and the Mogul invader might seem to listen to the cries of an oppressed people. Their petty tyrants might have opposed him with confederate arms: they separately stood, and successively fell; and the difference of their fate was only marked by the promptitude of submission or the obstinacy of resistance. Ibrahim, prince of Shirwan or Albania, kissed the footstool of the Imperial throne. His peace-offerings of silks, horses, and jewels, were composed, according to the Tartar fashion, each article of nine pieces; but a critical spectator observed, that there were only eight slaves. "I myself am the ninth," replied Ibrahim, who was prepared for the remark; and his flattery was rewarded by the smile of Timour<sup>14</sup>. Shah Mansour, prince of Fars, or the proper Persia, was one of the least powerful, but most dangerous, of his enemies. In a battle under the walls of Shiraz, he broke, with three or four thousand soldiers, the coul or main-body of thirty thousand horse, where the emperor fought in person. No more than fourteen or fifteen guards remained near the standard of Timour: he stood firm as a rock, and received on his helmet two weighty strokes of a scymetar<sup>15</sup>: the Moguls rallied; the head of Mansour was thrown at his feet, and he declared his esteem of the valour of a foe, by extirpating all the males of so intrepid a race. From Shiraz, his troops advanced to the Persian gulf; and the richness and weakness of Ormuz<sup>16</sup> were displayed in an annual tribute of six hundred thousand

<sup>14</sup> The reverence of the Tartars for the mysterious number of nine, is declared by Abulghazi Khan, who, for that reason, divides his Genealogical History into nine parts.

<sup>15</sup> According to Arabshah (P. i. c. 28. p. 183.), the coward Timour ran away to his tent, and hid himself from the pursuit of Shah Mansour under the women's garments. Perhaps Sherefeddin (l. iii. c. 25) has magnified his courage.

<sup>16</sup> The history of Ormuz is not unlike that of Tyre. The old city, on the continent, was destroyed by the Tartars, and renewed in a neighbouring island without fresh water or vegetation. The kings of Ormuz, rich in the Indian trade and the pearl fishery, possessed and dinars of gold. Bagdad was no longer the city of peace, the seat of the caliphs; but the noblest conquest of Houlaou could not be overlooked by his ambitious successor. The whole course of the Tigris and Euphrates, from the mouth to the sources of those rivers, was reduced to his obedience: he entered Edeffa; and the Turks of the black sheep were chastised for the sacrilegious pillage of a caravan of Mecca. In the mountains of Georgia, the native Christians still braved the law and the sword of Mahomet; by three expeditions he obtained the merit of the gazie, or holy war; and the prince of Teflis became his profelyte and friend.

II. A just retaliation might be urged for the invasion of Turkestan, or the eastern Tartary. The dignity of Timour could not endure the impunity of the Getes: he passed the Sihoon, subdued the kingdom of Cashgar, and marched seven times into the heart of their country. His most distant camp was two months journey, or four hundred and eighty leagues to the north-east of Samarcand; and his emirs, who traversed the river Irtysh, engraved in the forests of Siberia a rude memorial of their exploits. The conquest of Kipzak, or the western Tartary<sup>17</sup>, was founded on the double motive of aiding the distressed, and chastising the ungrateful. Toctamish, a fugitive prince, was entertained and protected in his court: the ambassadors of Auruf Khan were dismissed with an haughty denial, and followed on the same day by the armies of Zagatai; and their success established Toctamish in the Mogul empire of the north. But after a reign of ten years, the new khan forgot the merits and the strength of his benefactor; the base usurper, as he deemed him,

II. Of Turkestan,
A. D.
1370—1383.

possessed large territories both in Persia and Arabia; but they were at first the tributaries of the sultans of Kerman, and at last were delivered (A. D. 1505) by the Portuguese tyrants from the tyranny of their own vizirs (Marco Polo, l. i. c. 15, 16. fol. 7, 8. Abulfeda Geograph. tabul. xi. p. 261, 262. an original Chronicle of Ormuz, in Texeira, or Stevens' History of Persia, p. 376—416.

and the Itineraries inserted in the 1st volume of Ramusio, of Ludovico Bartheina (1503), fol. 167. of Andrea Corfali (1517), fol. 202, 203, and of Odoardo Barbesia (in 1516), fol. 315—318.)

<sup>17</sup> Arabitah had travelled into Kipzak, and acquired a singular knowledge of the geography, cities, and revolutions, of that northern region (P. i. c. 45—49.)

C H A P.
LXV.

of Kipzak,
Russia, &c.
A. D.
1390—1396.

of the sacred rights of the house of Zingis. Through the gates of Derbend, he entered Persia at the head of ninety thousand horse: with the innumerable forces of Kipzak, Bulgaria, Circassia, and Russia, he passed the Sihoon, burnt the palaces of Timour, and compelled him, amidst the winter snows, to contend for Samarcand and his life. After a mild expostulation and a glorious victory, the emperor resolved on revenge: and by the east, and the west, of the Caspian, and the Volga, he twice invaded Kipzak with such mighty powers, that thirteen miles were measured from his right to his left wing. In a march of five months, they rarely beheld the footsteps of man; and their daily subsistence was often trusted to the fortune of the chace. At length the armies encountered each other; but the treachery of the standard-bearer, who, in the heat of action, reversed the Imperial standard of Kipzak, determined the victory of the Zagatais; and Toctamish (I speak the language of the institutions) gave the tribe of Touthi to the wind of desolation<sup>18</sup>. He fled to the Christian duke of Lithuania; again returned to the banks of the Volga; and, after fifteen battles with a domestic rival, at last perished in the wilds of Siberia. The pursuit of a flying enemy carried Timour into the tributary provinces of Russia: a duke of the reigning family was made prisoner amidst the ruins of his capital; and Yeletz, by the pride and ignorance of the Orientals, might easily be confounded with the genuine metropolis of the nation. Moscow trembled at the approach of the Tartar, and the resistance would have been feeble, since the hopes of the Russians were placed in a miraculous image of the Virgin, to whose protection they ascribed the casual and voluntary retreat of the conqueror. Ambition and prudence recalled him to the South, the desolate country was exhausted, and the Mogul soldiers were enriched with an im-

<sup>18</sup> Institutions of Timour, p. 123. 125. (l. iii. c. 12, 13, 14.), who was ignorant of the designs of Timour, and the true springs of action. Mr. White, the editor, bestows some animadversion on the superficial account of Sherefeddin

C H A P.
LXV.

menſe ſpoil of precious furs, of linen of Antioch<sup>19</sup>, and of ingots of gold and ſilver<sup>20</sup>. On the banks of the Don, or Tanais, he received an humble deputation from the conſuls and merchants of Egypt<sup>21</sup>, Venice, Genoa, Catalonia, and Biſcay, who occupied the commerce and city of Tana, or Azoph, at the mouth of the river. They offered their gifts, admired his magnificence, and truſted his royal word. But the peaceful viſit of an emir, who explored the ſtate of the magazines and harbour, was ſpeedily followed by the deſtructive preſence of the Tartars. The city was reduced to aſhes; the Moſlems were pillaged and diſmiſſed; but all the Chriſtians, who had not fled to their ſhips, were condemned either to death or ſlavery<sup>22</sup>. Revenge prompted him to burn the cities of Serai and Aſtrachan, the monuments of riſing civilization; and his vanity proclaimed, that he had penetrated to the region of perpetual daylight, a ſtrange phenomenon, which authorized his Mahometan doctors to diſpenſe with the obligation of evening prayer<sup>23</sup>.

III. When Timour firſt propoſed to his princes and emirs the in-vaſion of India or Hindoſtan<sup>24</sup>, he was answered by a murmur of diſcontent:

III. Of Hindoſtan,
A. D.
1398, 1399.

<sup>19</sup> The furs of Ruſſia are more credible than the ingots. But the linen of Antioch has never been famous; and Antioch was in ruins. I ſuſpect that it was ſome manufacture of Europe, which the Hanſe merchants had imported by the way of Novogorod.

<sup>20</sup> M. Levéſque (Hiſt. de Ruſſie, tom. ii. p. 247. Vie de Timour, p. 64—67. before the French verſion of the Inſtitutes) has corrected the error of Sherefeddin, and marked the true limit of Timour's conqueiſts. His arguments are ſuperfluous, and a ſimple appeal to the Ruſſian Annals is ſufficient to prove that Moſcow, which ſix years before had been taken by Toctamiſh, eſcaped the arms of a more formidable invader.

<sup>21</sup> An Egyptian conſul from Grand Cairo, is mentioned in Barbaro's voyage to Tana in 1436, after the city had been rebuilt (Ramusio, tom. ii. fol. 92.).

<sup>22</sup> The ſack of Azoph is deſcribed by She-refeddin (l. iii. c. 55.); and much more particularly by the author of an Italian chronicle (Andreas de Reduſiis de Quero, in Chron. Tarviſiano, in Muratori Script. Rerum Italicarum, tom. xix. p. 802—805.). He had converſed with the Mianis, two Venetian brothers, one of whom had been ſent a deputy to the camp of Timour, and the other had loſt at Azoph three ſons and 12,000 ducats.

<sup>23</sup> Sherefeddin only ſays (l. iii. c. 13.), that the rays of the ſetting, and thoſe of the riſing ſun, were ſcarcely ſeparated by any interval; a problem which may be ſolved in the latitude of Moſcow (the 56th degree), with the aid of the Aurora Borealis, and a long ſummer twilight. But a day of forty days (Khondemir apud d'Herbelot, p. 830.) would rigorouſly confine us within the polar circle.

<sup>24</sup> For the Indian war, ſee the Inſtitutions (p. 129—139.), the fourth book of Sherefeddin,

C H A P.
LXV.

discontent: "The rivers! and the mountains and deserts! and the soldiers clad in armour! and the elephants, destroyers of men!" But the displeasure of the emperor was more dreadful than all these terrors; and his superior reason was convinced, that an enterprise of such tremendous aspect was safe and easy in the execution. He was informed by his spies of the weakness and anarchy of Hindostan: the Soubahs of the provinces had erected the standard of rebellion; and the perpetual infancy of sultan Mahmood was despised even in the haram of Delhi. The Mogul army moved in three great divisions: and Timour observes with pleasure, that the ninety-two squadrons of a thousand horse most fortunately corresponded with the ninety-two names or epithets of the prophet Mahomet. Between the Jihoon and the Indus, they crossed one of the ridges of mountains, which are styled by the Arabian geographers The stony girdles of the earth. The highland robbers were subdued or extirpated; but great numbers of men and horses perished in the snow; the emperor himself was let down a precipice on a portable scaffold, the ropes were one hundred and fifty cubits in length; and, before he could reach the bottom, this dangerous operation was five times repeated. Timour crossed the Indus at the ordinary passage of Attok; and successively traversed, in the footsteps of Alexander, the Punjab, or five rivers<sup>25</sup>, that fall into the master-stream. From Attok to Delhi, the high road measures no more than six hundred miles; but the two conquerors deviated to the south-east; and the motive of Timour was to join his grandson, who had achieved by his command the conquest of Moultan. On the eastern bank of the Hyphasis, on the edge of the desert, the Macedonian hero halted and wept: the Mogul entered the desert, reduced the fortrefs of Batnir, and stood in arms before the gates of Delhi, a great and flourishing feddin, and the history of Ferishta (in Dow, vol. ii. p. 1—20.), which throws a general light on the affairs of Hindostan.

<sup>25</sup> The rivers of the Punjab, the five eastern branches of the Indus, have been laid down for the first time with truth and accuracy in Major Rennel's incomparable map of Hindostan. In his Critical Memoir, he illustrates with judgment and learning the marches of Alexander and Timour.

city, which had subsisted three centuries under the dominion of the Mahometan kings. The siege, more especially of the castle, might have been a work of time; but he tempted, by the appearance of weakness, the sultan Mahinoud and his vizir to descend into the plain, with ten thousand cuirassiers, forty thousand of his foot-guards, and one hundred and twenty elephants, whose tusks are said to have been armed with sharp and poisoned daggers. Against these monsters, or rather against the imagination of his troops, he condescended to use some extraordinary precautions of fire and a ditch, of iron spikes and a rampart of bucklers; but the event taught the Moguls to smile at their own fears; and, as soon as these unwieldy animals were routed, the inferior species (the men of India) disappeared from the field. Timour made his triumphal entry into the capital of Hindostan; and admired, with a view to imitate, the architecture of the stately mosque; but the order or licence of a general pillage and massacre polluted the festival of his victory. He resolved to purify his soldiers in the blood of the idolaters, or Gentoos, who still surpass, in the proportion of ten to one, the numbers of the Moslems. In this pious design, he advanced one hundred miles to the north-east of Delhi, passed the Ganges, fought several battles by land and water, and penetrated to the famous rock of Coupele, the statue of the cow, that seems to discharge the mighty river, whose source is far distant among the mountains of Thibet<sup>26</sup>. His return was along the skirts of the northern hills; nor could this rapid campaign of one year justify the strange foresight of his emirs, that their children in a warm climate would degenerate into a race of Hindoos.

<sup>26</sup> The two great rivers, the Ganges and Burrampooter, rise in Thibet, from the opposite ridges of the same hills, separate from each other to the distance of 1200 miles, and, after a winding course of 2000 miles, again meet in one point near the gulf of Bengal. Yet so capricious is Fame, that the Burrampooter is a late discovery, while his brother Ganges has been the theme of ancient and modern story. Coupele, the scene of Timour's last victory, must be situate near Loldong, 1100 miles from Calcutta; and, in 1774, a British camp! (Rennel's Memoirs, p. 7. 59. 98, 91. 99.)

C H A P.
LXV.

His war against sultan Bajazet,
A. D. 1400,
September 1.

It was on the banks of the Ganges that Timour was informed, by his speedy messengers, of the disturbances which had arisen on the confines of Georgia and Anatolia, of the revolt of the Christians, and the ambitious designs of the sultan Bajazet. His vigour of mind and body was not impaired by sixty-three years, and innumerable fatigues; and, after enjoying some tranquil months in the palace of Samarcand, he proclaimed a new expedition of seven years into the western countries of Asia<sup>27</sup>. To the soldiers who had served in the Indian war, he granted the choice of remaining at home or following their prince; but the troops of all the provinces and kingdoms of Persia were commanded to assemble at Isfahan, and wait the arrival of the Imperial standard. It was first directed against the Christians of Georgia, who were strong only in their rocks, their castles, and the winter season; but these obstacles were overcome by the zeal and perseverance of Timour: the rebels submitted to the tribute or the Koran; and if both religions boasted of their martyrs, that name is more justly due to the Christian prisoners, who were offered the choice of abjuration or death. On his descent from the hills, the emperor gave audience to the first ambassadors of Bajazet, and opened the hostile correspondence of complaints and menaces; which fermented two years before the final explosion. Between two jealous and haughty neighbours, the motives of quarrel will seldom be wanting. The Mogul and Ottoman conquests now touched each other in the neighbourhood of Erzerum, and the Euphrates; nor had the doubtful limit been ascertained by time and treaty. Each of these ambitious monarchs might accuse his rival of violating his territory; of threatening his vassals; and protecting his rebels; and, by the name of rebels, each understood the fugitive princes, whose kingdoms he had usurped, and whose life or liberty he implacably pursued. The resemblance of character was still more dangerous

<sup>27</sup> See the Institutions, p. 141. to the end —16.), to the entrance of Timour into of the 1st book, and Sherefeddin (l. v. c. 1 Syria.

dangerous than the opposition of interest; and in their victorious career, Timour was impatient of an equal, and Bajazet was ignorant of a superior. The first epistle<sup>28</sup> of the Mogul emperor must have provoked, instead of reconciling the Turkish sultan; whose family and nation he affected to despise<sup>29</sup>. “ Dost thou not know, that the “ greatest part of Asia is subject to our arms and our laws? that our “ invincible forces extend from one sea to the other? that the po“ tentates of the earth form a line before our gate? and that we “ have compelled fortune herself to watch over the prosperity of our “ empire? What is the foundation of thy insolence and folly?
 “ Thou hast fought some battles in the woods of Anatolia; con“ temptible trophies! Thou hast obtained some victories over the “ Christians of Europe; thy sword was blessed by the apostle of “ God; and thy obedience to the precept of the Koran, in waging “ war against the infidels, is the sole consideration that prevents us “ from destroying thy country, the frontier and bulwark of the “ Moslem world. Be wise in time; reflect; repent; and avert the “ thunder of our vengeance, which is yet suspended over thy head.
 “ Thou art no more than a pismire; why wilt thou seek to provoke
 “ the elephants? Alas, they will trample thee under their feet.” In his replies, Bajazet poured forth the indignation of a soul which was deeply stung by such unusual contempt. After retorting the basest reproaches on the thief and rebel of the desert, the Ottoman recapitulates his boasted victories in Iran, Touran, and the Indies; and labours to prove, that Timour had never triumphed unless by his

<sup>28</sup> We have three copies of these hostile epistles in the Institutions (p. 147.), in Sherfeddin (l. v. c. 14.), and in Arabshah (tom. ii. c. 19. p. 183—201.); which agree with each other in the spirit and substance rather than in the style. It is probable, that they have been translated, with various latitude, from the Turkish original into the Arabic and Persian tongues.

<sup>29</sup> The Mogul emir distinguishes himself and his countrymen by the name of Turks, and stigmatizes the race and nation of Bajazet with the less honourable epithet of Turkmans. Yet I do not understand how the Ottomans could be descended from a Turkman sailor; those inland shepherds were so remote from the sea, and all maritime affairs.

C H A P.
LXV.

his own perfidy and the vices of his foes. “ Thy armies are innumerable: be they so; but what are the arrows of the flying Tartar against the feymetars and battle-axes of my firm and invincible Janizaries? I will guard the princes who have implored my protection: seek them in my tents. The cities of Arzingan and Erzeroum are mine, and unless the tribute be duly paid, I will demand the arrears under the walls of Tauris and Sultania.” The ungovernable rage of the sultan at length betrayed him to an insult of a more domestic kind. “ If I fly from thy arms,” said he, “ may my wives be thrice divorced from my bed: but if thou hast not courage to meet me in the field, mayest thou again receive thy wives after they have thrice endured the embraces of a stranger<sup>30</sup>.” Any violation by word or deed of the secrecy of the Haram is an unpardonable offence among the Turkish nations<sup>31</sup>; and the political quarrel of the two monarchs was embittered by private and personal resentment. Yet in his first expedition, Timour was satisfied with the siege and destruction of Siwas or Sebaste, a strong city on the borders of Anatolia; and he revenged the indiscretion of the Ottoman, on a garrison of four thousand Armenians, who were buried alive for the brave and faithful discharge of their duty. As a Musulman he seemed to respect the pious occupation of Bajazet, who was still engaged in the blockade of Constantinople: and after this salutary lesson, the Mogul conqueror checked his pursuit, and turned aside to the invasion of Syria and Egypt. In these transactions, the Ottoman prince, by the Orientals, and even by Timour, is styled Timour invades Syria, A. D. 1400.

<sup>30</sup> According to the Koran (c. 2. p. 27. and Sale's Discourses, p. 134.), a Musulman who had thrice divorced his wife (who had thrice repeated the words of a divorce), could not take her again, till after she had been married to, and repudiated by, another husband: an ignominious transaction, which it is needless to aggravate by supposing, that the first husband must see her enjoyed by a second before his face (Rycaut's State of the Ottoman Empire, l. ii. c. 21.).

<sup>31</sup> The common delicacy of the Orientals, in never speaking of their women, is ascribed in a much higher degree by Arabshah to the Turkish nations; and it is remarkable enough, that Chalcondyles (l. ii. p. 55.) had some knowledge of the prejudice, and the insult.

the Kaiffar of Roum, the Cæsar of the Romans: a title which, by a small anticipation, might be given to a monarch who possessed the provinces, and threatened the city, of the successors of Constantine<sup>32</sup>.

The military republic of the Mamalukes still reigned in Egypt and Syria: but the dynasty of the Turks was overthrown by that of the Circassians<sup>33</sup>; and their favourite Barkok, from a slave and a prisoner, was raised and restored to the throne. In the midst of rebellion and discord, he braved the menaces, corresponded with the enemies, and detained the ambassadors, of the Mogul, who patiently expected his decease, to revenge the crimes of the father on the feeble reign of his son Farage. The Syrian emirs<sup>34</sup> were assembled at Aleppo to repel the invasion: they confided in the fame and discipline of the Mamalukes, in the temper of their swords and lances of the purest steel of Damascus, in the strength of their walled cities, and in the populousness of sixty thousand villages: and instead of sustaining a siege, they threw open their gates, and arrayed their forces in the plain. But these forces were not cemented by virtue and union; and some powerful emirs had been seduced to desert or betray their more loyal companions. Timour's front was covered with a line of Indian elephants, whose turrets were filled with archers and Greek fire: the rapid evolutions of his cavalry completed the dismay and disorder; the Syrian crowds fell back on each other; many thousands were stifled or slaughtered in the entrance of the great street; the Moguls entered with the fugitives; and, after a <sup>32</sup> For the style of the Moguls, see the Institutions (p. 131. 147.), and for the Persians, the Bibliothèque Orientale (p. 882.): but I do not find that the title of Cæsar has been applied by the Arabians, or assumed by the Ottomans themselves.

<sup>33</sup> See the reigns of Barkok and Pharadge, in M. de Guignes (tom. iv. l. xxii.), who, from the Arabic texts of Aboulmahafen, Ebn Schounah, and Aintabi, has added some facts to our common stock of materials.

<sup>34</sup> For these recent and domestic transactions, Arabulab, though a partial, is a credible witness (tom. i. c. 64—68. tom. ii. c. 1—14.). Timour must have been odious to a Syrian; but the notoriety of facts would have obliged him, in some measure, to respect his enemy and himself. His bitters may correct the luscious sweets of Sherafeddin (l. v. c. 17—29.).

C H A P.
LXV.
Sacks Aleppo,
A. D. 1400,
Nov. 11,

short defence, the citadel, the impregnable citadel of Aleppo, was surrendered by cowardice or treachery. Among the suppliants and captives, Timour distinguished the doctors of the law, whom he invited to the dangerous honour of a personal conference<sup>35</sup>. The Mogul prince was a zealous Musulman; but his Persian schools had taught him to revere the memory of Ali and Hosain; and he had imbibed a deep prejudice against the Syrians, as the enemies of the son of the daughter of the apostle of God. To these doctors he proposed a captious question, which the casuists of Bochara, Samarcand, and Herat, were incapable of resolving. “Who are the true martyrs, of those who are slain on my side, or on that of my enemies?” But he was silenced, or satisfied, by the dexterity of one of the cadhis of Aleppo, who replied, in the words of Mahomet himself, that the motive, not the ensign, constitutes the martyr; and that the Moslems of either party, who fight only for the glory of God, may deserve that sacred appellation. The true succession of the caliphs was a controversy of a still more delicate nature and the frankness of a doctor, too honest for his situation, provoked the emperor to exclaim, “Ye are as false as those of Damascus: Moawiyah was an usurper, Yezid a tyrant, and Ali alone is the lawful successor of the prophet.” A prudent explanation restored his tranquillity; and he passed to a more familiar topic of conversation. “What is your age?” said he to the cadhi. “Fifty years.” —“It would be the age of my eldest son: you see me here (continued Timour) a poor, lame, decrepit mortal. Yet by my arm has the Almighty been pleased to subdue the kingdoms of Iran, Touran, and the Indies. I am not a man of blood; and God is my witness, that in all my wars I have never been the aggressor, and that my enemies have always been the authors of their own calamity.” During this peaceful conversation, the streets of Aleppo

<sup>35</sup> These interesting conversations appear to have been copied by Arabibah (tom. i. c. 68. p. 625—645.) from the cadhi and historian Ebn Schounah, a principal actor. Yet how could he be alive seventy-five years afterwards (d’Herbelot, p. 792.)?

streamed with blood, and re-echoed with the cries of mothers and children, with the shrieks of violated virgins. The rich plunder that was abandoned to his soldiers might stimulate their avarice; but their cruelty was enforced by the peremptory command of producing an adequate number of heads, which, according to his custom, were curiously piled in columns and pyramids: the Moguls celebrated the feast of victory, while the surviving Moslems passed the night in tears and in chains. I shall not dwell on the march of the destroyer from Aleppo to Damascus, where he was rudely encountered, and almost overthrown, by the armies of Egypt. A retrograde motion was imputed to his distress and despair: one of his nephews deserted to the enemy; and Syria rejoiced in the tale of his defeat, when the sultan was driven by the revolt of the Mamalukes to escape with precipitation and shame to his palace of Cairo. Abandoned by their prince, the inhabitants of Damascus still defended their walls; and Timour consented to raise the siege, if they would adorn his retreat with a gift or ransom; each article of nine pieces. But no sooner had he introduced himself into the city, under colour of a truce, than he perfidiously violated the treaty; imposed a contribution of ten millions of gold; and animated his troops to chastise the posterity of those Syrians who had executed, or approved, the murder of the grandson of Mahomet. A family which had given honourable burial to the head of Hosein, and a colony of artificers whom he sent to labour at Samarcand, were alone reserved in the general massacre; and, after a period of seven centuries, Damascus was reduced to ashes, because a Tartar was moved by religious zeal to avenge the blood of an Arab. The losses and fatigues of the campaign obliged Timour to renounce the conquest of Palestine and Egypt; but in his return to the Euphrates, he delivered Aleppo to the flames; and justified his pious motive by the pardon and reward of two thousand sectaries of Ali, who were desirous to visit the tomb of his son. I have expatiated on the personal anecdotes which

C. H. A. P.
LXV.

Damascus,
A. D. 1401,
January 23,

C H A P.
LXV.
and Bagdad,
A. D. 1401,
July 23.

mark the character of the Mogul hero; but I shall briefly mention<sup>36</sup>, that he erected on the ruins of Bagdad a pyramid of ninety thousand heads; again visited Georgia; encamped on the banks of Araxes; and proclaimed his resolution of marching against the Ottoman emperor. Conscious of the importance of the war, he collected his forces from every province: eight hundred thousand men were enrolled on his military list<sup>37</sup>; but the splendid commands of five, and ten, thousand horse, may be rather expressive of the rank and pension of the chiefs, than of the genuine number of effective soldiers<sup>38</sup>. In the pillage of Syria, the Moguls had acquired immense riches: but the delivery of their pay and arrears for seven years, more firmly attached them to the Imperial standard.

Invades Ana-
tolia,
A. D. 1402.

During this diversion of the Mogul arms, Bajazet had two years to collect his forces for a more serious encounter. They consisted of four hundred thousand horse and foot<sup>39</sup>, whose merit and fidelity were of an unequal complexion. We may discriminate the Janizaries who have been gradually raised to an establishment of forty thousand men; a national cavalry, the Spahis of modern times; twenty thousand cuirassiers of Europe, clad in black and impenetrable armour; the troops of Anatolia, whose princes had taken refuge in the camp of Timour, and a colony of Tartars, whom he had driven from ad Chalcondyl. l. iii. p. 82.). Timour, in his Institutions, has not deigned to calculate his troops, his subjects, or his revenues.

<sup>36</sup> The marches and occupations of Timour between the Syrian and Ottoman wars, are represented by Sherefeddin (l. v. c. 29—43.) and Arabshah (tom. ii. c. 15—18.).

<sup>37</sup> This number of 800,000 was extracted by Arabshah, or rather by Ebn Schounah, ex rationario Timuri, on the faith of a Carizmian officer (tom. i. c. 68. p. 617.); and it is remarkable enough, that a Greek historian (Phranza, l. i. c. 29.) adds no more than 20,000 men. Poggius reckons 1,000,000; another Latin contemporary (Chron. Tarvisianum, apud Muratori, tom. xix. p. 800.) 1,100,000; and the enormous sum of 1,600,000 is attested by a German soldier, who was present at the battle of Angora (Leunclav.

<sup>38</sup> A wide latitude of non-effectives was allowed by the Great Mogul for his own pride and the benefit of his officers. Bernier's patron was Penge-Hazari, commander of 5000 horse; of which he maintained no more than 500 (Voyages, tom. i. p. 288, 289.).

<sup>39</sup> Timour himself fixes at 400,000 men the Ottoman army (Institutions, p. 153.), which is reduced to 150,000 by Phranza (l. i. c. 29.), and swelled by the German soldier to 1,400,000. It is evident, that the Moguls were the more numerous.

Kipzak, and to whom Bajazet had assigned a settlement in the plains of Adrianople. The fearless confidence of the sultan urged him to meet his antagonist; and, as if he had chosen that spot for revenge, he displayed his banners near the ruins of the unfortunate Suvas. In the mean while, Timour moved from the Araxes through the countries of Armenia and Anatolia: his boldness was secured by the wisest precautions; his speed was guided by order and discipline; and the woods, the mountains, and the rivers, were diligently explored by the flying squadrons, who marked his road and preceded his standard. Firm in his plan of fighting in the heart of the Ottoman kingdom, he avoided their camp; dextrously inclined to the left; occupied Cæsarea; traversed the salt desert and the river Halys; and invested Angora: while the sultan, immoveable and ignorant in his post, compared the Tartar swiftness to the crawling of a snail<sup>40</sup>: he returned on the wings of indignation to the relief of Angora; and as both generals were alike impatient for action, the plains round that city were the scene of a memorable battle, which has immortalised the glory of Timour and the shame of Bajazet. For this signal victory, the Mogul emperor was indebted to himself, to the genius of the moment, and the discipline of thirty years. He had improved the tactics, without violating the manners, of his nation<sup>41</sup>, whose force still consisted in the missile weapons, and rapid evolutions, of a numerous cavalry. From a single troop to a great army, the mode of attack was the same: a foremost line first advanced to the charge, and was supported in a just order by the squadrons of the great vanguard. The general's eye watched over the field, and at his command the front and rear of the right and left wings successively moved forwards in their several divisions, and

C H A P.
LXV.

Battle of Angora,
A. D. 1402,
July 28.

<sup>40</sup> It may not be useless to mark the distances between Angora and the neighbouring cities, by the journeys of the caravans, each of twenty or twenty-five miles: to Smyrna xx. to Kiotahia x. to Bourfa x. to Cæsarea viii. to Sinope x. to Nicomedia ix. to Constantinople xii. or xiii. (see Tournefort, Voyage au Levant, tom. ii. lettre xxi.)

<sup>41</sup> See the Systems of Tactics in the Institutions, which the English editors have illustrated with elaborate plans (p. 373—407).

C H A P.
LXV.

in a direct or oblique line: the enemy was pressed by eighteen or twenty attacks; and each attack afforded a chance of victory. If they all proved fruitless or unsuccessful, the occasion was worthy of the emperor himself, who gave the signal of advancing to the standard and main body, which he led in person<sup>42</sup>. But in the battle of Angora, the main body itself was supported, on the flanks and in the rear, by the bravest squadrons of the reserve, commanded by the sons and grandsons of Timour. The conqueror of Hindostan ostentatiously shewed a line of elephants, the trophies, rather than the instruments, of victory: the use of the Greek fire was familiar to the Moguls and Ottomans: but had they borrowed from Europe the recent invention of gunpowder and cannon, the artificial thunder, in the hands of either nation, must have turned the fortune of the day<sup>43</sup>. In that day, Bajazet displayed the qualities of a soldier and a chief: but his genius sunk under a stronger ascendant; and from various motives, the greatest part of his troops failed him in the decisive moment. His rigour and avarice had provoked a mutiny among the Turks; and even his son Soliman too hastily withdrew from the field. The forces of Anatolia, loyal in their revolt, were drawn away to the banners of their lawful princes. His Tartar allies had been tempted by the letters and emissaries of Timour<sup>44</sup>; who reproached their ignoble servitude under the slaves of their fathers; and offered to their hopes the dominion of their new, or the liberty of their ancient, country. In the right wing of Bajazet, the cuirassiers of Europe charged, with faithful hearts and irresistible arms; but these men of iron were soon broken by an artful flight and <sup>42</sup> The sultan himself (says Timour) must then put the foot of courage into the stirrup of patience. A Tartar metaphor, which is lost in the English, but preserved in the French, version of the Institutes (p. 156, 157.).

<sup>43</sup> The Greek fire, on Timour's side, is attested by Sherefeddin (l. v. c. 47.); but Voltaire's strange suspicion, that some cannon, inscribed with strange characters, must have been sent by that monarch to Dehli, is refuted by the universal silence of contemporaries.

<sup>44</sup> Timour has dissembled this secret and important negotiation with the Tartars, which is indisputably proved by the joint evidence of the Arabian (tom. i. c. 47. p. 391), Turkish (Annal. Leunclav. p. 221.), and Persian historians (Khondemir, apud d'Herbelot, p. 882.).

headlong

headlong pursuit: and the Janizaries, alone, without cavalry or missile weapons, were encompassed by the circle of the Mogul hunters. Their valour was at length oppressed by heat, thirst, and the weight of numbers; and the unfortunate sultan, afflicted with the gout in his hands and feet, was transported from the field on the fleetest of his horses. He was pursued and taken by the titular khan of Zagatai; and, after his capture, and the defeat of the Ottoman powers, the kingdom of Anatolia submitted to the conqueror, who planted his standard at Kiotahia, and dispersed on all sides the ministers of rapine and destruction. Mirza Mehemmed Sultan, the eldest and best beloved of his grandsons, was dispatched to Bourfa with thirty thousand horse: and such was his youthful ardour, that he arrived with only four thousand at the gates of the capital, after performing in five days a march of two hundred and thirty miles. Yet fear is still more rapid in its course: and Soliman, the son of Bajazet, had already passed over to Europe with the royal treasure. The spoil, however, of the palace and city was immense: the inhabitants had escaped; but the buildings, for the most part of wood, were reduced to ashes. From Bourfa, the grandson of Timour advanced to Nice, even yet a fair and flourishing city; and the Mogul squadrons were only stopped by the waves of the Propontis. The same success attended the other mirzas and emirs in their excursions: and Smyrna, defended by the zeal and courage of the Rhodian knights, alone deserved the presence of the emperor himself. After an obstinate defence, the place was taken by storm; all that breathed was put to the sword; and the heads of the Christian heroes were launched from the engines, on board of two carracks, or great ships of Europe, that rode at anchor in the harbour. The Moslems of Asia rejoiced in their deliverance from a dangerous and domestic foe, and a parallel was drawn between the two rivals, by observing that Timour, in fourteen days, had reduced a fortress which

C H A P.
LXXV.Defeat and captivity of
of Bajazet.

had

C H A P. had sustained seven years the siege, or at least the blockade, of LXV. Bajazet<sup>45</sup>.

The story of his iron cage

The iron cage in which Bajazet was imprisoned by Tamerlane, so long and so often repeated as a moral lesson, is now rejected as a fable by the modern writers, who smile at the vulgar credulity<sup>46</sup>. They appeal with confidence to the Persian history of Sherefeddin Ali, which has been given to our curiosity in a French version, and from which I shall collect and abridge a more specious narrative of this memorable transaction. No sooner was Timour informed that the captive Ottoman was at the door of his tent, than he graciously stepped forwards to receive him, seated him by his side, and mingled with just reproaches a soothing pity for his rank and misfortune. "Alas!" said the emperor, "the decree of fate is now accomplished by your own fault: it is the web which you have woven, the thorns of the tree which yourself have planted. I wished to spare, and even to assist, the champion of the Moslems: you braved our threats; you despised our friendship; you forced us to enter your kingdom with our invincible armies. Behold the event. Had you vanquished, I am not ignorant of the fate which you reserved for myself and my troops. But I disdain to retaliate: your life and honour are secure; and I shall express my gratitude to God by my clemency to man." The royal captive shewed some signs of repentance, accepted the humiliation of a robe of honour, and embraced with tears his son Moufa, who, at his request, was sought and found among the captives of the field. The Ottoman princes were lodged in a splendid pavillion; and the disproved by the Persian historian of Timour;

<sup>45</sup> For the war of Anatolia or Roum, I c. 15—17. Chalcondyles, l. iii.).

add some hints in the Institutions, to the copious narratives of Sherefeddin (l. v. c. 44—65.) and Arabshah (tom. ii. c. 20—35.). On this part only of Timour's history, it is lawful to quote the Turks (Cantemir, p. 53—55. Annal. Leunclav. p. 320—322.) and the Greeks (Phranza, l. i. c. 29. Ducas, <sup>46</sup> The scepticism of Voltaire (Essai sur l'Histoire Generale, c. 88) is ready on this, as on every occasion, to reject a popular tale, and to diminish the magnitude of vice and virtue; and on most occasions his incredulity is reasonable.

respect

respect of the guards could be surpassed only by their vigilance. On the arrival of the haram from Boursa, Timour restored the queen Despina and her daughter to their father and husband; but he piously required, that the Servian princess, who had hitherto been indulged in the profession of Christianity, should embrace without delay the religion of the prophet. In the feast of victory, to which Bajazet was invited, the Mogul emperor placed a crown on his head and a sceptre in his hand, with a solemn assurance of restoring him with an increase of glory to the throne of his ancestors. But the effect of this promise was disappointed by the sultan's untimely death: amidst the care of the most skilful physicians, he expired of an apoplexy at Akshehr, the Antioch of Pisidia, about nine months after his defeat. The victor dropped a tear over his grave; his body, with royal pomp, was conveyed to the mausoleum which he had erected at Boursa; and his son Moufa, after receiving a rich present of gold and jewels, of horses and arms, was invested by a patent in red ink with the kingdom of Anatolia.

Such is the portrait of a generous conqueror, which has been extracted from his own memorials, and dedicated to his son and grandson, nineteen years after his decease<sup>47</sup>; and, at a time when the truth was remembered by thousands, a manifest falsehood would have implied a satire on his real conduct. Weighty indeed is this evidence, adopted by all the Persian histories<sup>48</sup>; yet flattery, more especially in the East, is base and audacious; and the harsh and ignominious treatment of Bajazet is attested by a chain of witnesses, some of whom shall be produced in the order of their time and country.

I. The reader has not forgot the garrison of French, whom the

C H A P.
LXV.

attested.
1. by the French;

<sup>47</sup> See the history of Sherefeddin (l. v. c. 49. 52. 53. 59. 60). This work was finished at Shiraz, in the year 1424, and dedicated to sultan Ibrahim, the son of Sharokh, the son of Timour, who reigned in Persistan in his father's lifetime.

Schounah, &c. the learned d'Herbelot (Bibliot. Orientale, p. 332.) may affirm, that this fable is not mentioned in the most authentic histories: but his denial of the visible testimony of Arabshah, leaves some room to suspect his accuracy.

<sup>48</sup> After the perusal of Khondemir, Ebn

C H A P.
LXV.

2. by the Italians ;

3. by the Arabs ;

marshal Boucicault left behind him for the defence of Constantinople. They were on the spot to receive the earliest and most faithful intelligence of the overthrow of their great adversary ; and it is more than probable, that some of them accompanied the Greek embassy to the camp of Tamerlane. From their account, the bardships of the prison and death of Bajazet are affirmed by the marshal's servant and historian, within the distance of seven years<sup>49</sup>. 2. The name of Poggius the Italian<sup>50</sup> is deservedly famous among the revivers of learning in the fifteenth century. His elegant dialogue on the vicissitudes of fortune<sup>51</sup> was composed in his fiftieth year, twenty-eight years after the Turkish victory of Tamerlane<sup>52</sup>; whom he celebrates as not inferior to the illustrious Barbarians of antiquity. Of his exploits and discipline Poggius was informed by several ocular witnesses ; nor does he forget an example so apposite to his theme as the Ottoman monarch, whom the Scythian confined like a wild beast in an iron cage, and exhibited a spectacle to Asia. I might add the authority of two Italian chronicles, perhaps of an earlier date, which would prove at least that the same story, whether false or true, was imported into Europe with the first tidings of the revolution<sup>53</sup>. 3. At the time when Poggius flourished at Rome, Ahmed Ebn Arabshah

<sup>49</sup> Et fut lui-meme (Bajazet) pris, et mené en prison, en laquelle mourut de dure mort! Memoires de Boucicault, P. i. c. 37. These memoirs were composed while the marshal was still governor of Genoa, from whence he was expelled in the year 1409, by a popular insurrection (Muratori, Annali d'Italia, tom. xii. p. 473, 474.).

<sup>50</sup> The reader will find a satisfactory account of the life and writings of Poggius, in the Poggiana, an entertaining work of M. Lenfant, and in the Bibliotheca Latina mediæ et infimæ Ætatis of Fabricius (tom. v. p. 305—303.). Poggius was born in the year 1380, and died in 1459.

<sup>51</sup> The dialogue de Varietate Fortunæ (of which a complete and elegant edition has been published at Paris in 1723, in 4<sup>t</sup>), was composed a short time before the death of pope Martin V. (p. 5.), and consequently about the end of the year 1430.

<sup>52</sup> See a splendid and eloquent encomium of Tamerlane, p. 35—39. ipse enim novi (says Poggius) qui fuere in ejus castris . . . . Regem vivum cepit, caveâque in modum feræ inclusum per omnem Asiam circumtulit egregium admirandumque spectaculum fortunæ.

<sup>53</sup> The Chronicon Tarvisianum (in Muratori, Script. Rerum Italicarum, tom. xix. p. 800.), and the Annales Estenses (tom. xviii. p. 974.). The two authors, Andrea de Reduissis de Quero, and James de Delayto, were both contemporaries, and both chancellors, the one of Treviso, the other of Ferrara. The evidence of the former is the most positive.

C H A P.
LXV.

composed at Damascus the florid and malevolent history of Timour, for which he had collected materials in his journies over Turkey and Tartary<sup>54</sup>. Without any possible correspondence between the Latin and the Arabian writer, they agree in the fact of the iron cage; and their agreement is a striking proof of their common veracity. Ahmed Arabshah likewise relates another outrage, which Bajazet endured, of a more domestic and tender nature. His indiscreet mention of women and divorces was deeply resented by the jealous Tartar: in the feast of victory, the wine was served by female cup-bearers, and the sultan beheld his own concubines and wives confounded among the slaves, and exposed without a veil to the eyes of intemperance. To escape a similar indignity, it is said, that his successors, except in a single instance, have abstained from legitimate nuptials; and the Ottoman practice and belief, at least in the sixteenth century, is attested by the observing Busbequius<sup>55</sup>, ambassador from the court of Vienna to the great Soliman. 4. Such is the separation of language, that the testimony of a Greek is not less independent than that of a Latin or an Arab. I suppress the names of Chalcondyles and Ducas, who flourished in a later period, and who speak in a less positive tone; but more attention is due to George Phranza<sup>56</sup>, protovestiare of the last emperors, and who was born a year before the battle of Angora. Twenty-two years after that event, he was sent ambassador to Amurath the second; and the historian might converse with some veteran Janizaries, who had been made prisoners with the sultan, and had themselves seen him in his iron cage. 5. The last evidence, in every sense, is that of the Turkish annals, which have been consulted or transcribed by Leunclavius,

4. by the Greeks;

5. by the
Turks.

<sup>54</sup> See Arabshah, tom. ii. c. 28. 34. He travelled in regiones Rumæas, A. H. 839 (A. D. 1435, July 27), tom. ii. c. 2. p. 13. homet II. with an Asiatic, princefs (Cantemir, p. 87. 93.).

<sup>55</sup> Busbequius in Legatione Turcicâ, epist. i. p. 52. Yet his respectable authority is somewhat shaken by the subsequent marriages of Amurath II. with a Servian, and of Mahomet II. with an Asiatic, princefs (Cantemir, p. 87. 93.). <sup>56</sup> See the testimony of George Phranza (l. i. c. 29.), and his life in Hæckius de Script. Byzant. P. i. c. 40.). Chalcondyles and Ducas speak in general terms of Bajazet's chabins.

C H A P.
LXV.

Pocock, and Cantemir<sup>57</sup>. They unanimously deplore the captivity of the iron cage; and some credit may be allowed to national historians, who cannot stigmatize the Tartar without uncovering the shame of their king and country.

Probable conclusion.

From these opposite premises, a fair and moderate conclusion may be deduced. I am satisfied that Sherefeddin Ali has faithfully described the first ostentatious interview, in which the conqueror, whose spirits were harmonised by success, affected the character of generosity. But his mind was insensibly alienated by the unseasonable arrogance of Bajazet; the complaints of his enemies, the Anatolian princes, were just and vehement; and Timour betrayed a design of leading his royal captive in triumph to Samarcand. An attempt to facilitate his escape, by digging a mine under the tent, provoked the Mogul emperor to impose a harsher restraint; and in his perpetual marches, an iron cage on a waggon might be invented, not as a wanton insult, but as a rigorous precaution. Timour had read in some fabulous history a similar treatment of one of his predecessors, a king of Persia; and Bajazet was condemned to represent the person, and expiate the guilt, of the Roman Cæsar<sup>58</sup>. But the strength of his mind and body fainted under the trial, and his premature death might, without injustice, be ascribed to the severity of Timour. He warred not with the dead; a tear and a sepulchre were all that he could bestow on a captive who was delivered from his power; and if Moufa, the son of Bajazet, was permitted to reign over the ruins of Bourfa, the greatest part of the province of Anatolia had been restored by the conqueror to their lawful sovereigns.

Death of Bajazet,
A. D. 1403,
March 9.

<sup>57</sup> Annales Leunclav. p. 321. Pocock, Prolegomen. ad Abulpharag. Dynast. Cantemir, p. 55.

<sup>58</sup> A Sapor, king of Persia, had been made prisoner and inclosed in the figure of a cow's hide by Maximian or Galerius Cæsar. Such is the fable related by Eutychius (Annal. tom. i. p. 421. vers. Pocock). The recollection of the true history (Decline and Fall, &c. vol. i. p. 446—456.) will teach us to appreciate the knowledge of the Orientals of the ages which precede the Hegira.

From the Irish and Volga to the Persian Gulf, and from the Ganges to Damascus and the Archipelago, Asia was in the hand of Timour; his armies were invincible, his ambition was boundless, and his zeal might aspire to conquer and convert the Christian kingdoms of the West, which already trembled at his name. He touched the utmost verge of the land; but an insuperable, though narrow, sea rolled between the two continents of Europe and Asia<sup>55</sup>; and the lord of so many tomans, or myriads, of horse, was not master of a single galley. The two passages of the Bosphorus and Hellespont, of Constantinople and Gallipoli, were possessed, the one by the Christians, the other by the Turks. On this great occasion, they forgot the difference of religion to act with union and firmness in the common cause: the double freights were guarded with ships and fortifications; and they separately withheld the transports, which Timour demanded of either nation, under the pretence of attacking their enemy. At the same time, they soothed his pride with tributary gifts and suppliant embassies, and prudently tempted him to retreat with the honours of victory. Soliman, the son of Bajazet, implored his clemency for his father and himself; accepted, by a red patent, the investiture of the kingdom of Romania, which he already held by the sword; and reiterated his ardent wish, of casting himself in person at the feet of the king of the world. The Greek emperor<sup>60</sup> (either John or Manuel) submitted to pay the same tribute which he had stipulated with the Turkish sultan, and ratified the treaty by an oath of allegiance, from which he could absolve his conscience so soon as the Mogul arms had retired from

C H A P.
LXV.Term of the conquests of Timour,
A. D. 1403.

<sup>55</sup> Arabshah (tom. ii. c. 25.) describes, like a curious traveller, the freights of Gallipoli and Constantinople. To acquire a just idea of these events, I have compared the narratives and prejudices of the Moguls, Turks, Greeks, and Arabians. The Spanish ambassador mentions this hostile union of the Christians and Ottomans (Vie de Timour, p. 96.).

<sup>60</sup> Since the name of Cæsar had been transferred to the sultans of Roum, the Greek princes of Constantinople (Sherefeddin, l. v. c. 54.) were confounded with the Christian lords of Gallipoli, Thessalonica, &c. under the title of Tekkur, which is derived by corruption from the genitive τῶν τεκτοῦν (Cantemir, p. 51.).

C H A P.
LXV.

Anatolia. But the fears and fancy of nations ascribed to the ambitious Tamerlane a new design of vast and romantic compass; a design of subduing Egypt and Africa, marching from the Nile to the Atlantic Ocean, entering Europe by the Streights of Gibraltar, and, after imposing his yoke on the kingdoms of Christendom, of returning home by the deserts of Russia and Tartary. This remote, and perhaps imaginary, danger was averted by the submission of the sultan of Egypt: the honours of the prayer and the coin, attested at Cairo the supremacy of Timour; and a rare gift of a giraffe, or camelopard, and nine ostriches, represented at Samarcand the tribute of the African world. Our imagination is not less astonished by the portrait of a Mogul, who, in his camp before Smyrna, meditates and almost accomplishes the invasion of the Chinese empire<sup>61</sup>. Timour was urged to this enterprize by national honour and religious zeal. The torrents which he had shed of Musulman blood could be expiated only by an equal destruction of the infidels; and as he now stood at the gates of paradise, he might best secure his glorious entrance by demolishing the idols of China, founding mosques in every city, and establishing the profession of faith in one God, and his prophet Mahomet. The recent expulsion of the house of Zingis was an insult on the Mogul name; and the disorders of the empire afforded the fairest opportunity for revenge. The illustrious Hongvou, founder of the dynasty of Ming, died four years before the battle of Angora; and his grandson, a weak and unfortunate youth, was burnt in his palace, after a million of Chinese had perished in the civil war<sup>62</sup>. Before he evacuated Anatolia, Timour dispatched beyond the Sihoon a numerous army, or rather colony, of his old and new subjects, to open the road, to subdue the Pagan Calmucks and Mungals, and to found cities and magazines in the

<sup>61</sup> See Sherefeddin, l. v. c. 4. who marks, in a just itinerary, the road to China, which Arabihah (tom. ii. c. 33.) paints in vague and rhetorical colours.

<sup>62</sup> Synopsis Hist. Sinicæ, p. 74—76 (in the ivth part of the Relations de Thevenot), Duhalde, Hist. de la Chine (tom. i. p. 507, 508. folio edition); and for the chronology of the Chinese emperors, de Guignes, Hist. des Huns, tom. i. p. 71, 72.

desert;

desert; and, by the diligence of his lieutenant, he soon received a perfect map and description of the unknown regions, from the source of the Irtysh to the wall of China. During these preparations, the emperor achieved the final conquest of Georgia; passed the winter on the banks of the Araxes; appeased the troubles of Persia; and slowly returned to his capital, after a campaign of four years and nine months.

On the throne of Samarcand<sup>63</sup>, he displayed in a short repose his magnificence and power; listened to the complaints of the people; distributed a just measure of rewards and punishments; employed his riches in the architecture of palaces and temples; and gave audience to the ambassadors of Egypt, Arabia, India, Tartary, Russia, and Spain, the last of whom presented a suit of tapestry which eclipsed the pencil of the Oriental artists. The marriage of six of the emperor's grandsons was esteemed an act of religion, as well as of paternal tenderness; and the pomp of the ancient caliphs was revived in their nuptials. They were celebrated in the gardens of Canighul, decorated with innumerable tents and pavilions, which displayed the luxury of a great city and the spoils of a victorious camp. Whole forests were cut down to supply fuel for the kitchens; the plain was spread with pyramids of meat, and vases of every liquor, to which thousands of guests were courteously invited: the orders of the state, and the nations of the earth, were marshalled at the royal banquet; nor were the ambassadors of Europe (says the haughty Persian) excluded from the feast; since even the caffes, the smallest of fish, find their place in the ocean<sup>64</sup>. The public joy was

C H A P.
LXV.

His triumph at Samar-
cand,
A. D. 1404,
July—
A. D. 1405,
January 8.

<sup>63</sup> For the return, triumph, and death of Timour, see Sherefeddin (l. vi. c. 1—30.) and Arabshah (tom. ii. c. 35—47.).

<sup>64</sup> Sherefeddin (l. vi. c. 24.) mentions the ambassadors of one of the most potent sovereigns of Europe. We know that it was Henry III. king of Castile; and the curious relation of his two embassies is still extant (Mariana, Hist. Hispan. l. xix. c. 11. tom. ii. p. 329, 330. Avertissement à l'Hist. de Timour Bec, p. 28—33.). There appears likewise to have been some correspondence between the Mogul emperor, and the court of Charles VII. king of France (Histoire de France, par Velly et Villaret, tom. xii. p. 336.).

testified

C H A P.
LXV.

testified by illuminations and masquerades ; the trades of Samarcand passed in review ; and every trade was emulous to execute some quaint device, some marvellous pageant, with the materials of their peculiar art. After the marriage-contracts had been ratified by the cadhis, the bridegrooms and their brides retired to the nuptial chambers ; nine times, according to the Asiatic fashion, they were dressed and undressed ; and at each change of apparel, pearls and rubies were showered on their heads, and contemptuously abandoned to their attendants. A general indulgence was proclaimed : every law was relaxed, every pleasure was allowed ; the people was free, the sovereign was idle ; and the historian of Timour may remark, that, after devoting fifty years to the attainment of empire, the only happy period of his life were the two months in which he ceased to exercise his power. But he was soon awakened to the cares of government and war. The standard was unfurled for the invasion of China : the emirs made their report of two hundred thousand, the select and veteran soldiers of Iran and Touran : their baggage and provisions were transported by five hundred great waggon, and an immense train of horses and camels ; and the troops might prepare for a long absence, since more than six months were employed for intranquil journey of a caravan from Samarcand to Peking. Neither age, nor the severity of the winter, could retard the impatience of Timour ; he mounted on horseback, passed the Sihoon on the ice, marched seventy-six parasangs, three hundred miles, from his capital, and pitched his last camp in the neighbourhood of Otrar, where he was expected by the angel of death. Fatigue, and the indiscreet use of iced water, accelerated the progress of his fever ; and the conqueror of Asia expired in the seventieth year of his age, thirty-five years after he had ascended the throne of Zagatai. His designs were lost ; his armies were disbanded ; China was saved ; and fourteen years after his decease, the most powerful of his children sent

His death on the road to China,
A. D. 1405,
April 1.

sent an embassy of friendship and commerce to the court of Pekin<sup>65</sup>.

C H A P.
LXV.

Character
and merits of Timour.

The fame of Timour haft pervaded the East and West; his posterity is still invested with the Imperial title; and the admiration of his subjects, who revered him almost as a deity, may be justified in some degree by the praise or confession of his bitterest enemies<sup>66</sup>. Although he was lame of an hand and foot, his form and stature were not unworthy of his rank; and his vigorous health, so essential to himself and to the world, was corroborated by temperance and exercise. In his familiar discourse he was grave and modest, and if he was ignorant of the Arabic language, he spoke with fluency and elegance the Persian and Turkish idioms. It was his delight to converse with the learned on topics of history and science; and the amusement of his leisure hours was the game of chess, which he improved or corrupted with new refinements<sup>67</sup>. In his religion, he was a zealous, though not perhaps an orthodox, Musulman<sup>68</sup>; but his sound understanding may tempt us to believe, that a superstitious reverence for omens and prophecies, for fairs and astrologers, was only affected as an instrument of policy. In the government of a vast empire, he stood alone and absolute, without a rebel to oppose his power, a favourite to seduce his affections, or a minister to mislead his judgment. It was his firmest maxim, that whatever might pieces and 64 squares, to 56 pieces and 110 or 130 squares. But, except in his court, the old game has been thought sufficiently elaborate. The Mogul emperor was rather pleased than hurt, with the victory of a subject: a chess-player will feel the value of this encomium!

<sup>65</sup> See the translation of the Persian account of their embassy, a curious and original piece (in the ivth part of the Relations de Thevenot). They presented the emperor of China with an old horse which Timour had formerly rode. It was in the year 1419, that they departed from the court of Herat, to which place they returned in 1422 from Pekin.

<sup>66</sup> From Arabshah, tom. ii. c. 96. The bright or softer colours are borrowed from Sherefeddin, d'Herbelot, and the Institutions.

<sup>67</sup> His new system was multiplied from 32

<sup>68</sup> See Sherefeddin, l. v. c. 15. 25. Arabshah (tom. ii. c. 96. p. 801. 803.) reproves the impiety of Timour and the Moguls, who almost preferred to the Koran, the Yagis, or Law of Zingis (cui Deus maledicat): nor will he believe that Sharokh had abolished the use and authority of that Pagan code.

C H A P.
LXV.

be the consequence, the word of the prince should never be disputed or recalled; but his foes have maliciously observed, that the commands of anger and destruction were more strictly executed than those of beneficence and favour. His sons and grandsons, of whom Timour left six-and-thirty at his decease, were his first and most submissive subjects; and whenever they deviated from their duty, they were corrected, according to the laws of Zingis, with the bastonade, and afterwards restored to honour and command. Perhaps his heart was not devoid of the social virtues; perhaps he was not incapable of loving his friends and pardoning his enemies; but the rules of morality are founded on the public interest; and it may be sufficient to applaud the wisdom of a monarch, for the liberality by which he is not impoverished, and for the justice by which he is strengthened and enriched. To maintain the harmony of authority and obedience, to chastise the proud, to protect the weak, to reward the deserving, to banish vice and idleness from his dominions, to secure the traveller and merchant, to restrain the depredations of the foldier, to cherish the labours of the husbandman, to encourage industry and learning, and, by an equal and moderate assessment, to encrease the revenue, without encreasing the taxes, are indeed the duties of a prince; but, in the discharge of these duties, he finds an ample and immediate recompense. Timour might boast, that at his accession to the throne, Asia was the prey of anarchy and rapine, whilst under his prosperous monarchy a child, fearless and unhurt, might carry a purse of gold from the East to the West. Such was his confidence of merit, that from this reformation he derived an excuse for his victories, and a title to universal dominion. The four following observations will serve to appreciate his claim to the public gratitude; and perhaps we shall conclude, that the Mogul emperor was rather the scourge than the benefactor of mankind. 1. If some partial disorders, some local oppressions, were healed by the sword of Timour, the remedy was far more pernicious than the disease.

By their rapine, cruelty, and discord, the petty tyrants of Persia might afflict their subjects; but whole nations were crushed under the footsteps of the reformer. The ground which had been occupied by flourishing cities, was often marked by his abominable trophies, by columns, or pyramids, of human heads. Astracan, Carizme, Delhi, Ispahan, Bagdad, Aleppo, Damascus, Bourfa, Smyrna, and a thousand others, were sacked, or burnt, or utterly destroyed, in his presence, and by his troops; and perhaps his conscience would have been startled, if a priest or philosopher had dared to number the millions of victims whom he had sacrificed to the establishment of peace and order<sup>69</sup>. 2. His most destructive wars were rather inroads than conquests. He invaded Turkestan, Kipzak, Russia, Hindostan, Syria, Anatolia, Armenia, and Georgia, without a hope or a desire of preserving those distant provinces. From thence he departed, laden with spoil; but he left behind him neither troops to awe the contumacious, nor magistrates to protect the obedient, natives. When he had broken the fabric of their ancient government, he abandoned them to the evils which his invasion had aggravated or caused; nor were these evils compensated by any present or possible benefits. 3. The kingdoms of Transoxiana and Persia were the proper field which he laboured to cultivate and adorn, as the perpetual inheritance of his family. But his peaceful labours were often interrupted, and sometimes blasted, by the absence of the conqueror. While he triumphed on the Volga or the Ganges, his servants, and even his sons, forgot their master and their duty. The public and private injuries were poorly redressed by the tardy rigour of enquiry and punishment; and we must be content to praise the Institutions of Timour, as the specious idea of fifth of November, I did not expect to hear of Timour's amiable moderation (White's preface, p. 7.). Yet I can excuse a generous enthusiasm in the reader, and still more in the editor, of the Institutions.

<sup>69</sup> Besides the bloody passages of this narrative, I must refer to an anticipation in the third volume of the Decline and Fall, which, in a single note (p. 368. Note 25.), accumulates near 300,000 heads of the monuments of his cruelty. Except in Rowe's play on the

C H A P
LXV.

a perfect monarchy. 4. Whatsoever might be the blessings of his administration, they evaporated with his life. To reign, rather than to govern, was the ambition of his children and grandchildren<sup>70</sup>; the enemies of each other and of the people. A fragment of the empire was upheld with some glory by Sharokh his youngest son; but after his decease, the scene was again involved in darkness and blood; and before the end of a century, Tranfoxiana and Persia were trampled by the Uzbeks from the north, and the Turkmenians of the black and white sheep. The race of Timour would have been extinct, if an hero, his descendant in the fifth degree, had not fled before the Uzbek arms to the conquest of Hindostan. His successors (the great Moguls<sup>71</sup>) extended their sway from the mountains of Cashmir to Cape Comorin, and from Candahar to the gulf of Bengal. Since the reign of Aurungzebe, their empire has been dissolved; their treasures of Delhi have been rifled by a Persian robber; and the richest of their kingdoms is now possessed by a company of Christian merchants, of a remote island in the Northern ocean.

Civil wars of the sons of Bajazet,
A. D.
1403—1421.

Far different was the fate of the Ottoman monarchy. The massy trunk was bent to the ground, but no sooner did the hurricane pass away, than it again rose with fresh vigour and more lively vegetation. When Timour, in every sense, had evacuated Anatolia, he left the cities without a palace, a treasure, or a king. The open country was overspread with hords of shepherds and robbers of Tartar or Turkman origin; the recent conquests of Bajazet were restored to the emirs, one of whom, in base revenge, demolished his sepulchre; and his five sons were eager, by civil discord, to consume the remnant of their patrimony. I shall enumerate their names in the order of their age and actions<sup>72</sup>. 1. It is doubtful, whether I relate

<sup>70</sup> Consult the last chapters of Sherefeddin and Arabshah, and M. de Guignes (Hist. des Huns, tom. iv. l. xx.). Frazer's History of Nadir Shah, p. 1—2. The story of Timour's descendants is imperfectly told; and the second and third parts of Sherefeddin are unknown.

<sup>71</sup> Shah Allum, the present Mogul, is in the fourteenth degree from Timour by Miran Shah, his third son. See the 10th volume of Dow's History of Hindostan.

<sup>72</sup> The civil wars, from the death of Bajazet to that of Mustapha, are related, according relate the story of the true Mustapha, or of an impostor, who personated that lost prince. He fought by his father's side in the battle of Angora: but when the captive sultan was permitted to enquire for his children, Moufa alone could be found; and the Turkish historians, the slaves of the triumphant faction, are persuaded that his brother was confounded among the slain. If Mustapha escaped from that disastrous field, he was concealed twelve years from his friends and enemies; till he emerged in Thessaly, and was hailed by a numerous party, as the son and successor of Bajazet. His first defeat would have been his last, had not the true, or false, Mustapha been saved by the Greeks, and restored, after the decease of his brother Mahomet, to liberty and empire. A degenerate mind seemed to argue his spurious birth; and if, on the throne of Adrianople, he was adored as the Ottoman sultan; his flight, his fetters, and an ignominious gibbet, delivered the impostor to popular contempt. A similar character and claim was asserted by several rival pretenders; thirty persons are said to have suffered under the name of Mustapha; and these frequent executions may perhaps insinuate, that the Turkish court was not perfectly secure of the death of the lawful prince.

2. After his father's captivity, Ifta<sup>73</sup> reigned for some time in the neighbourhood of Angora, Sinope, and the Black Sea; and his ambassadors were dismissed from the presence of Timour with fair promises and honourable gifts. But their master was soon deprived of his province and life, by a jealous brother, the sovereign of Amasia; and the final event suggested a pious allusion, that the law of Moses and Jesus, of Ifta and Moufa, had been abrogated by the greater Mahomet. 3. Soliman is not numbered in the list of the Turkish emperors: yet he checked the victorious progress of the Moguls; and after their departure, united for a while the thrones of Adrianople

C H A P.
LXX.

2. Ifta;

3. Soliman,
A. D.
1463—1410.

according to the Turks, by Demetrius Cantemir (p. 58—82. . . Of the Greeks, Chalcondyles (l. iv and v.), Phranza (l. i. c. 30—2.), and Ducas (c. 13—27.), the last is the most copious and best informed.

<sup>73</sup> Arabshah, tom. ii. c. 26. whose testimony on this occasion is weighty and valuable. The existence of Ifta (unknown to the Turks) is likewise confirmed by Sherefeddin (l. v. c. 57.).

and

C H A P.
LXV.

—

4. Moufa,
A. D. 1410.

5. Mahomet I.

A. D.

1413—1421.

and Bourfa. In war he was brave, active, and fortunate: his courage was softened by clemency; but it was likewise inflamed by presumption, and corrupted by intemperance and idleness. He relaxed the nerves of discipline, in a government where either the subject or the sovereign must continually tremble: his vices alienated the chiefs of the army and the law; and his daily drunkenness, so contemptible in a prince and a man, was doubly odious in a disciple of the prophet. In the slumber of intoxication, he was surprised by his brother Moufa; and as he fled from Adrianople towards the Byzantine capital, Soliman was overtaken and slain in a bath, after a reign of seven years and ten months. 4. The investiture of Moufa degraded him as the slave of the Moguls: his tributary kingdom of Anatolia was confined within a narrow limit, nor could his broken militia and empty treasury contend with the hardy and veteran bands of the sovereign of Romania. Moufa fled in disguise from the palace of Bourfa; traversed the Propontis in an open boat; wandered over the Walachian and Servian hills; and after some vain attempts, ascended the throne of Adrianople, so recently stained with the blood of Soliman. In a reign of three years and an half, his troops were victorious against the Christians of Hungary and the Morea; but Moufa was ruined by his timorous disposition and unseasonable clemency. After resigning the sovereignty of Anatolia, he fell a victim to the perfidy of his ministers, and the superior ascendant of his brother Mahomet. 5. The final victory of Mahomet was the just recompense of his prudence and moderation. Before his father's captivity, the royal youth had been entrusted with the government of Amasia, thirty days journey from Constantinople, and the Turkish frontier against the Christians of Trebizond and Georgia. The castle, in Asiatic warfare, was esteemed impregnable; and the city of Amasia<sup>74</sup>, which is equally divided by the river Iris, rises on either side in the form of an amphitheatre, and represents on a smaller scale the image of Bagdad. In his rapid career, Timour appears to have overlooked this obscure and contumacious angle of Anatolia; and Mahomet, without provoking the conqueror, maintained his silent independence, and chafed from the province the last stragglers of the Tartar host. He relieved himself from the dangerous neighbourhood of Isfa; but in the contests of their more powerful brethren, his firm neutrality was respected; till, after the triumph of Moufa, he stood forth the heir and avenger of the unfortunate Soliman. Mahomet obtained Anatolia by treaty and Romania by arms; and the soldier who presented him with the head of Moufa was rewarded as the benefactor of his king and country. The eight years of his sole and peaceful reign were usefully employed in banishing the vices of civil discord, and restoring on a firmer basis the fabric of the Ottoman monarchy. His last care was the choice of two vizirs, Bajazet and Ibrahim<sup>75</sup>, who might guide the youth of his son Amurath; and such was their union and prudence, that they concealed above forty days the emperor's death, till the arrival of his successor in the palace of Bourfa. A new war was kindled in Europe by the prince, or impostor, Mustapha; the first vizir lost his army and his head; but the more fortunate Ibrahim, whose name and family are still revered, extinguished the last pretender to the throne of Bajazet, and closed the scene of domestic hostility.

<sup>74</sup> Arabshah, loc. citat. Abulfeda, Geograph. tab. xvii. p. 302. Busbequius, epist. i. p. 96, 97. in Itinere C. P. et Amasiano.

C H A P.
LXV.

Reign of Amurath II.
A. D.
1421—1451,
February 9.

In these conflicts, the wisest Turks, and indeed the body of the nation, were strongly attached to the unity of the empire; and Romania and Anatolia, so often torn asunder by private ambition, were animated by a strong and invincible tendency of cohesion. Their efforts might have instructed the Christian powers; and had they

Re-union of the Ottoman
empire,
A. D. 1421.

<sup>75</sup> The virtues of Ibrahim are praised by a contemporary Greek (Ducas, c. 25.). His descendants are the sole nobles in Turkey: they content themselves with the administration of his pious foundations, are excused from public offices, and receive two annual visits from the sultan (Cantemir, p. 76.).

occupied

C H A P.
LXV.

occupied with a confederate fleet, the streights of Gallipoli, the Ottomans, at least in Europe, must have been speedily annihilated. But the schism of the West, and the factions and wars of France and England, diverted the Latins from this generous enterprise: they enjoyed the present respite, without a thought of futurity; and were often tempted by a momentary interest, to serve the common enemy of their religion. A colony of Genoese<sup>76</sup>, which had been planted at Phocæa<sup>77</sup> on the Ionian coast, was enriched by the lucrative monopoly of alum<sup>78</sup>; and their tranquillity, under the Turkish empire, was secured by the annual payment of tribute. In the last civil war of the Ottomans, the Genoese governor, Adorno, a bold and ambitious youth, embraced the party of Amurath; and undertook with seven stout gallies to transport him from Asia to Europe. The sultan and five hundred guards embarked on board the admiral's ship; which was manned by eight hundred of the bravest Franks. His life and liberty were in their hands; nor can we, without reluctance, applaud the fidelity of Adorno, who, in the midst of the passage, knelt before him, and gratefully accepted a discharge of his arrears of tribute. They landed in sight of Mustapha and Gallipoli; two thousand Italians, armed with lances and battle-axes, attended Amurath to the conquest of Adrianople; and this venal service was soon repaid by the ruin of the commerce and colony of Phocæa.

<sup>76</sup> See Pachymer (l. v. 29.), Nicephorus Gregoras (l. ii. c. 1.), Sherefeddin (l. v. c. 57.), and Ducas (c. 25.). The last of these, a curious and careful observer, is entitled, from his birth and station, to particular credit in all that concerns Ionia and the islands. Among the nations that resorted to New Phocæa, he mentions the English (Ἰγγλικοί); an early evidence of Mediterranean trade.

<sup>77</sup> For the spirit of navigation, and freedom of ancient Phocæa, or rather of the Phocæans, consult the 1st book of Herodotus, and the Geographical Index of his last and learned French translator, M. Larcher (tom. vii. p. 299.).

<sup>78</sup> Phocæa is not enumerated by Pliny (Hist. Nat. xxxv. 52.) among the places productive of alum; he reckons Egypt as the first, and for the second the isle of Melos, whose alum mines are described by Tournefort (tom. i. lettre iv.), a traveller and a naturalist. After the loss of Phocæa, the Genoese, in 1459, found that useful mineral in the isle of Iſchia (Ismael. Bouillaud, ad Ducam, c. 25.).

If Timour had generously marched at the request, and to the relief, of the Greek emperor, he might be entitled to the praise and gratitude of the Christians<sup>79</sup>. But a Musulman, who carried into Georgia the sword of persecution, and respected the holy warfare of Bajazet, was not disposed to pity or succour the idolaters of Europe. The Tartar followed the impulse of ambition; and the deliverance of Constantinople was the accidental consequence. When Manuel abdicated the government, it was his prayer, rather than his hope, that the ruin of the church and state might be delayed beyond his unhappy days; and after his return from a western pilgrimage, he expected every hour the news of the sad catastrophe. On a sudden he was astonished and rejoiced by the intelligence of the retreat, the overthrow, and the captivity of the Ottoman. Manuel<sup>80</sup> immediately sailed from Modon in the Morea; ascended the throne of Constantinople; and dismissed his blind competitor to an easy exile in the isle of Lesbos. The ambassadors of the son of Bajazet were soon introduced to his presence; but their pride was fallen, their tone was modest; they were awed by the just apprehension, lest the Greeks should open to the Moguls the gates of Europe. Soliman saluted the emperor by the name of father; solicited at his hands the government or gift of Romania; and promised to deserve his favour by inviolable friendship, and the restitution of Thessalonica, with the most important places along the Strymon, the Propontis, and the Black Sea. The alliance of Soliman exposed the emperor to the enmity and revenge of Moufa: the Turks appeared in arms before the gates of Constantinople; but they were repulsed by sea and

C H A P.
LXV.
State of the Greek empire,
A. D.
1402—1425.

<sup>79</sup> The writer who has the most abused this fabulous generosity, is our ingenious Sir William Temple (his works, vol. iii. p. 349, 350. octavo edition), that lover of exotic virtue. After the conquest of Russia, &c. and the passage of the Danube, his Tartar hero relieves, visits, admires, and refuses the city of Constantine. His flattering pencil deviates in every line from the truth of history:

yet his pleasing fictions are more excusable than the gross errors of Cantemir.

<sup>80</sup> For the reigns of Manuel and John, of Mahomet I. and Amurath II. see the Othman history of Cantemir (p. 70—95.), and the three Greeks, Chalcondyles, Piranza, and Ducas, who is still superior to his rivals.

C H A P.
LXV.

land; and unless the city was guarded by some foreign mercenaries, the Greeks must have wondered at their own triumph. But, instead of prolonging the division of the Ottoman powers, the policy or passion of Manuel was tempted to assist the most formidable of the sons of Bajazet. He concluded a treaty with Mahomet, whose progress was checked by the insuperable barrier of Gallipoli: the sultan and his troops were transported over the Bosphorus; he was hospitably entertained in the capital; and his successful ally was the first step to the conquest of Romania. The ruin was suspended by the prudence and moderation of the conqueror: he faithfully discharged his own obligations and those of Soliman, respected the laws of gratitude and peace; and left the emperor guardian of his two younger sons, in the vain hope of saving them from the jealous cruelty of their brother Amurath. But the execution of his last testament would have offended the national honour and religion: and the divan unanimously pronounced, that the royal youths should never be abandoned to the custody and education of a Christian dog. On this refusal, the Byzantine councils were divided: but the age and caution of Manuel yielded to the presumption of his son John; and they unsheathed a dangerous weapon of revenge, by dismissing the true or false Mustapha, who had long been detained as a captive and hostage, and for whose maintenance they received an annual pension of three hundred thousand aspers<sup>81</sup>. At the door of his prison, Mustapha subscribed to every proposal; and the keys of Gallipoli, or rather of Europe, were stipulated as the price of his deliverance. But no sooner was he seated on the throne of Romania, than he dismissed the Greek ambassadors with a smile of contempt, declaring, in a pious tone, that, at the day of judgment, he would rather answer for the violation of an oath, than for the surrender of a Musulman city into the hands of the infidels. The emperor was at once the enemy of the two rivals; from whom he had sustained, and to whom he had offered, an injury; and the victory of Amurath was followed, in the ensuing spring, by the siege of Constantinople<sup>82</sup>.

<sup>81</sup> The Turkish asper (from the Greek ἀσπρη) is, or was, a piece of white or silver money, at present much debased, but which was formerly equivalent to the 54th part, at least, of a Venetian ducat or sequin; and the 300,000 aspers, a princely allowance or royal tribute, may be computed at 2500l. sterling (Leunclav. Pandect. Turc. p. 406—408.).

C H A P.
LXV.

The religious merit of subduing the city of the Cæsars, attracted from Asia a crowd of volunteers, who aspired to the crown of martyrdom: their military ardour was inflamed by the promise of rich spoils and beautiful females; and the sultan's ambition was consecrated by the presence and prediction of Seid Bechar, a descendant of the prophet<sup>83</sup>, who arrived in the camp, on a mule, with a venerable train of five hundred disciples. But he might blush, if a fanatic could blush, at the failure of his assurances. The strength of the walls resisted an army of two hundred thousand Turks: their assaults were repelled by the sallies of the Greeks and their foreign mercenaries; the old resources of defence were opposed to the new engines of attack; and the enthusiasm of the dervish, who was snatched to heaven in visionary converse with Mahomet, was answered by the credulity of the Christians, who beheld the Virgin Mary, in a violet garment, walking on the rampart and animating their courage<sup>84</sup>. After a siege of two months, Amurath was recalled to Bourfa by a domestic revolt, which had been kindled by Greek treachery, and was soon extinguished by the death of a guiltless brother. While he led his Janizaries to new conquests in Europe and Asia, the Byzantine empire was indulged in a fervile and precarious respite of thirty years. Manuel sunk into the grave; and John Palæologus was permitted to reign, for an annual tribute of three hundred thousand aspers, and the dereliction of almost all that he held beyond the suburbs of Constantinople.

Siege of Constantinople by Amurath II.
A. D. 1422,
June 10—
August 24.

The emperor
John Palæo-
logus II.
A. D. 1425,
July 21—
A. D. 1448,
October 31.

<sup>82</sup> For the siege of Constantinople in 1422, see the particular and contemporary narrative of John Cananus, published by Leo Allatius, at the end of his edition of Acropolita (p. 183—197.).

supposes that the friend of Mahomet assumed in his amours the privilege of a prophet, and that the fairest of the Greek nuts were promised to the saint and his disciples.

<sup>83</sup> Cantemir, p. 80. Cananus, who de-

<sup>84</sup> For this miraculous apparition, Cananus appeals to the Musulman saint; but who will bear testimony for Seid Bechar?

C H A P.
LXV.

Hereditary succession and merit of the Ottomans.

In the establishment and restoration of the Turkish empire, the first merit must doubtless be assigned to the personal qualities of the sultans; since, in human life, the most important scenes will depend on the character of a single actor. By some shades of wisdom and virtue, they may be discriminated from each other; but, except in a single instance, a period of nine reigns, and two hundred and sixty-five years, is occupied, from the elevation of Othman to the death of Soliman, by a rare series of warlike and active princes, who impressed their subjects with obedience and their enemies with terror. Instead of the slothful luxury of the seraglio, the heirs of royalty were educated in the council and the field: from early youth they were entrusted by their fathers with the command of provinces and armies; and this manly institution, which was often productive of civil war, must have essentially contributed to the discipline and vigour of the monarchy. The Ottomans cannot style themselves, like the Arabian caliphs, the descendants or successors of the apostle of God; and the kindred which they claim with the Tartar khans of the house of Zingis, appears to be founded in flattery rather than in truth<sup>85</sup>. Their origin is obscure; but their sacred and indefeasible right, which no time can erase and no violence can infringe, was soon and unalterably implanted in the minds of their subjects. A weak or vicious sultan may be deposed and strangled; but his inheritance devolves to an infant or an idiot: nor has the most daring rebel presumed to ascend the throne of his lawful sovereign<sup>86</sup>. While the transient dynasties of Asia have been continually subverted by a crafty vizir in the palace or a victorious general in the camp, the Ottoman succession has been confirmed by

<sup>85</sup> See Rycart (l. i. c. 13.). The Turkish sultans assume the title of khan. Yet Abulghazi is ignorant of his Ottoman cousins.

<sup>86</sup> The third grand vizir of the name of Kiuperli, who was slain at the battle of Salankanen in 1691 (Cantemir, p. 382.), presumed to say, that all the successors of Soliman had been fools or tyrants, and that it was time to abolish the race (Marigli Stato Militare, &c. p. 28.). This political heretic was a good whig, and justified against the French ambassador the revolution of England (Mignot, Hist. Ottomans, tom. iii. p. 434.). His presumption condemns the singular exception of continuing offices in the same family.

the practice of five centuries, and is now incorporated with the vital principle of the Turkish nation.

C H A P.
LXV.

Education and discipline of the Turks.

To the spirit and constitution of that nation, a strong and singular influence may however be ascribed. The primitive subjects of Othman were the four hundred families of wandering Turkmans, who had followed his ancestors from the Oxus to the Sangar; and the plains of Anatolia are still covered with the white and black tents of their rustic brethren. But this original drop was dissolved in the mass of voluntary and vanquished subjects, who, under the name of Turks, are united by the common ties of religion, language, and manners. In the cities, from Erzeroum to Belgrade, that national appellation is common to all the Moslems, the first and most honourable inhabitants; but they have abandoned, at least in Romania, the villages, and the cultivation of the land, to the Christian peasants. In the vigorous age of the Ottoman government, the Turks were themselves excluded from all civil and military honours; and a servile class, an artificial people, was raised by the discipline of education to obey, to conquer, and to command<sup>57</sup>. From the time of Orchan and the first Amurath, the sultans were persuaded that a government of the sword must be renewed in each generation with new soldiers; and that such soldiers must be sought, not in effeminate Asia, but among the hardy and warlike natives of Europe. The provinces of Thrace, Macedonia, Albania, Bulgaria, and Servia, became the perpetual seminary of the Turkish army; and when the royal fifth of the captives was diminished by conquest, an inhuman tax, of the fifth child, or of every fifth year, was rigorously levied on the Christian families. At the age of twelve or fourteen years, the most robust youths were torn from their parents; their names were enrolled in a book; and from that moment they were clothed, taught, and maintained, for the public service. According to the promise of their appearance, they were selected for the royal schools of Bourfa, Pera, and Adrianople, entrusted to the care of the bashaws, or dispersed in the houses of the Anatolian peasantry. It was the first care of their masters to instruct them in the Turkish language: their bodies were exercised by every labour that could fortify their strength; they learned to wrestle, to leap to run, to shoot with the bow, and afterwards with the musket; till they were drafted into the chambers and companies of the Janizaries, and severely trained in the military or monastic discipline of the order. The youths most conspicuous for birth, talents, and beauty, were admitted into the inferior class of Agiamoglans, or the more liberal rank of Icboglans, of whom the former were attached to the palace, and the latter to the person of the prince. In four successive schools, under the rod of the white eunuchs, the arts of horsemanship and of darting the javelin were their daily exercise, while those of a more studious cast applied themselves to the study of the Koran, and the knowledge of the Arabic and Persian tongues. As they advanced in seniority and merit, they were gradually dismissed to military, civil, and even ecclesiastical employments: the longer their stay, the higher was their expectation; till, at a mature period, they were admitted into the number of the forty agas, who stood before the sultan, and were promoted by his choice to the government of provinces and the first honours of the empire<sup>88</sup>. Such a mode of institution was admirably adapted to the form and spirit of a despotic monarchy. The ministers and generals were, in the strictest sense, the slaves of the emperor, to whose bounty they were indebted for their instruction and support. When they left the seraglio, and suffered their beards to grow as the symbol of enfranchisement, they found themselves in an important office, without faction or friendship, without parents and without heirs, dependent on the hand which had raised them from the dust, and which, on the slightest displeasure, could break in pieces these statues of glass, as they are aptly termed by the Turkish proverb<sup>89</sup>. In the slow and painful steps of education, their characters and talents were unfolded to a discerning eye: the man, naked and alone, was reduced to the standard of his personal merit; and, if the sovereign had wisdom to chuse, he possessed a pure and boundless liberty of choice. The Ottoman candidates were trained by the virtues of abstinence to those of action; by the habits of submission to those of command. A similar spirit was diffused among the troops; and their silence and sobriety, their patience and modesty, have extorted the reluctant praise of their Christian enemies<sup>90</sup>. Nor can the victory appear doubtful, if we compare the discipline and exercise of the Janizaries with the pride of birth, the independence of chivalry, the ignorance of the new levies, the mutinous temper of the veterans, and the vices of intemperance and disorder, which so long contaminated the armies of Europe.

<sup>57</sup> Chalcondyles (l. v.) and Ducas (c. 23.) policy, and the transmutation of Christian exhibit the rude lineaments of the Ottoman children into Turkish soldiers.

C H A P.
LXV.

<sup>88</sup> This sketch of the Turkish education and discipline, is chiefly borrowed from Rycaut's State of the Ottoman Empire, the Stato Militare del' Imperio Ottomanno of Count Marfigli (in Haya, 1732, in folio), and a Description of the Seraglio, approved by Mr. Greaves himself, a curious traveller, and inserted in the second volume of his works.

The only hope of salvation for the Greek empire and the adjacent kingdoms, would have been some more powerful weapon, some discovery in the art of war, that should give them a decisive superiority over their Turkish foes. Such a weapon was in their hands; such a discovery had been made in the critical moment of their fate. The chymists of China or Europe had found, by casual or elaborate experiments, that a mixture of saltpetre, sulphur, and charcoal, produces, with a spark of fire, a tremendous explosion. It was soon observed, that if the expansive force were compressed in a strong

C H A P.
LXV.

Invention and use of gunpowder.

<sup>89</sup> From the series of cxy vizirs till the siege of Vienna (Marfigli, p. 13.), their place may be valued at three years and a half purchase. <sup>90</sup> See the entertaining and judicious letters of Busbequius.

tube,

C H A P.
LXV.

tube, a ball of stone or iron might be expelled with irresistible and destructive velocity. The precise æra of the invention and application of gunpowder<sup>91</sup> is involved in doubtful traditions and equivocal language; yet we may clearly discern, that it was known before the middle of the fourteenth century; and that before the end of the same, the use of artillery in battles and sieges, by sea and land, was familiar to the states of Germany, Italy, Spain, France, and England<sup>92</sup>. The priority of nations is of small account; none could derive any exclusive benefit from their previous or superior knowledge; and in the common improvement they stood on the same level of relative power and military science. Nor was it possible to circumscribe the secret within the pale of the church; it was disclosed to the Turks by the treachery of apostates and the selfish policy of rivals; and the sultans had sense to adopt, and wealth to reward, the talents of a Christian engineer. The Genoese, who transported Amurath into Europe, must be accused as his preceptors; and it was probably by their hands that his cannon was cast and directed at the siege of Constantinople<sup>93</sup>. The first attempt was indeed unsuccessful; but in the general warfare of the age, the advantage was on their side, who were most commonly the assailants; for a while the proportion of the attack and defence was suspended; and this thundering artillery was pointed against the walls and towers

<sup>91</sup> The 1st and 2<sup>d</sup> volumes of Dr. Watson's Chemical Essays, contain two valuable discourses on the discovery and composition of gunpowder.

<sup>92</sup> On this subject, modern testimonies cannot be trusted. The original passages are collected by Ducange (Gloss. Latin. tom. i. p. 675. Bombarda). But in the early doubtful twilight, the name, sound, fire, and effect, that seem to express our artillery, may be fairly interpreted of the old engines and the Greek fire. For the English cannon at Crecy, the authority of John Villani (Chron.

l. xii. c. 65.), must be weighed against the silence of Froissard. Yet Muratori (Antiquit. Italie medii Ævi, tom. ii. Dissert. xxvi. p. 514, 515.) has produced a decisive passage from Petrarch (de Remediis utriusque Fortunæ Dialog.), who, before the year 1344, execrates this terrestrial thunder, nuper rara, nunc communis.

<sup>93</sup> The Turkish cannon, which Ducas (c. 30.) first introduces before Belgrade (A. D. 1436), is mentioned by Chalcondyles (l. v. p. 123.) in 1422, at the siege of Constantinople.

which

which had been erected only to resist the less potent engines of antiquity. By the Venetians, the use of gunpowder was communicated without reproach to the sultans of Egypt and Persia, their allies against the Ottoman power; the secret was soon propagated to the extremities of Asia; and the advantage of the European was confined to his easy victories over the savages of the new world. If we contrast the rapid progress of this mischievous discovery with the slow and laborious advances of reason, science, and the arts of peace, a philosopher, according to his temper, will laugh or weep at the folly of mankind.

C H A P.
LXV.

---

C H A P. LXVI.

Applications of the Eastern Emperors to the Popes.—Visits to the West, of John the First, Manuel, and John the Second, Palæologus.—Union of the Greek and Latin Churches, promoted by the Council of Basil, and concluded at Ferrara and Florence.—State of Literature at Constantinople.—Its Revival in Italy by the Greek Fugitives.—Curiosity and Emulation of the Latins.

C H A P.
LXVI.

Embassy of the younger Andronicus to pope Benedict XII.
A. D. 1339.

IN the four last centuries of the Greek emperors, their friendly or hostile aspect towards the pope and the Latins, may be observed as the thermometer of their prosperity or distress; as the scale of the rise and fall of the Barbarian dynasties. When the Turks of the house of Seljuk pervaded Asia and threatened Constantinople, we have seen at the council of Placentia, the suppliant ambassadors of Alexius, imploring the protection of the common father of the Christians. No sooner had the arms of the French pilgrims removed the sultan from Nice to Iconium, than the Greek princes resumed, or avowed, their genuine hatred and contempt for the schismatics of the West, which precipitated the first downfall of their empire. The date of the Mogul invasion is marked in the soft and charitable language of John Vatases. After the recovery of Constantinople, the throne of the first Palæologus was encompassed by foreign and domestic enemies: as long as the sword of Charles was suspended over his head, he basely courted the favour of the Roman pontiff; and sacrificed sacrificed to the present danger, his faith, his virtue, and the affection of his subjects. On the decease of Michael, the prince and people asserted the independence of their church and the purity of their creed: the elder Andronicus neither feared nor loved the Latins; in his last distress, pride was the safeguard of superstition, nor could he decently retract in his age the firm and orthodox declarations of his youth. His grandson, the younger Andronicus, was less a slave in his temper and situation; and the conquest of Bithynia by the Turks, admonished him to seek a temporal and spiritual alliance with the western princes. After a separation and silence of fifty years, a secret agent, the monk Barlaam, was dispatched to pope Benedict the twelfth; and his artful instructions appear to have been drawn by the master-hand of the great domestic<sup>1</sup>. “Most holy father,” was he commissioned to say, “the emperor is not less desirous than yourself of an union between the two churches: but in this delicate transaction, he is obliged to respect his own dignity and the prejudices of his subjects. The ways of union are two-fold; force, and persuasion. Of force, the inefficacy has been already tried; since the Latins have subdued the empire, without subduing the minds, of the Greeks. The method of persuasion, though slow, is sure and permanent. A deputation of thirty or forty of our doctors would probably agree with those of the Vatican, in the love of truth and the unity of belief: but on their return, what would be the use, the recompense of such agreement? the scorn of their brethren, and the reproaches of a blind and obstinate nation. Yet that nation is accustomed to reverence the general councils, which have fixed the articles of our faith; and if they reprobate the decrees of Lyons, it is because the Eastern churches were neither heard nor represented in that arbitrary

The arguments for a crusade and union.

<sup>1</sup> This curious instruction was transcribed myself with the abbé Fleury (Hist. Ecclesiastique, tom. xx. p. 1—8.), whose abstracts I (I believe) from the Vatican archives, by Odoricus Raynaldus, in his continuation of the Annals of Baronius (Romæ, 1646—1677, in x volumes in folio). I have contented

C H A P.
LXVI.

“ meeting. For this salutary end, it will be expedient, and even “ necessary, that a well-chosen legate should be sent into Greece,
 “ to convene the patriarchs of Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch,
 “ and Jerusalem; and, with their aid, to prepare a free and uni“ versal synod. But at this moment,” continued the subtle agent,
 “ the empire is assaulted and endangered by the Turks, who have “ occupied four of the greatest cities of Anatolia. The Christian “ inhabitants have expressed a wish of returning to their allegiance “ and religion; but the forces and revenues of the emperor are in“ sufficient for their deliverance: and the Roman legate must be “ accompanied, or preceded, by an army of Franks, to expel the “ infidels, and open a way to the holy sepulchre.” If the suspicious Latins should require some pledge, some previous effect of the sincerity of the Greeks, the answers of Barlaam were perspicuous and rational. “ 1. A general synod can alone consummate the union “ of the churches; nor can such a synod be held till the three Orient-“ tal patriarchs, and a great number of bishops, are enfranchised “ from the Mahometan yoke. 2. The Greeks are alienated by a “ long series of oppression and injury: they must be reconciled by a “ some act of brotherly love, some effectual succour, which may “ fortify the authority and arguments, of the emperor, and the “ friends of the union. 3. If some difference of faith or ceremonies “ should be found incurable, the Greeks however are the disciples “ of Christ; and the Turks are the common enemies of the Chris“ tian name. The Armenians, Cyprians, and Rhodians, are equally “ attacked; and it will become the piety of the French princes to “ draw their swords in the general defence of religion. 4. Should “ the subjects of Andronicus be treated as the worst of schismatics, “ of heretics, of pagans, a judicious policy may yet instruct the “ powers of the West to embrace an useful ally, to uphold a sinking “ empire, to guard the confines of Europe; and rather to join the “ Greeks against the Turks, than to expect the union of the Turkish “ arms

“ arms with the troops and treasures of captive Greece.” The reasons, the offers, and the demands, of Andronicus, were eluded with cold and stately indifference. The kings of France and Naples declined the dangers and glory of a crusade: the pope refused to call a new synod to determine old articles of faith: and his regard for the obsolete claims of the Latin emperor and clergy, engaged him to use an offensive superscription: “ To the moderator<sup>2</sup> of the Greeks, “ and the persons who style themselves the patriarchs of the Eastern “ churches.” For such an embassy, a time and character less propitious could not easily have been found. Benedict the twelfth<sup>3</sup> was a dull peasant, perplexed with scruples, and immersed in sloth and wine: his pride might enrich with a third crown the papal tiara, but he was alike unfit for the regal and the pastoral office.

After the decease of Andronicus, while the Greeks were distracted by intestine war, they could not presume to agitate a general union of the Christians. But as soon as Cantacuzene had subdued and pardoned his enemies, he was anxious to justify, or at least to extenuate, the introduction of the Turks into Europe, and the nuptials of his daughter with a Mussulman prince. Two officers of state, with a Latin interpreter, were sent in his name to the Roman court, which was transplanted to Avignon, on the banks of the Rhône, during a period of seventy years; they represented the hard necessity which had urged him to embrace the alliance of the miscreants, and pronounced by his command the specious and edifying

C H A P.
LXVI.

Negotiation of Cantacuzene
with Clement VI.
A. D. 1348.

<sup>2</sup> The ambiguity of this title is happy or ingenious; and moderator, as synonymous to rector, gubernator, is a word of classical, and even Ciceronian, Latinity, which may be found, not in the Glossary of Ducange, but in the Thesaurus of Robert Stephens.

<sup>3</sup> The first Epistle (sine titulo) of Petrarch, exposes the danger of the bark, and the incapacity of the pilot. Hæc inter, vino madidus, ævo gravis ac soporifero rore perfusus, jamjam nutitat, dormitat, jam somno præ-

ceps, atque (utinam solus) roit . . . Heu quanto felicius patrio terram sulcasset aratro, quam scalmum piscatorium ascendisset. This satire engages his biographer to weigh the virtues and vices of Benedict XII. which have been exaggerated by Guelphs and Ghibelines, by Papists and Protestants (see Mémoires sur la Vie de Petrarque, tom. i. p. 259. ii. not. xv. p. 13—16.). He gave occasion to the saying, Bibamus papaliter.

C H A P.
LXVI.

founders of union and crusade. Pope Clement the sixth<sup>4</sup>, the successor of Benedict, received them with hospitality and honour, acknowledged the innocence of their sovereign, excused his distress, applauded his magnanimity, and displayed a clear knowledge of the state and revolutions of the Greek empire, which he had imbibed from the honest accounts of a Savoyard lady, an attendant of the empress Anne<sup>5</sup>. If Clement was ill-endowed with the virtues of a priest, he possessed however the spirit and magnificence of a prince, whose liberal hand distributed benefices and kingdoms with equal facility. Under his reign, Avignon was the seat of pomp and pleasure: in his youth he had surpassed the licentiousness of a baron; and the palace, nay, the bed-chamber of the pope, was adorned, or polluted, by the visits of his female favourites. The wars of France and England were adverse to the holy enterprise; but his vanity was amused by the splendid idea; and the Greek ambassadors returned with two Latin bishops, the ministers of the pontiff. On their arrival at Constantinople, the emperor and the nuncios admired each other's piety and eloquence: and their frequent conferences were filled with mutual praises and promises, by which both parties were amused, and neither could be deceived. "I am delighted," said the devout Cantacuzene, "with the project of our holy war, which must redound to my personal glory, as well as to the public benefit of Christendom. My dominions will give a free passage to the armies of France: my troops, my galleys, my treasures, shall be consecrated to the common cause; and happy would be my fate, could I deserve and obtain the crown of martyrdom. Words are

<sup>4</sup> See the original lives of Clement VI. in Muratori (Script. Rerum Italicarum, tom. iii. P. ii. p. 550—589.). Matteo Villani (Chron. l. iii. c. 43. in Muratori, tom. xiv. p. 186.), who styles him, molto cavallaresco, poco religiososo; Fleury (Hist. Eccles. tom. xx. p. 126.), and the Vie de Petrarque (tom. ii. p. 42—45.). The abbé de Sade treats him with the most indulgence; but he is a gentleman as well as a priest.

<sup>5</sup> Her name (most probably corrupted) was Zampea. She had accompanied, and alone remained with her mistress at Constantinople, where her prudence, erudition, and politeness, deserved the praises of the Greeks themselves (Cantacuzen. l. i. c. 42.).

"insuffi-

“ insufficient to express the ardour with which I fight for the reunion “ of the scattered members of Christ. If my death could avail, I “ would gladly present my sword and my neck: if the spiritual “ phoenix could arise from my ashes, I would erect the pile and “ kindle the flame with my own hands.” Yet the Greek emperor presumed to observe, that the articles of faith which divided the two churches had been introduced by the pride and precipitation of the Latins: he disclaimed the servile and arbitrary steps of the first Palæologus; and firmly declared, that he would never submit his conscience unless to the decrees of a free and universal synod.
 “ The situation of the times,” continued he, “ will not allow the “ pope and myself to meet either at Rome or Constantinople; but “ some maritime city may be chosen on the verge of the two em“ pires, to unite the bishops, and to instruct the faithful, of the “ East and West.” The nuncios seemed content with the proposition; and Cantacuzene affects to deplore the failure of his hopes, which were soon overthrown by the death of Clement and the different temper of his successor. His own life was prolonged, but it was prolonged in a cloister; and, except by his prayers, the humble monk was incapable of directing the counsels of his pupil or the state<sup>6</sup>.

C H A P.
LXVI.

Yet of all the Byzantine princes, that pupil, John Palæologus, was the best disposed to embrace, to believe, and to obey, the shepherd of the West. His mother, Anne of Savoy, was baptized in the bosom of the Latin church: her marriage with Andronicus imposed a change of name, of apparel, and of worship; but her heart was still faithful to her country and religion; she had formed the infancy of her son, and she governed the emperor, after his mind, or at least his stature, was enlarged to the size of man. In the first year of his deliverance and restoration, the Turks were still masters

Treaty of John Palæo-logus I. with Innocent VI.
A. D. 1355.

<sup>6</sup> See this whole negotiation in Cantacuzene (l. iv. c. 9.), who, amidst the praises and virtues which he bestows on himself, reveals the uneasiness of a guilty conscience.

C H A P.
LXVI.

of the Hellespont; the son of Cantacuzene was in arms at Adrianople; and Palæologus could depend neither on himself nor on his people. By his mother's advice, and in the hope of foreign aid, he abjured the rights both of the church and state; and the act of slavery<sup>7</sup>, subscribed in purple ink, and sealed with the golden bull, was privately intrusted to an Italian agent. The first article of the treaty is an oath of fidelity and obedience to Innocent the sixth and his successors, the supreme pontiffs of the Roman and Catholic church. The emperor promises to entertain with due reverence their legates and nuncios; to assign a palace for their residence and a temple for their worship; and to deliver his second son Manuel as the hostage of his faith. For these condescensions, he requires a prompt succour of fifteen galleys, with five hundred men at arms, and a thousand archers, to serve against his Christian and Musulman enemies. Palæologus engages to impose on his clergy and people the same spiritual yoke; but as the resistance of the Greeks might be justly foreseen, he adopts the two effectual methods of corruption and education. The legate was empowered to distribute the vacant benefices among the ecclesiastics who should subscribe the creed of the Vatican: three schools were instituted to instruct the youth of Constantinople in the language and doctrine of the Latins; and the name of Andronicus, the heir of the empire, was enrolled as the first student. Should he fail in the measures of persuasion or force, Palæologus declares himself unworthy to reign; transferred to the pope all regal and paternal authority; and invests Innocent with full power to regulate the family, the government, and the marriage, of his son and successor. But this treaty was neither executed nor published: the Roman galleys were as vain and imaginary as the submission of the Greeks; and it was only by the secrecy, that their sovereign escaped the dishonour, of this fruitless humiliation.

<sup>7</sup> See this ignominious treaty in Fleury du, who drew it from the Vatican archives. It (Hist. Eccles. p. 151—154.), from Raynal- was not worth the trouble of a pious forgery.

The tempest of the Turkish arms soon burst on his head; and, after the loss of Adrianople and Romania, he was enclosed in his capital, the vassal of the haughty Amurath, with the miserable hope of being the last devoured by the savage. In this abject state, Palæologus embraced the resolution of embarking for Venice, and casting himself at the feet of the pope; he was the first of the Byzantine princes who had ever visited the unknown regions of the West, yet in them alone he could seek consolation or relief; and with less violation of his dignity he might appear in the sacred college than at the Ottoman Porte. After a long absence, the Roman pontiffs were returning from Avignon to the banks of the Tyber; Urban the fifth<sup>s</sup>, of a mild and virtuous character, encouraged or allowed the pilgrimage of the Greek prince; and, within the same year, enjoyed the glory of receiving in the Vatican the two Imperial shadows, who represented the majesty of Constantine and Charlemagne. In this suppliant visit, the emperor of Constantinople, whose vanity was lost in his distress, gave more than could be expected of empty founts and formal submissions. A previous trial was imposed; and in the presence of four cardinals, he acknowledged, as a true Catholic, the supremacy of the pope, and the double procession of the Holy Ghost. After this purification, he was introduced to a public audience in the church of St. Peter; Urban, in the midst of the cardinals, was seated on his throne; the Greek monarch, after three genuflexions, devoutly kissed the feet, the hands, and at length the mouth, of the holy father, who celebrated high mass in his presence, allowed him to lead the bridle of his mule, and treated him with a sumptuous banquet in the Vatican. The entertainment of Palæologus was friendly and honourable; yet some difference was observed between the emperors of the

C H A P
LXVI.

Visit of John Palæologus,
to Urban V.
at Rome,
A. D. 1369,
October 13,
&c.

<sup>s</sup> See the two first original lives of Urban V. (in Muratori, Script. Rerum Italicarum, tom. iii. P. ii. p. 623. 635.), and the Ecclesiastical Annals of Spondanus (tom. i. p. 573. A. D. 1369, N<sup>o</sup> 7.) and Raynaldus (Fleury, Hist. Eccles. tom. xx. p. 223, 224.). Yet, from some variations, I suspect the papal writers of slightly magnifying the genuflexions of Palæologus.

C H A P.
LXVI.

East and West<sup>9</sup>; nor could the former be entitled to the rare privilege of chaunting the gospel in the rank of a deacon<sup>10</sup>. In favour of his profelyte, Urban strove to rekindle the zeal of the French king, and the other powers of the West; but he found them cold in the general cause, and active only in their domestic quarrels. The last hope of the emperor was in an English mercenary, John Hawkwood<sup>11</sup>, or Acuto, who with a band of adventurers, the white brotherhood, had ravaged Italy from the Alps to Calabria; sold his services to the hostile states; and incurred a just excommunication by shooting his arrows against the papal residence. A special licence was granted to negotiate with the outlaw, but the forces, or the spirit, of Hawkwood were unequal to the enterprize; and it was for the advantage perhaps of Palæologus to be disappointed of a succour, that must have been costly, that could not be effectual, and which might have been dangerous<sup>12</sup>. The disconsolate Greek<sup>13</sup> prepared for his return, but even his return was impeded by a most ignominious obstacle. On his arrival at Venice, he had borrowed

<sup>9</sup> Paullo minus quam si fuisset Imperator Romanorum. Yet his title of Imperator Græcorum was no longer disputed (Vit. Urban V. p. 627.).

<sup>10</sup> It was confined to the successors of Charlemagne, and to them only on Christmas day. On all other festivals, these Imperial deacons were content to serve the pope as he said mass, with the book and the corporal. Yet the abbé de Sade generously thinks, that the merits of Charles IV. might have entitled him, though not on the proper day (A. D. 1368, November 1.), to the whole privilege. He seems to asfix a just value on the privilege and the man (Vie de Petrarque, tom. iii. p. 35.).

<sup>11</sup> Through some Italian corruptions, the etymology of Falcone in bisce (Matteo Villani, l. xi. c. 79. in Muratori, tom. xv. p. 746.), suggests the English word Hawkwood, the true name of our adventurous countryman (Thomas Walsingham, Hist. Anglican. inter Scriptores Cambdeni, p. 184.). After two-

and-twenty victories, and one defeat, he died, in 1394, General of the Florentines, and was buried with such honours as the republic has not paid to Dante or Petrarch (Muratori, Annali d'Italia, tom. xii. p. 212—371.).

<sup>12</sup> This torrent of English (by birth or service) overflowed from France into Italy after the peace of Bretigny in 1360. Yet the exclamation of Muratori (Annali, tom. xii. p. 197) is rather true than civil. “Ci man-cava ancor questo, che dopo essere calpe-strati l'Italia da tanti mafnadieri Tedeschi ed Ungheri, venissero sin dall' Inghilterra nuovi cani a finire di divorarla.”

<sup>13</sup> Chalcondyles, l. i. p. 25, 26. The Greek supposes his journey to the king of France, which is sufficiently refuted by the silence of the national historians. Nor am I much more inclined to believe, that Palæologus departed from Italy, valde bene contentus (Vit. Urban V. p. 623.).

large sums at exorbitant usury; but his coffers were empty, his creditors were impatient, and his person was detained as the best security for the payment. His eldest son Andronicus, the regent of Constantinople, was repeatedly urged to exhaust every resource; and, even by stripping the churches, to extricate his father from captivity and disgrace. But the unnatural youth was insensible of the disgrace, and secretly pleased with the captivity of the emperor; the state was poor, the clergy was obstinate; nor could some religious scruple be wanting to excuse the guilt of his indifference and delay. Such undutiful neglect was severely reprov'd by the piety of his brother Manuel, who instantly sold or mortgaged all that he possessed, embarked for Venice, relieved his father, and pledged his own freedom to be responsible for the debt. On his return to Constantinople, the parent and king distinguished his two sons with suitable rewards; but the faith and manners of the slothful Palæologus had not been improved by his Roman pilgrimage; and his apostacy or conversion, devoid of any spiritual or temporal effects, was speedily forgotten by the Greeks and Latins<sup>14</sup>.

C H A P.
LXVI.

His return to Constantino-
ple,
A. D. 1370.

Thirty years after the return of Palæologus, his son and successor, Manuel, from a similar motive, but on a larger scale, again visited the countries of the West. In a preceding chapter I have related his treaty with Bajazet, the violation of that treaty, the siege or blockade of Constantinople, and the French succour under the command of the gallant Boucicault<sup>15</sup>. By his ambassadors, Manuel had solicited the Latin powers; but it was thought that the presence of a distressed monarch would draw tears and supplies from the hardest Barbarians<sup>16</sup>; and the marshal who advised the journey, prepared the reception, of the Byzantine prince. The land was occupied by

Visit of the emperor Manuel

<sup>14</sup> His return in 1370, and the coronation of Manuel, Sept. 25, 1373 (Ducange, Fam. Byzant. p. 241.), leaves some intermediate era for the conspiracy and punishment of Andronicus.

<sup>15</sup> Memoires de Boucicault, P. i. c. 35, 36.

<sup>16</sup> His journey into the west of Europe, is slightly, and I believe reluctantly, noticed by Chalcondyles (l. ii. c. 44—50.) and Ducas (c. 14.).

C H A P.
LXVI.

to the court
of France,
A. D. 1400,
June 3;

the Turks; but the navigation of Venice was safe and open: Italy received him as the first, or, at least, as the second of the Christian princes; Manuel was pitied as the champion and confessor of the faith; and the dignity of his behaviour prevented that pity from sinking into contempt. From Venice he proceeded to Padua and Pavia; and even the duke of Milan, a secret ally of Bajazet, gave him safe and honourable conduct to the verge of his dominions<sup>17</sup>. On the confines of France<sup>18</sup>, the royal officers undertook the care of his person, journey, and expences; and two thousand of the richest citizens, in arms and on horseback, came forth to meet him as far as Charenton, in the neighbourhood of the capital. At the gates of Paris, he was saluted by the chancellor and the parliament; and Charles the sixth, attended by his princes and nobles, welcomed his brother with a cordial embrace. The successor of Constantine was clothed in a robe of white silk, and mounted on a milk-white steed; a circumstance, in the French ceremonial, of singular importance: the white colour is considered as the symbol of sovereignty; and, in a late visit, the German emperor, after an haughty demand and a peevish refusal, had been reduced to content himself with a black courser. Manuel was lodged in the Louvre; a succession of feasts and balls, the pleasures of the banquet and the chase, were ingeniously varied by the politeness of the French, to display their magnificence and amuse his grief: he was indulged in the liberty of his chapel; and the doctors of the Sorbonne were astonished, and possibly scandalised, by the language, the rites, and the vestments, of his Greek clergy. But the slightest glance on the state of the kingdom, must teach him to despair of any effectual assistance.

<sup>17</sup> Muratori, Annali d'Italia, tom. xii. p. 406. John Galeazzo was the first and most powerful duke of Milan. His connection with Bajazet is attested by Froissard; and he contributed to save and deliver the French captives of Nicopolis.

<sup>18</sup> For the reception of Manuel at Paris,

see Spondanus (Annal. Eccles. tom. i. p. 676, 677. A. D. 1400, N° 5.), who quotes Juvenal des Ursins, and the monk of St. Denys; and Villaret (Hist. de France, tom. xii. p. 331—334.), who quotes nobody, according to the last fashion of the French writers.

The unfortunate Charles, though he enjoyed some lucid intervals, continually relapsed into furious or stupid insanity: the reins of government were alternately seized by his brother and uncle, the dukes of Orleans and Burgundy, whose factious competition prepared the miseries of civil war. The former was a gay youth, dissolved in luxury and love: the latter was the father of John count of Nevers, who had so lately been ransomed from Turkish captivity; and, if the fearless son was ardent to revenge his defeat, the more prudent Burgundy was content with the cost and peril of the first experiment. When Manuel had satiated the curiosity, and perhaps fatigued the patience, of the French, he resolved on a visit to the adjacent island. In his progress from Dover, he was entertained at Canterbury with due reverence by the prior and monks of St. Austin; and, on Blackheath, king Henry the fourth, with the English court, saluted the Greek hero (I copy our old historian), who, during many days, was lodged and treated in London as emperor of the East<sup>19</sup>. But the state of England was still more adverse to the design of the holy war. In the same year, the hereditary sovereign had been deposed and murdered; the reigning prince was a successful usurper, whose ambition was punished by jealousy and remorse: nor could Henry of Lancaster withdraw his person or forces from the defence of a throne incessantly shaken by conspiracy and rebellion. He pitied, he praised, he feasted, the emperor of Constantinople; but if the English monarch assumed the cross, it was only to appease his people, and perhaps his conscience, by the merit or semblance of this pious intention<sup>20</sup>. Satisfied, however,

C H A P.
LXVI.

of England,
A. D. 1400,
December.

<sup>19</sup> A short note of Manuel in England, is extracted by Dr. Hody from a MS. at Lambeth (de Græcis illustribus, p. 14.), C. P. Imperator, diu variisque et horrendis Paganorum insultibus coartatus, ut pro eisdem resistentiâ triumphalem perquireret Anglorum Regem visitare decrevit, &c. Rex (says Walsingham, p. 364.) nobili apparatus . . . suscepit (ut decuit) tantum Heroa, duxitque Londonias, et per multos dies exhibit gloriose, pro expensis hospitii sui solvens, et eum respiciens tanto fastigio donativis. He repeats the same in his Upodigma Neultria, p. 556.).

<sup>20</sup> Shakespeare begins and ends the play of Henry IV. with that prince's vow of a crusade, and his belief that he should die in Jerusalem.

C H A P.
LXVI.

His return to Greece,
A. D. 1402.

with gifts and honours, Manuel returned to Paris; and, after a residence of two years in the West, shaped his course through Germany and Italy, embarked at Venice, and patiently expected, in the Morea, the moment of his ruin or deliverance. Yet he had escaped the ignominious necessity of offering his religion to public or private sale. The Latin church was distracted by the great schism: the kings, the nations, the universities, of Europe, were divided in their obedience between the popes of Rome and Avignon; and the emperor, anxious to conciliate the friendship of both parties, abstained from any correspondence with the indigent and unpopular rivals. His journey coincided with the year of the jubilee; but he passed through Italy without desiring, or deserving, the plenary indulgence which abolished the guilt or penance of the sins of the faithful. The Roman pope was offended by this neglect; accused him of irreverence to an image of Christ; and exhorted the princes of Italy to reject and abandon the obstinate schismatic<sup>21</sup>.

Greek knowledge and descriptions

During the period of the crusades, the Greeks beheld with astonishment and terror the perpetual stream of emigration that flowed, and continued to flow, from the unknown climates of the West. The visits of their last emperors removed the veil of separation, and they disclosed to their eyes the powerful nations of Europe, whom they no longer presumed to brand with the name of Barbarians. The observations of Manuel, and his more inquisitive followers, have been preserved by a Byzantine historian of the times<sup>22</sup>: his scattered

<sup>21</sup> This fact is preserved in the Historia Politica, A. D. 1391—1478, published by Martin Crusius (Turco Græcia, p. 1—43.). The image of Christ, which the Greek emperor refused to worship, was probably a work of sculpture.

<sup>22</sup> The Greek and Turkish history of Laonicus Chalcondyles ends with the winter of 1463, and the abrupt conclusion seems to mark, that he laid down his pen in the same year. We know that he was an Athenian, and that some contemporaries of the same name contributed to the revival of the Greek language in Italy. But in his numerous digressions, the modest historian has never introduced himself; and his editor Leunclavius, as well as Fabricius (Bibliot. Gr. c. tom. vi. p. 474.), seems ignorant of his life and character. For his descriptions of Germany, France, and England, see l. ii. p. 36, 37, 44—50.

C H A P.
LXVI.

ideas I shall collect and abridge; and it may be amusing enough, perhaps instructive, to contemplate the rude pictures of Germany, France, and England, whose ancient and modern state are so familiar to our minds. I. GERMANY (says the Greek Chalcondyles) of Germany; is of ample latitude from Vienna to the Ocean; and it stretches (a strange geography) from Prague in Bohemia to the river Tartessus, and the Pyrenæan mountains<sup>23</sup>. The soil, except in figs and olives, is sufficiently fruitful; the air is salubrious; the bodies of the natives are robust and healthy; and these cold regions are seldom visited with the calamities of pestilence, or earthquakes. After the Scythians or Tartars, the Germans are the most numerous of nations; they are brave and patient, and were they united under a single head, their force would be irresistible. By the gift of the pope, they have acquired the privilege of choosing the Roman emperor<sup>24</sup>; nor is any people more devoutly attached to the faith and obedience of the Latin patriarch. The greatest part of the country is divided among the princes and prelates; but Straßburgh, Cologne, Hamburgh, and more than two hundred free cities, are governed by sage and equal laws, according to the will, and for the advantage, of the whole community. The use of duels, or single combats on foot, prevails among them in peace and war; their industry excels in all the mechanic arts, and the Germans may boast of the invention of gunpowder and cannon, which is now diffused over the greatest part of the world. II. The kingdom of FRANCE is spread above fifteen or of France; twenty days journey from Germany to Spain, and from the Alps to <sup>23</sup> I shall not animadvert on the geographical errors of Chalcondyles. In this instance, he perhaps followed, and mistook, Herodotus (l. ii. c. 33.), whose text may be explained (Herodote de Larcher, tom. ii. p. 219, 220.), or whose ignorance may be excused. Had these modern Greeks never read Strabo, or any of their lesser geographers?

<sup>24</sup> A citizen of new Rome, while new Rome survived, would have scorned to dignify the German King with the titles of ΒΑΣΙΛΕΥΣ, or ΚΑΙΣΑΡΑΥ ΒΑΣΙΛΕΥΣ; but all pride was extinct in the bosom of Chalcondyles; and he describes the Byzantine prince, and his subject, by the proper, though humble names of Ἰσχυρὸς, and Βασιλεὺς Ἰσχυρῶν.

C H A P.
LXVI.

the British Ocean; containing many flourishing cities, and among these Paris, the seat of the king, which surpasses the rest in riches and luxury. Many princes and lords alternately wait in his palace, and acknowledge him as their sovereign; the most powerful are the dukes of Bretagne and Burgundy, of whom the latter possesses the wealthy province of Flanders, whose harbours are frequented by the ships and merchants of our own and the more remote seas. The French are an ancient and opulent people: and their language and manners, though somewhat different, are not dissimilar from those of the Italians. Vain of the Imperial dignity of Charlemagne, of their victories over the Saracens, and of the exploits of their heroes, Oliver and Rowland<sup>25</sup>; they esteem themselves the first of the western nations: but this foolish arrogance has been recently humbled by the unfortunate events of their wars against the English, the inhabitants of the British island. III. BRITAIN, in the ocean, and opposite to the shores of Flanders, may be considered either as one, or as three islands; but the whole is united by a common interest, by the same manners, and by a similar government. The measure of its circumference is five thousand stadia: the land is overspread with towns and villages: though destitute of wine, and not abounding in fruit-trees, it is fertile in wheat and barley; in honey and wool; and much cloth is manufactured by the inhabitants. In populousness and power, in riches and luxury, London<sup>26</sup>, the metropolis of the isle, may claim a pre-eminence over all the cities of the West. It is situate on the Thames, a broad and rapid river, which at the distance of thirty miles falls into the Gallic Sea; and the daily

of England.

<sup>25</sup> Most of the old romances were translated in the xivth century into French prose, and soon became the favourite amusement of the knights and ladies in the court of Charles VI. If a Greek believed in the exploits of Rowland and Oliver, he may surely be excused, since the monks of St Denys, the national historians, have inserted the fables of archbishop Turpin in their Chronicles of France.

<sup>26</sup> Ἀθήνη... ὅτε τε πολὺ δυνάμει τε περιέχουσα τῶν ἐν τῇ νήσῳ ταύτῃ πᾶσαν πόλιν, ὄλβω τε καὶ τῇ ἀλλῇ εὐδαιμονίᾳ ἐδίμια; τῶν πρὸς ἰσπανίαν λειπόμενῶν. Even since the time of Fitzstephen (the xiiith century), London appears to have maintained this pre-eminence of wealth and magnitude; and her gradual increase has, at least, kept pace with the general improvement of Europe.

flow and ebb of the tide, affords a safe entrance and departure to the vessels of commerce. The king is the head of a powerful and turbulent aristocracy; his principal vassals hold their estates by a free and unalterable tenure; and the laws define the limits of his authority and their obedience. The kingdom has been often afflicted by foreign conquest and domestic sedition; but the natives are bold and hardy, renowned in arms and victorious in war. The form of their shields or targets is derived from the Italians, that of their swords from the Greeks; the use of the long bow is the peculiar and decisive advantage of the English. Their language bears no affinity to the idioms of the continent; in the habits of domestic life, they are not easily distinguished from their neighbours of France: but the most singular circumstance of their manners is their disregard of conjugal honour and of female chastity. In their mutual visits, as the first act of hospitality, the guest is welcomed in the embraces of their wives and daughters: among friends they are lent and borrowed without shame; nor are the islanders offended at this strange commerce, and its inevitable consequences<sup>27</sup>. Informed as we are of the customs of old England, and assured of the virtue of our mothers, we may smile at the credulity, or resent the injustice, of the Greek, who must have confounded a modest salute<sup>28</sup> with a criminal embrace. But his credulity and injustice may teach an important lesson; to distrust the accounts of foreign and remote nations, and to suspend our belief of every tale that deviates from the laws of nature and the character of man<sup>29</sup>.

<sup>27</sup> If the double sense of the verb Kuu (oscular, and in utero gero) be equivocal, the context and pious horror of Chalcondyles can leave no doubt of his meaning and mistake (p. 49.).

<sup>28</sup> Erasmus (Epist. Fausto Andreliano) has a pretty passage on the English fashion of kissing strangers on their arrival and departure, from whence, however, he draws no scandalous inferences.

<sup>29</sup> Perhaps we may apply this remark to the community of wives among the old Britons, as it is supposed by Caesar and Dion (Dion Cassius, l. lxii. tom. ii. p. 1007.), with Reimar's judicious annotation. The Arcey of Otaheite, so certain at first, is become less visible and scandalous, in proportion as we have studied the manners of that gentle and amorous people.

C H A P.
LXVI.

Indifference of Manuel towards the Latins,

A. D.
1402—1417.

His negociations,
A. D.

1417—1425.

After his return, and the victory of Timour, Manuel reigned many years in prosperity and peace. As long as the sons of Bajazet solicited his friendship and spared his dominions, he was satisfied with the national religion; and his leisure was employed in composing twenty theological dialogues for its defence. The appearance of the Byzantine ambassadors at the council of Constance<sup>39</sup> announces the restoration of the Turkish power, as well as of the Latin church; the conquest of the sultans, Mahomet and Amurath, reconciled the emperor to the Vatican; and the siege of Constantinople almost tempted him to acquiesce in the double procession of the Holy Ghost. When Martin the fifth ascended without a rival the chair of St. Peter, a friendly intercourse of letters and embassies was revived between the East and West. Ambition on one side, and distress on the other, dictated the same decent language of charity and peace: the artful Greek expressed a desire of marrying his six sons to Italian princesses; and the Roman, not less artful, dispatched the daughter of the marquis of Montferrat, with a company of noble virgins, to soften by their charms the obstinacy of the schismatics. Yet under this mask of zeal, a discerning eye will perceive that all was hollow and insincere in the court and church of Constantinople. According to the vicissitudes of danger and repose, the emperor advanced or retreated; alternately instructed and disfavoured his ministers; and escaped from an importunate pressure by urging the duty of enquiry, the obligation of collecting the sense of his patriarchs and bishops, and the impossibility of convening them at a time when the Turkish arms were at the gates of his capital. From a review of the public transactions it will appear, that the Greeks insisted on three successive measures, a succour, a council, and a final re-union, while the Latins eluded the second, and only promised the first, as a consequential and voluntary reward of the third. But we have an opportunity of unfolding the most secret intentions of Manuel, as he explained them in a private conversation without artifice or disguise. In his declining age, the emperor had associated John Palæologus, the second of the name, and the eldest of his sons, on whom he devolved the greatest part of the authority and weight of government. One day, in the presence only of the historian Phranza<sup>31</sup>, his favourite chamberlain, he opened to his colleague and successor the true principle of his negotiations with the pope<sup>32</sup>. “Our last resource,” said Manuel, “against the Turks is their fear of our union with the Latins, of the warlike nations of the West, who may arm for our relief and for their destruction. As often as you are threatened by the miscreants, present this danger before their eyes. Propose a council; consult on the means; but ever delay and avoid the convocation of an assembly, which cannot tend either to our spiritual or temporal emolument. The Latins are proud; the Greeks are obstinate; neither party will recede or retract; and the attempt of a perfect union will confirm the schism, alienate the churches, and leave us, without hope or defence, at the mercy of the Barbarians.” Impatient of this salutary lesson, the royal youth arose from his seat, and departed in silence; and the wise monarch (continues Phranza), casting his eyes on me, thus resumed his discourse: “My son deems himself a great and heroic prince; but, alas! our miserable age

<sup>39</sup> See Lenfant, Hist. du Concile de Constance, tom. ii. p. 576.; and for the ecclesiastical history of the times, the Annals of Spondanus, the Bibliotheque of Dupin, tom. xii. and xxist and xxii<sup>d</sup> volumes of the History, or rather the Continuation, of Fleury.

C H A P
LXVI.
His private motives.

<sup>31</sup> From his early youth, George Phranza, or Phranzes, was employed in the service of the state and palace; and Hanckius (de Script. Byzant. P. i. c. 40.) has collected his life from his own writings. He was no more than four-and-twenty years of age at the death of Manuel, who recommended him in the strongest terms to his successor: Impremis vero hunc Phranzen tibi commendo, qui ministravit mihi fideliter et diligenter (Phranzes, l. ii. c. 1.). Yet the emperor John was cold, and he preferred the service of the despots of Peloponnesus.

<sup>32</sup> See Phranzes, l. ii. c. 13. While so many manuscripts of the Greek original are extant in the libraries of Rome, Milan, the Escorial, &c. it is a matter of shame and reproach, that we should be reduced to the Latin version, or abstract, of James Pontanus (ad calcem Theophylacti Simocattæ; Ingolstadt, 1604), so deficient in accuracy and elegance (Fabric. Bibliot. Græc. tom. vi. p. 615—620.).

C H A P.
LXVI.

His death.

“ does not afford scope for heroism or greatness. His daring spirit “ might have suited the happier times of our ancestors; but the “ present state requires not an emperor, but a cautious steward of “ the last relics of our fortunes. Well do I remember the lofty ex“ pectations which he built on our alliance with Mustapha; and “ much do I fear, that his rash courage will urge the ruin of our “ house, and that even religion may precipitate our downfall.” Yet the experience and authority of Manuel preserved the peace and eluded the council; till, in the seventy-eighth year of his age, and in the habit of a monk, he terminated his career, dividing his precious moveables among his children and the poor, his physicians and his favourite servants. Of his six sons<sup>33</sup>, Andronicus the second was invested with the principality of Thessalonica, and died of a leprosy soon after the sale of that city to the Venetians and its final conquest by the Turks. Some fortunate incidents had restored Peloponnesus, or the Morea, to the empire; and in his more prosperous days, Manuel had fortified the narrow isthmus of six miles<sup>34</sup> with a stone wall and one hundred and fifty-three towers.
 The wall was overthrown by the first blast of the Ottomans: the fertile peninsula might have been sufficient for the four younger brothers, Theodore and Constantine, Demetrius and Thomas; but they wasted in domestic contests the remains of their strength; and the least successful of the rivals were reduced to a life of dependence in the Byzantine palace.

Zeal of John Palæo-
logus II.

A. D.
1425—1437.

The eldest of the sons of Manuel, John Palæologus the second, was acknowledged, after his father's death, as the sole emperor of the Greeks. He immediately proceeded to repudiate his wife, and

<sup>33</sup> See Ducange, Fam. Byzant. p. 243—
248.

<sup>34</sup> The exact measure of the Hexamilion, from sea to sea, was 3800 orgyia, or toises, of six Greek feet (Phranzes, l. i. c. 38.), which would produce a Greek mile, still smaller than that of 660 French toises, which is assigned by d'Anville as still in use in Turkey.

 Five miles are commonly reckoned for the breadth of the isthmus. See the Travels of Spon, Wheeler, and Chandler.

to contract a new marriage with the princess of Trebizond: beauty was in his eyes the first qualification of an empress; and the clergy had yielded to his firm assurance, that unless he might be indulged in a divorce, he would retire to a cloister, and leave the throne to his brother Constantine. The first, and in truth the only, victory of Palæologus was over a Jew<sup>35</sup>, whom, after a long and learned dispute, he converted to the Christian faith; and this momentous conquest is carefully recorded in the history of the times. But he soon resumed the design of uniting the East and West; and, regardless of his father's advice, listened, as it should seem with sincerity, to the proposal of meeting the pope in a general council beyond the Adriatic. This dangerous project was encouraged by Martin the fifth, and coldly entertained by his successor Eugenius, till, after a tedious negotiation, the emperor received a summons from a Latin assembly of a new character, the independent prelates of Basil, who styled themselves the representatives and judges of the Catholic church.

C H A P.
LXVI.

The Roman pontiff had fought and conquered in the cause of ecclesiastical freedom; but the victorious clergy were soon exposed to the tyranny of their deliverer; and his sacred character was invulnerable to those arms which they found so keen and effectual against the civil magistrate. Their great charter, the right of election, was annihilated by appeals, evaded by trusts or commendams, disappointed by reversionary grants, and superseded by previous and arbitrary reservations<sup>36</sup>. A public auction was instituted in the court of Rome: the cardinals and favourites were enriched with the

Corruption of the Latin church.

<sup>35</sup> The first objection of the Jews, is on the death of Christ: if it were voluntary, Christ was a suicide; which the emperor parries with a mystery. They then dispute on the conception of the virgin, the sense of the prophecies, &c. (Phranzes, l. ii. c. 12. a whole chapter).

<sup>36</sup> In the treatise delle Materie Beneficarie

of Fra-Paolo (in the ixth volume of the last and best edition of his works), the papal system is deeply studied and freely described. Should Rome and her religion be annihilated, this golden volume may still survive, a philosophical history, and a salutary warning.

C H A P.
LXVI.

Schism,
A. D.
1377—1429.

Council of Pisa,
A. D. 1409. of Constance,
A. D.
1414—1418.

spoils of nations; and every country might complain that the most important and valuable benefices were accumulated on the heads of aliens and absentees. During their residence at Avignon, the ambition of the popes subsided in the meaner passions of avarice<sup>37</sup> and luxury: they rigorously imposed on the clergy the tributes of first-fruits and tenths; but they freely tolerated the impunity of vice, disorder, and corruption. These manifold scandals were aggravated by the great schism of the West, which continued above fifty years. In the furious conflicts of Rome and Avignon, the vices of the rivals were mutually exposed; and their precarious situation degraded their authority, relaxed their discipline, and multiplied their wants and exactions. To heal the wounds, and restore the monarchy, of the church, the synods of Pisa and Constance<sup>38</sup> were successively convened; but these great assemblies, conscious of their strength, resolved to vindicate the privileges of the Christian aristocracy. From a personal sentence against two pontiffs, whom they rejected, and a third, their acknowledged sovereign, whom they deposed, the fathers of Constance proceeded to examine the nature and limits of the Roman supremacy; nor did they separate till they had established the authority, above the pope, of a general council. It was enacted, that, for the government and reformation of the church, such assemblies should be held at regular intervals; and that each synod, before its dissolution, should appoint the time and place of the subsequent meeting. By the influence of the court of Rome, the next convocation at Sienna was easily eluded;

<sup>37</sup> Pope John XXII. (in 1334) left behind him, at Avignon, eighteen millions of gold florins, and the value of seven millions more in plate and jewels. See the Chronicle of John Villani (l. xi. c. 20. in Muratori's Collection, tom. xiii. p. 765.), whose brother received the account from the papal treasurers. A treasure of six or eight millions sterling in the sixth century is enormous, and almost incredible.

<sup>38</sup> A learned and liberal protestant, M. Lenfant, has given a fair history of the councils of Pisa, Constance, and Basil, in six volumes in quarto: but the last part is the most hasty and imperfect, except in the account of the troubles of Bohemia.

but the bold and vigorous proceedings of the council of Basil<sup>39</sup> had almost been fatal to the reigning pontiff, Eugenius the fourth. A just suspicion of his design prompted the fathers to hasten the promulgation of their first decree, that the representatives of the church-militant on earth were invested with a divine and spiritual jurisdiction over all Christians, without excepting the pope; and that a general council could not be dissolved, prorogued, or transferred, unless by their free deliberation and consent. On the notice that Eugenius had fulminated a bull for that purpose, they ventured to summon, to admonish, to threaten, to censure, the contumacious successor of St. Peter. After many delays, to allow time for repentance, they finally declared, that, unless he submitted within the term of sixty days, he was suspended from the exercise of all temporal and ecclesiastical authority. And to mark their jurisdiction over the prince as well as the priest, they assumed the government of Avignon, annulled the alienation of the sacred patrimony, and protected Rome from the imposition of new taxes. Their boldness was justified, not only by the general opinion of the clergy, but by the support and power of the first monarchs of Christendom: the emperor Sigismund declared himself the servant and protector of the synod; Germany and France adhered to their cause; the duke of Milan was the enemy of Eugenius; and he was driven from the Vatican by an insurrection of the Roman people. Rejected at the same time by his temporal and spiritual subjects, submission was his only choice: by a most humiliating bull, the pope repealed his own acts, and ratified those of the council; incorporated his legates and cardinals with that venerable body; and seemed to resign himself to the decrees of the supreme legislature. Their fame pervaded the

C H A P.
LXVI.of Basil,
A. D.

1431—1443.

Their opposition to Eu-genius IV.

<sup>39</sup> The original acts or minutes of the council of Basil, are preserved in the public library, in twelve volumes in folio. Basil was a free city, conveniently situate on the Rhine, and guarded by the arms of the neighbouring and confederate Swiss. In 1459, the university was founded by pope Pius II. (Æneas Sylvius), who had been secretary to the council. But what is a council, or an university, to the presses of Froben and the studies of Erasmus?

C H A P.
LXVI.

Negotiations
with the Greeks,
A. D.
1434—1437.

countries of the East; and it was in their presence that Sigismond received the ambassadors of the Turkish sultan<sup>40</sup>, who laid at his feet twelve large vases, filled with robes of silk and pieces of gold. The fathers of Basil aspired to the glory of reducing the Greeks, as well as the Bohemians, within the pale of the church; and their deputies invited the emperor and patriarch of Constantinople to unite with an assembly which possessed the confidence of the Western nations. Palæologus was not averse to the proposal; and his ambassadors were introduced with due honours into the Catholic senate. But the choice of the place appeared to be an insuperable obstacle, since he refused to pass the Alps, or the sea of Sicily, and positively required that the synod should be adjourned to some convenient city in Italy, or at least on the Danube. The other articles of this treaty were more readily stipulated: it was agreed to defray the travelling expences of the emperor, with a train of seven hundred persons<sup>41</sup>, to remit an immediate sum of eight thousand ducats<sup>42</sup> for the accommodation of the Greek clergy; and in his absence to grant a supply of ten thousand ducats, with three hundred archers and some gallies, for the protection of Constantinople. The city of Avignon advanced the funds for the preliminary expences; and the embarkation was prepared at Marseilles with some difficulty and delay.

John Palæo-
logus embarks in the pope's gal-lies,

In his distress, the friendship of Palæologus was disputed by the ecclesiastical powers of the West; but the dextrous activity of a monarch prevailed over the slow debates and inflexible temper of

<sup>40</sup> This Turkish embassy, attested only by Crantzius, is related with some doubt by the annalist Spondanus, A. D. 1433, N<sup>o</sup> 25. tom. i. p. 824.

<sup>41</sup> Syropulus, p. 19. In this list, the Greeks appear to have exceeded the real numbers of the clergy and laity which afterwards attended the emperor and patriarch, but which are not clearly specified by the great ecclesiarch. The 75,000 florins which they asked in this negotiation of the pope (p. 9.), were more than they could hope or want.

<sup>42</sup> I use indifferently the words, ducat and florin, which derive their names, the former from the dukes of Milan, the latter from the republic of Florence. These gold pieces, the first that were coined in Italy, perhaps in the Latin world, may be compared in weight and value to one-third of the English guinea.

a republic. The decrees of Basil continually tended to circumscribe the despotism of the pope, and to erect a supreme and perpetual tribunal in the church. Eugenius was impatient of the yoke; and the union of the Greeks might afford a decent pretence for translating a rebellious synod from the Rhine to the Po. The independence of the fathers was lost if they passed the Alps: Savoy or Avignon, to which they acceded with reluctance, were described at Constantinople as situate far beyond the pillars of Hercules<sup>43</sup>; the emperor and his clergy were apprehensive of the dangers of a long navigation; they were offended by an haughty declaration, that after suppressing the new heresy of the Bohemians, the council would soon eradicate the old heresy of the Greeks<sup>44</sup>. On the side of Eugenius, all was smooth, and yielding, and respectful: and he invited the Byzantine monarch to heal by his presence the schism of the Latin, as well as of the Eastern, church. Ferrara, near the coast of the Adriatic, was proposed for their amicable interview; and with some indulgence of forgery and theft, a surreptitious decree was procured, which transferred the synod, with its own consent, to that Italian city. Nine galleys were equipped for this service at Venice, and in the isle of Candia; their diligence anticipated the slower vessels of Basil: the Roman admiral was commissioned to burn, sink, and destroy<sup>45</sup>; and these priestly squadrons might have encountered each other in the same seas where Athens and Sparta had formerly contended for the pre-eminence of glory. Assaulted

C. H. A. P.
LXVI.
A. D. 1439.
Nov. 21.

<sup>43</sup> At the end of the Latin version of Pirranzes, we read a long Greek epistle or declamation of George of Trebizond, who advises the emperor to prefer Eugenius and Italy. He treats with contempt the schismatic assembly of Basil, the Barbarians of Gaul and Germany, who had conspired to transport the chair of St. Peter beyond the Alps: ὁ ἀδελφεὶ (says he) σε καὶ τῶν ματῶν σου συνδοὶ ἐξω τῶν Ἑλληνικῶν ἁγίων καὶ περὶ Γαλιῶν ἐξέστη. Was Constantinople unprovided with a map?

<sup>44</sup> Syropulus (p. 26—31.) attests his own indignation, and that of his countrymen: and the Basil deputies, who excused the rash declaration, could neither deny nor alter an act of the council.

<sup>45</sup> Condolmieri, the pope's nephew and admiral, expressly declared, ὅτι ἕριστον εἶναι παρὰ τῆ Παπῆ ἢ αὐτομάτῃ ὅτι αὐτῶν κατὰ τὴν τῆς Σινδοῦ, καὶ αὐτῶν καταδρομῆ καὶ σφαίσι. The naval orders of the synod were less peremptory, and, till the hostile squadrons appeared, both parties tried to conceal their quarrel from the Greeks.

C H A P.
LXVI.

by the importunity of the factions, who were ready to fight for the possession of his person, Palæologus hesitated before he left his palace and country on a perilous experiment. His father's advice still dwelt on his memory: and reason must suggest, that since the Latins were divided among themselves, they could never unite in a foreign cause. Sigismund dissuaded the unseasonable adventure; his advice was impartial, since he adhered to the council; and it was enforced by the strange belief, that the German Cæsar would nominate a Greek his heir and successor in the empire of the West<sup>46</sup>. Even the Turkish sultan was a counsellor whom it might be unsafe to trust, but whom it was dangerous to offend. Amurath was unskilled in the disputes, but he was apprehensive of the union, of the Christians. From his own treasures, he offered to relieve the wants of the Byzantine court; yet he declared with seeming magnanimity, that Constantinople should be secure and inviolate, in the absence of her sovereign<sup>47</sup>. The resolution of Palæologus was decided by the most splendid gifts and the most specious promises: he wished to escape for a while from a scene of danger and distress; and after dismissing with an ambiguous answer the messengers of the council, he declared his intention of embarking in the Roman galleys. The age of the patriarch Joseph was more susceptible of fear than of hope; he trembled at the perils of the sea, and expressed his apprehension, that his feeble voice, with thirty perhaps of his orthodox brethren, would be oppressed in a foreign land by the power and numbers of a Latin synod. He yielded to the royal mandate, to the flattering assurance, that he would be heard as the oracle of nations, and to the secret wish of learning from his brother of the West, to deliver the church

<sup>46</sup> Syropulus mentions the hopes of Palæologus (p. 36.), and the last advice of Sigismund (p. 57.). At Corfu, the Greek emperor was informed of his friend's death; had he known it sooner, he would have returned home (p. 79.).

<sup>47</sup> Phranzes himself, though from different motives, was of the advice of Amurath

(l. ii. c. 13.). Utinam ne synodus ista unquam fuisset, si tantas offensiones et detrimenta paritura erat. This Turkish embassy is likewise mentioned by Syropulus (p. 58.); and Amurath kept his word. He might threaten (p. 125. 219.), but he never attacked the city.

from the yoke of kings<sup>48</sup>. The five cross-bearers or dignitaries of St. Sophia, were bound to attend his person; and one of these, the great ecclesiarch or preacher, Sylvester Syropulus<sup>49</sup>, has composed<sup>50</sup> a free and curious history of the false union<sup>51</sup>. Of the clergy that reluctantly obeyed the summons of the emperor and the patriarch, submission was the first duty, and patience the most useful virtue. In a chosen list of twenty bishops, we discover the metropolitan titles of Heraclea and Cyzicus, Nice and Nicomedia, Ephesus and Trebizond, and the personal merit of Mark and Bessarion, who, in the confidence of their learning and eloquence, were promoted to the episcopal rank. Some monks and philosophers were named to display the science and sanctity of the Greek church: and the service of the choir was performed by a select band of singers and musicians. The patriarchs of Alexandria, Antioch, and Jerusalem, appeared by their genuine or fictitious deputies; the primate of Russia represented a national church, and the Greeks might contend with the Latins in the extent of their spiritual empire. The precious vases of St. Sophia were exposed to the winds and waves, that the patriarch might officiate with becoming splendour; whatever gold the emperor could procure, was expended in the massy orna-

<sup>48</sup> The reader will smile at the simplicity with which he imparted these hopes to his favourites: τοιαυτην πληροφοριαν σχησιν ηλπιζει και δια τω Παπα θηρει ειλευθερωσαι την εκκλησιαν απο της αποτιθισης αυτη δολιχας παρα τω βασιλειω (p. 92). Yet it would have been difficult for him to have practised the lessons of Gregory VII.

<sup>49</sup> The Christian name of Sylvester is borrowed from the Latin calendar. In modern Greek, πυλος, as a diminutive, is added to the end of words: nor can any reasoning of Creighton, the editor, excuse his changing into Syropulus (Sgyros, fuscus) the Syropulus of his own manuscript, whose name is subscribed with his own hand in the acts of the council of Florence. Why might not the author be of Syrian extraction?

<sup>50</sup> From the conclusion of the history, I should fix the date to the year 1444, four years after the synod, when the great ecclesiarch had abdicated his office (sectio xiii. p. 330—350.). His passions were cooled by time and retirement, and, although Syropulus is often partial, he is never intemperate.

<sup>51</sup> Vera historia unionis non vera inter Græcos et Latinos (Haga Comitum, 1660, in folio), was first published with a loose and florid version, by Robert Creighton, chaplain to Charles II. in his exile. The zeal of the editor has prefixed a polemic title, for the beginning of the original is wanting. Syropulus may be ranked with the best of the Byzantine writers for the merit of his narration, and even of his style: but he is excluded from the orthodox collections of the councils.

C H A P.
LXVI.

ments of his bed and chariot<sup>52</sup>: and while they affected to maintain the prosperity of their ancient fortune; they quarrelled for the division of fifteen thousand ducats, the first alms of the Roman pontiff. After the necessary preparations, John Palæologus, with a numerous train, accompanied by his brother Demetrius, and the most respectable persons of the church and state, embarked in eight vessels with sails and oars, which steered through the Turkish freights of Gallipoli to the Archipelago, the Morea, and the Adriatic Gulf<sup>53</sup>.

His triumphal entry at Venice,
A. D. 1438,
February 9;

After a tedious and troublesome navigation of seventy-seven days, this religious squadron cast anchor before Venice; and their reception proclaimed the joy and magnificence of that powerful republic. In the command of the world, the modest Augustus had never claimed such honours from his subjects as were paid to his feeble successor by an independent state. Seated on the poop, on a lofty throne, he received the visit, or, in the Greek style, the adoration, of the doge and senators<sup>54</sup>. They sailed in the Bucentaur, which was accompanied by twelve stately galleys: the sea was overspread with innumerable gondolas of pomp and pleasure; the air resounded with music and acclamations; the mariners, and even the vessels, were dressed in silk and gold; and in all the emblems and pageants, the Roman eagles were blended with the lions of St. Mark. The triumphal procession, ascending the great canal, passed under the bridge of the Rialto; and the eastern strangers gazed with admiration on the palaces, the churches, and the populousness of a city

<sup>52</sup> Syropulus (p. 63.) simply expresses his intention: ὡς ἐν τῷ περὶ τῆς ἰταλίας ἡγεσίας βραχύνει; καὶ ἐν τῷ περὶ τῆς ἰταλίας ἡγεσίας βραχύνει; and the Latin of Creighton may afford a specimen of his florid paraphrase. Ut pom, á circumductus noster Imperator Italiae populus aliquis deamatus Jupiter crederetur, au. Cræsus ex opulenta Lydia.

<sup>53</sup> Although I cannot stop to quote Syropulus for every fact, I will observe, that the navigation of the Greeks from Constantinople to Venice and Ferrara is contained in the ivth section (p. 67—100.), and that the historian has the uncommon talent of placing each scene before the reader's eye.

<sup>54</sup> At the time of the synod, Phranzes was in Peloponnesus; but he received from the despot Demetrius, a faithful account of the honourable reception of the emperor and patriarch both at Venice and Ferrara (Dux . . . sedentem Imperatorem adorat), which are more slightly mentioned by the Latins (l. ii. c. 14, 15, 16.).

that seems to float on the bosom of the waves<sup>55</sup>. They fought to behold the spoils and trophies with which it had been decorated after the sack of Constantinople. After an hospitable entertainment of fifteen days, Palæologus pursued his journey by land and water from Venice to Ferrara: and on this occasion, the pride of the Vatican was tempered by policy to indulge the ancient dignity of the emperor of the East. He made his entry on a black horse; but a milk-white steed, whose trappings were embroidered with golden eagles, was led before him; and the canopy was borne over his head by the princes of Este, the sons or kinsmen of Nicholas, marquis of the city, and a sovereign more powerful than himself<sup>56</sup>. Palæologus did not alight till he reached the bottom of the stair-case: the pope advanced to the door of the apartment; refused his proffered genuflexion; and, after a paternal embrace, conducted the emperor to a seat on his left-hand. Nor would the patriarch descend from his galley, till a ceremony, almost equal, had been stipulated between the bishops of Rome and Constantinople. The latter was saluted by his brother with a kiss of union and charity: nor would any of the Greek ecclesiastics submit to kiss the feet of the Western primate. On the opening of the synod, the place of honour in the centre was claimed by the temporal and ecclesiastical chiefs; and it was only by alleging that his predecessors had not assisted in person at Nice or Chalcedon, that Eugenius could evade the ancient precedents of Constantine and Marcian. After much debate, it was agreed that the right and left sides of the church should be occupied by the two nations: that the solitary chair of St. Peter should be raised the first of the Latin line; and that the throne of the Greek emperor, at the head of his clergy,

U H A P.
LXVI.

into Ferrara,
February 26.

<sup>55</sup> The astonishment of a Greek prince and a French ambassador (Memoires de Philippe de Comines, l. vii. c. 18.) at the sight of Venice, abundantly prove, that in the 15th century it was the first and most splendid of the Christian cities. For the spoils of Constantinople at Venice, see Syropulus (p. 87.).

<sup>56</sup> Nicholas III. of Este, reigned forty-eight years (A. D. 1353—1401), and was lord of Ferrara, Modena, Reggio, Parma, Rovigo, and Comacchio. See his life in Muratori (Antichità Estense, tom. ii. p. 159—201.).

should

C H A P. should be equal and opposite to the second place, the vacant seat of LXIV. the emperor of the West <sup>57</sup>.

Council of
 the Greeks and Latins at Ferrara and Florence,
 A. D. 1438,
 October 8—
 A. D. 1439,
 July 6.

But as soon as festivity and form had given place to a more serious treaty, the Greeks were dissatisfied with their journey, with themselves, and with the pope. The artful pencil of his emissaries had painted him in a prosperous state; at the head of the princes and prelates of Europe, obedient, at his voice, to believe and to arm. The thin appearance of the universal synod of Ferrara betrayed his weakness; and the Latins opened the first session with only five archbishops, eighteen bishops, and ten abbots, the greatest part of whom were the subjects or countrymen of the Italian pontiff. Except the duke of Burgundy, none of the potentates of the West condescended to appear in person, or by their ambassadors; nor was it possible to suppress the judicial acts of Basil against the dignity and person of Eugenius, which were finally concluded by a new election. Under these circumstances, a truce or delay was asked and granted, till Palæologus could expect from the consent of the Latins some temporal reward for an unpopular union; and, after the first session, the public proceedings were adjourned above six months. The emperor, with a chosen band of his favourites and Janizaries, fixed his summer residence at a pleasant spacious monastery, six miles from Ferrara; forgot, in the pleasures of the chace, the distress of the church and state; and persisted in destroying the game, without listening to the just complaints of the marquis or the husbandman<sup>58</sup>. In the mean while, his unfortunate Greeks were exin Muratori, tom. xxv. p. 261.).

<sup>57</sup> The Latin vulgar was provoked to laughter at the strange dresses of the Greeks, and especially the length of their garments, their sleeves, and their beards; nor was the emperor distinguished, except by the purple colour, and his diadem or tiara with a jewel on the top (Hody de Græcis Illustribus, p. 31). Yet another spectator confesses, that the Greek fashion was piu grave e piu degna than the Italian (Vespasiano, in Vit. Eugen. IV.

<sup>58</sup> For the emperor's hunting, see Syropulus (p. 143, 144. 191.). The pope had sent him eleven miserable hacks: but he bought a strong and swift horse that came from Russia. The name of Janizaries may surprise: but the name, rather than the institution, had passed from the Ottoman, to the Byzantine, court; and is often used in the last age of the empire.

posed to all the miseries of exile and poverty; for the support of each stranger, a monthly allowance was assigned of three or four gold florins; and although the entire sum did not amount to seven hundred florins, a long arrear was repeatedly incurred by the indigence or policy of the Roman court<sup>59</sup>. They sighed for a speedy deliverance, but their escape was prevented by a triple chain: a passport from their superiors was required at the gates of Ferrara; the government of Venice had engaged to arrest and send back the fugitives; and inevitable punishment awaited them at Constantinople; excommunication, fines, and a sentence, which did not respect the sacerdotal dignity, that they should be stripped naked and publicly whipped<sup>60</sup>. It was only by the alternative of hunger or dispute that the Greeks could be persuaded to open the first conference; and they yielded with extreme reluctance to attend from Ferrara to Florence the rear of a flying synod. This new translation was urged by inevitable necessity: the city was visited by the plague; the fidelity of the marquis might be suspected; the mercenary troops of the duke of Milan were at the gates; and as they occupied Romagna, it was not without difficulty and danger that the pope, the emperor, and the bishops, explored their way through the unfrequented paths of the Apennine<sup>61</sup>.

Yet all these obstacles were surmounted by time and policy. The violence of the fathers of Basil rather promoted than injured the

<sup>59</sup> The Greeks obtained, with much difficulty, that instead of provisions, money should be distributed, four florins per month to the persons of honourable rank, and three florins to their servants, with an addition of thirty more to the emperor, twenty-five to the patriarch, and twenty to the prince or despot Demetrius. The payment of the first month amounted to 691 florins, a sum which will not allow us to reckon above 200 Greeks of every condition (Syropulus, p. 104, 105.). On the 20th October 1438, there was an arrear of four months; in April 1439, of three; and of five and a half in July, at the time of the union (p. 172. 225. 271.).

<sup>60</sup> Syropulus (p. 141, 142. 204. 221.) deplores the imprisonment of the Greeks, and the tyranny of the emperor and patriarch.

<sup>61</sup> The wars of Italy are most clearly represented in the xiiith volume of the Annals of Muratori. The schismatic Greek, Syropulus (p. 145.), appears to have exaggerated the fear and disorder of the pope in his retreat from Ferrara to Florence, which is proved by the acts to have been somewhat more decent and deliberate.

C H A P.
LXVI.

cause of Eugenius: the nations of Europe abhorred the schism, and disowned the election, of Felix the sixth, who was successively a duke of Savoy, an hermit, and a pope; and the great princes were gradually reclaimed by his competitor to a favourable neutrality and a firm attachment. The legates, with some respectable members, deserted to the Roman army, which insensibly rose in numbers and reputation: the council of Basil was reduced to thirty-nine bishops, and three hundred of the inferior clergy<sup>62</sup>; while the Latins of Florence could produce the subscriptions of the pope himself, eight cardinals, two patriarchs, eight archbishops, fifty-two bishops, and forty-five abbots, or chiefs of religious orders. After the labour of nine months, and the debates of twenty-five sessions, they attained the advantage and glory of the re-union of the Greeks. Four principal questions had been agitated between the two churches: 1. The use of unleavened bread in the communion of Christ's body. 2. The nature of purgatory. 3. The supremacy of the pope. And, 4. The single or double procession of the Holy Ghost. The cause of either nation was managed by ten theological champions: the Latins were supported by the inexhaustible eloquence of cardinal Julian; and Mark of Ephesus and Bessarion of Nice were the bold and able leaders of the Greek forces. We may bestow some praise on the progress of human reason, by observing, that the first of these questions was not treated as an immaterial rite, which might innocently vary with the fashion of the age and country. With regard to the second, both parties were agreed in the belief of an intermediate state of purgation for the venial sins of the faithful; and whether their souls were purified by elemental fire, was a doubtful point, which in a few years might be conveniently settled on the spot by who were present at the council, nor by all the absent bishops of the West, who, expressly or tacitly, might adhere to its decrees.

<sup>62</sup> Syropulus is pleased to reckon seven hundred prelates in the council of Basil. The error is manifest, and perhaps voluntary. That extravagant number could not be supplied by all the ecclesiastics of every degree

the disputants. The claims of supremacy appeared of a more weighty and substantial kind; yet by the Orientals the Roman bishop had ever been respected as the first of the five patriarchs; nor did they scruple to admit, that his jurisdiction should be exercised agreeable to the holy canons; a vague allowance, which might be defined or eluded by occasional convenience. The procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father alone, or from the Father and the Son, was an article of faith which had sunk much deeper into the minds of men; and in the sessions of Ferrara and Florence, the Latin addition of filioque was subdivided into two questions, whether it were legal, and whether it were orthodox. Perhaps it may not be necessary to boast on this subject of my own impartial indifference; but I must think that the Greeks were strongly supported by the prohibition of the council of Chalcedon, against adding any article whatsoever to the creed of Nice, or rather of Constantinople<sup>63</sup>. In earthly affairs, it is not easy to conceive how an assembly of legislators can bind their successors invested with powers equal to their own. But the dictates of inspiration must be true and unchangeable; nor should a private bishop, or a provincial synod, have presumed to innovate against the judgment of the Catholic church. On the substance of the doctrine, the controversy was equal and endless: reason is confounded by the procession of a deity; the gospel, which lay on the altar, was silent; the various texts of the fathers might be corrupted by fraud or entangled by sophistry; and the Greeks were ignorant of the characters and writings of the Latin saints<sup>64</sup>. Of this at least we may be sure, that neither side could be convinced by the arguments of their opponents. Prejudice may be enlightened by reason, and a superficial glance may be rectified by a clear and more perfect view

<sup>63</sup> The Greeks, who disliked the union, were unwilling to fall from this strong fortress (p. 178. 193. 195. 202. of Syropulus). The shame of the Latins was aggravated by their producing an old MS. of the second council of Nice, with flicque in the Nicene

creed: a palpable forgery! (p. 173.)

<sup>64</sup> Ὡς ἔγωγε (said an eminent Greek) ὅταν τις ἴκων ἐπέλθῃ Λατίνων ἢ ὀρθόδοξων τῶν τῶν ἐκείνη ἀγίων, ἐπιπέδῃ γινώσκῃ τὰς (Syropulus, p. 109.). See the perplexity of the Greeks (p. 217, 218. 252, 253. 273.).

C H A P.
LXVI.

of an object adapted to our faculties. But the bishops and monks had been taught from their infancy to repeat a form of mysterious words; their national and personal honour depended on the repetition of the same sounds; and their narrow minds were hardened and inflamed by the acrimony of a public dispute.

Negotiations with the
Greeks.

While they were lost in a cloud of dust and darkness, the pope and emperor were desirous of a seeming union, which could alone accomplish the purposes of their interview; and the obstinacy of public dispute was softened by the arts of private and personal negotiation. The patriarch Joseph had sunk under the weight of age and infirmities; his dying voice breathed the counsels of charity and concord, and his vacant benefice might tempt the hopes of the ambitious clergy. The ready and active obedience of the archbishops of Russia and Nice, of Isidore and Bessarion, was prompted and recompensed by their speedy promotion to the dignity of cardinals. Bessarion, in the first debates, had stood forth the most strenuous and eloquent champion of the Greek church; and if the apostate, the bastard, was reprobated by his country<sup>65</sup>, he appears in ecclesiastical story a rare example of a patriot who was recommended to court-favour by loud opposition and well-timed compliance. With the aid of his two spiritual coadjutors, the emperor applied his arguments to the general situation and personal characters of the bishops, and each was successively moved by authority and example. Their revenues were in the hands of the Turks, their persons in those of the Latins: an episcopal treasure, three robes and forty ducats, was soon exhausted<sup>66</sup>: the hopes of their return still depended on the ships of Venice and the alms of Rome; and such

<sup>65</sup> See the polite altercation of Mark and Bessarion in Syropulus (p. 257.), who never dissembles the vices of his own party, and fairly praises the virtues of the Latins.

<sup>66</sup> For the poverty of the Greek bishops, see a remarkable passage of Ducas (c. 31.). One had possessed, for his whole property, three old gowns, &c. By teaching one-and-twenty years in his monastery, Bessarion himself had collected forty gold florins; but of these, the archbishop had expended twenty-eight in his voyage from Peloponnesus, and the remainder at Constantinople (Syropulus, p. 127.).

was their indigence, that their arrears, the payment of a debt, would be accepted as a favour, and might operate as a bribe<sup>67</sup>. The danger and relief of Constantinople might excuse some prudent and pious dissimulation; and it was insinuated, that the obstinate heretics who should resist the consent of the East and West, would be abandoned in a hostile land to the revenge or justice of the Roman pontiff<sup>68</sup>. In the first private assembly of the Greeks, the formulary of union was approved by twenty-four, and rejected by twelve, members: but the five cross-bearers of St. Sophia, who aspired to represent the patriarch, were disqualified by ancient discipline; and their right of voting was transferred to an obsequious train of monks, grammarians, and profane laymen. The will of the monarch produced a false and fervile unanimity, and no more than two patriots had courage to speak their own sentiments and those of their country. Demetrius, the emperor's brother, retired to Venice, that he might not be witness of the union; and Mark of Ephesus, mistaking perhaps his pride for his conscience, disclaimed all communion with the Latin heretics, and avowed himself the champion and confessor of the orthodox creed<sup>69</sup>. In the treaty between the two nations, several forms of consent were proposed, such as might satisfy the Latins, without dishonouring the Greeks: and they weighed the scruples of words and syllables, till the theological balance trembled with a slight preponderance in favour of the Vatican. It was agreed (I must intreat the attention of the reader), that the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Father and the Son, as from one principle and one substance; that he proceeds by the Son, being of the same nature and substance, and

<sup>67</sup> Syropulus denies that the Greeks received any money before they had subscribed the act of union (p. 283.): yet he relates some suspicious circumstances; and their bribery and corruption are positively affirmed by the historian Ducas.

<sup>68</sup> The Greeks most piteously express their own fears of exile and perpetual slavery (Syropul. p. 196.): and they were strongly moved by the emperor's threats (p. 260.).

<sup>69</sup> I had forgot another popular and orthodox protester; a favourite hound, who usually lay quiet on the foot-cloth of the emperor's throne; but who barked most furiously while the act of union was reading, without being silenced by the soothing or the lashes of the royal attendants (Syropul. p. 265, 266.).

C H A P.
LXVI.

that he proceeds from the Father and the Son, by one spiration and production. It is less difficult to understand the articles of the preliminary treaty; that the pope should defray all the expences of the Greeks in their return home; that he should annually maintain two galleys and three hundred soldiers for the defence of Constantinople; that all the ships which transported pilgrims to Jerusalem, should be obliged to touch at that port; that as often as they were required, the pope should furnish ten galleys for a year, or twenty for six months; and that he should powerfully solicit the princes of Europe, if the emperor had occasion for land-forces.

Eugenius
deposed at Basil,
A. D. 1438,
June 25.

The same year, and almost the same day, were marked by the deposition of Eugenius at Basil; and, at Florence, by his re-union of the Greeks and Latins. In the former synod (which he styled indeed an assembly of demons), the pope was branded with the guilt of simony, perjury, tyranny, heresy, and schism<sup>70</sup>; and declared to be incorrigible in his vices, unworthy of any title, and incapable of holding any ecclesiastical office. In the latter, he was revered as the true and holy vicar of Christ, who, after a separation of six hundred years, had reconciled the Catholics of the East and West, in one fold, and under one shepherd. The act of union was subscribed by the pope, the emperor, and the principal members of both churches; even by those who, like Syropulus<sup>71</sup>, had been deprived of the right of voting. Two copies might have sufficed for the East and West; but Eugenius was not satisfied, unless four authentic and similar transcripts were signed and attested as the monuments of his victory<sup>72</sup>. On a memorable day, the sixth of July,

the

Re-union of
the Greeks
at Florence,
A. D. 1438,
July 6.

<sup>70</sup> From the original Lives of the Popes, in Muratori's Collection (tom. iii. P. ii. tom. xxv.), the manners of Eugenius IV. appear to have been decent, and even exemplary. His situation, exposed to the world and to his enemies, was a restraint, and is a pledge.

<sup>71</sup> Syropulus, rather than subscribe, would have assisted, as the least evil, at the ceremony of the union. He was compelled to do both; and the great ecclesiarch poorly excuses his submission to the emperor (p. 290--292.).

<sup>72</sup> None of these original acts of union can at present be produced. Of the ten MSS. that are preserved (five at Rome, and the remainder the successors of St. Peter and Constantine ascended their thrones; the two nations assembled in the cathedral of Florence; their representatives, cardinal Julian and Bessarion archbishop of Nice, appeared in the pulpit, and, after reading in their respective tongues the act of union, they mutually embraced in the name and the presence of their applauding brethren. The pope and his ministers then officiated according to the Roman liturgy; the creed was chaunted with the addition of filioque; the acquiescence of the Greeks was poorly excused by their ignorance of the harmonious, but inarticulate, sounds<sup>73</sup>; and the more scrupulous Latins refused any public celebration of the Byzantine rite. Yet the emperor and his clergy were not totally unmindful of national honour. The treaty was ratified by their consent: it was tacitly agreed that no innovation should be attempted in their creed or ceremonies; they spared, and secretly respected, the generous firmness of Mark of Ephesus; and on the decease of the patriarch, they refused to elect his successor, except in the cathedral of St. Sophia. In the distribution of public and private rewards, the liberal pontiff exceeded their hopes and his promises: the Greeks, with less pomp and pride, returned by the same road of Ferrara and Venice; and their reception at Constantinople was such as will be described in the following chapter<sup>74</sup>. The success of the first trial encouraged Eugenius to repeat the same edifying scenes; and the deputies of the Armenians, the Maronites, the Jacobites of Syria and Egypt, the Nestorians and the Æthiopians, were successively introduced, to kiss the feet of the

C H A P.
LXVI.

Their return to Constantinople,
A. D. 1440,
February 1.

remainder at Florence, Bologna, Venice, Paris, and London), nine have been examined by an accurate critic (M. de Brequigny), who condemns them for the variety and imperfections of the Greek signatures. Yet several of these may be esteemed as authentic copies, which were subscribed at Florence before (26th of August 1439) the final separation of the pope and emperor (Memoires de l'Academie des Inscriptions, tom. xliii. p. 287—311.).

<sup>73</sup> Ἡμεῖς δὲ ὡς ἀσχηματίζομεν ὁμοῦ φωνῆς (Syropul. p. 297.).

<sup>74</sup> In their return, the Greeks conversed at Bologna with the ambassadors of England; and after some questions and answers, these impartial strangers laughed at the pretended union of Florence (Syropul. p. 307.).

Roman

C H A P.
LXVI.

Final peace
of the church,
A. D. 1449.

State of the Greek language at Constantinople,
A. D.
1300—1453.

Roman pontiff, and to announce the obedience and the orthodoxy of the East. These Oriental embassies, unknown in the countries which they presumed to represent<sup>75</sup>, diffused over the West the fame of Eugenius: and a clamour was artfully propagated against the remnant of a schism in Switzerland and Savoy, which alone impeded the harmony of the Christian world. The vigour of opposition was succeeded by the lassitude of despair: the council of Basil was silently dissolved; and Fœlix, renouncing the tiara, again withdrew to the devout or delicious hermitage of Ripaille<sup>76</sup>. A general peace was secured by mutual acts of oblivion and indemnity: all ideas of reformation subsided; the popes continued to exercise and abuse their ecclesiastical despotism; nor has Rome been since disturbed by the mischiefs of a contested election<sup>77</sup>.

The journies of three emperors were unavailing for their temporal, or perhaps their spiritual, salvation; but they were productive of a beneficial consequence; the revival of the Greek learning in Italy, from whence it was propagated to the last nations of the West and North. In their lowest servitude and depression, the subjects of the Byzantine throne were still possessed of a golden key that could unlock the treasures of antiquity; of a musical and prolific language, that gives a soul to the objects of sense, and a body to the abstractions of philosophy. Since the barriers of the monarchy, and even of the capital, had been trampled under foot, the various <sup>75</sup> So nugatory, or rather so fabulous, are these reunions of the Nestorians, Jacobites, &c. that I have turned over, without success, the Bibliotheca Orientalis of Assemannus, a faithful slave of the Vatican.

<sup>76</sup> Ripaille is situate near Thonon in Savoy, on the southern side of the lake of Geneva. It is now a Carthusian abbey; and Mr. Addison (Travels into Italy, vol. ii. p. 147, 148. of Baskerville's edition of his works) has celebrated the place and the founder. Æneas Sylvius, and the fathers of Basil, applaud the austere life of the ducal hermit; but the French and Italian proverbs most unluckily attest the popular opinion of his luxury.

<sup>77</sup> In this account of the councils of Basil, Ferrara, and Florence, I have consulted the original acts, which fill the xviith and xviiith tomes of the edition of Venice, and are closed by the perspicuous, though partial, history of Augustin Patricius, an Italian of the xvth century. They are digested and abridged by Dupin (Bibliothèque Eccles. tom. xii.), and the continuator of Fleury (tom. xxii.); and the respect of the Gallican church for the adverse parties confines their members to an awkward moderation.

Barbarians had doubtless corrupted the form and substance of the national dialect; and ample glossaries have been composed, to interpret a multitude of words, of Arabic, Turkish, Slavonian, Latin, or French origin<sup>78</sup>. But a purer idiom was spoken in the court and taught in the college; and the flourishing state of the language is described, and perhaps embellished, by a learned Italian<sup>79</sup>, who, by a long residence and noble marriage<sup>80</sup>, was naturalized at Constantinople about thirty years before the Turkish conquest. “The vulgar speech,” says Philelphus<sup>81</sup>, “has been depraved by the people, and infected by the multitude of strangers and merchants, who every day flock to the city and mingle with the inhabitants. It is from the disciples of such a school that the Latin language received the versions of Aristotle and Plato; so obscure in sense, and in spirit so poor. But the Greeks who have escaped the contagion, are those whom we follow; and they alone are worthy of our imitation. In familiar discourse, they still speak the tongue of Aristophanes and Euripides, of the historians and philosophers

C H A P.
LXVI.

<sup>78</sup> In the first attempt, Meursius collected 3600 Græco-barbarous words, to which, in a second edition, he subjoined 1800 more; yet what plenteous gleanings did he leave to Portius, Ducange, Fabrotti, the Bollandists, &c. (Fabric. Bibliot. Græc. tom. x. p. 101, &c.) Some Persian words may be found in Xenophon, and some Latin ones in Plutarch; and such is the inevitable effect of war and commerce: but the form and substance of the language were not affected by this slight alloy.

<sup>79</sup> The life of Francis Philelphus, a sophist, proud, restless, and rapacious, has been diligently composed by Lancelot (Memoires de l'Academie des Inscriptions, tom. x. p. 691—751.) and Tiraboschi (Istoria della Letteratura Italiana, tom. vii. p. 282—294.), for the most part from his own letters. His elaborate writings, and those of his contemporaries, are forgotten: but their familiar epistles still describe the men and the times.

<sup>80</sup> He married, and had perhaps debauched, the daughter of John, and the granddaughter of Manuel Chrysoloras. She was young, beautiful, and wealthy; and her noble family was allied to the Dorias of Genoa and the emperors of Constantinople.

<sup>81</sup> Græci quibus lingua depravata non sit . . . ita loquuntur vulgo hæc etiam tempestate ut Aristophanes comicus, aut Euripides tragicus, ut oratores omnes ut historiographi ut philosophi . . . litterati autem homines et doctius et emendatius . . . Nam viri aulici veterem sermonis dignitatem atque elegantiam retinebant in primisque ipsæ nobiles mulieres; quibus cum nullum esset omnino cum viris peregrinis commercium, merus ille ac purus Græcorum sermo servabatur intactus (Philelph. Epist. ad ann. 1451, apud Hodium, p. 188, 189.). He observes in another passage, uxor illa mea Theodora locutione erat admodum moderatâ et suavi et maxime Atticâ.

“ of

C H A P.
LXVI.

“ of Athens ; and the ſtyle of their writings is ſtill more elaborate “ and correct. The perſons who, by their birth and offices, are “ attached to the Byzantine court, are thoſe who maintain, with “ the leaſt alloy, the ancient ſtandard of elegance and purity ; and “ the native graces of language moſt conſpicuouſly ſhine among the “ noble matrons, who are excluded from all intercourſe with fo“ reigners. With foreigners do I ſay ? They live retired and ſe“ queſtered from the eyes of their fellow-citizens. Seldom are they “ ſeen in the ſtreets ; and when they leave their houſes, it is in the “ duſk of evening, on viſits to the churches and their neareſt kin“ dred. On theſe occaſions, they are on horſeback, covered with a “ veil, and encompaſſed by their parents, their huſbands, or their “ ſervants <sup>82</sup>.”

Among the Greeks, a numerous and opulent clergy was dedicated to the ſervice of religion : their monks and biſhops have ever been diſtinguiſhed by the gravity and aſterity of their manners ; nor were they diverted, like the Latin prieſts, by the purſuits and pleaſures of a ſecular, and even military, life. After a large deduction for the time and talents that were loſt in the devotion, the lazineſs, and the diſcord, of the church and cloyſter, the more inquiſitive and ambitious minds would explore the ſacred and profane erudition of their native language. The eccleſiaſtics preſided over the education of youth ; the ſchools of philoſophy and eloquence were perpetuated till the fall of the empire ; and it may be affirmed, that more books and more knowledge were included within the walls of Conſtantinople than could be diſperſed over the extenſive countries of the Weſt <sup>83</sup>. But an important diſtinction has been already noticed : the Greeks were ſtationary or retrograde, while the Latins were advancing with a rapid and progreſſive motion. The nations were excited by the

Comparison
of the Greeks
and Latins.

<sup>82</sup> Philoſophus, abſurdly enough, derives this Greek or Oriental jealousy from the manners of ancient Rome.

<sup>83</sup> See the ſtate of learning in the xiiith and

xivth centuries, in the learned and judicious Moſheim (Inſtitut. Hiſt. Eccleſ. p. 434—440. 490—491.).

spirit of independence and emulation; and even the little world of the Italian states contained more people and industry than the decreasing circle of the Byzantine empire. In Europe, the lower ranks of society were relieved from the yoke of feudal servitude; and freedom is the first step to curiosity and knowledge. The use, however rude and corrupt, of the Latin tongue had been preserved by superstition; the universities, from Bologna to Oxford<sup>82</sup>, were peopled with thousands of scholars; and their misguided ardour might be directed to more liberal and manly studies. In the resurrection of science, Italy was the first that cast away her shroud; and the eloquent Petrarch, by his lessons and his example, may justly be applauded as the first harbinger of day. A purer style of composition, a more generous and rational strain of sentiment, flowed from the study and imitation of the writers of ancient Rome; and the disciples of Cicero and Virgil approached, with reverence and love, the sanctuary of their Grecian masters. In the sack of Constantinople, the French, and even the Venetians, had despised and destroyed the works of Lyfippus and Homer: the monuments of art may be annihilated by a single blow; but the immortal mind is renewed and multiplied by the copies of the pen; and such copies it was the ambition of Petrarch and his friends to possess and understand. The arms of the Turks undoubtedly pressed the flight of the muses; yet we may tremble at the thought, that Greece might have been overwhelmed, with her schools and libraries, before Europe had emerged from the deluge of barbarism; that the seeds of science might have been scattered by the winds, before the Italian soil was prepared for their cultivation.

The most learned Italians of the fifteenth century have confessed and applauded the restoration of Greek literature, after a long obli-

Revival of the Greek learning in Italy.

<sup>82</sup> At the end of the xvth century, there existed in Europe about fifty universities, and of these the foundation of ten or twelve is prior to the year 1300. They were crowded in proportion to their scarcity. Bologna contained 10,000 students, chiefly of the civil law. In the year 1357 the number at Oxford had decreased from 30,000 to 6000 scholars (Henry's History of Great Britain, vol. iv. p. 478.). Yet even this decrease is much superior to the present list of the members of the university.

C H A P.
LXVI.

Lessons of Barlaam,
A. D. 1339.

vion of many hundred years<sup>85</sup>. Yet in that country, and beyond the Alps, some names are quoted; some profound scholars, who in the darker ages were honourably distinguished by their knowledge of the Greek tongue; and national vanity has been loud in the praise of such rare examples of erudition. Without scrutinizing the merit of individuals, truth must observe that their science is without a cause, and without an effect; that it was easy for them to satisfy themselves and their more ignorant contemporaries; and that the idiom, which they had so marvellously acquired, was transcribed in few manuscripts, and was not taught in any university of the West. In a corner of Italy, it faintly existed as the popular, or at least as the ecclesiastical, dialect<sup>86</sup>. The first impression of the Doric and Ionic colonies has never been completely erased: the Calabrian churches were long attached to the throne of Constantinople; and the monks of St. Basil pursued their studies in mount Athos and the schools of the East. Calabria was the native country of Barlaam, who has already appeared as a sectary and an ambassador; and Barlaam was the first who revived, beyond the Alps, the memory, or at least the writings, of Homer<sup>87</sup>. He is described, by Petrarch and Boccace<sup>88</sup>, as a man of a diminutive stature, though truly great in the measure of learning and genius; of a piercing discernment, though of a slow and painful elocution. For many ages (as they affirm) Greece had not produced his equal in the knowledge of quædam linguæ veteris cognitio (Hodus, p. 2.). If it were eradicated by the Romans, it was revived and perpetuated by the monks of St. Basil, who possessed seven convents at Rossano alone (Giannone, Istoria di Napoli, tom. i. p. 520.).

<sup>85</sup> Of those writers who professedly treat of the restoration of the Greek learning in Italy, the two principal are Hodus, Dr. Humphrey Hody (de Græcis Illustribus, Linguae Græcæ Literarumque humaniorum Instauratoribus; Londini, 1742, in large octavo), and Tiraboschi (Istoria della Letteratura Italiana, tom. v. p. 364—377. tom. vii. p. 112—143.). The Oxford professor is a laborious scholar, but the librarian of Modena enjoys the superiority of a modern and national historian.

<sup>86</sup> In Calabria quæ olim magna Græcia dicebatur, coloniis Græcis repleta, remansit

<sup>87</sup> Ii Barbari (says Petrarch, the French and Germans) vix, non dicam libros sed nomen Homeri audiverunt. Perhaps, in that respect, the xiiith century was less happy than the age of Charlemagne.

<sup>88</sup> See the character of Barlaam, in Boccace de Genealog. Deorum, l. xv. c. 6.

history, grammar, and philosophy; and his merit was celebrated in the attestations of the princes and doctors of Constantinople. One of these attestations is still extant; and the emperor Cantacuzene, the protector of his adversaries, is forced to allow that Euclid, Aristotle, and Plato, were familiar to that profound and subtle logician<sup>89</sup>. In the court of Avignon, he formed an intimate connection with Petrarch<sup>90</sup>, the first of the Latin scholars; and the desire of mutual instruction was the principle of their literary commerce. The Tuscan applied himself with eager curiosity and assiduous diligence to the study of the Greek language; and in a laborious struggle with the dryness and difficulty of the first rudiments, he began to reach the sense, and to feel the spirit, of poets and philosophers, whose minds were congenial to his own. But he was soon deprived of the society and lessons of this useful assistant: Barlaam relinquished his fruitless embassy; and, on his return to Greece, he rashly provoked the swarms of fanatic monks, by attempting to substitute the light of reason to that of their navel. After a separation of three years, the two friends again met in the court of Naples; but the generous pupil renounced the fairest occasion of improvement; and by his recommendation Barlaam was finally settled in a small bishopric of his native Calabria<sup>91</sup>. The manifold avocations of Petrarch, love and friendship, his various correspondence and frequent journies, the Roman laurel, and his elaborate compositions in prose and verse, in Latin and Italian, diverted him from a foreign idiom; and as he advanced in life, the attainment of the Greek language was the object of his wishes, rather than of his hopes. When he was about

C H A P.
LXVI.

Studies of Petrarch,
A. D.
1339—1374.

<sup>89</sup> Cantacuzen l. ii. c. 36.

<sup>90</sup> For the connection of Petrarch and Barlaam, and the two interviews at Avignon in 1339, and at Naples in 1342, see the excellent Memoires sur la Vie de Petrarque, tom. i. p. 406—410. tom. ii. p. 75—77.

<sup>91</sup> The bishopric to which Barlaam retired, was the old Locri, in the middle ages

St. Cyriaca, and by corruption Hieracium, Gerace (Dissert. Chorographica Italie medii Aevi, p. 312.). The dives opum of the Norman times soon lapsed into poverty, since even the church was poor: yet the town still contains 3000 inhabitants (Swineburne, p. 347.).

C H A P.
LXVI.

fifty years of age, a Byzantine ambassador, his friend, and a master of both tongues, presented him with a copy of Homer; and the answer of Petrarch is at once expressive of his eloquence, gratitude, and regret. After celebrating the generosity of the donor, and the value of a gift more precious in his estimation than gold or rubies, he thus proceeds: “Your present of the genuine and original text of the divine poet, the fountain of all invention, is worthy of yourself and of me: you have fulfilled your promise, and satisfied my desires. Yet your liberality is still imperfect: with Homer you should have given me yourself; a guide, who could lead me into the fields of light, and disclose to my wondering eyes the specious miracles of the Iliad and Odyssey. But, alas! Homer is dumb, or I am deaf; nor is it in my power to enjoy the beauty which I possess. I have seated him by the side of Plato, the prince of poets near the prince of philosophers; and I glory in the sight of my illustrious guests. Of their immortal writings, whatever had been translated into the Latin idiom, I had already acquired; but, if there be no profit, there is some pleasure, in beholding these venerable Greeks in their proper and national habit. I am delighted with the aspect of Homer; and as often as I embrace the silent volume, I exclaim with a sigh, illustrious bard! with what pleasure should I listen to thy song, if my sense of hearing were not obstructed and lost by the death of one friend, and in the much-lamented absence of another. Nor do I yet despair; and the example of Cato suggests some comfort and hope, since it was in the last period of age that he attained the knowledge of the Greek letters<sup>92</sup>.”

<sup>92</sup> I will transcribe a passage from this epistle of Petrarch (Famil. ix. 2.): Donasti Homerum non in alienum sermonem violento alveo derivatum, sed ex ipsis Græci eloquii scatebris, et qualis divino illi profluxit in-

genio.... Sine tuâ voce Homerus tuus apud me mutus, immo vero ego apud illum surdus sum. Gaudeo tamen vel adspectû solo, ac sepe illum amplexus atque suspirans dico, O magne vir, &c.

The prize which eluded the efforts of Petrarch, was obtained by the fortune and industry of his friend Boccace<sup>93</sup>, the father of the Tuscan prose. That popular writer, who derives his reputation from the Decameron, an hundred novels of pleasantry and love, may aspire to the more serious praise of restoring in Italy the study of the Greek language: In the year one thousand three hundred and sixty, a disciple of Barlaam, whose name was Leo, or Leontius Pilatus, was detained in his way to Avignon by the advice and hospitality of Boccace, who lodged the stranger in his house, prevailed on the republic of Florence to allow him an annual stipend, and devoted his leisure to the first Greek professor, who taught that language in the Western countries of Europe. The appearance of Leo might disgust the most eager disciple; he was clothed in the mantle of a philosopher, or a mendicant; his countenance was hideous; his face was overshadowed with black hair; his beard long and uncombed; his deportment rustic; his temper gloomy and inconstant; nor could he grace his discourse with the ornaments, or even the perspicuity, of Latin elocution. But his mind was stored with a treasure of Greek learning: history and fable, philosophy and grammar, were alike at his command; and he read the poems of Homer in the schools of Florence. It was from his explanation that Boccace composed and transcribed a literal prose version of the Iliad and Odyssey, which satisfied the thirst of his friend Petrarch, and which perhaps, in the succeeding century, was clandestinely used by Laurentius Valla, the Latin interpreter. It was from his narratives that the same Boccace collected the materials for his treatise on the genealogy of the heathen gods, a work, in that age, of stupen-

C H A P.
LXVI.
Of Boccace,
A. D. 1360,
&c.

Leo Pilatus,
first Greek professor at Florence, and in the West,
A. D.
1360—1363.

<sup>93</sup> For the life and writings of Boccace, who was born in 1313, and died in 1375, Fabricius (Bibliot. Latin. medii Ævi, tom. i. p. 248, &c.) and Tiraboschi (tom. v. p. 83. 439—451.) may be consulted. The editions, versions, imitations of his novels, are innumerable. Yet he was ashamed to communicate that trifling, and perhaps scandalous, work to Petrarch his respectable friend, in whose letters and memoirs he conspicuously appears.

C H A P.
LXVI.

dous erudition, and which he ostentatiously sprinkled with Greek characters and passages, to excite the wonder and applause of his more ignorant readers<sup>94</sup>. The first steps of learning are slow and laborious; no more than ten votaries of Homer could be enumerated in all Italy; and neither Rome, nor Venice, nor Naples, could add a single name to this studious catalogue. But their numbers would have multiplied, their progress would have been accelerated, if the inconstant Leo, at the end of three years, had not relinquished an honourable and beneficial station. In his passage, Petrarch entertained him at Padua a short time; he enjoyed the scholar, but was justly offended with the gloomy and unsocial temper of the man. Discontented with the world and with himself, Leo depreciated his present enjoyments, while absent persons and objects were dear to his imagination. In Italy he was a Thessalian, in Greece a native of Calabria; in the company of the Latins he disdained their language, religion, and manner; no sooner was he landed at Constantinople, than he again sighed for the wealth of Venice and the elegance of Florence. His Italian friends were deaf to his importunity; he depended on their curiosity and indulgence, and embarked on a second voyage; but on his entrance into the Adriatic, the ship was assailed by a tempest, and the unfortunate teacher, who like Ulysses had fastened himself to the mast, was struck dead by a flash of lightning. The humane Petrarch dropt a tear on his disaster; but he was most anxious to learn whether some copy of Euripides or Sophocles might not be saved from the hands of the mariners<sup>95</sup>.

<sup>94</sup> Boccace indulges an honest vanity: Ostentationis causâ Græca carmina adscripti . . . jure utor meo; meum est hoc decus mea gloria scilicet inter Etruscos Græcis uti carminibus. Nonne ego fui qui Leontium Pilatum, &c. (de Genealogia Deorum, l. xv. c. 7. a work which, though now forgotten, has run through thirteen or fourteen editions.)

<sup>95</sup> Leontius, or Leo Pilatus, is sufficiently made known by Hody (p. 2—11), and the Abbé de Sade (Vie de Petrarque, tom. iii. p. 625—634. 670—673.), who has very happily caught the lively and dramatic manner of his original.

But

But the faint rudiments of Greek learning, which Petrarch had encouraged and Boccace had planted, soon withered and expired. The succeeding generation was content for a while with the improvement of Latin eloquence: nor was it before the end of the fourteenth century, that a new and perpetual flame was rekindled in Italy<sup>96</sup>. Previous to his own journey, the emperor Manuel dispatched his envoys and orators to implore the compassion of the Western princes. Of these envoys, the most conspicuous, or the most learned, was Manuel Chrysoloras<sup>97</sup>, of noble birth, and whose Roman ancestors are supposed to have migrated with the great Constantine. After visiting the courts of France and England, where he obtained some contributions and more promises, the envoy was invited to assume the office of a professor; and Florence had again the honour of this second invitation. By his knowledge, not only of the Greek, but of the Latin, tongue, Chrysoloras deserved the stipend, and surpassed the expectation, of the republic: his school was frequented by a crowd of disciples of every rank and age; and one of these, in a general history, has described his motives and his success. “At that time,” says Leonard Aretin<sup>98</sup>, “I was a student of the civil law; but my soul was inflamed with the love of letters; and I bestowed some application on the sciences of logic and rhetoric. On the arrival of Manuel, I hesitated whether I should desert my legal studies, or relinquish this golden opportu-

C H A P.
LXVI.

Foundation of the Greek language in Italy by Manuel Chryso-
loras,
A. D.

1390—1415.

<sup>96</sup> Dr. Hody (p. 54.) is angry with Leonard Aretin, Guarinus, Paulus Jovius, &c. for affirming, that the Greek letters were restored in Italy post septingentos annos; as if, says he, they had flourished till the end of the vith century. These writers most probably reckoned from the last period of the exarchate; and the presence of the Greek magistrates and troops at Ravenna and Rome, must have preserved, in some degree, the use of their native tongue.

<sup>97</sup> See the article of Emanuel, or Manuel Chrysoloras, in Hody (p. 12—54.) and Tiraboschi (tom. vii. p. 113—118.). The precise date of his arrival floats between the years 1390 and 1400, and is only confined by the reign of Boniface IX.

<sup>98</sup> The name of Aretinus has been assumed by five or six natives of Arezzo in Tuscany, of whom the most famous and the most worthless lived in the xvth century. Leonardus Brunus Aretinus, the disciple of Chrysoloras, was a linguist, an orator, and an historian, the secretary of four successive popes, and the chancellor of the republic of Florence, where he died A. D. 1444, at the age of seventy-five (Fabric. Bibliot. medii Ævi, tom. i. p. 190, &c. Tiraboschi, tom. vii. p. 33—38.).

“ nity ;

C H A P.
LXVI.

“ nity; and thus, in the ardour of youth, I communed with my “ own mind—Wilt thou be wanting to thyself and thy fortune?
 “ Wilt thou refuse to be introduced to a familiar converse with “ Homer, Plato, and Demosthenes? with those poets, philosophers, “ and orators, of whom such wonders are related, and who are “ celebrated by every age as the great masters of human science?
 “ Of professors and scholars in civil law, a sufficient supply will al“ ways be found in our universities; but a teacher, and such a “ teacher, of the Greek language, if he once be suffered to escape, “ may never afterwards be retrieved. Convinced by these reasons, “ I gave myself to Chrysoloras; and so strong was my passion, that
 “ the lessons which I had imbibed in the day were the constant sub“ ject of my nightly dreams.” At the same time and place, the Latin classics were explained by John of Ravenna, the domestic pupil of Petrarch<sup>100</sup>: the Italians, who illustrated their age and country, were formed in this double school; and Florence became the fruitful seminary of Greek and Roman erudition<sup>101</sup>. The presence of the emperor recalled Chrysoloras from the college to the court; but he afterwards taught at Pavia and Rome with equal industry and applause. The remainder of his life, about fifteen years, was divided between Italy and Constantinople, between embassies and lessons.
 In the noble office of enlightening a foreign nation, the grammarian was not unmindful of a more sacred duty to his prince and country; and Emanuel Chrysoloras died at Constance on a public mission from the emperor to the council.

<sup>99</sup> See the passage in Aretin. Commentario Rerum suo Tempore in Italia gestarum, apud Hodium, p. 28—30.

<sup>100</sup> In this domestic discipline, Petrarch, who loved the youth, often complains of the eager curiosity, restless temper, and proud feelings, which announce the genius and glory of a riper age (Memoires sur Petrarque, tom. iii. p. 700—709.).

<sup>101</sup> Hinc Græcæ Latinaque scholæ exorta sunt, Guarino Philelpho, Leonardo Aretino,

Caroloque, ac plerisque aliis tanquam ex equo Trojano prodeuntibus, quorum emulatione multa ingenia deinceps at laudem excitata sunt (Platina in Bonifacio IX.). Another Italian writer adds the names of Paulus Petrus Vergerius, Omnibonus Vincentius, Poggius, Franciscus Barbarus, &c. But I question whether a rigid chronology would allow Chry-soloras all these eminent scholars (Hodius,
 p. 25—27, &c.).

After

After his example, the restoration of the Greek letters in Italy was prosecuted by a series of emigrants, who were destitute of fortune, and endowed with learning, or at least with language. From the terror or oppression of the Turkish arms, the natives of Thessalonica and Constantinople escaped to a land of freedom, curiosity, and wealth. The synod introduced into Florence the lights of the Greek church and the oracles of the Platonic philosophy: and the fugitives who adhered to the union, had the double merit of renouncing their country, not only for the Christian, but for the Catholic, cause. A patriot, who sacrifices his party and conscience to the allurements of favour, may be possessed however of the private and social virtues: he no longer hears the reproachful epithets of slave and apostate; and the consideration which he acquires among his new associates, will restore in his own eyes the dignity of his character. The prudent conformity of Bessarion was rewarded with the Roman purple: he fixed his residence in Italy; and the Greek cardinal, the titular patriarch of Constantinople, was respected as the chief and protector of his nation<sup>102</sup>: his abilities were exercised in the legations of Bologna, Venice, Germany, and France; and his election to the chair of St. Peter floated for a moment on the uncertain breath of a conclave<sup>103</sup>. His ecclesiastical honours diffused a splendour and pre-eminence over his literary merit and service: his palace was a school; as often as the cardinal visited the Vatican, he was attended by a learned train of both nations<sup>104</sup>; of men applauded by themselves and the public; and whose writings, now overspread with dust, were popular and useful in their own times.

C H A P.
LXVI.
The Greeks
in Italy,
A. D.
1400—1500.

Cardinal Bessarion, &c.

<sup>102</sup> See in Hody the article of Bessarion (p. 136—177.): Theodore Gaza, George of Trebizond, and the rest of the Greeks whom I have named or omitted, are inserted in their proper chapters of his learned work. See likewise Tiraboschi, in the 1st and 2<sup>d</sup> parts of the 6th tome.

<sup>103</sup> The cardinal's knocked at his door, but his conclavist refused to interrupt the studies of

Bessarion; "Nicholas," said he, "thy respect has cost thee an hat, and me the tiara."

<sup>104</sup> Such as George of Trebizond, Theodore Gaza, Argyropulus Andronicus of Thessalonica, Phil'elphus, Poggius, Blondus, Nicholas Perrot, Valla, Campanus, Platina, &c. Viri (says Hody, with the pious zeal of a scholar) nulloavo perituri (p. 156.).

C H A P.
LXVI.

Their faults and merits.

I shall not attempt to enumerate the restorers of Grecian literature in the fifteenth century: and it may be sufficient to mention with gratitude the names of Theodore Gaza, of George of Trebizond, of John Argyropulus, and Demetrius Chalcocondyles, who taught their native language in the schools of Florence and Rome. Their labours were not inferior to those of Bessarion, whose purple they revered, and whose fortune was the secret object of their envy. But the lives of these grammarians was humble and obscure: they had declined the lucrative paths of the church; their dress and manners secluded them from the commerce of the world; and since they were confined to the merit, they might be content with the rewards, of learning. From this character, Janus Lascaris<sup>105</sup> will deserve an exception. His eloquence, politeness, and Imperial descent, recommended him to the French monarchs; and in the same cities he was alternately employed to teach and to negotiate. Duty and interest prompted them to cultivate the study of the Latin language; and the most successful attained the faculty of writing and speaking with fluency and elegance in a foreign idiom. But they ever retained the inveterate vanity of their country: their praise, or at least their esteem, was reserved for the national writers, to whom they owed their fame and subsistence; and they sometimes betrayed their contempt in licentious criticism or satire on Virgil's poetry and the oratory of Tully<sup>106</sup>. The superiority of these masters arose from the familiar use of a living language; and their first disciples were incapable

<sup>105</sup> He was born before the taking of Constantinople, but his honourable life was stretched far into the xvth century (A. D. 1535). Leo X. and Francis I. were his noblest patrons, under whose auspices he founded the Greek colleges of Rome and Paris (Hody, p. 247—275.). He left posterity in France; but the counts de Vintimille, and their numerous branches, derive the name of Lascaris, from a doubtful marriage in the xiiith century with the daughter of a Greek emperor (Ducange, Fam. Byzant. p. 224—230.).

<sup>106</sup> Two of his epigrams against Virgil, and three against Tully, are preserved and refuted by Franciscus Floridus, who can find no better names than Græculus ineptus et impudens (Hody, p. 274.). In our own times, an English critic has accused the Æneid of containing, multa languida, nugatoria, spiritû et majestâte carminis heroici defecta; many such verses as he, the said Jeremiah Markland, would have been ashamed of owning (præfat. ad Statii Sylvas, p. 21, 22.).

incapable of discerning how far they had degenerated from the knowledge, and even the practice, of their ancestors. A vicious pronunciation<sup>107</sup>, which they introduced, was banished from the schools by the reason of the succeeding age. Of the power of the Greek accents they were ignorant: and those musical notes, which, from an Attic tongue, and to an Attic ear, must have been the secret soul of harmony, were to their eyes, as to our own, no more than mute and unmeaning marks; in prose superfluous, and troublesome in verse. The art of grammar they truly possessed: the valuable fragments of Apollonius and Herodian were transfused into their lessons; and their treatises of syntax and etymology, though devoid of philosophic spirit, are still useful to the Greek student. In the shipwreck of the Byzantine libraries, each fugitive seized a fragment of treasure, a copy of some author, who, without his industry, might have perished: the transcripts were multiplied by an assiduous, and sometimes an elegant, pen; and the text was corrected and explained by their own comments, or those of the elder scholiasts. The sense, though not the spirit, of the Greek classics, was interpreted to the Latin world: the beauties of style evaporate in a version; but the judgment of Theodore Gaza selected the more solid works of Aristotle and Theophrastus, and their natural histories of animals and plants opened a rich fund of genuine and experimental science.

Yet the fleeting shadows of metaphysics were pursued with more curiosity and ardour. After a long oblivion, Plato was revived in philosophy.

The Platonic

<sup>107</sup> Emanuel Chrysoloras, and his colleagues, are accused of ignorance, envy, or avarice (Sylloge, &c. tom. ii. p. 235.). The modern Greek pronounce the β as a V consonant, and confound three vowels (ο, ε, ι), and several diphthongs. Such was the vulgar pronunciation which the stern Gardiner maintained by penal statutes in the university of Cambridge: but the monosyllable βη represented to an Attic ear the bleating of sheep; and a bell-wether is better evidence than a bishop or a chancellor. The treatises of those scholars, particularly Erasmus, who asserted a more classical pronunciation, are collected in the Sylloge of Havercamp (2 vols. in octavo, Lugd. Bat. 1736, 1740): but it is difficult to paint sounds by words; and in their reference to modern use, they can be understood only by their respective countrymen. We may observe, that our peculiar pronunciation of the β, βη, is approved by Erasmus (tom. ii. p. 130.).

C H A P.
LXVI.

Italy by a venerable Greek<sup>108</sup>, who taught in the house of Cosmo of Medicis. While the synod of Florence was involved in theological debate, some beneficial consequences might flow from the study of his elegant philosophy; his style is the purest standard of the Attic dialect; and his sublime thoughts are sometimes adapted to familiar conversation, and sometimes adorned with the richest colours of poetry and eloquence. The dialogues of Plato are a dramatic picture of the life and death of a sage; and, as often as he descends from the clouds, his moral system inculcates the love of truth, of our country, and of mankind. The precept and example of Socrates recommended a modest doubt and liberal enquiry: and if the Platonists, with blind devotion, adored the visions and errors of their divine master, their enthusiasm might correct the dry, dogmatic method of the Peripatetic school. So equal, yet so opposite, are the merits of Plato and Aristotle, that they may be balanced in endless controversy; but some spark of freedom may be produced by the collision of adverse servitude. The modern Greeks were divided between the two sects: with more fury than skill they fought under the banner of their leaders; and the field of battle was removed in their flight from Constantinople to Rome. But this philosophical debate soon degenerated into an angry and personal quarrel of grammarians: and Bessarion, though an advocate for Plato, protected the national honour, by interposing the advice and authority of a mediator. In the gardens of the Medici, the academical doctrine was enjoyed by the polite and learned: but their philosophic society was quickly dissolved; and if the writings of the Attic sage were perused in the closet, the more powerful Stagyrite continued to reign, the oracle of the church and school<sup>109</sup>.

<sup>108</sup> George Gemistus Pletho, a various and voluminous writer, the master of Bessarion, and all the Platonists of the times. He visited Italy in his old age, and soon returned to end his days in Peloponnesus. See the curious Diatribe of Leo Allatius de Georgiis, in Fabricius (Bibliot. Græc. tom. x. p. 739—756.).

<sup>109</sup> The state of the Platonic philosophy in Italy, is illustrated by Boivin (Mem. de l'Acad. des Inscriptions, tom. ii. p. 715—729.) and Tiraboschi (tom. vi. P. i. p. 259—288.).

I have fairly represented the literary merits of the Greeks; yet it must be confessed, that they were seconded and surpassed by the ardour of the Latins. Italy was divided into many independent states; and at that time, it was the ambition of princes and republics to vie with each other in the encouragement and reward of literature. The fame of Nicholas the fifth<sup>110</sup> has not been adequate to his merits. From a plebeian origin, he raised himself by his virtue and learning: the character of the man prevailed over the interest of the pope; and he sharpened those weapons which were soon pointed against the Roman church<sup>111</sup>. He had been the friend of the most eminent scholars of the age: he became their patron; and such was the humility of his manners, that the change was scarcely discernible either to them or to himself. If he pressed the acceptance of a liberal gift, it was not as the measure of desert, but as the proof of benevolence; and when modest merit declined his bounty, "accept it," would he say with a consciousness of his own worth; "you will not always have a Nicholas among ye." The influence of the holy see pervaded Christendom; and he exerted that influence in the search, not of benefices, but of books. From the ruins of the Byzantine libraries, from the darkest monasteries of Germany and Britain, he collected the dusty manuscripts of the writers of antiquity; and wherever the original could not be removed, a faithful copy was transcribed and transmitted for his use. The Vatican, the old repository for bulls and legends, for superstition and forgery, was daily replenished with more precious furniture; and such was the industry of Nicholas, that in a reign of eight years, he formed

C H A P.
LXVI.Emulation and progress
of the Latins.Nicholas V.
A. D.
1447—1455.

<sup>110</sup> See the life of Nicholas V. by two contemporary authors, Janottus Manettus (tom. iii. P. ii. p. 905—962.) and Vespasian of Florence (tom. xxv. p. 267—290.), in the collection of Muratori; and consult Tiraboschi (tom. vi. P. i. 46—52. 109.) and Hody in the articles of Theodore Gaza, George of Trebizond, &c.

<sup>111</sup> Lord Bolingbroke observes, with truth and spirit, that the popes in this instance were worse politicians than the muslis, and that the charm which has bound mankind for so many ages, was broken by the magicians themselves (Letters on the Study of History, l. vi. p. 165, 166. octavo edition, 1779).

a library

C H A P.
LXVI.

Cosmo and Lorenzo of Medicis,
A. D.
1428—1492.

a library of five thousand volumes. To his munificence, the Latin world was indebted for the versions of Xenophon, Diodorus, Polybius, Thucydides, Herodotus, and Appian; of Strabo's geography, of the Iliad, of the most valuable works of Plato and Aristotle, of Ptolemy and Theophrastus, and of the fathers of the Greek church. The example of the Roman pontiff was preceded or imitated by a Florentine merchant, who governed the republic without arms and without a title. Cosmo of Medicis<sup>112</sup> was the father of a line of princes, whose name and age are almost synonymous with the restoration of learning: his credit was ennobled into fame; his riches were dedicated to the service of mankind; he corresponded at once with Cairo and London: and a cargo of Indian spices and Greek books was often imported in the same vessel. The genius and education of his grandson Lorenzo rendered him, not only a patron, but a judge and candidate, in the literary race. In his palace, distress was entitled to relief, and merit to reward: his leisure hours were delightfully spent in the Platonic academy: he encouraged the emulation of Demetrius Chalcocondyles and Angelo Politian; and his active missionary Janus Lascaris returned from the East with a treasure of two hundred manuscripts, fourcore of which were as yet unknown in the libraries of Europe<sup>113</sup>. The rest of Italy was animated by a similar spirit, and the progress of the nation repaid the liberality of her princes. The Latins held the exclusive property of their own literature: and these disciples of Greece were soon capable of transmitting and improving the lessons which they had imbibed. After a short succession of foreign teachers, the tide of emigration subsided; but the language of Constantinople was spread beyond the Alps; and the natives of France, Germany, and England<sup>114</sup>, imparted to their country the sacred fire which they had kindled in the schools of Florence and Rome<sup>115</sup>. In the productions of the mind, as in those of the soil, the gifts of nature are excelled by industry and skill: the Greek authors, forgotten on the banks of the Ilissus, have been illustrated on those of the Elbe and the Thames: and Bessarion or Gaza might have envied the superior science of the Barbarians; the accuracy of Budæus, the taste of Erasmus, the copiousness of Stephens, the erudition of Scaliger, the discernment of Reiske, or of Bentley. On the side of the Latins, the discovery of printing was a casual advantage: but this useful art has been applied by Aldus, and his innumerable successors, to perpetuate and multiply the works of antiquity<sup>116</sup>. A single manuscript imported from Greece is revived in ten thousand copies; and each copy is fairer than the original. In this form, Homer and Plato would peruse with more satisfaction their own writings: and their scholiasts must resign the prize to the labours of our western editors.

<sup>112</sup> See the literary history of Cosmo and Lorenzo of Medicis, in Tiraboschi (tom. vi. P. i. l. i. c. 2.), who bestows a due measure of praise on Alphonso of Arragon, king of Naples, the dukes of Milan, Ferrara, Urbino, &c. The republic of Venice has deserved the least from the gratitude of scholars.

<sup>113</sup> Tiraboschi (tom. vi. P. i. p. 104.), from the preface of Janus Lascaris to the Greek Anthology, printed at Florence 1494. Latabant (says Aldus in his preface to the Greek Orators, apud Hodium, p. 249.) in Atho Thraciæ monte. Eas Lascaris . . . in Italiam reportavit. Miserat enim ipsum Laurentius ille Medicis in Græciam ad inquirendos simul, et quantovis emendos pretio bonos libros. It is remarkable enough, that the research was facilitated by sultan Bajazet II.

Before the revival of classic literature, the Barbarians in Europe were immersed in ignorance; and their vulgar tongues were marked

Use and abuse of ancient learning.

<sup>114</sup> The Greek language was introduced into the university of Oxford in the last years of the xvth century, by Grocyn, Linacer, and Latimer, who had all studied at Florence under Demetrius Chalcocondyles. See Dr. Knight's curious Life of Erasmus. Although a stout academical patriot, he is forced to acknowledge, that Erasmus learned Greek at Oxford, and taught it at Cambridge.

<sup>115</sup> The jealous Italians were desirous of keeping a monopoly of Greek learning. When Aldus was about to publish the Greek scholiasts on Sophocles and Euripides, Cave (said they), cave hoc facias, ne Barbari illis adjuti domi maneat, et pauciores in Italiam ventitent (Dr. Knight, in his Life of Erasmus, p. 365. from Beatus Rhenanus).

<sup>116</sup> The press of Aldus Manutius, a Roman, was established at Venice about the year 1494: he printed above sixty considerable works of Greek literature, almost all for the first time; several containing different treatises and authors, and of several authors two, three, or four editions (Fabric. Bibliot. Græc. tom. xiii. p. 605, &c.). Yet his glory must not tempt us to forget, that the first Greek book, the Grammar of Constantine Lascaris, was printed at Milan in 1476; and that the Florence Homer of 1488 displays all the luxury of the typographical art. See the Annales Typographici of Mattaire, and the Bibliographie Instructive of de Bure, a knowing bookseller of Paris.

C H A P.
LXVI.

with the rudeness and poverty of their manners. The students of the more perfect idioms of Rome and Greece, were introduced to a new world of light and science; to the society of the free and polished nations of antiquity; and to a familiar converse with those immortal men who spoke the sublime language of eloquence and reason. Such an intercourse must tend to refine the taste, and to elevate the genius, of the moderns: and yet, from the first experiment, it might appear that the study of the ancients had given fetters, rather than wings, to the human mind. However laudable, the spirit of imitation is of a servile cast; and the first disciples of the Greeks and Romans were a colony of strangers in the midst of their age and country. The minute and laborious diligence which explored the antiquities of remote times, might have improved or adorned the present state of society: the critic and metaphysician were the slaves of Aristotle; the poets, historians, and orators, were proud to repeat the thoughts and words of the Augustan age; the works of nature were observed with the eyes of Pliny and Theophrastus; and some Pagan votaries professed a secret devotion to the gods of Homer and Plato<sup>117</sup>. The Italians were oppressed by the strength and number of their ancient auxiliaries: the century after the deaths of Petrarch and Boccace was filled with a crowd of Latin imitators, who decently repose on our shelves; but in that æra of learning, it will not be easy to discern a real discovery of science, a work of invention or eloquence, in the popular language of the country<sup>118</sup>.

<sup>117</sup> I will select three singular examples of this classic enthusiasm. 1. At the synod of Florence, Gemistus Pletho said, in familiar conversation to George of Trebizond, that in a short time mankind would unanimously renounce the Gospel and the Koran for a religion similar to that of the Gentiles (Leo Allatius, apud Fabricium, tom. x. p. 751.). 2. Paul II. persecuted the Roman academy; which had been founded by Pomponius Lætius; and the principal members were accused of heresy, impiety, and Paganism (Tiraboschi, tom. vi. P. i. p. 81, 82.). 3. In the next century, some scholars and poets in France celebrated the success of Jodelle's tragedy of Cleopatra, by a festival of Bacchus, and as it is said, by the sacrifice of a goat (B. yle, Dictionnaire, JODELLE. Fontenelle, tom. iii. p. 56—61.). Yet the spirit of bigotry might often discern a serious impiety in the sportive play of fancy and learning.

<sup>118</sup> The survivor Boccace died in the year 1375; and we cannot place before 1480, the composition of the Morgante Maggiore of Pulci, and the Orlando Innamorato of Boyardo (Tiraboschi, tom. vi. P. ii. p. 174—177.).

But

But as soon as it had been deeply saturated with the celestial dew, the soil was quickened into vegetation and life; the modern idioms were refined: the classics of Athens and Rome inspired a pure taste and a generous emulation; and in Italy, as afterwards in France and England, the pleasing reign of poetry and fiction was succeeded by the light of speculative and experimental philosophy. Genius may anticipate the season of maturity; but in the education of a people, as in that of an individual, memory must be exercised, before the powers of reason and fancy can be expanded; nor may the artist hope to equal or surpass, till he has learned to imitate, the works of his predecessors.

C H A P.
LXVI.

C H A P. LXVII.

Schism of the Greeks and Latins.—Reign and Character of Amurath the Second.—Crusade of Ladislaus King of Hungary.—His Defeat and Death.—John Huniades.—Scanderbeg.—Constantine Palæologus last Emperor of the East.

C H A P.
LXVII.

Comparison of Rome and Constanti-
nople.

THE respective merits of Rome and Constantinople are compared and celebrated by an eloquent Greek the father of the Italian schools*. The view of the ancient capital, the seat of his ancestors, surpassed the most sanguine expectations of Emanuel Chrysoloras; and he no longer blamed the exclamation of an old sophist, that Rome was the habitation, not of men, but of gods. Those gods, and those men, had long since vanished; but, to the eye of liberal enthusiasm, the majesty of ruin restored the image of her ancient prosperity. The monuments of the consuls and Cæsars, of the martyrs and apostles, engaged on all sides the curiosity of the philosopher and the Christian; and he confessed, that in every age the arms and the religion of Rome were destined to reign over the earth. While Chrysoloras admired the venerable beauties of the mother, he was not forgetful of his native country, her fairest daughter, her Imperial colony; and the Byzantine patriot expatiates

* The epistle of Manuel Chrysoloras to the emperor John Palæologus, will not offend the eye or ear of a classical student (ad calcem Codini de Antiquitatibus C. P. p. 107—126.). The superscription suggests a chronological remark, that John Palæologus II. was associated in the empire before the year 1414, the date of Chrysoloras's death. A still earlier date, at least 1408, is deduced from the age of his youngest sons, Demetrius and Thomas, who were both Porphyrogeniti (Ducange, Fam. Byzant. p. 244. 247.).

with

with zeal and truth, on the eternal advantages of nature; and the more transitory glories of art and dominion, which adorned, or had adorned, the city of Constantine. Yet the perfection of the copy still redounds (as he modestly observes) to the honour of the original, and parents are delighted to be renewed, and even excelled, by the superior merit of their children. "Constantinople," says the orator, "is situate on a commanding point, between Europe and Asia, between the Archipelago and the Euxine. By her interposition, the two seas, and the two continents, are united for the common benefit of nations; and the gates of commerce may be shut or opened at her command. The harbour, encompassed on all sides by the sea and the continent, is the most secure and capacious in the world. The walls and gates of Constantinople may be compared with those of Babylon: the towers are many; each tower is a solid and lofty structure; and the second wall, the outer fortification, would be sufficient for the defence and dignity of an ordinary capital. A broad and rapid stream may be introduced into the ditches; and the artificial island may be encompassed, like Athens<sup>2</sup>, by land or water." Two strong and natural causes are alleged for the perfection of the model of new Rome. The royal founder reigned over the most illustrious nations of the globe; and in the accomplishment of his designs, the power of the Romans was combined with the art and science of the Greeks. Other cities have been reared to maturity by accident and time; their beauties are mingled with disorder and deformity; and the inhabitants, unwilling to remove from their natal spot, are incapable of correcting the errors of their ancestors, and the original vices of situation or climate. But the free idea of Constantinople was formed and executed by a single mind; and the primitive <sup>2</sup> Somebody observed, that the city of Athens might be circumnavigated (εις την περὶ τῶν Ἀθηναίων ὄνυσθαι καὶ παραπλεῖν καὶ περιπλεῖν). But what may be true in a rhetorical sense of Constantinople, cannot be applied to the situation of Athens, five miles from the sea, and not intersected or surrounded by any navigable streams.

C H A P.
LXVII.

model was improved by the obedient zeal of the subjects and successors of the first monarch. The adjacent isles were stored with an inexhaustible supply of marble; but the various materials were transported from the most remote shores of Europe and Asia; and the public and private buildings, the palaces, churches, aqueducts, cisterns, porticoes, columns, baths, and hippodromes, were adapted to the greatness of the capital of the East. The superfluity of wealth was spread along the shores of Europe and Asia; and the Byzantine territory, as far as the Euxine, the Hellespont, and the long wall, might be considered as a populous suburb and a perpetual garden. In this flattering picture, the past and the present, the times of prosperity and decay, are artfully confounded; but a sigh and a confession escape from the orator, that his wretched country was the shadow and sepulchre of its former self. The works of ancient sculpture had been defaced by Christian zeal or Barbaric violence; the fairest structures were demolished; and the marbles of Paros or Numidia were burnt for lime, or applied to the meanest uses. Of many a statue, the place was marked by an empty pedestal; of many a column, the size was determined by a broken capital; the tombs of the emperors were scattered on the ground; the stroke of time was accelerated by storms and earthquakes; and the vacant space was adorned, by vulgar tradition, with fabulous monuments of gold and silver. From these wonders, which lived only in memory or belief, he distinguishes however the porphyry pillar, the column and colossus of Justinian<sup>3</sup>, and the church, more especially the dome, of St. Sophia; the best conclusion, since it could not be described according to its merits, and after it no other object could deserve to be mentioned. But he forgets, that a

<sup>3</sup> Nicephorus Gregoras has described the colossus of Justinian (l. vii. 12.): but his measures are false and inconsistent. The editor Boivin consulted his friend Girardon; and the sculptor gave him the true proportions of an equestrian statue. That of Justi-

nian was still visible to Peter Gyllius, not on the column, but in the outward court of the seraglio; and he was at Constantinople when it was melted down, and cast into a brass cannon (de Topograph. C. P. l. ii. c. 17).

century before, the trembling fabrics of the colossus and the church had been saved and supported by the timely care of Andronicus the elder. Thirty years after the emperor had fortified St. Sophia with two new buttresses or pyramids, the eastern hemisphere suddenly gave way; and the images, the altars, and the sanctuary, were crushed by the falling ruin. The mischief indeed was speedily repaired; the rubbish was cleared by the incessant labour of every rank and age; and the poor remains of riches and industry were consecrated by the Greeks to the most stately and venerable temple of the East<sup>4</sup>.

C H A P.
LXVII.

The last hope of the falling city and empire was placed in the harmony of the mother and daughter, in the maternal tenderness of Rome, and the filial obedience of Constantinople. In the synod of Florence, the Greeks and Latins had embraced, and subscribed, and promised; but these signs of friendship were perfidious or fruitless<sup>5</sup>; and the baseless fabric of the union vanished like a dream<sup>6</sup>. The emperor and his prelates returned home in the Venetian galleys; but as they touched at the Morea and the isles of Corfu and Lesbos, the subjects of the Latins complained that the pretended union would be an instrument of oppression. No sooner did they land on the Byzantine shore than they were saluted, or rather assailed, with a general murmur of zeal and discontent. During their absence, above two years, the capital had been deprived of its civil and ecclesiastical rulers: fanaticism fermented in

The Greek schism after the council of Florence, A. D. 1440—1443.

<sup>4</sup> See the decay and repairs of St. Sophia, in Nicephorus Gregoras (l. vii. 12. l. xv. 2.). The building was propped by Andronicus in 1317, the eastern hemisphere fell in 1545. The Greeks, in their pompous rhetoric, exalt the beauty and holiness of the church, an earthly heaven, the abode of angels, and of God himself, &c.

<sup>5</sup> The genuine and original narrative of Syropulus (p. 312—351.) opens the schism from the first office of the Greeks at Venice, to the general opposition at Constantinople of the clergy and people.

<sup>6</sup> On the schism of Constantinople, see Phranza (l. ii. c. 17.), Laonicus Chalcondyles (l. vi. p. 155, 156.), and Ducas (c. 31.); the last of whom writes with truth and freedom. Among the moderns we may distinguish the continuator of Fleury (tom. xxii. p. 338, &c. 401. 420, &c.), and Spondanus (A. D. 1440—30.). The sense of the latter is drowned in prejudice and passion, as soon as Rome and religion are concerned.

C H A P.
LXVII.

anarchy; the most furious monks reigned over the conscience of women and bigots; and the hatred of the Latin name was the first principle of nature and religion. Before his departure for Italy, the emperor had flattered the city with the assurance of a prompt relief and a powerful succour; and the clergy, confident in their orthodoxy and science, had promised themselves and their flocks an easy victory over the blind shepherds of the West. The double disappointment exasperated the Greeks; the conscience of the subscribing prelates was awakened; the hour of temptation was past; and they had more to dread from the public repentment, than they could hope from the favour of the emperor or the pope. Instead of justifying their conduct, they deplored their weakness, professed their contrition, and cast themselves on the mercy of God and of their brethren. To the reproachful question, what had been the event or the use of their Italian synod? they answered with sighs and tears, "Alas! we have made a new faith; we have exchanged piety for impiety; we have betrayed the immaculate sacrifice; and we are become Azymites." (The Azymites were those who celebrated the communion with unleavened bread; and I must retract or qualify the praise which I have bestowed on the growing philosophy of the times.) "Alas! we have been seduced by distress, by fraud, and by the hopes and fears of a transitory life. The hand that has signed the union should be cut off; and the tongue that has pronounced the Latin creed deserves to be torn from the root." The best proof of their repentance was an increase of zeal for the most trivial rites and the most incomprehensible doctrines; and an absolute separation from all, without excepting their prince, who preserved some regard for honour and consistency. After the decease of the patriarch Joseph, the archbishops of Heraclea and Trebizond had courage to refuse the vacant office; and cardinal Bessarion preferred the warm and comfortable shelter of the Vatican. The choice of the emperor and his clergy was confined to Metrophanes phanes of Cyzicus: he was consecrated in St. Sophia, but the temple was vacant. The cross-bearers abdicated their service; the infection spread from the city to the villages; and Metrophanes discharged, without effect, some ecclesiastical thunders against a nation of schismatics. The eyes of the Greeks were directed to Mark of Ephesus, the champion of his country; and the sufferings of the holy confessor were repaid with a tribute of admiration and applause. His example and writings propagated the flame of religious discord; age and infirmity soon removed him from the world; but the gospel of Mark was not a law of forgiveness; and he requested with his dying breath, that none of the adherents of Rome might attend his obsequies or pray for his soul.

C H A P.
LXVII.

The schism was not confined to the narrow limits of the Byzantine empire. Secure under the Mamaluke sceptre, the three patriarchs of Alexandria, Antioch, and Jerusalem, assembled a numerous synod; disowned their representatives at Ferrara and Florence; condemned the creed and council of the Latins; and threatened the emperor of Constantinople with the censures of the Eastern church. Of the sectaries of the Greek communion, the Russians were the most powerful, ignorant, and superstitious. Their primate, the cardinal Isidore, hastened from Florence to Moscow<sup>7</sup>, to reduce the independent nation under the Roman yoke. But the Russian bishops had been educated at mount Athos; and the prince and people embraced the theology of their priests. They were scandalised by the title, the pomp, the Latin cross of the legate, the friend of those impious men who shaved their beards, and performed the divine office with gloves on their hands and rings on their fingers: Isidore was condemned by a synod; his person was imprisoned in a mo-

Zeal of the Orientals and Russians.

<sup>7</sup> Isidore was metropolitan of Kiow, but the Greeks subject to Poland have removed that see from the ruins of Kiow to Lemberg, or Leopold (Herbstein, in Ramusio, tom. ii. p. 127.). On the other hand, the Russians transferred their spiritual obedience to the archbishop, who became, in 1588, the patriarch, of Moscow (Levesque, Hist. de Russie, tom. iii. p. 188. 190. from a Greek MS. at Turin, Iter et labores Archiepiscopi Arsenii).

C H A P.
I. XVII.

nastery ; and it was with extreme difficulty, that the cardinal could escape from the hands of a fierce and fanatic people<sup>9</sup>. The Russians refused a passage to the missionaries of Rome who aspired to convert the Pagans beyond the Tanais<sup>9</sup>; and their refusal was justified by the maxim, that the guilt of idolatry is less damnable than that of schism. The errors of the Bohemians were excused by their abhorrence for the pope ; and a deputation of the Greek clergy solicited the friendship of those sanguinary enthusiasts<sup>10</sup>. While Eugenius triumphed in the union and orthodoxy of the Greeks, his party was contracted to the walls, or rather to the palace, of Constantinople. The zeal of Palæologus had been excited by interest ; it was soon cooled by opposition : an attempt to violate the national belief might endanger his life and crown ; nor could the pious rebels be destitute of foreign and domestic aid. The sword of his brother Demetrius, who in Italy had maintained a prudent and popular silence, was half unsheathed in the cause of religion ; and Amurath, the Turkish sultan, was displeas'd and alarmed by the seeming friendship of the Greeks and Latins.

Reign and
character of Amurath II.
A. D.
1421—1451,
February 9.

“ Sultan Murad or Amurath, lived forty-nine, and reigned thirty “ years, six months, and eight days. He was a just and valiant “ prince, of a great soul, patient of labours, learned, merciful, reli“ gious, charitable ; a lover and encourager of the studious, and of

<sup>9</sup> The curious narrative of Levesque (Hist. de Russie, tom. ii. p. 242—247.) is extracted from the patriarchal archives. The scenes of Ferrara and Florence are described by ignorance and passion ; but the Russians are credible in the account of their own prejudices.

<sup>9</sup> The Shamanism, the ancient religion of the Samanæans and Gymnosophists, has been driven by the more popular Bramins from India into the northern deserts ; the naked philosophers were compelled to wrap themselves in fur ; but they insensibly sunk into wizards and physicians. The Mordvans and Tcheremisses in the European Russia adhere to this religion, which is formed on the earthly model of one king or God, his ministers or angels, and the rebellious spirits who oppose his government. As these tribes of the Volga have no images, they might more justly retort on the Latin missionaries the name of idolaters (Levesque, Hist. des Peuples soumis à la Domination des Russes, tom. i. p. 194—237. 423—460.).

<sup>10</sup> Spondanus, Annal. Eccles. tom. ii. A. D. 1451, N<sup>o</sup> 13. The Epistle of the Greeks, with a Latin version, is extant in the college library at Prague.

“ all who excelled in any art or science ; a good emperor, and a great general. No man obtained more or greater victories than Amurath : Belgrade alone withstood his attacks. Under his reign, the soldier was ever victorious, the citizen rich and secure. If he subdued any country, his first care was to build mosques and caravanseras, hospitals, and colleges. Every year he gave a thousand pieces of gold to the sons of the prophet ; and sent two thousand five hundred to the religious persons of Mecca, Medina, and Jerusalem.” This portrait is transcribed from the historian of the Othman empire : but the applause of a servile and superstitious people has been lavished on the worst of tyrants ; and the virtues of a sultan are often the vices most useful to himself, or most agreeable to his subjects. A nation ignorant of the equal benefits of liberty and law, must be awed by the flashes of arbitrary power : the cruelty of a despot will assume the character of justice ; his profusion, of liberality ; his obstinacy, of firmness. If the most reasonable excuse be rejected, few acts of obedience will be found impossible ; and guilt must tremble, where innocence cannot always be secure. The tranquillity of the people, and the discipline of the troops, were best maintained by perpetual action in the field ; war was the trade of the Janizaries : and those who survived the peril, and divided the spoil, applauded the generous ambition of their sovereign. To propagate the true religion, was the duty of a faithful Musulman : the unbelievers were his enemies, and those of the prophet ; and, in the hands of the Turks, the scymetar was the only instrument of conversion. Under these circumstances, however, the justice and moderation of Amurath are attested by his conduct, and acknowledged by the Christians themselves ; who consider a prosperous reign and a peaceful death as the reward of his singular merits. In the vigour of his age and military power, he seldom engaged in war till he

<sup>11</sup> See Cantemir, History of the Othman Empire, p. 94. Murad, or Morad, may be more correct: but I have preferred the popular name, to that obscure diligence which is rarely successful in translating an Oriental, into the Roman, alphabet.

C H A P.
LXVII.

was justified by a previous and adequate provocation : the victorious sultan was disarmed by submission ; and in the observance of treaties, his word was inviolate and sacred<sup>12</sup>. The Hungarians were commonly the aggressors ; he was provoked by the revolt of Scanderbeg ; and the perfidious Caramanian was twice vanquished, and twice pardoned, by the Ottoman monarch. Before he invaded the Morea, Thebes had been surpris'd by the despot : in the conquest of Theffalonica, the grandson of Bajazet might dispute the recent purchase of the Venetians ; and after the first siege of Constantinople, the sultan was never tempted, by the distress, the absence, or the injuries of Palæologus, to extinguish the dying light of the Byzantine empire.

His double
abdication,
A. D.
1442—1444.

But the most striking feature in the life and character of Amurath, is the double abdication of the Turkish throne ; and, were not his motives debas'd by an alloy of superstition, we must praise the royal philosopher<sup>13</sup>, who at the age of forty could discern the vanity of human greatness. Resigning the sceptre to his son, he retired to the pleasant residence of Magnesia ; but he retired to the society of saints and hermits. It was not till the fourth century of the Hegira, that the religion of Mahomet had been corrupted by an institution so adverse to his genius ; but in the age of the crusades, the various orders of Dervishes were multiplied by the example of the Christian, and even the Latin, monks<sup>14</sup>. The lord of nations submitted to fast, and pray, and turn round in endless rotation with the fanatics, who mistook the giddiness of the head for the illumination of the spirit<sup>15</sup>. But he was soon awakened from this dream

of

<sup>12</sup> See Chalcondyles (l. vii. p. 186. 198.), Ducas (c. 33.), and Marinus Barletius (in Vit. Scanderbeg, p. 145, 146.). In his good faith towards the garrison of Sfetigrade, he was a lesson and example to his son Mahomet.

<sup>13</sup> Voltaire (Essai sur l'Histoire Generale, c. 89. p. 283, 284.) admires le Philosophe Turc ; would he have bestowed the same praise on a Christian prince for retiring to a monastery ? In his way, Voltaire was a bigot, an intolerant bigot.

<sup>14</sup> See the articles Dervische, Fakir, Nasfer, Robbaniat, in d'Herbelot's Bibliothèque Orientale. Yet the subject is superficially treated from the Persian and Arabian writers. It is among the Turks that these orders have principally flourished.

<sup>15</sup> Rycaut (in the present State of the Ottoman Empire, p. 242—268.) affords much information, which he drew from his personal conversation with the heads of the dervishes, most of whom ascribed their origin to the time of Orchan. He does not mention of enthusiasm, by the Hungarian invasion; and his obedient son was the foremost to urge the public danger and the wishes of the people. Under the banner of their veteran leader, the Janizaries fought and conquered; but he withdrew from the field of Varna, again to pray, to fast, and to turn round with his Magnesian brethren. These pious occupations were again interrupted by the danger of the state. A victorious army disdained the inexperience of their youthful ruler: the city of Adrianople was abandoned to rapine and slaughter; and the unanimous divan implored his presence to appease the tumult, and prevent the rebellion, of the Janizaries. At the well-known voice of their master, they trembled and obeyed; and the reluctant sultan was compelled to support his splendid servitude, till, at the end of four years, he was relieved by the angel of death. Age or disease, misfortune or caprice, have tempted several princes to descend from the throne; and they have had leisure to repent of their irretrievable step. But Amurath alone, in the full liberty of choice, after the trial of empire and solitude, has repeated his preference of a private life.

the

C H A P.
LXVII.

After the departure of his Greek brethren, Eugenius had not been unmindful of their temporal interest; and his tender regard for the Byzantine empire was animated by a just apprehension of the Turks, who approached, and might soon invade, the borders of Italy. But the spirit of the crusades had expired; and the coldness of the Franks was not less unreasonable than their headlong passion. In the eleventh century, a fanatic monk could precipitate Europe on Asia for the recovery of the holy sepulchre; but in the fifteenth, the most pressing motives of religion and policy were insufficient to unite the Latins in the defence of Christendom. Germany was an inexhaustible store-house of men and arms<sup>16</sup>: but that complex and languid body

Eugenius forms a league against the Turks,
A. D. 1443.

the Zichida of Chalcondyles (l. vii. p. 286.), <sup>16</sup> In the year 1431, Germany raised among whom Amurath retired: the Seids of 40,000 horse, men at arms, against the Habsburgs of Bohemia (Lefant, Hist. du Concile body required the impulse of a vigorous hand; and Frederic the third was alike impotent in his personal character and his Imperial dignity. A long war had impaired the strength, without fatiating the animosity of France and England<sup>17</sup>: but Philip, duke of Burgundy, was a vain and magnificent prince; and he enjoyed, without danger or expence, the adventurous piety of his subjects, who sailed, in a gallant fleet, from the coast of Flanders to the Hellespont. The maritime republics of Venice and Genoa were less remote from the scene of action; and their hostile fleets were associated under the standard of St. Peter. The kingdoms of Hungary and Poland, which covered as it were the interior pale of the Latin church, were the most nearly concerned to oppose the progress of the Turks. Arms were the patrimony of the Scythians and Sarmatians, and these nations might appear equal to the contest, could they point, against the common foe, those swords that were so wantonly drawn in bloody and domestic quarrels. But the same spirit was adverse to concord and obedience: a poor country and a limited monarch are incapable of maintaining a standing force; and the loose bodies of Polish and Hungarian horse were not armed with the sentiments and weapons which, on some occasions, have given irresistible weight to the French chivalry. Yet, on this side, the designs of the Roman pontiff, and the eloquence of cardinal Julian, his legate, were promoted by the circumstances of the times<sup>18</sup>; by the union of the de Basse, tom. i. p. 328.). At the siege of Nuys on the Rhine in 1474, the princes, prelates, and cities, sent their respective quotas: and the bishop of Munster (qui n'est pas des plus grands) furnished 1400 horse, 6000 foot, all in green, with 1200 waggons. The united armies of the king of England and the duke of Burgundy scarcely equalled one-third of this German host (Memoires de Philippe de Comines, l. iv. c. 2.). At present, six or seven hundred thousand men are maintained in constant pay and admirable discipline, by the powers of Germany.

C H A P.
LXVII.

<sup>17</sup> It was not till the year 1444, that France and England could agree on a truce of some months (See Rymer's Fœdera, and the chronicles of both nations).

<sup>18</sup> In the Hungarian crusade, Spondanus (Annal. Eccles. A. D. 1443, 1444.) has been my leading guide. He has diligently read, and critically compared, the Greek and Turkish materials, the historians of Hungary, Poland, and the West. His narrative is perspicuous; and where he can be free from a religious bias, the judgment of Spondanus is not contemptible.

two crowns on the head of Ladislaus<sup>19</sup>, a young and ambitious soldier; by the valour of an hero, whose name, the name of John Huniades, was already popular among the Christians, and formidable to the Turks. An endless treasure of pardons and indulgences was scattered by the legate; many private warriors of France and Germany enlisted under the holy banner; and the crusade derived some strength, or at least some reputation, from the new allies, both of Europe and Asia. A fugitive despot of Servia exaggerated the distress and ardour of the Christians beyond the Danube, who would unanimously rise to vindicate their religion and liberty. The Greek emperor<sup>20</sup>, with a spirit unknown to his fathers, engaged to guard the Bosphorus, and to rally from Constantinople at the head of his national and mercenary troops. The sultan of Caramania<sup>21</sup> announced the retreat of Amurat, and a powerful diversion in the heart of Anatolia; and if the fleets of the West could occupy at the same moment the straits of the Hellespont, the Ottoman monarchy would be dismembered and destroyed. Heaven and earth must rejoice in the perdition of the miscreants; and the legate, with prudent ambiguity, instilled the opinion of the invisible, perhaps the visible, aid, of the Son of God, and his divine Mother.

Of the Polish and Hungarian diets, a religious war was the unanimous cry; and Ladislaus, after passing the Danube, led an army of his confederate subjects as far as Sophia, the capital of the Bulgarian kingdom. In this expedition they obtained two signal vic-

C H A P.
LXVII.

Ladislaus,
king of Poland and Hungary, marches against them.

<sup>19</sup> I have curtailed the harsh letter (Wladislaus) which most writers affix to his name, either in compliance with the Polish pronunciation, or to distinguish him from his rival the infant Ladislaus of Austria. Their competition for the crown of Hungary is described by Callimachus (l. i. ii. p. 447—486.), Bonfinius (Decad. iii. l. iv.), Spondanus, and Lenzant.

<sup>20</sup> The Greek historians, Phranza, Chalcondyles, and Ducas, do not ascribe to their

prince a very active part in this crusade, which he seems to have promoted by his wishes, and injured by his fears.

<sup>21</sup> Cantemir (p. 88.) ascribes to his policy the original plan, and transcribes his animating epistle to the king of Hungary. But the Mahometan powers are seldom informed of the state of Christendom; and the situation and correspondence of the knights of Rhodes must connect them with the sultan of Caramania.

tories,

C H A P.
LXVII.

ories, which were justly ascribed to the valour and conduct of Huniades. In the first, with a vanguard of ten thousand men, he surpris'd the Turkish camp; in the second, he vanquish'd and made prisoner the most renowned of their generals, who possess'd the double advantage of ground and numbers. The approach of winter, and the natural and artificial obstacles of mount Hæmus, arrested the progress of the hero, who measured a narrow interval of six days march from the foot of the mountains to the hostile towers of Adrianople, and the friendly capital of the Greek empire. The retreat was undisturbed; and the entrance into Buda was at once a military and religious triumph. An ecclesiastical procession was followed by the king and his warriors on foot: he nicely balanced the merits and rewards of the two nations; and the pride of conquest was blended with the humble temper of Christianity. Thirteen banners, nine standards, and four thousand captives, were unquestionable trophies; and as all were willing to believe, and none were present to contradict, the crusaders multiplied, with unblushing confidence, the myriads of Turks whom they had left on the field of battle<sup>22</sup>. The most solid proof, and the most salutary consequence, of victory, was a deputation from the divan to solicit peace, to restore Servia, to ransom the prisoners, and to evacuate the Hungarian frontier. By this treaty, the rational objects of the war were obtained: the king, the despot, and Huniades himself, in the diet of Segedin, were satisfied with public and private emolument; a truce of ten years was concluded; and the followers of Jesus and Mahomet, who swore on the Gospel and the Koran, attested the word of God as the guardian of truth and the avenger of perfidy. In the place of the Gospel, the Turkish ministers had propos'd to substitute the Eucharist, the real presence of the Catholic deity; but the peace.

The Turkish

<sup>22</sup> In their letters to the emperor Frederick III. the Hungarians slay 30,000 Turks in one battle; but the modest Julian reduces the slaughter to 6000, or even 2000 infidels (Æneas Sylvius in Europ. c. 5. and epist. 44. 81. apud Spondanum).

Christians refused to profane their holy mysteries; and a superstitious conscience is less forcibly bound by the spiritual energy, than by the outward and visible symbols, of an oath<sup>23</sup>.

C H A P.
LXVII.

During the whole transaction, the cardinal legate had observed a fullen silence, unwilling to approve, and unable to oppose, the consent of the king and people. But the diet was not dissolved before Julian was fortified by the welcome intelligence, that Anatolia was invaded by the Caramanian, and Thrace by the Greek emperor; that the fleets of Genoa, Venice, and Burgundy, were masters of the Hellespont; and that the allies, informed of the victory, and ignorant of the treaty, of Ladislaus, impatiently waited for the return of his victorious army. “And is it thus,” exclaimed the cardinal<sup>24</sup>, “that you will desert their expectations and your own fortune. It is to them, to your God, and your fellow-Christians, that you have pledged your faith; and that prior obligation annihilates a rash and sacrilegious oath to the enemies of Christ. His vicar on earth is the Roman pontiff; without whose sanction you can neither promise nor perform. In his name I absolve your perjury and sanctify your arms: follow my footsteps in the paths of glory and salvation; and if still ye have scruples, devolve on my head the punishment and the sin.” This mischievous causistry was seconded by his respectable character, and the levity of popular assemblies: war was resolved, on the same spot where peace had so lately been sworn; and, in the execution of the treaty, the

Violation of the peace,
A. D. 1444

<sup>23</sup> See the origin of the Turkish war, and the first expedition of Ladislaus, in the 4th and 5th books of the 3<sup>d</sup> Decad of Bonfinius, who, in his division and style, copies Livy with tolerable success. Callimachus (l. ii. p. 487—496) is still more pure and authentic.

<sup>24</sup> I do not pretend to warrant the literal accuracy of Julian's speech, which is variously worded by Callimachus (l. iii. p. 505—507.), Bonfinius (Dec. iii. l. vi. p. 457, 458.), and other historians, who might indulge their own eloquence, while they represent one of the orators of the age. But they all agree in the advice and arguments for perjury, which in the field of controversy are fiercely attacked by the Protestants, and feebly defended by the Catholics. The latter are discouraged by the misfortune of Warna.

C H A P.
LXVII.

Turks were assaulted by the Christians; to whom, with some reason, they might apply the epithet of infidels. The falsehood of Ladislaus to his word and oath, was palliated by the religion of the times: the most perfect, or at least the most popular, excuse would have been the success of his arms and the deliverance of the Eastern church. But the same treaty which should have bound his conscience, had diminished his strength. On the proclamation of the peace, the French and German volunteers departed with indignant murmurs: the Poles were exhausted by distant warfare, and perhaps disgusted with foreign command; and their palatines accepted the first licence, and hastily retired to their provinces and castles. Even Hungary was divided by faction, or restrained by a laudable scruple; and the relics of the crusade that marched in the second expedition, were reduced to an inadequate force of twenty thousand men. A Walachian chief, who joined the royal standard with his vassals, presumed to remark that their numbers did not exceed the hunting retinue that sometimes attended the sultan; and the gift of two horses of matchless speed, might admonish Ladislaus of his secret foresight of the event. But the despot of Servia, after the restoration of his country and children, was tempted by the promise of new realms; and the inexperience of the king, the enthusiasm of the legate, and the martial presumption of Huniades himself, were persuaded that every obstacle must yield to the invincible virtue of the sword and the cross. After the passage of the Danube, two roads might lead to Constantinople and the Hellespont; the one direct, abrupt, and difficult, through the mountains of Hæmus; the other more tedious and secure, over a level country, and along the shores of the Euxine; in which their flanks, according to the Scythian discipline, might always be covered by a moveable fortification of waggons. The latter was judiciously preferred: the Catholics marched through the plains of Bulgaria, burning, with wanton cruelty, the churches and villages of the Christian natives; and their last station was at Warnæ, near the sea-

sea-shore; on which the defeat and death of Ladislaus have bestowed a memorable name<sup>25</sup>.

C H A P.
LXVII.

It was on this fatal spot, that, instead of finding a confederate fleet to second their operations, they were alarmed by the approach of Amurath himself, who had issued from his Magnesian solitude, and transported the forces of Asia to the defence of Europe. According to some writers, the Greek emperor had been awed, or seduced, to grant the passage of the Bosphorus; and an indelible stain of corruption is fixed on the Genoese, or the pope's nephew, the Catholic admiral, whose mercenary connivance betrayed the guard of the Hellespont. From Adrianople, the sultan advanced by hasty marches, at the head of sixty thousand men; and when the cardinal, and Huniades, had taken a nearer survey of the numbers and order of the Turks, these ardent warriors proposed the tardy and impracticable measure of a retreat. The king alone was resolved to conquer or die; and his resolution had almost been crowned with a glorious and salutary victory. The princes were opposite to each other in the centre; and the Beglerbegs, or generals of Anatolia and Romania, commanded on the right and left against the adverse divisions of the despot and Huniades. The Turkish wings were broken on the first onset: but the advantage was fatal; and the rash victors, in the heat of the pursuit, were carried away far from the annoyance of the enemy or the support of their friends. When Amurath beheld the flight of his squadrons, he despaired of his fortune and that of the empire: a veteran Janizary seized his horse's bridle; and he had magnanimity to pardon and reward the soldier who dared to perceive the terror, and arrest the flight, of his sovereign. A copy of the treaty, the monument of Christian perfidy, had been displayed

Battle of Warna,
A. D. 1444.
Nov. 10.

<sup>25</sup> Warna, under the Grecian name of Odesus, was a colony of the Milesians, which they denominated from the hero Ulysses (Cellarius, tom. i. p. 374. d'Anville, tom. i. p. 312.). According to Arrian's Periplus of the Euxine (p. 24, 25. in the 1st volume of Hudson's Geographers), it was situate 1740 stadia, or furlongs, from the mouth of the Danube, 2140 from Byzantium, and 360 to the north of a ridge or promontory of mount Hæmus, which advances into the sea.

C H A P.
LXVII.

Death of Ladislaus.

in the front of battle; and it is said, that the sultan in his distress, lifting his eyes and his hands to heaven, implored the protection of the God of truth; and called on the prophet Jesus himself to avenge the impious mockery of his name and religion<sup>26</sup>. With inferior numbers and disordered ranks, the king of Hungary rushed forwards in the confidence of victory, till his career was stopped by the impenetrable phalanx of the Janizaries. If we may credit the Ottoman annals, his horse was pierced by the javelin of Amurath<sup>27</sup>; he fell among the spears of the infantry; and a Turkish soldier proclaimed with a loud voice, "Hungarians, behold the head of your king!" The death of Ladislaus was the signal of their defeat. On his return from an intemperate pursuit, Huniades deplored his error and the public loss: he strove to rescue the royal body, till he was overwhelmed by the tumultuous crowd of the victors and vanquished; and the last efforts of his courage and conduct were exerted to save the remnant of his Walachian cavalry. Ten thousand Christians were slain in the disastrous battle of Warna: the loss of the Turks, more considerable in numbers, bore a smaller proportion to their total strength; yet the philosophic sultan was not ashamed to confess, that his ruin must be the consequence of a second and similar victory. At his command a column was erected on the spot where Ladislaus had fallen; but the modest inscription, instead of accusing the rashness, recorded the valour, and bewailed the misfortune, of the Hungarian youth<sup>28</sup>.

Before

<sup>26</sup> Some Christian writers affirm, that he drew from his bosom the host or wafer on which the treaty had not been sworn. The Moslems suppose, with more simplicity, an appeal to God and his prophet Jesus, which is likewise insinuated by Callimachus (l. iii. p. 516. Spondan. A. D. 1444, N<sup>o</sup> 8.).

<sup>27</sup> A critic will always distrust these spolia epima of a victorious general, so difficult for valour to obtain, so easy for flattery to invent (Cantemir, p. 90, 91.). Callimachus (l. iii.

p. 517.) more simply and probably affirms, supervenientibus Janizaris, telorum multitudine, non tam confossus est, quam obrutus.

<sup>28</sup> Besides some valuable hints from Æneas Sylvius, which are diligently collected by Spondanus, our best authorities are three historians of the xvth century, Philippus Callimachus (de Rebus a Vladislao Polonorum atque Hungarorum Rege gestis, libri iii. in Bel. Script. Rerum Hungaricarum, tom. i. p. 433—518.), Bonfinius (decad iii.

Before I lose sight of the field of Wara, I am tempted to pause on the character and story of two principal actors, the cardinal Julian and John Huniades. Julian<sup>29</sup> Cæsarini was born of a noble family of Rome: his studies had embraced both the Latin and Greek learning, both the sciences of divinity and law; and his versatile genius was equally adapted to the schools, the camp, and the court. No sooner had he been invested with the Roman purple, than he was sent into Germany to arm the empire against the rebels and heretics of Bohemia. The spirit of persecution is unworthy of a Christian; the military profession ill becomes a priest; but the former is excused by the times; and the latter was ennobled by the courage of Julian, who stood dauntless and alone in the disgraceful flight of the German host. As the pope's legate, he opened the council of Basil; but the president soon appeared the most strenuous champion of ecclesiastical freedom; and an opposition of seven years was conducted by his ability and zeal. After promoting the strongest measures against the authority and person of Eugenius, some secret motive of interest or conscience engaged him to desert on a sudden the popular party. The cardinal withdrew himself from Basil to Ferrara; and, in the debates of the Greeks and Latins, the two nations admired the dexterity of his arguments and the depth of his theological erudition<sup>30</sup>. In his Hungarian embassy we have already seen the mischievous effects of his sophistry and eloquence, of which Julian himself was the first victim. The cardinal, who performed

C H A P.
LXXVII.
The cardinal
Julian.

l. v. p. 460—467), and Chalcocondyles (l. vii. p. 165—179.). The two first were Italians, but they passed their lives in Poland and Hungary (Fabric. Bibliot. Latin. med. et infimæ Ætatis, tom. i. p. 324. Vossius de Hist. Latin. l. iii. c. 8. 11. Bayle, Dictionnaire, BONFINIUS). A small tract of Fælix Petancius, chancellor of Segnia (ad calcem Cuspinian. de Cæsaribus, p. 716—722.), represents the theatre of the war in the xvth century.

<sup>29</sup> M. Lenfant has described the origin (Hist. du Concile de Basle, tom. i. p. 247, &c.), and Bohemian campaign (p. 315, &c.), of cardinal Julian. His services at Basil and Ferrara, and his unfortunate end, are occasionally related by Spondanus, and the continuator of Fleury.

<sup>30</sup> Syropulus honourably praises the talents of an enemy (p. 117.): τὰ πάντα τὰ καὶ ἐπὶ ὁ Ἰουλιανὸς, περὶ ἀκρίβειαν καὶ ἀγαθὴν καὶ λογικὴν, καὶ μὴ ἐπιτηδεύων καὶ διὰ σπουδῆς τὸν μῆτρον.

CHAP.
LXVII.

the duties of a priest and a soldier, was lost in the defeat of Warna. The circumstances of his death are variously related; but it is believed, that a weighty incumbrance of gold impeded his flight, and tempted the cruel avarice of some Christian fugitives.

John Corvinus Huniades.

From an humble, or at least a doubtful origin, the merit of John Huniades promoted him to the command of the Hungarian armies. His father was a Walachian, his mother a Greek; her unknown race might possibly ascend to the emperors of Constantinople; and the claims of the Walachians, with the surname of Corvinus, from the place of his nativity, might suggest a thin pretence for mingling his blood with the patricians of ancient Rome<sup>31</sup>. In his youth he served in the wars of Italy; and was retained, with twelve horsemen, by the bishop of Zagrab: the valour of the white knight<sup>32</sup> was soon conspicuous; he increased his fortunes by a noble and wealthy marriage; and in the defence of the Hungarian borders, he won in the same year three battles against the Turks. By his influence, Ladislaus of Poland obtained the crown of Hungary; and the important service was rewarded by the title and office of Waivod of Transylvania. The first of Julian's crusades added two Turkish laurels on his brow; and in the public distresses the fatal errors of Warna were forgotten. During the absence and minority of Ladislaus of Austria, the titular king, Huniades was elected supreme captain and governor of Hungary; and if envy at first was silenced by terror, a reign of twelve years supposes the arts of policy as well as of war. Yet the idea of a consummate general is not delineated in his campaigns; the white knight fought with the hand rather than <sup>31</sup> See Bonfinius, decad. iii. l. iv. p. 423. Could the Italian historian pronounce, or the king of Hungary hear, without a blush, the absurd flattery, which confounded the name of a Walachian village with the casual, though glorious, epithet of a single branch of the Valerian family at Rome?

<sup>32</sup> Philip de Comines (Memoires, l. vi.

c. 13), from the tradition of the times, mentions him with high encomiums, but under the whimsical name of the Chevalier Blanc de Valaigne (Valachia). The Greek Chalcocondyles, and the Turkish Annals of Leunclavius, presume to accuse his fidelity or valour.

the head, as the chief of desultory Barbarians, who attack without fear and fly without shame; and his military life is composed of a romantic alternative of victories and escapes. By the Turks, who employed his name to frighten their perverse children, he was corruptly denominated Jancus Lain, or the Wicked: their hatred is the proof of their esteem; the kingdom which he guarded was inaccessible to their arms; and they felt him most daring and formidable, when they fondly believed the captain and his country irrecoverably lost. Instead of confining himself to a defensive war, four years after the defeat of Warna he again penetrated into the heart of Bulgaria; and in the plain of Cossova sustained, till the third day, the shock of the Ottoman army, four times more numerous than his own. As he fled alone through the woods of Wallachia, the hero was surprised by two robbers; but while they disputed a gold chain that hung at his neck, he recovered his sword, slew the one, terrified the other, and, after new perils of captivity or death, consoled by his presence an afflicted kingdom. But the last and most glorious action of his life was the defence of Belgrade against the powers of Mahomet the second in person. After a siege of forty days, the Turks, who had already entered the town, were compelled to retreat; and the joyful nations celebrated Huniades and Belgrade as the bulwarks of Christendom<sup>33</sup>. About a month after this great deliverance, the champion expired; and his most splendid epitaph is the regret of the Ottoman prince, who sighed that he could no longer hope for revenge against the single antagonist who had triumphed over his arms. On the first vacancy of the throne, Matthias Corvinus, a youth of eighteen years of age, was elected and crowned by the grateful Hungarians. His reign was

C H A P.
LXVII.

His defence of Belgrade,
and death,
A. D. 1456,
July 22,
Sept. 4.

<sup>33</sup> See Bonfinius (decad. iii. l. viii. p. 492.) and in their respective narratives, neither the faint nor the hero condescend to take notice of Huniades shared the glory of the defence of Belgrade with Capitran, a Franciscan friar;

C H A P.
LXVII.

prosperous and long: Matthias aspired to the glory of a conqueror and a saint; but his purest merit is the encouragement of learning; and the Latin orators and historians, who were invited from Italy by the son, have shed the lustre of their eloquence on the father's character<sup>34</sup>.

Birth and education of Scanderbeg, prince of Albania,
A. D.
1404—1413,
&c.

In the list of heroes, John Huniades and Scanderbeg are commonly associated<sup>35</sup>: and they are both entitled to our notice, since their occupation of the Ottoman arms delayed the ruin of the Greek empire. John Castriot, the father of Scanderbeg<sup>36</sup>, was the hereditary prince of a small district of Epirus or Albania, between the mountains and the Adriatic sea. Unable to contend with the sultan's power, Castriot submitted to the hard conditions of peace and tribute: he delivered his four sons as the pledges of his fidelity; and the Christian youths, after receiving the mark of circumcision, were instructed in the Mahometan religion, and trained in the arms and arts of Turkish policy<sup>37</sup>. The three elder brothers were confounded in the crowd of slaves; and the poison to which their deaths are ascribed, cannot be verified or disproved by any positive evidence. Yet the suspicion is in a great measure removed by the kind and

<sup>34</sup> See Bonfinius, decad. iii. l. viii.—decad. iv. l. viii. The observations of Spondanus on the life and character of Matthias Corvinus, are curious and critical (A. D. 1464, N<sup>o</sup> 1. 1475, N<sup>o</sup> 6. 1476, N<sup>o</sup> 14—16. 1490, N<sup>o</sup> 4, 5.). Italian fame was the object of his vanity. His actions are celebrated in the Epitome Rerum Hungaricarum (p. 322—412.) of Peter Ranzanus, a Sicilian. His wife and facetious sayings are registered by Galeſtus Martius of Narni (528—568.): and we have a particular narrative of his wedding and coronation. These three tracts are all contained in the 1st vol. of Bel's Scriptores Rerum Hungaricarum.

<sup>35</sup> They are ranked by Sir William Temple, in his pleasing Essay on Heroic Virtue (works, vol. iii. p. 385), among the seven chiefs who have deserved, without wearing, a royal crown; Belisarius, Narſes, Gonſalvo of Cordova, William first prince of Orange, Alexander duke of Parma, John Huniades, and George Castriot, or Scanderbeg.

<sup>36</sup> I could wish for some simple, authentic memoirs of a friend of Scanderbeg, which would introduce me to the man, the time, and the place. In the old and national history of Marinus Barletius, a priest of Scodra (de Vita, Moribus, et Rebus gestis Goorgii Castrioti, &c. libri xiii. pp. 367. Argentorat. 1537, in fol.), his gawdy and cumbersome robes are stuck with many false jewels. See likewise Chalcocondyles, l. vii. p. 185. l. viii. p. 229.

<sup>37</sup> His circumcision, education, &c. are marked by Marinus with brevity and reluctance (l. i. p. 6, 7.).

paternal treatment of George Castriot, the fourth brother, who from his tender youth, displayed the strength and spirit of a soldier. The successive overthrow of a Tartar and two Persians, who carried a proud defiance to the Turkish court, recommended him to the favour of Amurath, and his Turkish appellation of Scanderbeg (Iskender Beg), or the lord Alexander, is an indelible memorial of his glory and fervitude. His father's principality was reduced into a province: but the loss was compensated by the rank and title of Sanjiak, a command of five thousand horse, and the prospect of the first dignities of the empire. He served with honour in the wars of Europe and Asia; and we may smile at the art or credulity of the historian, who supposes, that in every encounter he spared the Christians, while he fell with a thundering arm on his Musulman foes. The glory of Huniades is without reproach; he fought in the defence of his religion and country; but the enemies who applaud the patriot, have branded his rival with the name of traitor and apostate. In the eyes of the Christians, the rebellion of Scanderbeg is justified by his father's wrongs, the ambiguous death of his three brothers, his own degradation, and the slavery of his country; and they adore the generous, though tardy, zeal, with which he asserted the faith and independence of his ancestors. But he had imbibed from his ninth year the doctrines of the Koran; he was ignorant of the Gospel; the religion of a foldier is determined by authority and habit; nor is it easy to conceive what new illumination at the age of forty<sup>38</sup> could be poured into his soul. His motives would be less exposed to the suspicion of interest or revenge, had he broken his chain from the moment that he was sensible of its weight: but a long oblivion had surely impaired his original right; and every year of obedience and <sup>38</sup> Since Scanderbeg died A. D. 1466, in the lxiij<sup>4</sup> year of his age (Marinus, l. xiii. p. 370.), he was born in 1403; since he was torn from his parents by the Turks, when he was novennis (Marinus, l. i. p. 1. 6.), that event must have happened in 1412, nine years before the accession of Amurath II. who must have inherited, not acquired, the Albanian slave. Spondanus has remarked this inconsistency, A. D. 1431, N<sup>o</sup> 31. 1443, N<sup>o</sup> 14.

reward

C H A P.
LXVII.

His revolt from the Turks,
A. D. 1443,
Nov. 28.

reward had cemented the mutual bond of the sultan and his subject. If Scanderbeg had long harboured the belief of Christianity and the intention of revolt, a worthy mind must condemn the base dissimulation, that could serve only to betray, that could promise only to be foresworn, that could actively join in the temporal and spiritual perdition of so many thousands of his unhappy brethren. Shall we praise a secret correspondence with Huniades, while he commanded the vanguard of the Turkish army? shall we excuse the desertion of his standard, a treacherous desertion which abandoned the victory to the enemies of his benefactor? In the confusion of a defeat, the eye of Scanderbeg was fixed on the Reis Effendi or principal secretary: with the dagger at his breast, he extorted a firman or patent for the government of Albania; and the murder of the guiltless scribe and his train, prevented the consequences of an immediate discovery. With some bold companions, to whom he had revealed his design, he escaped in the night, by rapid marches, from the field of battle to his paternal mountains. The gates of Croya were opened to the royal mandate; and no sooner did he command the fortress, than George Castriot dropt the mask of dissimulation; abjured the prophet and the sultan, and proclaimed himself the avenger of his family and country. The names of religion and liberty provoked a general revolt: the Albanians, a martial race, were unanimous to live and die with their hereditary prince; and the Ottoman garrisons were indulged in the choice of martyrdom or baptism. In the assembly of the states of Epirus, Scanderbeg was elected general of the Turkish war; and each of the allies engaged to furnish his respective proportion of men and money. From these contributions, from his patrimonial estate, and from the valuable salt-pits of Selina, he drew an annual revenue of two hundred thousand ducats<sup>39</sup>; and the entire sum, exempt from the demands of luxury, was strictly appropriated to the public use. His manners were popular; but his discipline was severe; and every superfluous vice was banished from his camp: his example strengthened his command; and under his conduct, the Albanians were invincible in their own opinion and that of their enemies. The bravest adventurers of France and Germany were allured by his fame and retained in his service: his standing militia consisted of eight thousand horse and seven thousand foot; the horses were small, the men were active: but he viewed with a discerning eye the difficulties and resources of the mountains; and, at the blaze of the beacons, the whole nation was distributed in the strongest posts. With such unequal arms, Scanderbeg resisted twenty-three years the powers of the Ottoman empire; and two conquerors, Amurath the second, and his greater son, were repeatedly baffled by a rebel, whom they pursued with seeming contempt and implacable resentment. At the head of sixty thousand horse and forty thousand Janizaries, Amurath entered Albania; he might ravage the open country, occupy the defenceless towns, convert the churches into mosques, circumcise the Christian youths, and punish with death his adult and obstinate captives: but the conquests of the sultan were confined to the petty fortrefs of Sfetigrade; and the garrison, invincible to his arms, was oppressed by a paltry artifice and a superstitious scruple<sup>40</sup>. Amurath retired with shame and loss from the walls of Croya, the castle and residence of the Castriots; the march, the siege, the retreat, were harassed by a vexatious, and almost invisible, adversary<sup>41</sup>; and the disappointment might tend to embitter, perhaps to shorten, the last days of the sultan<sup>42</sup>. In the

<sup>39</sup> His revenue and forces are luckily given by Marinus (l. ii. p. 44.).

C H A P.
LXVII.

His valour,

<sup>40</sup> There were two Dibras, the upper and lower, the Bulgarian and Albanian: the former, 70 miles from Croya (l. i. p. 17.), was contiguous to the fortrefs of Sfetigrade, whose inhabitants refused to drink from a well into which a dead dog had traiterously been cast (l. v. p. 139, 140.). We want a good map of Epirus.

<sup>41</sup> Compare the Turkish narrative of Can-temir (p. 92.), with the pompous and prolix

declamation in the ivth, vth, and vith books of the Albanian priest, who has been copied by the tribe of strangers and moderns.

<sup>42</sup> In honour of his hero, Barletius (l. vi. p. 188—192.) kills the sultan, by disease indeed, under the walls of Croya. But this audacious fiction is disproved by the Greeks and Turks, who agree in the time and manner of Amurath's death at Adrianople.

C H A P.
LXVII.

fulness of conquest, Mahomet the second still felt at his bosom this domestic thorn: his lieutenants were permitted to negotiate a truce; and the Albanian prince may justly be praised as a firm and able champion of his national independence. The enthusiast of chivalry and religion has ranked him with the names of Alexander and Pyrrhus; nor would they blush to acknowledge their intrepid countrymen: but his narrow dominion, and slender powers, must leave him at an humble distance below the heroes of antiquity, who triumphed over the East and the Roman legions. His splendid achievements, the bashas whom he encountered, the armies that he discomfited, and the three thousand Turks who were slain by his single hand, must be weighed in the scales of suspicious criticism. Against an illiterate enemy, and in the dark solitude of Epirus, his partial biographers may safely indulge the latitude of romance: but their fictions are exposed by the light of Italian history; and they afford a strong presumption against their own truth, by a fabulous tale of his exploits, when he passed the Adriatic with eight hundred horse to the succour of the king of Naples<sup>43</sup>. Without disparagement to his fame, they might have owned that he was finally oppressed by the Ottoman powers: in his extreme danger, he applied to pope Pius the second for a refuge in the ecclesiastical state; and his resources were almost exhausted, since Scanderbeg died a fugitive at Lissus on the Venetian territory<sup>44</sup>. His sepulchre was soon violated by the Turkish conquerors; but the Janizaries, who wore his bones enchased in a bracelet, declared by this superstitious and death,

A. D. 1467,
January 17.

<sup>43</sup> See the marvels of his Calabrian expedition in the ixth and xth books of Marinus Barletius, which may be rectified by the testimony or silence of Muratori (Annali, d'Italia, tom. xiii. p. 291.), and his original authors (Joh. Simonetta de Rebus Francisci Sfortiæ, in Muratori, Script. Rerum Ital. tom. xxi. p. 728. et alios). The Albanian cavalry, under the name of Stradiots, soon became famous in the wars of Italy (Me-moires de Comines, l. viii. c. 5.).

<sup>44</sup> Spondanus, from the best evidence and the most rational criticism, has reduced the giant Scanderbeg to the human size (A. D. 1461, N<sup>o</sup> 20. 1463, N<sup>o</sup> 9. 1465, N<sup>o</sup> 12, 13. 1467, N<sup>o</sup> 1.). His own letter to the pope, and the testimony of Phranza (l. iii. c. 28.), a refugee in the neighbouring isle of Corfu, demonstrate his last distress, which is awkwardly concealed by Marinus Barletius (l. x.).

C H A P.
LXVII.

amulet their involuntary reverence for his valour. The instant ruin of his country may redound to the hero's glory; yet, had he balanced the consequences of submission and resistance, a patriot perhaps would have declined the unequal contest which must depend on the life and genius of one man. Scanderbeg might indeed be supported by the rational, though fallacious, hope, that the pope, the king of Naples, and the Venetian republic, would join in the defence of a free and Christian people, who guarded the sea-coast of the Adriatic, and the narrow passage from Greece to Italy. His infant son was saved from the national shipwreck; the Castriots<sup>45</sup> were invested with a Neapolitan dukedom, and their blood continues to flow in the noblest families of the realm. A colony of Albanian fugitives obtained a settlement in Calabria, and they preserve at this day the language and manners of their ancestors<sup>46</sup>.

In the long career of the decline and fall of the Roman empire, I have reached at length the last reign of the princes of Constantinople, who so feebly sustained the name and majesty of the Cæsars. On the decease of John Palæologus, who survived about four years the Hungarian crusade<sup>47</sup>, the royal family, by the death of Andronicus and the monastic profession of Isidore, was reduced to three princes, Constantine, Demetrius, and Thomas, the surviving sons of the emperor Manuel. Of these the first and the last were far distant in the Morea; but Demetrius, who possessed the domain of Selybria, was in the suburbs, at the head of a party: his ambition was not chilled by the public distress; and his conspiracy with the Turks and the schismatics had already disturbed the peace of his country. The funeral of the late emperor was accelerated with singular and

Constantine,
the last of the Roman or Greek emperors,
A. D. 1448,
Nov. 1—
A. D. 1453,
May 29.

<sup>45</sup> See the family of the Castriots, in Duce (Fam. Dalmaticæ, &c. xviii. p. 348—350.).

<sup>46</sup> This colony of Albanese is mentioned by Mr. Swinburne (Travels into the Two Sicilies, vol. i. p. 350—354.).

<sup>47</sup> The chronology of Phranza is clear and authentic; but instead of four years and seven months, Spondanus (A. D. 1445, N<sup>o</sup> 7.) assigns seven or eight years to the reign of the last Constantine, which he deduces from a spurious epistle of Eugenius IV. to the king of Æthiopia

C H A P.
LXVII.

even suspicious haste; the claim of Demetrius to the vacant throne was justified by a trite and flimsy sophism, that he was born in the purple, the eldest son of his father's reign. But the empress-mother, the senate and soldiers, the clergy and people, were unanimous in the cause of the lawful successor; and the despot Thomas, who, ignorant of the change, accidentally returned to the capital, asserted with becoming zeal the interest of his absent brother. An ambassador, the historian Phranza, was immediately dispatched to the court of Adrianople. Amurath received him with honour and dismissed him with gifts; but the gracious approbation of the Turkish sultan announced his supremacy, and the approaching downfall of the Eastern empire. By the hands of two illustrious deputies, the Imperial crown was placed at Sparta on the head of Constantine. In the spring he sailed from the Morea, escaped the encounter of a Turkish squadron, enjoyed the acclamations of his subjects, celebrated the festival of a new reign, and exhausted by his donatives the treasure, or rather the indigence, of the state. The emperor immediately resigned to his brothers the possession of the Morea; and the brittle friendship of the two princes, Demetrius and Thomas, was confirmed in their mother's presence by the frail security of oaths and embraces. His next occupation was the choice of a consort. A daughter of the doge of Venice had been proposed; but the Byzantine nobles objected the distance between an hereditary monarch and an elective magistrate; and in their subsequent distress, the chief of that powerful republic was not unmindful of the affront. Constantine afterwards hesitated between the royal families of Trebizond and Georgia; and the embassy of Phranza represents in his public and private life the last days of the Byzantine empire<sup>49</sup>.

Embassies of Phranza,
A. D.
1450—1452.

The protocrestiare, or great chamberlain, Phranza sailed from Constantinople as the minister of a bridegroom; and the relics of wealth and luxury were applied to his pompous appearance. His numerous retinue consisted of nobles and guards, of physicians and monks; he was attended by a band of music; and the term of his costly embassy was protracted above two years. On his arrival in Georgia or Iberia, the natives from the towns and villages flocked around the strangers; and such was their simplicity, that they were delighted with the effects, without understanding the cause, of musical harmony. Among the crowd was an old man, above an hundred years of age, who had formerly been carried away a captive by the Barbarians<sup>49</sup>, and who amused his hearers with a tale of the wonders of India<sup>50</sup>, from whence he had returned to Portugal by an unknown sea<sup>51</sup>. From this hospitable land, Phranza proceeded to the court of Trebizond, where he was informed by the Greek prince of the recent decease of Amurath. Instead of rejoicing in the deliverance, the experienced statesman expressed his apprehension, that an ambitious youth would not long adhere to the sage and pacific system of his father. After the sultan's decease, his Christian wife Maria<sup>52</sup>, the daughter of the Servian despot, had been honourably restored to her parents: on the fame of her beauty and merit, she was recommended by the ambassador as the most worthy object of the royal choice; and Phranza recapitulates and refutes the specious ob-

<sup>49</sup> Phranza (l. iii. c. 1—6.) deserves credit and esteem.

<sup>49</sup> Suppose him to have been captured in 1394, in Timour's first war in Georgia (She-refeddin, l. iii. c. 50.); he might follow his Tartar master into Hindostan in 1398, and from thence sail to the spice islands.

<sup>50</sup> The happy and pious Indians lived an hundred and fifty years, and enjoyed the most perfect productions of the vegetable and mineral kingdoms. The animals were on a large scale; dragons seventy cubits, ants (the formica Indica) nine inches long, sheep like elephants, elephants like sheep. Quidlibet audendi, &c.

<sup>51</sup> He sailed in a country vessel from the spice island to one of the ports of the exterior India, invenitque navem grandem Ibericam, quâ in Portugalliam est delatus. This passage, composed in 1477 (Phranza, l. iii. c. 30.), twenty years before the discovery of the Cape of Good Hope, is spurious or wonderful. But this new geography is sullied by the old and incompatible error which places the source of the Nile in India.

<sup>52</sup> Cantemir (p. 83.), who styles her the daughter of Lazarus Ogli, and the Helen of the Servians, places her marriage with Amurath in the year 1424. It will not easily be believed, that in six-and-twenty years cohabitation, the sultan corpus ejus non tetigit. After the taking of Constantinople, she fled to Mahomet II. (Phranza, l. iii. c. 22.)

C H A P.
LXVII.

jections that might be raised against the proposal. The majesty of the purple would ennoble an unequal alliance; the bar of affinity might be removed by liberal alms and the dispensation of the church; the disgrace of Turkish nuptials had been repeatedly overlooked; and, though the fair Maria was near fifty years of age, she might yet hope to give an heir to the empire. Constantine listened to the advice, which was transmitted in the first ship that sailed from Trebizond; but the factions of the court opposed his marriage; and it was finally prevented by the pious vow of the sultana, who ended her days in the monastic profession. Reduced to the first alternative, the choice of Phranza was decided in favour of a Georgian princess; and the vanity of her father was dazzled by the glorious alliance. Instead of demanding, according to the primitive and national custom, a price for his daughter<sup>53</sup>, he offered a portion of fifty-six thousand, with an annual pension of five thousand, ducats; and the services of the ambassador were repaid by an assurance, that, as his son had been adopted in baptism by the emperor, the establishment of his daughter should be the peculiar care of the empress of Constantinople. On the return of Phranza, the treaty was ratified by the Greek monarch, who with his own hand impressed three vermilion crosses on the golden bull, and assured the Georgian envoy, that in the spring his galleys should conduct the bride to her Imperial palace. But Constantine embraced his faithful servant, not with the cold approbation of a sovereign, but with the warm confidence of a friend, who, after a long absence, is impatient to pour his secrets into the bosom of his friend. “ Since the death of my mother and of Cantacuzene, who alone advised me without interest or passion<sup>54</sup>, I am surrounded,” said the emperor, “ by men

State of the Byzantine court.

<sup>53</sup> The classical reader will recollect the offers of Agamemnon (Iliad I. v. 144.), and the general practice of antiquity.

<sup>54</sup> Cantacuzene (I am ignorant of his relation to the emperor of that name) was great domestic, a firm asserter of the Greek creed, and a brother of the queen of Servia, whom he visited with the character of ambassador (Syropulus, p. 37, 38. 45.).

“ whom I can neither love, nor trust, nor esteem. You are not a “ stranger to Lucas Notaras, the great admiral; obstinately attached “ to his own sentiments, he declares, both in private and public, that “ his sentiments are the absolute measure of my thoughts and ac“ tions. The rest of the courtiers are swayed by their personal or “ factious views; and how can I consult the monks on questions of “ policy and marriage? I have yet much employment for your “ diligence and fidelity. In the spring you shall engage one of my “ brothers to solicit the succour of the Western powers; from the “ Morea you shall sail to Cyprus on a particular commission; and “ from thence proceed to Georgia to receive and conduct the future “ empress.” “ Your commands,” replied Phranza, “ are irresist“ ible; but deign, great sir,” he added, with a serious smile, “ to “ consider, that if I am thus perpetually absent from my family, “ my wife may be tempted either to seek another husband, or to “ throw herself into a monastery.” After laughing at his apprehensions, the emperor more gravely consoled him by the pleasing assurance, that this should be his last service abroad, and that he destined for his son, a wealthy and noble heiress; for himself, the important office of great logothete, or principal minister of state.
 The marriage was immediately stipulated; but the office, however incompatible with his own, had been usurped by the ambition of the admiral. Some delay was requisite to negotiate a consent and an equivalent; and the nomination of Phranza was half declared, and half suppressed, lest it might be displeasing to an insolent and powerful favourite. The winter was spent in the preparations of his embassy; and Phranza had resolved, that the youth his son should embrace this opportunity of foreign travel, and be left, on the appearance of danger, with his maternal kindred of the Morea.
 Such were the private and public designs, which were interrupted by a Turkish war, and finally buried in the ruins of the empire.

C H A P. LXVIII.

Reign and Character of Mahomet the Second.—Siege, Assault, and final Conquest, of Constantinople by the Turks.—Death of Constantine Palæologus.—Servitude of the Greeks.—Extinction of the Roman Empire in the East.—Consternation of Europe.—Conquests and Death of Mahomet the Second.

C H A P.
LXVIII.
Character of Mahomet II.

THE siege of Constantinople by the Turks attracts our first attention to the person and character of the great destroyer. Mahomet the second<sup>1</sup> was the son of the second Amurath; and though his mother has been decorated with the titles of Christian and princess, she is more probably confounded with the numerous concubines who peopled from every climate the haram of the sultan. His first education and sentiments were those of a devout Musulman; and as often as he conversed with an infidel, he purified his hands and face by the legal rites of ablution. Age and empire appear to have relaxed this narrow bigotry: his aspiring genius disdained to acknowledge a power above his own; and in his looser hours he presumed (it is said) to brand the prophet of Mecca as a robber and impostor. Yet the sultan persevered in a decent reverence for the doctrine and discipline of the Koran<sup>2</sup>: his private indifere-1451, N<sup>o</sup> 11.), and the continuator of Fleury (tom. xxii. p. 552.), the Elogia of Paulus Jovius (l. iii. p. 163—166.), and the Dictionnaire de Bayle (tom. iii. p. 272—279.).

<sup>1</sup> For the character of Mahomet II. it is dangerous to trust either the Turks or the Christians. The most moderate picture appears to be drawn by Phranza (l. i. c. 33.), whose resentment had cooled in age and solitude; see likewise Spondanus (A. D.

<sup>2</sup> Cantemir (p. 115.), and the mosques which he founded, attest his public regard

indiferetion must have been sacred from the vulgar ear; and we should suspect the credulity of strangers and sectaries, so prone to believe that a mind which is hardened against truth, must be armed with superior contempt for absurdity and error. Under the tuition of the most skilful masters, Mahomet advanced with an early and rapid progress in the paths of knowledge; and besides his native tongue, it is affirmed that he spoke or understood five languages<sup>3</sup>, the Arabic, the Persian, the Chaldæan or Hebrew, the Latin, and the Greek. The Persian might indeed contribute to his amusement, and the Arabic to his edification; and such studies are familiar to the Oriental youth. In the intercourse of the Greeks and Turks, a conqueror might wish to converse with the people over whom he was ambitious to reign: his own praises in Latin poetry<sup>4</sup> or prose<sup>5</sup> might find a passage to the royal ear; but what use or merit could recommend to the statesman or the scholar the uncouth dialect of his Hebrew slaves? The history and geography of the world were familiar to his memory: the lives of the heroes of the East, perhaps of the West<sup>6</sup>, excited his emulation: his skill in astrology is excused by the folly of the times, and supposes some rudiments of mathematical science; and a profane taste for the arts is betrayed in his liberal invitation for religion. Mahomet freely disputed with the patriarch Gennadius on the two religions (Spond. A. D. 1453, N° 22.).

<sup>3</sup> Quinque linguas præter suam noverat; Græcam, Latinam, Chaldæicam, Persicam. The Latin translator of Phranza has dropt the Arabic, which the Koran must recommend to every Mussulman.

<sup>4</sup> Philadelphus, by a Latin ode, requested and obtained the liberty of his wife's mother and sisters from the conqueror of Constantinople. It was delivered into the sultan's hands by the envoys of the duke of Milan. Philadelphus himself was suspected of a design of retiring to Constantinople; yet the orator often sounded the trumpet of holy war (see his Life by M. Lancelot, in the Mé-moires de l'Académie des Inscriptions, tom. x. p. 718. 724, &c.).

<sup>5</sup> Robert Valturio published at Verona, in 1483, his xii books de Re Militari, in which he first mentions the use of bombs. By his patron Sigismond Malatesta, prince of Rimini, it had been addressed with a Latin epistle to Mahomet II.

<sup>6</sup> According to Phranza, he assiduously studied the lives and actions of Alexander, Augustus, Constantine, and Theodosius. I have read somewhere, that Plutarch's Lives were translated by his orders into the Turkish language. If the sultan himself understood Greek, it must have been for the benefit of his subjects. Yet these lives are a school of freedom as well as of valour.

C H A P.
LXVIII.

and reward of the painters of Italy<sup>7</sup>. But the influence of religion and learning were employed without effect on his savage and licentious nature. I will not transcribe, nor do I firmly believe, the stories of his fourteen pages, whose bellies were ripped open in search of a stolen melon; or of the beautiful slave, whose head he severed from her body, to convince the Janizaries that their master was not the votary of love. His sobriety is attested by the silence of the Turkish annals, which accuse three, and three only, of the Ottoman line of the vice of drunkenness<sup>8</sup>. But it cannot be denied that his passions were at once furious and inexorable; that in the palace, as in the field, a torrent of blood was spilt on the slightest provocation; and that the noblest of the captive youth were often dishonoured by his unnatural lust. In the Albanian war, he studied the lessons, and soon surpassed the example, of his father; and the conquest of two empires, twelve kingdoms, and two hundred cities, a vain and flattering account, is ascribed to his invincible sword. He was doubtless a soldier, and possibly a general; Constantinople has sealed his glory; but if we compare the means, the obstacles, and the achievements, Mahomet the second must blush to sustain a parallel with Alexander or Timour. Under his command, the Ottoman forces were always more numerous than their enemies; yet their progress was bounded by the Euphrates and the Adriatic; and his arms were checked by Huniades and Scanderbeg, by the Rhodian knights and by the Persian king.

His reign,
A. D. 1451,
February 9—
A. D. 1481,
July 2.

In the reign of Amurath, he twice tasted of royalty, and twice descended from the throne: his tender age was incapable of opposing his father's restoration, but never could he forgive the vizirs

<sup>7</sup> The famous Gentile Bellino, whom he had invited from Venice, was dismissed with a chain and collar of gold, and a purse of 3000 ducats. With Voltaire, I laugh at the foolish story of a slave purposely beheaded, to instruct the painter in the action of the muscles.

<sup>8</sup> These Imperial drunkards were Soliman I. Selim II. and Amurath IV. (Cantemir, p. 61.). The saphis of Persia can produce a more regular succession; and in the last age, our European travellers were the witnesses and companions of their revels.

who

who had recommended that salutary measure. His nuptials were celebrated with the daughter of a Turkman emir; and, after a festival of two months, he departed from Adrianople with his bride, to reside in the government of Magnesia. Before the end of six weeks, he was recalled by a sudden message from the divan, which announced the decease of Amurath, and the mutinous spirit of the Janizaries. His speed and vigour commanded their obedience: he passed the Hellespont with a chosen guard; and at the distance of a mile from Adrianople, the vizirs and emirs, the imams and cadhis, the soldiers and the people, fell prostrate before the new sultan. They affected to weep, they affected to rejoice; he ascended the throne at the age of twenty-one years, and removed the cause of sedition by the death, the inevitable death, of his infant brothers<sup>9</sup>. The ambassadors of Europe and Asia soon appeared to congratulate his accession and solicit his friendship; and to all he spoke the language of moderation and peace. The confidence of the Greek emperor was revived by the solemn oaths and fair assurances, with which he sealed the ratification of the treaty: and a rich domain on the banks of the Strymon was assigned for the annual payment of three hundred thousand aspers, the pension of an Ottoman prince, who was detained at his request in the Byzantine court. Yet the neighbours of Mahomet might tremble at the severity with which a youthful monarch reformed the pomp of his father's household: the expences of luxury were applied to those of ambition, and an useless train of seven thousand falconers was either dismissed from his service or enlisted in his troops. In the first summer of his reign, he visited with an army the Asiatic provinces; but after humbling the pride, Mahomet accepted the submission, of the Caramanian, that he

C H A P.
LXVIII.

<sup>9</sup> Calapin, one of these royal infants, was saved from his cruel brother, and baptised at Rome under the name of Callistus Othomannus. The emperor Frederic III. presented him with an estate in Austria, where he ended his life: and Cuspinian, who in his youth conversed with the aged prince at Vienna, applauds his piety and wisdom (de Cæsaribus, p. 672, 673).

C H A P.
LXVIII.

Hostile intentions of Mahomet,
A. D. 1451.

might not be diverted by the smallest obstacle from the execution of his great design<sup>10</sup>.

The Mahometan, and more especially the Turkish casuists, have pronounced that no promise can bind the faithful against the interest and duty of their religion; and that the sultan may abrogate his own treaties and those of his predecessors. The justice and magnanimity of Amurath had scorned this immoral privilege; but his son, though the proudest of men, could stoop from ambition to the basest arts of dissimulation and deceit. Peace was on his lips, while war was in his heart: he incessantly sighed for the possession of Constantinople; and the Greeks, by their own indiscretion, afforded the first pretence of the fatal rupture<sup>11</sup>. Instead of labouring to be forgotten, their ambassadors pursued his camp, to demand the payment, and even the increase, of their annual stipend: the divan was importuned by their complaints, and the vizir, a secret friend of the Christians, was constrained to deliver the sense of his brethren. “Ye foolish and miserable Romans,” said Calil, “we know your vices, and ye are ignorant of your own danger! the scrupulous Amurath is no more; his throne is occupied by a young conqueror, whom no laws can bind and no obstacles can resist: and if you escape from his hands, give praise to the divine clemency,

<sup>10</sup> See the accession of Mahomet II. in Ducas (c. 33.), Phranza (l. i. c. 33. l. iii. c. 2.), Chalcecondyles (l. vii. p. 199.), and Cantemir (p. 96.).

<sup>11</sup> Before I enter on the siege of Constantinople I shall observe, that except the short hints of Cantemir and Leunclavius, I have not been able to obtain any Turkish account of this conquest: such an account as we possess of the siege of Rhodes by Soliman II. (Mémoires de l'Académie des Inscriptions, tom. xxvi. p. 723—769.). I must therefore depend on the Greeks, whose prejudices, in some degree, are subdued by their distress. Our standard texts are those of Ducas (c. 31—42.), Phranza (l. iii. c. 7—20.), Chalcecondyles (l. vii. p. 201—214.), and Leonardus Calensis (Historia C. P. a Turco expugnatae. Norimberghæ, 1544, in 4<sup>to</sup>, 20 leaves). The last of these narratives is the earliest in date, since it was composed in the isle of Chios, the 16th of August 1453, only seventy-nine days after the loss of the city, and in the first confusion of ideas and passions. Some hints may be added from an epistle of cardinal Isidore (in Farragine Rerum Turcicarum, ad calcem Chalcecondyl. Clauferi, Basil, 1556) to pope Nicholas V. and a tract of Theodosius Zygomala, which he addressed in the year 1581 to Martin Crusius (Turco-Græcia, l. i. p. 74—93. Basil, 1584). The various facts and materials are briefly, though critically, reviewed by Spondanus (A. D. 1453, N<sup>o</sup> 1—27.). The hearty relations of Montrelet and the distant Latins, I shall take leave to disregard.

“which

“ which yet delays the chastisement of your sins. Why do ye seek “ to affright us by vain and indirect menaces? Release the fugitive “ Orchan, crown him sultan of Romania; call the Hungarians from “ beyond the Danube; arm against us the nations of the West:
 “ and be assured, that you will only provoke and precipitate your “ ruin.” But, if the fears of the ambassadors were alarmed by the stern language of the vizir, they were soothed by the courteous audience and friendly speeches of the Ottoman prince; and Mahomet assured them that on his return to Adrianople he would redress the grievances, and consult the true interest, of the Greeks. No sooner had he repassed the Hellespont than he issued a mandate to suppress their pension, and to expel their officers from the banks of the Strymon: in this measure he betrayed an hostile mind; and the second order announced, and in some degree commenced, the siege of Constantinople. In the narrow pass of the Bosphorus, an Asiatic fortress had formerly been raised by his grandfather: in the opposite situation, on the European side, he resolved to erect a more formidable castle; and a thousand masons were commanded to assemble in the spring on a spot named Asomaton, about five miles from the Greek metropolis<sup>12</sup>. Persuasion is the resource of the feeble; and the feeble can seldom persuade: the ambassadors of the emperor attempted, without success, to divert Mahomet from the execution of his design. They represented, that his grandfather had solicited the permission of Manuel to build a castle on his own territories; but that this double fortification, which would command the strait, could only tend to violate the alliance of the nations; to intercept the Latins who traded in the Black Sea, and perhaps to annihilate the subsistence of the city. “ I form no enterprise,” replied the perfidious

C. H. V. P.
 L. V. III.

<sup>12</sup> The situation of the fortress, and the topography of the Bosphorus, are best learned from Peter Gyllis (de Bosphoro Thracio, l. ii. c. 13), Leunclavius (Pandect. p. 445.), and Tournefort (Voyage dans le Levant, tom. ii. lettre xv. p. 443, 444.); but I must regret the map or plan which Tournefort sent to the French minister of the marine. The reader may turn back to vol. ii. ch. 17. of this History.

C H A P.
LXVIII.

sultan, “ against the city ; but the empire of Constantinople is mea-“ fired by her walls. Have you forgot the distress to which my “ father was reduced, when you formed a league with the Hun“ garians ; when they invaded our country by land, and the “ Hellespont was occupied by the French galleys ? Amurath was “ compelled to force the passage of the Bosphorus ; and your “ strength was not equal to your malevolence. I was then a child “ at Adrianople ; the Moslems trembled ; and for a while the Ga- “ bours <sup>36</sup> insulted our disgrace. But when my father had triumphed “ in the field of Warna, he vowed to erect a fort on the western “ shore, and that vow it is my duty to accomplish. Have ye
 “ the right, have yet the power, to control my actions on my own “ ground ? For that ground is my own : as far as the shores of the “ Bosphorus, Asia is inhabited by the Turks, and Europe is deserted
 “ by the Romans. Return, and inform your king that the present “ Ottoman is far different from his predecessors ; that his resolutions “ surpass their wishes ; and that he performs more than they could “ resolve. Return in safety—but the next who delivers a similar “ message may expect to be flayed alive.” After this declaration, Constantine, the first of the Greeks in spirit as in rank <sup>37</sup>, had determined to unsheathe the sword, and to resist the approach and establishment of the Turks on the Bosphorus. He was disarmed by the advice of his civil and ecclesiastical ministers, who recommended a system less generous, and even less prudent, than his own, to approve their patience and long-suffering, to brand the Ottoman with <sup>36</sup> The opprobrious name which the Turks bestow on the Infidels, is expressed Καβουρ by Ducas, and Giacur by Leunclavius and the moderns. The former term is derived by Ducange (Gloss Græc. tom. i. p. 530.) from Καβουρ in vulgar Greek, a tortoise, as denoting a retrograde motion from the faith. But, alas ! Gabour is no more than Gheber, which was transferred from the Persian to the Turkish language, from the worshippers of fire to those of the crucifix (d’Herbelot, Bibliot. Orient. p. 375.):

<sup>37</sup> Phranza does justice to his master’s sense and courage. Calliditatem hominis non ignorans Imperator prior arma movere constituit, and stigmatizes the folly of the cum sacri tum profani proceres, which he had heard, amentes spe vanâ pasci. Ducas was not a privy-counsellor.

the name and guilt of an aggressor, and to depend on chance and time for their own safety and the destruction of a fort which could not long be maintained in the neighbourhood of a great and populous city. Amidst hope and fear, the fears of the wise and the hopes of the credulous, the winter rolled away; the proper business of each man, and each hour, was postponed; and the Greeks shut their eyes against the impending danger, till the arrival of the spring and the sultan decided the assurance of their ruin.

Of a master who never forgives, the orders are seldom disobeyed. On the twenty-sixth of March, the appointed spot of Asomaton was covered with an active swarm of Turkish artificers; and the materials by sea and land, were diligently transported from Europe and Asia<sup>15</sup>. The lime had been burnt in Cataphrygia; the timber was cut down in the woods of Heraclea and Nicomedia; and the stones were dug from the Anatolian quarries. Each of the thousand masons was assisted by two workmen; and a measure of two cubits was marked for their daily task. The fortress<sup>16</sup> was built in a triangular form; each angle was flanked by a strong and massy tower; one on the declivity of the hill, two along the sea-shore: a thickness of twenty-two feet was assigned for the walls, thirty for the towers; and the whole building was covered with a solid platform of lead. Mahomet himself pressed and directed the work with indefatigable ardour: his three vizirs claimed the honour of finishing their respective towers; the zeal of the cadhis emulated that of the Janizaries; the meanest labour was ennobled by the service of God and the sultan; and the diligence of the multitude was quickened by the eye of a despot, whose smile was the hope of fortune, and whose frown was the messenger of death. The Greek emperor beheld with

C H A P.
LXVIII.

He builds a fortress on the Bosphorus,
A. D. 1452,
March.

<sup>15</sup> Instead of this clear and consistent account, the Turkish Annals (Cantemir, p. 97.) revived the foolish tale of the ox's hide, and Dido's stratagem in the foundation of Carthage. These annals (unless we are swayed by an antichristian prejudice) are far less valuable than the Greek historians.

<sup>16</sup> In the dimensions of this fortress, the old castle of Europe, Phranza does not exactly agree with Chalcocondyles, whose description has been verified on the spot by his editor Leunclavius.

C II A P.
LXVIII.

terror the irresistible progress of the work; and vainly strove, by flattery and gifts, to assuage an implacable foe, who sought, and secretly fomented, the slightest occasion of a quarrel. Such occasions must soon and inevitably be found. The ruins of stately churches, and even the marble columns which had been consecrated to St. Michael the archangel, were employed without scruple by the profane and rapacious Moslems; and some Christians, who presumed to oppose the removal, received from their hands the crown of martyrdom. Constantine had solicited a Turkish guard to protect the fields and harvests of his subjects: the guard was fixed; but their first order was to allow free pasture to the mules and horses of the camp, and to defend their brethren if they should be molested by the natives. The retinue of an Ottoman chief had left their horses to pass the night among the ripe corn: the damage was felt; the insult was resented; and several of both nations were slain in a tumultuous conflict. Mahomet listened with joy to the complaint; and a detachment was commanded to exterminate the guilty village: the guilty had fled; but forty innocent and unsuspecting reapers were massacred by the soldiers. Till this provocation, Constantinople had been open to the visits of commerce and curiosity: on the first alarm, the gates were shut; but the emperor, still anxious for peace, released on the third day his Turkish captives<sup>17</sup>; and expressed, in a last message, the firm resignation of a Christian and a soldier. “Since neither oaths, nor treaty, nor submission, can secure peace, pursue,” said he to Mahomet, “your impious warfare. My trust is in God alone: if it should please him to mollify your heart, I shall rejoice in the happy change; if he delivers the city into your hands, I submit without a murmur to his holy will. But until the Judge of the earth shall pronounce between us, it is my duty to live and die in the defence of my people.” The sultan’s answer was hostile and decisive: his fortifications were com-

The Turkish
war,
June;

<sup>17</sup> Among these were some pages of Mahomet so conscious of his inexorable rigour, that they begged to lose their heads in the city unless they could return before sun-set.

pleted;

C H A P.
LXVIII.
September 1;

pleted ; and before his departure for Adrianople, he stationed a vigilant Aga and four hundred Janizaries, to levy a tribute of the ships of every nation that should pass within the reach of their cannon. A Venetian vessel, refusing obedience to the new lords of the Bosphorus, was sunk with a single bullet. The master and thirty sailors escaped in the boat ; but they were dragged in chains to the porte : the chief was impaled ; his companions were beheaded ; and the historian Ducas<sup>18</sup> beheld, at Demotica, their bodies exposed to the wild beasts. The siege of Constantinople was deferred till the ensuing spring ; but an Ottoman army marched into the Morea to divert the force of the brothers of Constantine. At this æra of calamity, one of these princes, the despot Thomas, was blessed or afflicted with the birth of a son ; “ the last heir,” says the plaintive Phranza, “ of the last spark of the Roman empire ”<sup>19</sup>.

A. D. 1453,
January 17.

The Greeks and the Turks passed an anxious and sleepless winter : the former were kept awake by their fears, the latter by their hopes ; both by the preparations of defence and attack ; and the two emperors, who had the most to lose or to gain, were the most deeply affected by the national sentiment. In Mahomet, that sentiment was inflamed by the ardour of his youth and temper : he amused his leisure with building at Adrianople<sup>20</sup> the lofty palace of Jehan Numa (the watch-tower of the world) ; but his serious thoughts were irrevocably bent on the conquest of the city of Cæsar. At the dead of night, about the second watch, he started from his bed, and commanded the instant attendance of his prime vizir. The message, the hour, the prince, and his own situation, alarmed the guilty conscience of Calil Basha ; who had possessed the confidence, and ad-

Preparations for the siege of Constantinople,
A. D. 1452,
September—
A. D. 1453,
April.

<sup>18</sup> Ducas, c. 35. Phranza (l. iii. c. 3.), who had sailed in his vessel, commemorates the Venetian pilot as a martyr.

<sup>19</sup> Auctum est Palæologorum genus, et Imperii successor, parvæque Romanorum scintillæ hæres natus, Andreas, &c. (Phranza, l. iii. c. 7.) The strong expression was inspired by his feelings.

<sup>20</sup> Cantemir, p. 97, 98. The sultan was either doubtful of his conquest, or ignorant of the superior merits of Constantinople. A city or a kingdom may sometimes be ruined by the Imperial fortune of their sovereign

C H A P.
LXVIII.

vifed the reftoration, of Amurath. On the acceffion of the fon, the vizir was confirmed in his office and the appearances of favour; but the veteran ftatefman was not infenfible that he trod on a thin and flippery ice, which might break under his footfteps, and plunge him in the abyfs. His friendship for the Chriftians, which might be innocent under the late reign, had ftigmatifed him with the name of Gabour Ortachi, or fofter-brother of the infidels<sup>21</sup>; and his avarice entertained a venal and treafonable correpondence, which was detected and punifhed after the conclufion of the war. On receiving the royal mandate, he embraced, perhaps for the laft time, his wife and children; filled a cup with pieces of gold, haftened to the palace, adored the fultan, and offered, according to the Oriental cuftom, the flight tribute of his duty and gratitude<sup>22</sup>. “It is not my wifh,” faid Mahomet, “to refume my gifts, but rather to heap and multiply “them on thy head. In my turn I afk a prefent far more valuable “and important;—Constantinople.” As foon as the vizir had recovered from his furprife, “the fame God,” faid he, “who has “already given thee fo large a portion of the Roman empire, will “not deny the remnant, and the capital. His providence, and thy “power, affure thy fuccefs; and myfelf, with the reft of thy faithful “flaves, will facrifice our lives and fortunes.” “Lala<sup>23</sup>,” (or preceptor), continued the fultan, “do you fee this pillow? all the night, “in my agitation, I have pulled it on one fide and the other; I “have rifen from my bed, again have I lain down; yet fleep has

<sup>21</sup> Συνατροφος, by the prefident Coufin, is translated pere nourricier, moft correctly indzged from the Latin verfion; but in his hafte, he has overlooked the note by which Ifmael Boillaud (ad Ducam, c. 35) acknowledges and rediffes his own error.

<sup>22</sup> The Oriental cuftom of never appearing without gifts before a fovereign or a fuperior, is of high antiquity, and feems analogous with the idea of facrifice, ftill more ancient and univerfal. See the examples of fuch Perfian gifts, Ælian, Hift. Var. l. i. c. 31, 32, 33.

<sup>23</sup> The Lala of the Turks (Cantemir, p. 34.), and the Tata of the Greeks (Ducas, c. 35.), are derived from the natural language of children; and it may be obferved, that all fuch primitive words which denote their parents, are the fimple repetition of one fyllable, compofed of a labial or dental confonant and an open vowel (des Broffes, Mechanifme des Langues, tom. i. p. 231—247).

“ not

C H A P.
LXVIII.

first experiment ; but, to prevent the sudden and mischievous effects of astonishment and fear, a proclamation was issued, that the cannon would be discharged the ensuing day. The explosion was felt or heard in a circuit of an hundred furlongs : the ball, by the force of gunpowder, was driven above a mile ; and on the spot where it fell, it buried itself a fathom deep in the ground. For the conveyance of this destructive engine, a frame or carriage of thirty waggons was linked together and drawn along by a team of sixty oxen : two hundred men on both sides were stationed to poise and support the rolling weight ; two hundred and fifty workmen marched before to smooth the way and repair the bridges ; and near two months were employed in a laborious journey of one hundred and fifty miles. A lively philosopher<sup>25</sup> derides on this occasion the credulity of the Greeks, and observes, with much reason, that we should always distrust the exaggerations of a vanquished people. He calculates, that a ball, even of two hundred pounds, would require a charge of one hundred and fifty pounds of powder ; and that the stroke would be feeble and impotent, since not a fifteenth part of the mass could be inflamed at the same moment. A stranger as I am to the art of destruction, I can discern that the modern improvements of artillery prefer the number of pieces to the weight of metal ; the quickness of the fire to the sound, or even the consequence, of a single explosion. Yet I dare not reject the positive and unanimous evidence of contemporary writers ; nor can it seem improbable, that the first artists, in their rude and ambitious efforts, should have transgressed the standard of moderation. A Turkish cannon, more enormous than that of Mahomet, still guards the entrance of the Dardanelles ; and if the use be inconvenient, it has been found on a late trial that the pellation was extended to a weight of one hundred, or one hundred and twenty-five pounds (Ducange, καλαυρος). Leonardus Chiensis measured the ball or stone of the second cannon : Lapidem, qui palmis undecim ex meis ambibat in gyro.

<sup>25</sup> See Voltaire (Hist. Generale, c. xci. p. 294, 295.). He was ambitious of universal monarchy ; and the poet frequently aspires to the name and style of an astronomer, a chymist, &c.

effect was far from contemptible. A stone bullet of eleven hundred pounds weight was once discharged with three hundred and thirty pounds of powder; at the distance of six hundred yards it shivered into three rocky fragments, traversed the streight, and, leaving the waters in a foam, again rose and bounded against the opposite hill <sup>26</sup>.

While Mahomet threatened the capital of the East, the Greek emperor implored with fervent prayers the assistance of earth and heaven. But the invisible powers were deaf to his supplications; and Christendom beheld with indifference the fall of Constantinople, while she derived at least some promise of supply from the jealous and temporal policy of the sultan of Egypt. Some states were too weak, and others too remote; by some the danger was considered as imaginary, by others as inevitable: the Western princes were involved in their endless and domestic quarrels; and the Roman pontiff was exasperated by the falsehood or obstinacy of the Greeks. Instead of employing in their favour the arms and treasures of Italy, Nicholas the fifth had foretold their approaching ruin; and his honour was engaged in the accomplishment of his prophecy. Perhaps he was softened by the last extremity of their distress; but his compassion was tardy; his efforts were faint and unavailing; and Constantinople had fallen, before the squadrons of Genoa and Venice could sail from their harbours <sup>27</sup>. Even the princes of the Morea and of the Greek islands affected a cold neutrality: the Genoese colony of Galata negotiated a private treaty; and the sultan indulged them in the delusive hope, that by his clemency they might survive the ruin of the empire. A plebeian crowd, and some Byzantine nobles, basely withdrew from the danger of their country; and

C H A P.
LXVIII.

Mahomet II.
forms the siege of Constantinople,
A. D. 1453,
April 6.

<sup>26</sup> The Baron de Tott (tom. iii. p. 85—89.), who fortified the Dardanelles against the Russians, describes in a lively, and even comic, strain his own prowess, and the consternation of the Turks. But that adventurous traveller does not possess the art of gaining our confidence.

<sup>27</sup> Non audivit, indignum ducens, says the honest Antoninus; but as the Roman court was afterwards grieved and ashamed, we find the more courtly expression of Platina, in animo fuisse pontifici juvare Græcos, and the positive assertion of Æneas Sylvius, structam classem, &c. (Spond. A. D. 1453, N<sup>o</sup> 3.).

C H A P.
LXVIII.

the avarice of the rich denied the emperor, and reserved for the Turks, the secret treasures which might have raised in their defence whole armies of mercenaries<sup>28</sup>. The indigent and solitary prince prepared however to sustain his formidable adversary; but if his courage were equal to the peril, his strength was inadequate to the contest. In the beginning of the spring, the Turkish vanguard swept the towns and villages as far as the gates of Constantinople: submission was spared and protected; whatever presumed to resist was exterminated with fire and sword. The Greek places on the Black Sea, Mesembria, Acheloum, and Bizon, surrendered on the first summons; Selybria alone deserved the honours of a siege or blockade; and the bold inhabitants, while they were invested by land, launched their boats, pillaged the opposite coast of Cyzicus, and sold their captives in the public market. But on the approach of Mahomet himself all was silent and prostrate: he first halted at the distance of five miles; and from thence advancing in battle array, planted before the gate of St. Romanus the Imperial standard; and, on the sixth day of April, formed the memorable siege of Constantinople.

Forces of the
Turks;

The troops of Asia and Europe extended on the right and left from the Propontis to the harbour: the Janizaries in the front were stationed before the sultan's tent; the Ottoman line was covered by a deep intrenchment; and a subordinate army inclosed the suburb of Galata, and watched the doubtful faith of the Genoese. The inquisitive Philephus, who resided in Greece about thirty years before the siege, is confident, that all the Turkish forces, of any name or value, could not exceed the number of sixty thousand horse and twenty thousand foot; and he upbraids the pusillanimity of the nations, who had tamely yielded to an handful of Barbarians.

<sup>28</sup> Antonin. in Proem.—Epist. Cardinal. Isidor. apud Spondanum; and Dr. Johnson, in the tragedy of Irene, has happily seized this characteristic circumstance:

The groaning Greeks dig up the golden caverns,
The accumulated wealth of hoarding ages;
That wealth which, granted to their weeping prince,
Had rang'd embattled nations at their gates.

Such

Such indeed might be the regular establishment of the Capiculi <sup>29</sup>, the troops of the Porte, who marched with the prince, and were paid from his royal treasury. But the bashaws, in their respective governments, maintained or levied a provincial militia; many lands were held by a military tenure; many volunteers were attracted by the hope of spoil; and the sound of the holy trumpet invited a swarm of hungry and fearless fanatics, who might contribute at least to multiply the terrors, and in a first attack to blunt the swords, of the Christians. The whole mass of the Turkish powers is magnified by Ducas, Chalcocondyles, and Leonard of Chios, to the amount of three or four hundred thousand men; but Phranza was a less remote and more accurate judge; and his precise definition of two hundred and fifty-eight thousand does not exceed the measure of experience and probability <sup>30</sup>. The navy of the besiegers was less formidable: the Propontis was overspread with three hundred and twenty sail; but of these no more than eighteen could be rated as galleys of war; and the far greater part must be degraded to the condition of storeships and transports, which poured into the camp fresh supplies of men, ammunition, and provisions. In her last decay, Constantinople was still peopled with more than an hundred thousand inhabitants; but these numbers are found in the accounts, not of war, but of captivity; and they mostly consisted of mechanics, of priests, of women, and of men devoid of that spirit which even women have sometimes exerted for the common safety. I can suppose, I could almost excuse, the reluctance of subjects to serve on a distant frontier, at the will of a tyrant; but the man who dares not expose his life in the defence of his children and his property has

C H A P.
LXVIII.

of the
Greeks.

<sup>29</sup> The palatine troops are styled Capiculi, the provincials, Seraculi: and most of the names and institutions of the Turkish militia existed before the Canon Nameh of Soliman II. from which, and his own experience, count Marfigli has composed his military state of the Ottoman empire.

proved by Cuspinian in the year 1508 (de Cæsaribus, in Epilog. de Militiâ Turcicâ, p. 697.). Marfigli proves, that the effective armies of the Turks are much less numerous than they appear. In the army that besieged Constantinople, Leonardus Chienfis reckons no more than 15,000 Janizaries.

<sup>30</sup> The observation of Philephus is ap-

C. H. A. P.
LXVIII.

lost in society the first and most active energies of nature. By the emperor's command, a particular enquiry had been made through the streets and houses, how many of the citizens, or even of the monks, were able and willing to bear arms for their country. The lists were entrusted to Phranza<sup>31</sup>; and, after a diligent addition, he informed his master, with grief and surprise, that the national defence was reduced to four thousand nine hundred and seventy Romans. Between Constantine and his faithful minister, this comfortable secret was preserved; and a sufficient proportion of shields, cross-bows, and muskets, was distributed from the arsenal to the city bands. They derived some accession from a body of two thousand strangers, under the command of John Justiniani, a noble Genoese; a liberal donative was advanced to these auxiliaries; and a princely recompense, the isle of Lemnos, was promised to the valour and victory of their chief. A strong chain was drawn across the mouth of the harbour: it was supported by some Greek and Italian vessels of war and merchandize; and the ships of every Christian nation, that successively arrived from Candia and the Black Sea, were detained for the public service. Against the powers of the Ottoman empire, a city of the extent of thirteen, perhaps of sixteen, miles was defended by a scanty garrison of seven or eight thousand soldiers. Europe and Asia were open to the besiegers; but the strength and provisions of the Greeks must sustain a daily decrease; nor could they indulge the expectation of any foreign succour or supply.

False union of the two churches,
A. D. 1452,
Dec. 12.

The primitive Romans would have drawn their swords in the resolution of death or conquest. The primitive Christians might have embraced each other, and awaited in patience and charity the stroke of martyrdom. But the Greeks of Constantinople were animated only by the spirit of religion, and that spirit was productive only of national prejudices, we cannot desire a more authentic witness, not only of public facts, but of private counsels.

<sup>31</sup> Ego, eidem (Imp.) tabellas extribui non absque dolore et molestia, mansitque apud nos duos alii occultus numerus (Phranza, l. iii. c. 8.). With some indulgence for

animosity animosity and discord. Before his death, the emperor John Palæologus had renounced the unpopular measure of an union with the Latins; nor was the idea revived, till the distress of his brother Constantine imposed a last trial of flattery and dissimulation<sup>32</sup>. With the demand of temporal aid, his ambassadors were instructed to mingle the assurance of spiritual obedience: his neglect of the church was excused by the urgent cares of the state; and his orthodox wishes solicited the presence of a Roman legate. The Vatican had been too often deluded; yet the signs of repentance could not decently be overlooked; a legate was more easily granted than an army; and about six months before the final destruction, the cardinal Isidore of Russia appeared in that character with a retinue of priests and soldiers. The emperor saluted him as a friend and father; respectfully listened to his public and private sermons; and with the most obsequious of the clergy and laymen subscribed the act of union, as it had been ratified in the council of Florence. On the twelfth of December, the two nations, in the church of St. Sophia, joined in the communion of sacrifice and prayer; and the names of the two pontiffs were solemnly commemorated; the names of Nicholas the fifth, the vicar of Christ, and of the patriarch Gregory who had been driven into exile by a rebellious people.

C H A P.
LXVIII.

But the dress and language of the Latin priest who officiated at the altar, were an object of scandal; and it was observed with horror, that he consecrated a cake or wafer of unleavened bread, and poured cold water into the cup of the sacrament. A national historian acknowledges with a blush, that none of his countrymen, not the emperor himself, were sincere in this occasional conformity<sup>33</sup>. Their hasty and unconditional submission was palliated by a promise of

Obstinacy and fanaticism of the Greeks.

<sup>32</sup> In Spondanus, the narrative of the union is not only partial, but imperfect. The bishop of Pamiers died in 1642, and the history of Ducas, which represents these scenes (c. 36, 37.) with such truth and spirit, was not printed till the year 1649.

<sup>33</sup> Phranza, one of the conforming Greeks, acknowledges that the measure was adopted only propter spem auxilii; he asserts with pleasure, that those who refused to perform their devotions in St. Sophia, extra culpam et in pace essent (l. iii. c. 20.).

C H A P.
LXVIII.

future revival; but the best, or the worst, of their excuses was the confession of their own perjury. When they were pressed by the reproaches of their honest brethren, "Have patience," they whispered, "have patience till God shall have delivered the city from the great dragon who seeks to devour us. You shall then perceive whether we are truly reconciled with the Azymites." But patience is not the attribute of zeal; nor can the arts of a court be adapted to the freedom and violence of popular enthusiasm. From the dome of St. Sophia, the inhabitants of either sex, and of every degree, rushed in crowds to the cell of the monk Gennadius<sup>34</sup>, to consult the oracle of the church. The holy man was invisible; entranced, as it should seem, in deep meditation, or divine rapture: but he had exposed on the door of his cell, a speaking tablet; and they successively withdrew after reading these tremendous words: "O miserable Romans, why will ye abandon the truth; and why, instead of confiding in God, will ye put your trust in the Italians? In losing your faith, you will lose your city. Have mercy on me, O Lord! I protest in thy presence, that I am innocent of the crime. O miserable Romans, consider, pause, and repent. At the same moment that you renounce the religion of your fathers, by embracing impiety, you submit to a foreign servitude." According to the advice of Gennadius, the religious virgins, as pure as angels and as proud as demons, rejected the act of union, and abjured all communion with the present and future associates of the Latins; and their example was applauded and imitated by the greatest part of the clergy and people. From the monastery, the devout Greeks dispersed themselves in the taverns; drank confusion to the slaves of the pope; emptied their glasses in honour of the image of the holy Virgin ; and besought her to defend against Mahomet, the city which she had formerly saved from Chosroes and the Chagan. In the double intoxication of zeal and wine, they valiantly exclaimed, “ What occasion have we for succour, or union, “ or Latins? far from us be the worship of the Azymites !” During the winter that preceded the Turkish conquest, the nation was distracted by this epidemical frenzy ; and the season of Lent, the approach of Easter, instead of breathing charity and love, served only to fortify the obstinacy and influence of the zealots. The confessors scrutinised and alarmed the conscience of their votaries, and a rigorous penance was imposed on those, who had received the communion from a priest, who had given an express or tacit consent to the union. His service at the altar propagated the infection to the mute and simple spectators of the ceremony : they forfeited, by the impure spectacle, the virtue of the sacerdotal character ; nor was it lawful, even in danger of sudden death, to invoke the assistance of their prayers or absolution. No sooner had the church of St. Sophia been polluted by the Latin sacrifice, than it was deserted as a Jewish synagogue, or an heathen temple, by the clergy and people : and a vast and gloomy silence prevailed in that venerable dome, which had so often smoked with a cloud of incense, blazed with innumerable lights, and resounded with the voice of prayer and thanksgiving. The Latins were the most odious of heretics and infidels ; and the first minister of the empire, the great duke, was heard to declare, that he had rather behold in Constantinople the turban of Mahomet, than the pope’s tiara or a cardinal’s hat<sup>35</sup>. A sentiment so unworthy of Christians and patriots, was familiar and fatal to the Greeks : the emperor was deprived of the affection and support of his subjects ; and their native cowardice was sanctified by resignation to the divine decree, or the visionary hope of a miraculous deliverance.

<sup>34</sup> His primitive and secular name was George Scholarius, which he changed for that of Gennadius, either when he became a monk or a patriarch. His defence, at Florence, of the same union which he so furiously attacked at Constantinople, has tempted Leo Allatius

(Diatrib. de Georgiis, in Fabric. Bibliot. Græc. tom. x. p. 760—786.) to divide him into two men; but Renaudot (p. 343—383.) has restored the identity of his person and the duplicity of his character.

<sup>35</sup> Φακίλιος, καλυπτρα, may be fairly translated a cardinal’s hat. The Greek and Latin habits embittered the difference of schism.

C H A P.
LXVIII.

Siege of Constantinople by Mahomet II.
A. D. 1453,
April 6—
May 29.

Of the triangle which composes the figure of Constantinople, the two sides along the sea were made inaccessible to an enemy; the Propontis by nature, and the harbour by art. Between the two waters, the basis of the triangle, the land side was protected by a double wall, and a deep ditch of the depth of one hundred feet. Against this line of fortification, which Phranza, an eye-witness, prolongs to the measure of six miles<sup>36</sup>, the Ottomans directed their principal attack; and the emperor, after distributing the service and command of the most perilous stations, undertook the defence of the external wall. In the first days of the siege, the Greek soldiers descended into the ditch, or sallied into the field; but they soon discovered, that, in the proportion of their numbers, one Christian was of more value than twenty Turks: and, after these bold preludes, they were prudently content to maintain the rampart with their missile weapons. Nor should this prudence be accused of pusillanimity. The nation was indeed pusillanimous and base; but the last Constantine deserves the name of an hero: his noble band of volunteers was inspired with Roman virtue; and the foreign auxiliaries supported the honour of the Western chivalry. The incessant volleys of lances and arrows were accompanied with the smoke, the sound, and the fire, of their musketry and cannon. Their small arms discharged at the same time either five, or even ten, balls of lead, of the size of a walnut; and, according to the closeness of the ranks and the force of the powder, several breast-plates and bodies were transpierced by the same shot. But the Turkish approaches were soon sunk in trenches, or covered with ruins. Each day added to the science of the Christians; but their inadequate stock of gunpowder was wasted in the operations of each day. Their ordnance was not powerful, either in size or number; and if they possessed some heavy cannon, they feared to plant them on the walls, lest the aged structure should be shaken and overthrown by the explosion<sup>37</sup>. The same destructive secret had been revealed to the Moslems; by whom it was employed with the superior energy of zeal, riches, and despotism. The great cannon of Mahomet has been separately noticed; an important and visible object in the history of the times: but that enormous engine was flanked by two fellows almost of equal magnitude<sup>38</sup>: the long order of the Turkish artillery was pointed against the walls; fourteen batteries thundered at once on the most accessible places; and of one of these it is ambiguously expressed, that it was mounted with one hundred and thirty guns, or that it discharged one hundred and thirty bullets. Yet, in the power and activity of the sultan, we may discern the infancy of the new science. Under a master who counted the moments, the great cannon could be loaded and fired no more than seven times in one day<sup>39</sup>. The heated metal unfortunately burst; several workmen were destroyed; and the skill of an artist was admired who bethought himself of preventing the danger and the accident, by pouring oil, after each explosion, into the mouth of the cannon.

<sup>36</sup> We are obliged to reduce the Greek miles to the smallest measure which is preserved in the works of Russia, of 547 French toises, and of  $10\frac{1}{3}$  to a degree. The six miles of Phranza do not exceed four English miles (d'Anville, Mesures Itinéraires, p. 61. 123, &c.).

The first random shots were productive of more sound than effect; and it was by the advice of a Christian, that the engineers were taught to level their aim against the two opposite sides of the salient angles of a bastion. However imperfect, the weight and repetition of the fire made some impression on the walls; and the Turks,

Attack and defence.

<sup>37</sup> At indicis doctiores nostri facti paravere contra hostes machinamenta, quæ tamen avare dabantur. Pulvis erat nitri modica exigua; tela modica; bombardæ, si aderant incommoditate loci primum hostes offendere maceriebus alveisque testos non poterant. Nam siquæ magnæ erant, ne murus concuteretur nosse, quiescebant. This passage of Leonardus Chienfis is curious and important.

<sup>38</sup> According to Chalcocondyles and Phranzæ, the great cannon burst; an accident which, according to Ducas, was prevented by the artist's skill. It is evident that they do not speak of the same gun.

<sup>39</sup> Near an hundred years after the siege of Constantinople, the French and English fleets in the Channel were proud of firing 300 shot in an engagement of two hours (Memoires de Martin du Bellay, l. x. in the Collection Generale, tom. xxi. p. 239.).

pushing

C H A P.
LXVIII.

pushing their approaches to the edge of the ditch, attempted to fill the enormous chasm, and to build a road to the assault<sup>40</sup>. Innumerable fascines, and hogheads, and trunks of trees, were heaped on each other; and such was the impetuosity of the throng, that the foremost and the weakest were pushed headlong down the precipice, and instantly buried under the accumulated mass. To fill the ditch, was the toil of the besiegers; to clear away the rubbish, was the safety of the besieged; and, after a long and bloody conflict, the web that had been woven in the day was still unravelled in the night. The next resource of Mahomet was the practice of mines; but the soil was rocky; in every attempt he was stopped and undermined by the Christian engineers; nor had the art been yet invented of replenishing those subterraneous passages with gunpowder, and blowing whole towers and cities into the air<sup>41</sup>. A circumstance that distinguishes the siege of Constantinople, is the re-union of the ancient and modern artillery. The cannon were intermingled with the mechanical engines for casting stones and darts; the bullet and the battering-ram were directed against the same walls; nor had the discovery of gunpowder superseded the use of the liquid and unextinguishable fire. A wooden turret of the largest size was advanced on rollers: this portable magazine of ammunition and fascines was protected by a threefold covering of bulls hides; incessant volleys were securely discharged from the loop-holes; in the front, three doors were contrived for the alternate fall and retreat of the soldiers and workmen. They ascended by a stair-case to the upper <sup>40</sup> I have selected some curious facts, without striving to emulate the bloody and obtrusive eloquence of the abbé de Vertot, in his prolix descriptions of the sieges of Rhodes, Malta, &c. But that agreeable historian had a turn for romance, and as he wrote to please the order, he has adopted the same spirit of enthusiasm and chivalry.

<sup>41</sup> The first theory of mines with gunpowder appears in 1480, in a MS. of George of Sienna (Tiraboschi, tom. vi. P. i. p. 324.). They were first practised at Sarzanella, in 1487; but the honour and improvement in 1503 is ascribed to Peter of Navarre, who used them with success in the wars of Italy (Hist. de la Ligue de Cambray, tom. ii. p. 93 —97.).

platform; and, as high as the level of that platform, a scaling-ladder could be raised by pullies to form a bridge and grapple with the adverse rampart. By these various arts of annoyance, some as new as they were pernicious to the Greeks, the tower of St. Romanus was at length overturned: after a severe struggle, the Turks were repulsed from the breach and interrupted by darkness; but they trusted, that with the return of light they should renew the attack with fresh vigour and decisive success. Of this pause of action, this interval of hope, each moment was improved by the activity of the emperor and Justiniani, who passed the night on the spot, and urged the labours which involved the safety of the church and city. At the dawn of day, the impatient sultan perceived, with astonishment and grief, that his wooden turret had been reduced to ashes: the ditch was cleared and restored; and the tower of St. Romanus was again strong and entire. He deplored the failure of his design; and uttered a profane exclamation, that the word of the thirty-seven thousand prophets should not have compelled him to believe that such a work, in so short a time, could have been accomplished by the infidels.

The generosity of the Christian princes was cold and tardy; but in the first apprehension of a siege, Constantine had negotiated, in the isles of the Archipelago, the Morea, and Sicily, the most indispensable supplies. As early as the beginning of April, five<sup>42</sup> great ships, equipped for merchandise and war, would have sailed from the harbour of Chios, had not the wind blown obstinately from the north<sup>43</sup>. One of these ships bore the Imperial flag; the remaining four belonged to the Genoese; and they were laden with wheat and barley, with wine, oil, and vegetables, and, above all, with soldiers

Succour and victory of four ships.

<sup>42</sup> It is singular that the Greeks should not agree in the number of these illustrious vessels; the five of Ducas, the four of Phranza and Leonardus, and the two of Chalcocondyles, must be extended to the smaller, or confined to larger, size. Voltaire, in giving one of these ships to Frederic III. confounds the emperors of the East and West.

<sup>43</sup> In bold defiance, or rather in gross ignorance, of language and geography, the president Cousin detains them at Chios with a south, and wafts them to Constantinople with a north, wind.

and

C H A P.
LXVIII.

and mariners, for the service of the capital. After a tedious delay, a gentle breeze, and, on the second day, a strong gale from the south, carried them through the Hellespont and the Propontis: but the city was already invested by sea and land; and the Turkish fleet, at the entrance of the Bosphorus, was stretched from shore to shore, in the form of a crescent, to intercept, or at least to repel, these bold auxiliaries. The reader who has present to his mind the geographical picture of Constantinople, will conceive and admire the greatness of the spectacle. The five Christian ships continued to advance with joyful shouts, and a full press, both of sails and oars, against an hostile fleet of three hundred vessels; and the rampart, the camp, the coasts of Europe and Asia, were lined with innumerable spectators, who anxiously awaited the event of this momentous succour. At the first view that event could not appear doubtful; the superiority of the Moslems was beyond all measure or account; and, in a calm, their numbers and valour must inevitably have prevailed. But their hasty and imperfect navy had been created, not by the genius of the people, but by the will of the sultan: in the height of their prosperity, the Turks have acknowledged, that if God had given them the earth, he had left the sea to the infidels<sup>44</sup>; and a series of defeats, a rapid progress of decay, has established the truth of their modest confession. Except eighteen galleys of some force, the rest of their fleet consisted of open boats, rudely constructed and awkwardly managed, crowded with troops, and destitute of cannon; and, since courage arises in a great measure from the consciousness of strength, the bravest of the Janizaries might tremble on a new element. In the Christian squadron, five stout and lofty ships were guided by skilful pilots, and manned with the veterans of Italy and Greece, long practised in the arts and perils of the sea. Their weight was directed to sink or scatter the weak obstacles that impeded their passage: their artillery swept the waters: their liquid fire was poured on the heads of the adversaries, who, with the design of boarding, presumed to approach them; and the winds and waves are always on the side of the ablest navigators. In this conflict, the Imperial vessel, which had been almost overpowered, was rescued by the Genoese; but the Turks, in a distant and a closer attack, were twice repulsed with considerable loss. Mahomet himself sat on horseback on the beach, to encourage their valour by his voice and presence, by the promise of reward, and by fear, more potent than the fear of the enemy. The passions of his soul, and even the gestures of his body<sup>45</sup>, seemed to imitate the actions of the combatants; and, as if he had been the lord of nature, he spurred his horse with a fearless and impotent effort into the sea. His loud reproaches, and the clamours of the camp, urged the Ottomans to a third attack, more fatal and bloody than the two former; and I must repeat, though I cannot credit, the evidence of Phranza, who affirms, from their own mouth, that they lost above twelve thousand men in the slaughter of the day. They fled in disorder to the shores of Europe and Asia, while the Christian squadron, triumphant and unhurt, steered along the Bosphorus, and securely anchored within the chain of the harbour. In the confidence of victory, they boasted that the whole Turkish power must have yielded to their arms; but the admiral, or captain bashaw, found some consolation for a painful wound in his eye, by representing that accident as the cause of his defeat. Baltha Ogli was a renegade of the race of the Bulgarian princes: his military character was tainted with the unpopular vice of avarice; and under the despotism of the prince or people, misfortune is a sufficient evidence of guilt. His rank and services were annihilated by the dis-

<sup>44</sup> The perpetual decay and weakness of the Turkish navy, may be observed in Rycaut (State of the Ottoman Empire, p. 372—378.), Thevenot (Voyages, p. i. p. 229—242.), and Tott (Memoires, tom. iii.); the last of whom is always solicitous to amuse and amaze his reader.

<sup>45</sup> I must confess, that I have before my eyes the living picture which Thucydides (l. vii. c. 71.) has drawn of the passions and gestures of the Athenians in a naval engagement in the great harbour of Syracuse.

C H A P.
LXVIII.

pleasure of Mahomet. In the royal presence, the captain bashaw was extended on the ground by four slaves, and received one hundred strokes with a golden rod <sup>46</sup>: his death had been pronounced; and he adored the clemency of the sultan, who was satisfied with the milder punishment of confiscation and exile. The introduction of this supply revived the hopes of the Greeks, and accused the supineness of their western allies. Amidst the deserts of Anatolia and the rocks of Palestine, the millions of the crusades had buried themselves in a voluntary and inevitable grave; but the situation of the Imperial city was strong against her enemies, and accessible to her friends; and a rational and moderate armament of the maritime states might have saved the relics of the Roman name, and maintained a Christian fortress in the heart of the Ottoman empire. Yet this was the sole and feeble attempt for the deliverance of Constantinople: the more distant powers were insensible of its danger; and the ambassador of Hungary, or at least of Huniades, resided in the Turkish camp, to remove the fears, and to direct the operations, of the sultan <sup>47</sup>.

Mahomet transports his navy over land.

It was difficult for the Greeks to penetrate the secret of the divan; yet the Greeks are persuaded, that a resistance, so obstinate and surprising, had fatigued the perseverance of Mahomet. He began to meditate a retreat, and the siege would have been speedily raised if the ambition and jealousy of the second vizir had not opposed the perfidious advice of Calil Bashaw, who still maintained a secret correspondence with the Byzantine court. The reduction of the city appeared to be hopeless, unless a double attack could be made from the harbour as well as from the land; but the harbour was in-

<sup>46</sup> According to the exaggeration or corrupt text of Ducas (c. 38.), this golden bar was of the enormous and incredible weight of 500 libræ, or pounds. Bouillaud's reading of 500 drachms, or five pounds, is sufficient to exercise the arm of Mahomet, and bruise the back of his admiral.

<sup>47</sup> Ducas, who confesses himself ill informed of the affairs of Hungary, assigns a motive of superstition, a fatal belief that Constantinople would be the term of the Turkish conquests. See Phranza (l. iii. c. 20.) and Spondanus.

accessible;

accessible : an impenetrable chain was now defended by eight large ships, more than twenty of a smaller size, with several gallees and sloops ; and, instead of forcing this barrier, the Turks might apprehend a naval fally, and a second encounter in the open sea. In this perplexity, the genius of Mahomet conceived and executed a plan of a bold and marvellous cast, of transporting by land his lighter vessels and military stores from the Bosphorus into the higher part of the harbour. The distance is about ten miles ; the ground is uneven, and was overspread with thickets ; and, as the road must be opened behind the suburb of Galata, their free passage or total destruction must depend on the option of the Genoese. But these selfish merchants were ambitious of the favour of being the last devoured ; and the deficiency of art was supplied by the strength of obedient myriads. A level way was covered with a broad platform of strong and solid planks ; and to render them more slippery and smooth, they were anointed with the fat of sheep and oxen. Four-score light gallees and brigantines of fifty and thirty oars, were disembarked on the Bosphorus shore ; arranged successively on rollers ; and drawn forwards by the power of men and pullies. Two guides or pilots were stationed at the helm, and the prow, of each vessel ; the sails were unfurled to the winds ; and the labour was cheered by song and acclamation. In the course of a single night, this Turkish fleet painfully climbed the hill, steered over the plain, and was launched from the declivity into the shallow waters of the harbour, far above the molestation of the deeper vessels of the Greeks. The real importance of this operation was magnified by the consternation and confidence which it inspired : but the notorious, unquestionable, fact was displayed before the eyes, and is recorded by the pens, of the two nations<sup>48</sup>. A similar stratagem had been repeatedly prac-

<sup>48</sup> The unanimous testimony of the four Greeks is confirmed by Cantemir (p. 96.) from the Turkish annals; but I could with to contract the distance of ten miles, and to prolong the term of one night.

C H A P.
LXVIII.

tified by the ancients<sup>49</sup>; the Ottoman gallees (I must again repeat) should be considered as large boats; and, if we compare the magnitude and the distance, the obstacles and the means, the boasted miracle<sup>50</sup> has perhaps been equalled by the industry of our own times<sup>51</sup>. As soon as Mahomet had occupied the upper harbour with a fleet and army; he constructed, in the narrowest part, a bridge, or rather mole, of fifty cubits in breadth and one hundred in length: it was formed of casks and hogsheds; joined with rafters, linked with iron, and covered with a solid floor. On this floating battery, he planted one of his largest cannon, while the fourscore gallees, with troops and scaling-ladders, approached the most accessible side, which had formerly been stormed by the Latin conquerors. The indolence of the Christians has been accused for not destroying these unfinished works; but their fire, by a superior fire was controlled and silenced; nor were they wanting in a nocturnal attempt to burn the vessels as well as the bridge of the sultan. His vigilance prevented their approach; their foremost galliots were sunk or taken; forty youths, the bravest of Italy and Greece, were inhumanly massacred at his command; nor could the emperor's grief be assuaged by the just though cruel retaliation, of exposing from the walls the heads of two hundred and sixty Musulman captives. After a siege of forty days, the fate of Constantinople could no longer be averted. The diminutive garrison was exhausted by a double attack: the fortifications, which had stood for ages against hostile violence, were dismantled on all sides by the Ottoman cannon: many breaches were opened; and near the gate of St. Romanus, four towers had been

Outreets of the city.

<sup>49</sup> Phranza relates two examples of a similar transportation over the six miles of the isthmus of Corinth; the one fabulous, of Augustus after the battle of Actium; the other true, of Nicetas, a Greek general in the xth century. To these he might have added a bold enterprise of Hannibal, to introduce his vessels into the harbour of Tarentum (Polybius, l. viii. p. 749 edit. Gronov.).

<sup>50</sup> A Greek of Candia, who had served the Venetians in a similar undertaking (Spond. A. D. 1438, N<sup>o</sup> 37.), might possibly be the adviser and agent of Mahomet.

<sup>51</sup> I particularly allude to our own embarkations on the lakes of Canada in the years 1776 and 1777, so great in the labour, so fruitless in the event.

levelled

levelled with the ground. For the payment of his feeble and mutinous troops, Constantine was compelled to despoil the churches with the promise of a fourfold restitution; and his sacrilege offered a new reproach to the enemies of the union. A spirit of discord impaired the remnant of the Christian strength: the Genoese and Venetian auxiliaries asserted the pre-eminence of their respective service; and Justiniani and the great duke, whose ambition was not extinguished by the common danger, accused each other of treachery and cowardice.

C H A P.
LXVIII.

During the siege of Constantinople, the words of peace and capitulation had been sometimes pronounced; and several embassies had passed between the camp and the city<sup>52</sup>. The Greek emperor was humbled by adversity; and would have yielded to any terms compatible with religion and royalty. The Turkish sultan was desirous of sparing the blood of his soldiers; still more desirous of securing for his own use the Byzantine treasures; and he accomplished a sacred duty in presenting to the Gabours, the choice of circumcision, of tribute, or of death. The avarice of Mahomet might have been satisfied with an annual sum of one hundred thousand ducats: but his ambition grasped the capital of the East: to the prince he offered a rich equivalent, to the people a free toleration, or a safe departure: but after some fruitless treaty, he declared his resolution of finding either a throne, or a grave, under the walls of Constantinople. A sense of honour, and the fear of universal reproach, forbade Palæologus to resign the city into the hands of the Ottomans; and he determined to abide the last extremities of war. Several days were employed by the sultan in the preparations of the assault; and a respite was granted by his favourite science of astrology, which had fixed on the twenty-ninth of May, as the fortunate and fatal hour. On the evening of the twenty-seventh, he issued his final

Preparations
of the Turks
for the general assault,
May 29.

<sup>52</sup> Chalcocondyles and Ducas differ in the time and circumstances of the negotiation; the faithful Phranza spares his prince even the thought of a surrender, and as it was neither glorious nor salutary, orders;

C H A P.
LXVIII.

orders; assembled in his presence the military chiefs; and dispersed his heralds through the camp to proclaim the duty, and the motives, of the perilous enterprise. Fear is the first principle of a despotic government; and his menaces were expressed in the Oriental style, that the fugitives and deserters, had they the wings of a bird<sup>53</sup>, should not escape from his inexorable justice. The greatest part of his bashaws and Janizaries were the offspring of Christian parents; but the glories of the Turkish name were perpetuated by successive adoption; and in the gradual change of individuals, the spirit of a legion, a regiment, or an oda, is kept alive by imitation and discipline. In this holy warfare, the Moslems were exhorted to purify their minds with prayer, their bodies with seven ablutions; and to abstain from food till the close of the ensuing day. A crowd of dervishes visited the tents to instil the desire of martyrdom, and the assurance of spending an immortal youth amidst the rivers and gardens of paradise, and in the embraces of the black-eyed virgins. Yet Mahomet principally trusted to the efficacy of temporal and visible rewards. A double pay was promised to the victorious troops; “The city and the buildings,” said Mahomet, “are mine: but I resign to your valour the captives and the spoil, the treasures of gold and beauty: be rich and be happy. Many are the provinces of my empire: the intrepid soldier who first ascends the walls of Constantinople, shall be rewarded with the government of the

<sup>53</sup> These wings (Chalcocondyles, l. viii. p. 208.) are no more than an Oriental figure: but in the tragedy of Irene, Mahomet's passion soars above sense and reason:

Should the fierce North, upon his frozen wings,
Bear him aloft above the wondering clouds,
And seat him in the Pleiads golden chariot—
Thence should my fury drag him down to torture.

Besides the extravagance of the rant, I must observe, 1. That the operation of the winds must be confined to the lower region of the air. 2. That the name, etymology, and fable of the Pleiads are purely Greek (Scholiast ad Homer. 2. 686. Eudoch. in Ionia,

p. 339. Apollodor. l. iii. c. 10. Heine, p. 229. Not. 682.), and had no affinity with the astronomy of the East (Hyde ad Ulugbeg, Tabul. in Syntagma Dissert. tom. i. p. 40. 42. Gouget, Origine des Arts, &c. tom. vi. p. 73—78. Gebelin, Hist. du Calendrier, p. 73.), which Mahomet had studied. 3. The golden chariot does not exist either in science or fiction; but I much fear that Dr. Johnson has confounded the Pleiads with the great bear or waggon, the zodiac with a northern constellation:

Ἀρταὶ ὄρη καὶ ἄμαξαι ἐπιλάθου καλέουσι.

“ fairest

“ fairest and most wealthy; and my gratitude shall accumulate his honours and fortunes above the measure of his own hopes.” Such various and potent motives diffused among the Turks a general ardour, regardless of life and impatient for action: the camp echoed with the Moslem shouts of, “ God is God, there is but one God, and Mahomet is the apostle of God<sup>54</sup> ;” and the sea and land, from Galata to the seven towers, were illuminated by the blaze of their nocturnal fires.

Far different was the state of the Christians; who, with loud and impotent complaints, deplored the guilt, or the punishment, of their sins. The celestial image of the Virgin had been exposed in solemn procession; but their divine patroness was deaf to their entreaties; they accused the obstinacy of the emperor for refusing a timely surrender; anticipated the horrors of their fate; and sighed for the repose and security of Turkish servitude. The noblest of the Greeks, and the bravest of the allies, were summoned to the palace, to prepare them, on the evening of the twenty-eighth, for the duties and dangers of the general assault. The last speech of Palæologus was the funeral oration of the Roman empire<sup>55</sup>: he promised, he conjured, and he vainly attempted to infuse the hope which was extinguished in his own mind. In this world all was comfortless and gloomy; and neither the gospel nor the church have proposed any conspicuous recompense to the heroes who fall in the service of their country. But the example of their prince, and the confinement of a siege, had armed these warriors with the courage of despair; and the pathetic scene is described by the feelings of the historian Phranza, who was himself present at this mournful assembly. They wept, they embraced; regardless of their families

C H A P.
LXVIII.

Last farewell of the emperor and the
Greeks.

<sup>54</sup> Phranza quarrels with these Moslem acclamations, not for the name of God, but for that of the prophet: the pious zeal of Voltaire is excessive, and even ridiculous.

<sup>55</sup> I am afraid that this discourse was composed by Phranza himself: and it smells so grossly of the sermon and the convent, that I almost doubt whether it was pronounced by Constantine. Leonardus assigns him another speech, in which he addresses himself more respectfully to the Latin auxiliaries.

C H A P.
LXVIII.

and fortunes, they devoted their lives; and each commander, departing to his station, maintained all night a vigilant and anxious watch on the rampart. The emperor, and some faithful companions, entered the dome of St. Sophia, which in a few hours was to be converted into a mosque; and devoutly received, with tears and prayers, the sacrament of the holy communion. He rested some moments in the palace, which resounded with cries and lamentations; solicited the pardon of all whom he might have injured<sup>56</sup>; and mounted on horseback to visit the guards, and explore the motions of the enemy. The distress and fall of the last Constantine are more glorious than the long prosperity of the Byzantine Cæsars.

The general assault,
May 29.

In the confusion of darkness an assailant may sometimes succeed; but in this great and general attack, the military judgment and astrological knowledge of Mahomet advised him to expect the morning, the memorable twenty-ninth of May, in the fourteen hundred and fifty-third year of the Christian æra. The preceding night had been strenuously employed: the troops, the cannon, and the fascines, were advanced to the edge of the ditch, which in many parts presented a smooth and level passage to the breach; and his fourscore galleys almost touched with the prows and their scaling-ladders, the less defensible walls of the harbour. Under pain of death, silence was enjoined: but the physical laws of motion and sound are not obedient to discipline or fear; each individual might suppress his voice and measure his footsteps; but the march and labour of thousands must inevitably produce a strange confusion of dissonant clamours, which reached the ears of the watchmen of the towers. At day-break, without the customary signal of the morning gun, the Turks assaulted the city by sea and land; and the similitude of a twined or twisted thread has been applied to the closeness and con-

<sup>56</sup> This abasement, which devotion has sometimes extorted from dying princes, is an improvement of the gospel doctrine of the forgiveness of injuries: it is more easy to forgive 499 times, than once to ask pardon of an inferior.

finity of their line of attack<sup>57</sup>. The foremost ranks consisted, of the refuse of the host, a voluntary crowd who fought without order or command; of the feebleness of age or childhood, of peasants and vagrants, and of all who had joined the camp in the blind hope of plunder and martyrdom. The common impulse drove them onwards to the wall: the most audacious to climb were instantly precipitated; and not a dart, not a bullet, of the Christians, was idly wasted on the accumulated throng. But their strength and ammunition were exhausted in this laborious defence: the ditch was filled with the bodies of the slain; they supported the footsteps of their companions; and of this devoted vanguard, the death was more serviceable than the life. Under their respective bashaws and sanjaks, the troops of Anatolia and Romania were successively led to the charge: their progress was various and doubtful; but, after a conflict of two hours, the Greeks still maintained, and improved, their advantage; and the voice of the emperor was heard, encouraging his soldiers to achieve, by a last effort, the deliverance of their country. In that fatal moment, the Janizaries arose, fresh, vigorous, and invincible. The sultan himself on horseback, with an iron mace in his hand, was the spectator and judge of their valour: he was surrounded by ten thousand of his domestic troops, whom he reserved for the decisive occasions; and the tide of battle was directed and impelled by his voice and eye. His numerous ministers of justice were posted behind the line, to urge, to restrain, and to punish; and if danger was in the front, shame and inevitable death were in the rear, of the fugitives. The cries of fear and of pain were drowned in the martial music of drums, trumpets, and attaballs; and experience has proved, that the mechanical operation of sounds, by quickening the circulation of the blood and spirits, will act on the human machine more forcibly than the eloquence of

C H A P.
LXVIII.

<sup>57</sup> Besides the 10,000 guards, and the sailors and the marines, Ducas numbers in this general assault 250,000 Turks both horse and foot.

C H A P.
LXVIII.

reason and honour. From the lines, the galleys, and the bridge, the Ottoman artillery thundered on all sides; and the camp and city, the Greeks and the Turks, were involved in a cloud of smoke, which could only be dispelled by the final deliverance or destruction of the Roman empire. The single combats of the heroes of history or fable, amuse our fancy and engage our affections: the skilful evolutions of war may inform the mind, and improve a necessary, though pernicious, science. But in the uniform and odious pictures of a general assault, all is blood, and horror, and confusion; nor shall I strive, at the distance of three centuries and a thousand miles, to delineate a scene, of which there could be no spectators, and of which the actors themselves were incapable of forming any just or adequate idea.

The immediate loss of Constantinople may be ascribed to the bullet, or arrow, which pierced the gauntlet of John Justiniani. The sight of his blood, and the exquisite pain, appalled the courage of the chief, whose arms and counsels were the firmest rampart of the city. As he withdrew from his station in quest of a surgeon, his flight was perceived and stopped by the indefatigable emperor. "Your wound," exclaimed Palæologus, "is slight; the danger is pressing; your presence is necessary; and whither will you retire?" "I will retire," said the trembling Genoese, "by the same road which God has opened to the Turks;" and at these words he hastily passed through one of the breaches of the inner wall. By this pusillanimous act, he stained the honours of a military life; and the few days which he survived in Galata, or the isle of Chios, were embittered by his own and the public reproach<sup>58</sup>. His example was imitated by the greatest part of

<sup>58</sup> In the severe censure of the flight of Justiniani, Phranza expresses his own feelings, and those of the public. For some private reasons, he is treated with more lenity and respect by Ducas; but the words of Leonardus

Chienfis express his strong and recent indignation, gloriæ salutis sui que oblitus. In the whole series of their Eastern policy, his countrymen, the Genoese, were always suspected, and often guilty.

the Latin auxiliaries, and the defence began to slacken when the attack was pressed with redoubled vigour. The number of the Ottomans was fifty, perhaps an hundred, times superior to that of the Christians: the double walls were reduced by the cannon to an heap of ruins: in a circuit of several miles, some places must be found more easy of access, or more feebly guarded; and if the besiegers could penetrate in a single point, the whole city was irrecoverably lost. The first who deserved the sultan's reward was Hassan the Janizary, of gigantic stature and strength. With his scymetar in one hand and his buckler in the other, he ascended the outward fortification: of the thirty Janizaries, who were emulous of his valour, eighteen perished in the bold adventure. Hassan and his twelve companions had reached the summit; the giant was precipitated from the rampart; he rose on one knee, and was again oppressed by a shower of darts and stones. But his success had proved that the achievement was possible: the walls and towers were instantly covered with a swarm of Turks; and the Greeks, now driven from the vantage ground, were overwhelmed by encroaching multitudes. Amidst these multitudes, the emperor<sup>59</sup>, who accomplished all the duties of a general and a soldier, was long seen, and finally lost. The nobles, who fought round his person, sustained till their last breath the honourable names of Palæologus and Cantacuzene: his mournful exclamation was heard, "Cannot there be found a Christian to cut off my head?" and his last fear was that of falling alive into the hands of the infidels<sup>61</sup>. The prudent

C H A P.
LXVIII.

<sup>59</sup> Ducas kills him with two blows of Turkish soldiers; Chalcocondyles wounds him in the shoulder, and then tramples him in the gate. The grief of Phranza carrying him among the enemy, escapes from the precise image of his death; but we may, without flattery, apply these noble lines of Dryden:

As to Sebastian, let them search the field;
And where they find a mountain of the slain,
Send one to climb, and looking down beneath,

There they will find him at his manly length,
With his face up to heaven, in that red monument
Which his good sword had digged.

<sup>60</sup> Spondanus (A. D. 1453, N<sup>o</sup> 10.), who has hopes of his salvation, wishes to absolve this demand from the guilt of suicide.

<sup>61</sup> Leonardus Chienfis very properly observes, that the Turks, had they known the emperor, would have laboured to save and secure a captive so acceptable to the sultan.

C H A P.
LXVIII.

Death of the emperor
Constantine Paleologus.

Loss of the city and empire.

The Turks enter and pillage Constantinople.

despair of Constantine cast away the purple: amidst the tumult he fell by an unknown hand, and his body was buried under a mountain of the slain. After his death, resistance and order were no more: the Greeks fled towards the city; and many were pressed and stifled in the narrow pass of the gate of St. Romanus. The victorious Turks rushed through the breaches of the inner wall; and as they advanced into the streets, they were soon joined by their brethren, who had forced the gate Phenar on the side of the harbour<sup>62</sup>. In the first heat of the pursuit, about two thousand Christians were put to the sword; but avarice soon prevailed over cruelty; and the victors acknowledged, that they should immediately have given quarter if the valour of the emperor and his chosen bands had not prepared them for a similar opposition in every part of the capital. It was thus, after a siege of fifty-three days, that Constantinople, which had defied the power of Chosroes, the Chagan, and the caliphs, was irretrievably subdued by the arms of Mahomet the second. Her empire only had been subverted by the Latins: her religion was trampled in the dust by the Moslem conquerors<sup>63</sup>.

The tidings of misfortune fly with a rapid wing; yet such was the extent of Constantinople, that the more distant quarters might prolong some moments the happy ignorance of their ruin<sup>64</sup>. But in the general consternation, in the feelings of selfish or social anxiety, in the tumult and thunder of the assault, a sleepless night and morning must have elapsed; nor can I believe that many Grecian ladies were awakened by the Janizaries from a sound and tran-quail slumber. On the assurance of the public calamity, the houses and convents were instantly deserted; and the trembling inhabitants flocked together in the streets, like an herd of timid animals; as if accumulated weakness could be productive of strength, or in the vain hope, that amid the crowd, each individual might be safe and invisible. From every part of the capital, they flowed into the church of St. Sophia: in the space of an hour, the sanctuary, the choir, the nave, the upper and lower galleries, were filled with the multitudes of fathers and husbands, of women and children, of priests, monks, and religious virgins: the doors were barred on the inside, and they sought protection from the sacred dome, which they had so lately abhorred as a profane and polluted edifice. Their confidence was founded on the prophecy of an enthusiast or impostor; that one day the Turks would enter Constantinople, and pursue the Romans as far as the column of Constantine in the square before St. Sophia: but that this would be the term of their calamities: that an angel would descend from heaven, with a sword in his hand, and would deliver the empire, with that celestial weapon, to a poor man seated at the foot of the column. "Take this sword," would he say, "and avenge the people of the Lord." At these animating words, the Turks would instantly fly, and the victorious Romans would drive them from the West, and from all Anatolia, as far as the frontiers of Persia. It is on this occasion, that Ducas, with some fancy and much truth, upbraids the discord and obliquity of the Greeks. "Had that angel appeared," exclaims the historian, "had he offered to exterminate your foes if you would consent to the union of the church, even then, in that fatal moment, you would have rejected your safety or have deceived your God."

<sup>62</sup> Cantemir, p. 56. The Christian ships in the mouth of the harbour, had flanked and retarded this naval attack.

<sup>63</sup> Chaloccondyles most absurdly supposes, that Constantinople was sacked by the Asiatics in revenge for the ancient calamities of Troy; and the grammarians of the 17th century are happy to melt down the uncouth appellation of Turks, into the more classical name of Tenuri.

<sup>64</sup> When Cyrus surprised Babylon during the celebration of a festival, so vast was the city, and so careless were the inhabitants, that much time elapsed before the distant quarters knew that they were captives (Herodotus, l. i. c. 191.), and Usher (Annal. p. 78.), who has quoted from the prophet Jeremiah a passage of similar import.

<sup>65</sup> This lively description is extracted from Ducas (c. 39.), who two years afterwards was sent ambassador from the prince of Lesbos to the sultan (c. 44.). Till Lesbos was subdued in 1463 (Phranza, l. iii. c. 27.), that island must have been full of the fugitives of Constantinople, who delighted to repeat, perhaps to adorn, the tale of their misery.

While

C H A P.
LXVIII.
Captivity of
the Greeks.

While they expected the descent of the tardy angel, the doors were broken with axes ; and as the Turks encountered no resistance, their bloodless hands were employed in selecting and securing the multitude of their prisoners. Youth, beauty, and the appearance of wealth, attracted their choice ; and the right of property was decided among themselves by a prior seizure, by personal strength, and by the authority of command. In the space of an hour, the male captives were bound with cords, the females with their veils and girdles. The senators were linked with their slaves ; the prelates, with the porters, of the church ; and young men of a plebeian class, with noble maids, whose faces had been invisible to the sun and their nearest kindred. In this common captivity, the ranks of society were confounded ; the ties of nature were cut asunder ; and the inexorable soldier was careless of the father's groans, the tears of the mother, and the lamentations of the children. The loudest in their wailings were the nuns, who were torn from the altar with naked bosoms, outstretched hands, and dishevelled hair : and we should piously believe that few could be tempted to prefer the vigils of the haram to those of the monastery. Of these unfortunate Greeks, of these domestic animals, whole strings were rudely driven through the streets ; and as the conquerors were eager to return for more prey, their trembling pace was quickened with menaces and blows. At the same hour, a similar rapine was exercised in all the churches and monasteries, in all the palaces and habitations of the capital ; nor could any place, however sacred or sequestered, protect the persons or the property of the Greeks. Above sixty thousand of this devoted people were transported from the city to the camp and fleet ; exchanged or sold according to the caprice or interest of their masters, and dispersed in remote servitude through the provinces of the Ottoman empire. Among these we may notice some remarkable characters. The historian Phranza, first chamberlain and principal secretary, was involved with his family in the common

common lot. After suffering four months the hardships of slavery, he recovered his freedom; in the ensuing winter he ventured to Adrianople, and ransomed his wife from the mir basbi or master of the horse; but his two children, in the flower of youth and beauty, had been seized for the use of Mahomet himself. The daughter of Phranza died in the seraglio, perhaps a virgin: his son, in the fifteenth year of his age, preferred death to infamy, and was stabbed by the hand of the royal lover<sup>66</sup>. A deed thus inhuman, cannot surely be expiated by the taste and liberality with which he released a Grecian matron, and her two daughters, on receiving a Latin ode from Philadelphus, who had chosen a wife in that noble family<sup>67</sup>. The pride or cruelty of Mahomet would have been most sensibly gratified by the capture of a Roman legate; but the dexterity of cardinal Isidore eluded the search, and he escaped from Galata in a plebeian habit<sup>68</sup>. The chain and entrance of the outward harbour was still occupied by the Italian ships of merchandize and war. They had signalised their valour in the siege; they embraced the moment of retreat, while the Turkish mariners were dissipated in the pillage of the city. When they hoisted sail, the beach was covered with a suppliant and lamentable crowd: but the means of transportation were scanty: the Venetians and Genoese selected their countrymen; and, notwithstanding the fairest promises of the sultan, the inhabitants of Galata evacuated their houses, and embarked with their most precious effects.

<sup>66</sup> See Phranza, l. iii. c. 20, 21. His expressions are positive: Ameras suâ manû jugulavit. . . . volebat enim eo turpiter et nefarie abuti. Me miserum et infelicem. Yet he could only learn from report, the bloody or impure scenes that were acted in the dark recesses of the seraglio.

<sup>67</sup> See Tiraboschi (tom. vi. p. i. p. 290.) and Lancelot (Mem. de l'Académie des Inscriptions, tom. x. p. 718.). I should be curious to learn how he could praise the public enemy, whom he so often reviles as the most corrupt and inhuman of tyrants.

<sup>68</sup> The Commentaries of Pius II. suppose, that he craftily placed his cardinal's hat on the head of a corpse which was cut off and exposed in triumph, while the legate himself was bought and delivered, as a captive of no value. The great Belgic Chronicle adorns his escape with new adventures, which he suppressed (says Spondanus, A. D. 1453, N<sup>o</sup> 15.) in his own letters, lest he should lose the merit and reward of suffering for Christ.

C H A P.
LXVIII.

Amount of
the spoil.

In the fall and the sack of great cities, an historian is condemned to repeat the tale of uniform calamity: the same effects must be produced by the same passions; and when those passions may be indulged without control, small, alas! is the difference between civilized and savage man. Amidst the vague exclamations of bigotry and hatred, the Turks are not accused of a wanton or immoderate effusion of Christian blood: but according to their maxims (the maxims of antiquity), the lives of the vanquished were forfeited; and the legitimate reward of the conqueror was derived from the service, the sale, or the ransom, of his captives of both sexes<sup>69</sup>. The wealth of Constantinople had been granted by the sultan to his victorious troops: and the rapine of an hour is more productive than the industry of years. But as no regular division was attempted of the spoil, the respective shares were not determined by merit; and the rewards of valour were stolen away by the followers of the camp, who had declined the toil and danger of the battle. The narrative of their depredations could not afford either amusement or instruction: the total amount, in the last poverty of the empire, has been valued at four millions of ducats<sup>70</sup>; and of this sum, a small part was the property of the Venetians, the Genoese, the Florentines, and the merchants of Ancona. Of these foreigners, the stock was improved in quick and perpetual circulation: but the riches of the Greeks were displayed in the idle ostentation of palaces and wardrobes, or deeply buried in treasures of ingots and old coin, lest it should be demanded at their hands for the defence of their country. The profanation and plunder of the monasteries and churches, excited the most tragic complaints. The dome of St. Sophia itself, the <sup>69</sup> Busbequius expatiates with pleasure and applause on the rights of war, and the use of slavery, among the ancients and the Turks (de Legat. Turcicâ, epist. iii. p. 161.).

<sup>70</sup> This sum is specified in a marginal note of Leunclavius (Chalcocondyles, l. viii.

p. 211.), but in the distribution to Venice, Genoa, Florence, and Ancona, of 50, 20, 20, and 15,000 ducats, I suspect that a figure has been dropt. Even with the restitution, the foreign property would scarcely exceed one-fourth.

earthly heaven, the second firmament, the vehicle of the cherubim, the throne of the glory of God<sup>71</sup>, was despoiled of the oblations of ages; and the gold and silver, the pearls and jewels, the vases and sacerdotal ornaments, were most wickedly converted to the service of mankind. After the divine images had been stripped of all that could be valuable to a profane eye, the canvass, or the wood, was torn, or broken, or burnt, or trod under foot, or applied, in the stables or the kitchen, to the vilest uses. The example of sacrilege was imitated however from the Latin conquerors of Constantinople; and the treatment which Christ, the Virgin, and the saints, had sustained from the guilty Catholic, might be inflicted by the zealous Musulman on the monuments of idolatry. Perhaps, instead of joining the public clamour, a philosopher will observe, that in the decline of the arts, the workmanship could not be more valuable than the work, and that a fresh supply of visions and miracles would speedily be renewed by the craft of the priest and the credulity of the people. He will more seriously deplore the loss of the Byzantine libraries, which were destroyed or scattered in the general confusion: one hundred and twenty thousand manuscripts are said to have disappeared<sup>72</sup>; ten volumes might be purchased for a single ducat; and the same ignominious price, too high perhaps for a shelf of theology, included the whole works of Aristotle and Homer, the noblest productions of the science and literature of ancient Greece. We may reflect with pleasure, that an inestimable portion of our classic treasures was safely deposited in Italy; and that the mechanics of a German town had invented an art which derides the havoc of time and barbarism.

From the first hour<sup>73</sup> of the memorable twenty-ninth of May, disorder and rapine prevailed in Constantinople, till the eighth hour

C H A P.
LXVIII.

Mohomet II.
visits the city,
St. Sophia,
the palace,
&c.

<sup>71</sup> See the enthusiastic praises and lamentations of Phranza (l. iii. c. 17.).

<sup>72</sup> See Ducas (c. 43.), and an epistle, July 15th, 1453, from Laurus Quirinus to pope Nicholas V. (Hody de Græcis, p. 192.

from a MS. in the Cotton library).

<sup>73</sup> The Julian Calendar, which reckons the days and hours from midnight, was used at Constantinople. But Ducas seems to understand the natural hours from sun-rise.

C H A P.
LXVIII.

of the same day; when the sultan himself passed in triumph through the gate of St. Romanus. He was attended by his vizirs, bashaws, and guards, each of whom (says a Byzantine historian) was robust as Hercules, dextrous as Apollo, and equal in battle to any ten of the race of ordinary mortals. The conqueror<sup>74</sup> gazed with satisfaction and wonder on the strange though splendid appearance of the domes and palaces, so dissimilar from the style of Oriental architecture. In the hippodrome, or atmeidan, his eye was attracted by the twisted column of the three serpents; and, as a trial of his strength, he shattered with his iron mace or battle-axe the under jaw of one of these monsters<sup>75</sup>, which in the eyes of the Turks were the idols or talismans of the city. At the principal door of St. Sophia, he alighted from his horse, and entered the dome: and such was his jealous regard for that monument of his glory, that on observing a zealous Musulman in the act of breaking the marble pavement, he admonished him with his scymetar, that, if the spoil and captives were granted to the soldiers, the public and private buildings had been reserved for the prince. By his command, the metropolis of the Eastern church was transformed into a mosch: the rich and portable instruments of superstition had been removed; the crosses were thrown down; and the walls, which were covered with images and mosaics, were washed and purified, and restored to a state of naked simplicity. On the same day, or on the ensuing Friday, the muezzin or crier ascended the most lofty turret, and proclaimed the esam, or public invitation in the name of God and his prophet; the imam preached; and Mahomet the second performed the namaz of prayer and thanksgiving on the great altar, where the Christian mysteries had so lately been celebrated before the last of the Cæsars<sup>76</sup>.

<sup>74</sup> See the Turkish Annals, p. 329. and the Pandects of Leunclivius, p. 448.

<sup>75</sup> I have had occasion (vol. ii. p. 16, 17.) to mention this curious relic of Grecian antiquity.

<sup>76</sup> We are obliged to Cantemir (p. 102.)

for the Turkish account of the conversion of St. Sophia, so bitterly deplored by Phranza and Ducas. It is amusing enough to observe, in what opposite lights the same object appears to a Musulman and a Christian eye.

C H A P.
LXVII.

From St. Sophia he proceeded to the august, but desolate, mansion of an hundred successors of the great Constantine; but which in a few hours had been stripped of the pomp of royalty. A melancholy reflection on the vicissitudes of human greatness, forced itself on his mind; and he repeated an elegant distich of Persian poetry: “The spider has wove his web in the Imperial palace; and the owl hath sung her watch-song on the towers of Afrasiab.”

Yet his mind was not satisfied, nor did the victory seem complete, till he was informed of the fate of Constantine; whether he had escaped, or been made prisoner, or had fallen in the battle. Two Janizaries claimed the honour and reward of his death: the body, under an heap of slain, was discovered by the golden eagles embroidered on his shoes: the Greeks acknowledged with tears the head of their late emperor; and, after exposing the bloody trophy<sup>78</sup>, Mahomet bestowed on his rival the honours of a decent funeral. After his decease, Lucas Notaras, great duke<sup>79</sup>, and first minister of the empire, was the most important prisoner. When he offered his person and his treasures at the foot of the throne, “And why,” said the indignant sultan, “did you not employ these treasures in the defence of your prince and country?” “They were yours,” answered the slave, “God had reserved them for your hands.” “If he reserved them for me,” replied the despot, “how have you presumed to withhold them so long by a fruitless and fatal resistance?” The great duke alleged the obstinacy of the strangers, and some secret encouragement from the Turkish vizir; and from

His behaviour to the
Greeks.

<sup>77</sup> This distich, which Cantemir gives in the original, derives new beauties from the application. It was thus that Scipio repeated, in the sack of Carthage, the famous prophecy of Homer. The same generous feeling carried the mind of the conqueror to the past or the future.

<sup>78</sup> I cannot believe with Ducas (see Spondanus, A. D. 1453, N<sup>o</sup> 13.), that Mahomet sent round Persia, Arabia, &c. the head of the Greek emperor: he would surely content himself with a trophy less inhuman.

<sup>79</sup> Phranza was the personal enemy of the Greek duke; nor could time, or death, or his own retreat to a monastery, extort a feeling of sympathy or forgiveness. Ducas is inclined to praise and pity the martyr; Chalcocondyles is neuter, but we are indebted to him for the hint of the Greek conspiracy.

C H A P.
LXVIII.

this perilous interview, he was at length dismissed with the assurance of pardon and protection. Mahomet condescended to visit his wife, a venerable princess oppressed with sickness and grief; and his consolation for her misfortunes was in the most tender strain of humanity and filial reverence. A similar clemency was extended to the principal officers of state, of whom several were ransomed at his expence; and during some days he declared himself the friend and father of the vanquished people. But the scene was soon changed; and before his departure, the hippodrome streamed with the blood of his noblest captives. His perfidious cruelty is execrated by the Christians: they adorn with the colours of heroic martyrdom the execution of the great duke and his two sons; and his death is ascribed to the generous refusal of delivering his children to the tyrant's lust. Yet a Byzantine historian has dropt an unguarded word of conspiracy, deliverance, and Italian succour: such treason may be glorious; but the rebel who bravely ventures, has justly forfeited, his life; nor should we blame a conqueror for destroying the enemies whom he can no longer trust. On the eighteenth of June, the victorious sultan returned to Adrianople; and smiled at the base and hollow embassies of the Christian princes, who viewed their approaching ruin in the fall of the Eastern empire.

He repeoples and adorns Constantino-
ple.

Constantinople had been left naked and desolate, without a prince or a people. But she could not be despoiled of the incomparable situation which marks her for the metropolis of a great empire; and the genius of the place will ever triumph over the accidents of time and fortune. Bourfa and Adrianople, the ancient seats of the Ottomans, sunk into provincial towns; and Mahomet the second established his own residence, and that of his successors, on the same commanding spot which had been chosen by Constantine<sup>80</sup>. The fortifi-

<sup>80</sup> For the restitution of Constantinople and the Turkish foundations, see Cantemir (p. 102 - 109.), Ducas (c. 42.), with Thevenot, Tournefort, and the rest of our modern travellers. From a gigantic picture of the greatness, population, &c. of Constantinople and fortifications of Galata, which might afford a shelter to the Latins, were prudently destroyed; but the damage of the Turkish cannon was soon repaired; and before the month of August, great quantities of lime had been burnt for the restoration of the walls of the capital. As the entire property of the soil and buildings, whether public or private, or profane or sacred, was now transferred to the conqueror, he first separated a space of eight furlongs from the point of the triangle for the establishment of his seraglio or palace. It is here, in the bosom of luxury, that the grand signor (as he has been emphatically named by the Italians) appears to reign over Europe and Asia; but his person on the shores of the Bosphorus may not always be secure from the insults of an hostile navy. In the new character of a mosque, the cathedral of St. Sophia was endowed with an ample revenue, crowned with lofty minarets, and surrounded with groves and fountains, for the devotion and refreshment of the Moslems. The same model was imitated in the jami or royal mosques; and the first of these was built, by Mahomet himself, on the ruins of the church of the holy apostles and the tombs of the Greek emperors. On the third day after the conquest, the grave of Abu Ayub or Job, who had fallen in the first siege of the Arabs, was revealed in a vision; and it is before the sepulchre of the martyr, that the new sultans are girded with the sword of empire<sup>61</sup>. Constantinople no longer appertains to the Roman historian; nor shall I enumerate the civil and religious edifices that were profaned or erected by its Turkish masters: the population was speedily renewed; and before the end of September, five thousand families of Anatolia and Romania had obeyed the royal mandate, which enjoined them, under pain of death, to occupy their new habitations in the capital. The throne of Mahomet was guarded by the num-

C H A P.
LXVIII.

and the Ottoman empire (Abregé de l'Histoire Ottomane, tom. i. p. 16-21.), we may learn, that in the year 1586, the Moslems were less numerous in the capital than the Christians, or even the Jews.

<sup>61</sup> The Turbé, or sepulchral monument of Abou Ayub, is described and engraved in the Tableau General de l'Empire Ottoman (Paris, 1787, in large folio), a work of less use, perhaps, than magnificence (tom. i. p. 305, 306.).

C H A P.
LXVIII.

bers and fidelity of his Moslem subjects: but his rational policy aspired to collect the remnant of the Greeks; and they returned in crowds, as soon as they were assured of their lives, their liberties, and the free exercise of their religion. In the election and investiture of a patriarch, the ceremonial of the Byzantine court was revived and imitated. With a mixture of satisfaction and horror, they beheld the sultan on his throne; who delivered into the hands of Gennadius the crozier or pastoral staff, the symbol of his ecclesiastical office; who conducted the patriarch to the gate of the seraglio, presented him with an horse richly caparisoned, and directed the vizirs and bashaws to lead him to the palace which had been allotted for his residence<sup>82</sup>. The churches of Constantinople were shared between the two religions: their limits were marked; and, till it was infringed by Selim the grandson of Mahomet, the Greeks<sup>83</sup> enjoyed above sixty years the benefit of this equal partition. Encouraged by the ministers of the divan, who wished to elude the fanaticism of the sultan, the Christian advocates presumed to allege that this division had been an act, not of generosity, but of justice; not a concession, but a compact; and that if one half of the city had been taken by storm, the other moiety had surrendered on the faith of a sacred capitulation. The original grant had indeed been consumed by fire: but the loss was supplied by the testimony of three aged Janizaries who remembered the transaction; and their venal oaths are of more weight in the opinion of Cantemir, than the positive and unanimous consent of the history of the times<sup>84</sup>.

The

<sup>82</sup> Phranza (l. iii. c. 19.) relates the ceremony, which has possibly been adorned in the Greek reports to each other, and to the Latins. The fact is confirmed by Emanuel Malaxus, who wrote, in vulgar Greek, the History of the Patriarchs after the taking of Constantinople, inserted in the Turco-Grecia of Crusius (l. v. p. 105—184). But the most patient reader will not believe that Mahomet adopted the Catholic form, “Sancti Trinitas quæ mihi donavit imperium te in patriarcham novæ Romæ deligit.”

<sup>83</sup> From the Turco-Grecia of Crusius, &c. Spondanus (A.D. 1453, N<sup>o</sup> 21. 1458, N<sup>o</sup> 16.) describes the slavery and domestic quarrels of the Greek church. The patriarch who succeeded Gennadius, threw himself in despair into a well.

<sup>84</sup> Cantemir (p. 101—105.) insists on the unanimous consent of the Turkish historians, ancient as well as modern, and argues, that they would not have violated the truth to diminish their national glory, since it is esteemed more honourable to take a city by force

The remaining fragments of the Greek kingdom in Europe and Asia I shall abandon to the Turkish arms; but the final extinction of the two last dynasties<sup>85</sup> which have reigned in Constantinople, should terminate the decline and fall of the Roman empire in the East. The despots of the Morea, Demetrius and Thomas<sup>86</sup>, the two surviving brothers of the name of PALÆOLOGUS, were astonished by the death of the emperor Constantine, and the ruin of the monarchy. Hopèless of defence, they prepared with the noble Greeks who adhered to their fortune, to seek a refuge in Italy, beyond the reach of the Ottoman thunder. Their first apprehensions were dispelled by the victorious sultan, who contented himself with a tribute of twelve thousand ducats; and while his ambition explored the continent and the islands in search of prey, he indulged the Morea in a respite of seven years. But this respite was a period of grief, discord, and misery. The hexamilion, the rampart of the Isthmus, so often raised and so often subverted, could not long be defended by three hundred Italian archers: the keys of Corinth were seized by the Turks: they returned from their summer excursions with a train of captives and spoil; and the complaints of the injured Greeks were heard with indifference and disdain. The Albanians, a vagrant tribe of shepherds and robbers, filled the peninsula with rapine and murder: the two despots implored the dangerous and humiliating aid of a neighbouring bashaw; and when he had quelled the revolt, his lessons inculcated the rule of their future

C H A P.
LXVIII.

Extinction of the Imperial families of Comnenus and Palæolo-gus.

force than by composition. But, 1. I doubt this consent, since he quotes no particular historian, and the Turkish Annals of Leunclavius affirm, without exception, that Mahomet took Constantinople per viam (p. 329.). 2. The same argument may be turned in favour of the Greeks of the times, who would not have forgotten this honourable and salutary treaty. Voltaire, as usual, prefers the Turks to the Christians.

<sup>85</sup> For the genealogy and fall of the Comneni of Trebizond, see Durange (Fam.

Byzant. p. 195.); for the last Palæologi, the fine accurate antiquarian (p. 244, 247, 248.). The Palæologi of Montserrat were not extinct till the next century; but they had forgotten their Greek origin and kindred.

<sup>86</sup> In the worthless story of the disputes and misfortunes of the two brothers, Phranza (l. iii. c. 21—30.) is too partial on the side of Thomas; Ducas (c. 44, 45.) is too brief, and Chalcocondyles (l. viii, ix, x.) too diffuse and digressive.

C. H. A. P.
LXVIII.

Loss of the VIENNA,
A. D. 1453;

conduct. Neither the ties of blood, nor the oaths which they repeatedly pledged in the communion and before the altar, nor the stronger pressure of necessity, could reconcile or suspend their domestic quarrels. They ravaged each other's patrimony with fire and sword: the alms and succours of the West were consumed in civil hostility; and their power was only exerted in savage and arbitrary executions. The distress and revenge of the weaker rival invoked their supreme lord; and, in the season of maturity and revenge, Mahomet declared himself the friend of Demetrius, and marched into the Morea with an irresistible force. When he had taken possession of Sparta, "You are too weak," said the sultan, "to control this turbulent province: I will take your daughter to my bed; and you shall pass the remainder of your life in security and honour." Demetrius sighed and obeyed; surrendered his daughter and his castles; followed to Adrianople his sovereign and son; and received for his own maintenance, and that of his followers, a city in Thrace, and the adjacent isles of Imbros, Lemnos, and Samothrace. He was joined the next year by a companion of misfortune, the last of the COMNENIAN race, who, after the taking of Constantinople by the Latins, had founded a new empire on the coast of the Black Sea<sup>87</sup>. In the progress of his Anatolian conquests, Mahomet invested with a fleet and army the capital of David, who presumed to style himself emperor of Trebizond<sup>88</sup>; and the negotiation was comprised in a short and peremptory question, "Will you secure your life and treasures by resigning your kingdom? or had you rather forfeit your kingdom, your treasures, and your

<sup>87</sup> See the loss or conquest of Trebizond in Chalcocondyles (l. ix. p. 263—266.), Ducas (c. 45.), Phranza (l. iii. c. 27.), and Cantemir (p. 107.).

<sup>88</sup> Though Tournefort (tom. iii. lettre xvii. p. 179.) speaks of Trebizond as mal peuplée, Peyssonel, the latest and most accurate observer, can find 100,000 inhabitants (Commerce de la Mer Noire, tom. ii. p. 72. and for the province, p. 53—90.). Its prosperity and trade are perpetually disturbed by the factious quarrels of two odas of Janizaries, in one of which 30,000 Lazi are commonly enrolled (Memoires de Tott, tom. iii. p. 16, 17.).

“ life ?” The feeble Comnenus was subdued by his own fears, and the example of a Musulman neighbour, the prince of Sinope<sup>89</sup>, who, on a similar summons, had yielded a fortified city with four hundred cannon and ten or twelve thousand foldiers. The capitulation of Trebizond was faithfully performed; and the emperor, with his family, was transported to a castle in Romania: but on a slight suspicion of corresponding with the Persian king, David, and the whole Comnenian race, were sacrificed to the jealousy or avarice of the conqueror. Nor could the name of father long protect the unfortunate Demetrius from exile and confiscation; his abject submission moved the pity and contempt of the sultan; his followers were transplanted to Constantinople; and his poverty was alleviated by a pension of fifty thousand aspers, till a monastic habit and a tardy death released Palæologus from an earthly master. It is not easy to pronounce whether the servitude of Demetrius, or the exile of his brother Thomas<sup>90</sup>, be the most inglorious. On the conquest of the Morea, the despot escaped to Corfu, and from thence to Italy, with some naked adherents: his name, his sufferings, and the head of the apostle St. Andrew, entitled him to the hospitality of the Vatican; and his misery was prolonged by a pension of six thousand ducats from the pope and cardinals. His two sons, Andrew and Manuel, were educated in Italy; but the eldest, contemptible to his enemies and burthensome to his friends, was degraded by the baseness of his life and marriage. A title was his sole inheritance; and that inheritance he successively sold to the kings of France and Arragon<sup>91</sup>. During his transient prosperity, Charles the eighth was ambi-

C H A P.
LXVIII. of Trebi-
zond,
A. D. 1461.

<sup>89</sup> Ismael Beg, prince of Sinope or Sinople, was possessed (chiefly from his copper mines) of a revenue of 200,000 ducats (Chalcocond. l. ix. p. 258, 259.). Peyssonel (Commerce de la Mer Noire, tom. ii. p. 100.) ascribes to the modern city 60,000 inhabitants. This account seems enormous: yet it is by trading with a people that we become acquainted with their wealth and numbers.

<sup>90</sup> Spondanus (from Gobelien Comment. Pii II. l. v.) relates the arrival and reception of the despot Thomas at Rome (A. D. 1461, N<sup>o</sup> 3.).

<sup>91</sup> By an act dated A. D. 1494, Sept. 6.

C H A P.
LXVIII.

ambitious of joining the empire of the East with the kingdom of Naples: in a public festival, he assumed the appellation and the purple of Augustus: the Greeks rejoiced, and the Ottoman already trembled, at the approach of the French chivalry<sup>92</sup>. Manuel Palæologus, the second son, was tempted to revisit his native country: his return might be grateful, and could not be dangerous, to the Porte: he was maintained at Constantinople in safety and ease; and an honourable train of Christians and Moslems attended him to the grave. If there be some animals of so generous a nature that they refuse to propagate in a domestic state, the last of the Imperial race must be ascribed to an inferior kind: he accepted from the sultan's liberality two beautiful females; and his surviving son was lost in the habit and religion of a Turkish slave.

Grief and terror of Europe,
A. D. 1453.

The importance of Constantinople was felt and magnified in its loss: the pontificate of Nicholas the fifth, however peaceful and prosperous, was dishonoured by the fall of the Eastern empire; and the grief and terror of the Latins revived, or seemed to revive, the old enthusiasm of the crusades. In one of the most distant countries of the West, Philip duke of Burgundy entertained, at Lisle in Flanders, an assembly of his nobles; and the pompous pageants of the feast were skilfully adapted to their fancy and feelings<sup>93</sup>. In the midst of the banquet, a gigantic Saracen entered the hall, leading a fictitious elephant, with a castle on his back: a matron in a mourning robe, the symbol of religion, was seen to issue from the castle; and lately transmitted from the archives of the Capitol to the royal library of Paris, the despot Andrew Palæologus, reserving the Morea, and stipulating some private advantages, conveys to Charles VIII. king of France the empires of Constantinople and Trebizond (Spondanus, A. D. 1495, N<sup>o</sup> 2.). M. de Foncemagne (Mem. de l'Academie des Inscriptions, tom. xvii. p. 539—578.) has bestowed a dissertation on this national title, of which he had obtained a copy from Rome.

<sup>92</sup> See Philip de Comines (l. vii. c. 14.),

who reckons with pleasure the number of Greeks who were prepared to rise, 60 miles of an easy navigation, eighteen days journey from Valona to Constantinople, &c. On this occasion the Turkish empire was saved by the policy of Venice.

<sup>93</sup> See the original feast in Olivier de la Marche (Memoires, P. i. c. 29, 30.), with the abstract and observations of M. de Ste Palaye (Memoires sur la Chevalerie, tom. i. P. iii. p. 182—185.). The peacock and the pheasant were distinguished as royal birds.

she deplored her oppression, and accused the slowness of her champions: the principal herald of the golden fleece advanced, bearing on his fist a live pheasant, which, according to the rites of chivalry, he presented to the duke. At this extraordinary summons, Philip, a wife and aged prince, engaged his person and powers in the holy war against the Turks: his example was imitated by the barons and knights of the assembly; they swore to God, the Virgin, the ladies, and the pheasant; and their particular vows were not less extravagant than the general sanction of their oath. But the performance was made to depend on some future and foreign contingency; and, during twelve years, till the last hour of his life, the duke of Burgundy might be scrupulously, and perhaps sincerely, on the eve of his departure. Had every breast glowed with the same ardour; had the union of the Christians corresponded with their bravery; had every country, from Sweden<sup>54</sup> to Naples, supplied a just proportion of cavalry and infantry, of men and money, it is indeed probable that Constantinople would have been delivered, and that the Turks might have been chased beyond the Hellespont or the Euphrates. But the secretary of the emperor, who composed every epistle, and attended every meeting, Æneas Sylvius<sup>55</sup>, a statesman and orator, describes from his own experience the repugnant state and spirit of Christendom. "It is a body," says he, "without an " head; a republic without laws or magistrates. The pope and the " emperor may shine as lofty titles, as splendid images; but they are " unable to command, and none are willing to obey: every state " has a separate prince, and every prince has a separate interest.
" What eloquence could unite so many discordant and hostile powers

<sup>54</sup> It was found by an actual enumeration, that Sweden, Gothland, and Finland, contained 1,800,000 fighting men, and consequently were far more populous than at present.

<sup>55</sup> In the year 1454 Spondanus has given, from Æneas Sylvius, a view of the state of Europe, enriched with his own observations. That valuable annalist, and the Italian Muratori, will continue the series of events from the year 1453 to 1481, the end of Mahomet's life, and of this chapter.

C H A P.
LXVIII.

“ under the same standard? Could they be assembled in arms, who “ would dare to assume the office of general? What order could be “ maintained?—what military discipline? Who would undertake to “ feed such an enormous multitude? Who would understand their “ various languages, or direct their stranger and incompatible man“ ners? What mortal could reconcile the English with the French, “ Genoa with Arragon, the Germans with the natives of Hungary “ and Bohemia? If a small number enlisted in the holy war, they “ must be overthrown by the infidels; if many, by their own weight “ and confusion.” Yet the same Æneas, when he was raised to the papal throne, under the name of Pius the second, devoted his life to the prosecution of the Turkish war. In the council of Mantua he excited some sparks of a false or feeble enthusiasm; but when the pontiff appeared at Ancona to embark in person with the troops, engagements vanished in excuses; a precise day was adjourned to an indefinite term; and his effective army consisted of some German pilgrims, whom he was obliged to disband with indulgences and alms. Regardless of futurity, his successors and the powers of Italy were involved in the schemes of present and domestic ambition; and the distance or proximity of each object determined, in their eyes, its apparent magnitude. A more enlarged view of their interest would have taught them to maintain a defensive and naval war against the common enemy; and the support of Scanderbeg and his brave Albanians, might have prevented the subsequent invasion of the kingdom of Naples. The siege and sack of Otranto by the Turks, diffused a general consternation; and pope Sixtus was preparing to fly beyond the Alps, when the storm was instantly dispelled by the death of Mahomet the second, in the fifty-first year of his age<sup>66</sup>. His lofty genius aspired to the conquest of Italy: he was possessed

Death of Mahomet II.
A. D. 1481,
May 3, or
July 2.

<sup>66</sup> Besides the two annals, the reader may consult Giannone (Historia Civile, tom. iii. 1:449—455) for the Turkish invasion of the kingdom of Naples. For the reign and conquests of Mahomet II. I have occasionally used the Memorie Storiche de Monarchi Ottomani possessed of a strong city and a capacious harbour; and the same reign might have been decorated with the trophies of the NEW and the ANCIENT ROME<sup>97</sup>.

C H A P.
LXVIII.

tomanni di Giovanni Sagredo (Venezia, 1677, in 4<sup>to</sup>). In peace and war, the Turks have ever engaged the attention of the republic of Venice. All her dispatches and archives were open to a procurator of St. Mark, and Sagredo is not contemptible either in sense or style. Yet he too bitterly hates the infidels; he is ignorant of their language and manners; and his narrative, which allows only seventy pages to Mahomet II. (p. 69—140.), becomes more copious and authentic as he approaches the years 1640 and 1644, the term of the historic labours of John Sagredo.

<sup>97</sup> As I am now taking an everlasting farewell of the Greek empire, I shall briefly mention the great collection of Byzantine writers, whose names and testimonies have been successively repeated in this work. The Greek presses of Aldus and the Italians, were confinied to the classics of a better age; and the first rude editions of Procopius, Agathias, Cedrenus, Zonaras, &c. were published by the learned diligence of the Germans. The whole Byzantine series (xxxvi volumes in folio) has gradually issued (A. D. 1648, &c.) from the royal press of the Louvre, with some collateral aid from Rome and Leipsic; but the Venetian edition (A. D. 1729), though cheaper and more copious, is not less inferior in correctness than in magnificence to that of Paris. The merits of the French editors are various; but the value of Anna Comnena, Cinnamus, Villehardouin, &c. is enhanced by the historical notes of Charles du Fresne du Cange. His supplemental works, the Greek Glossary, the Constantinopolis Christiana, the Familiæ Byzantinæ, diffuse a steady light over the darkness of the Lower Empire.

C H A P. LXIX.

State of Rome from the Twelfth Century.—Temporal Dominion of the Popes.—Seditions of the City.—Political Heresy of Arnold of Brescia.—Restoration of the Republic.—The Senators.—Pride of the Romans.—Their Wars.—They are deprived of the Election and Presence of the Popes, who retire to Avignon.—The Jubilee.—Noble Families of Rome.—Feud of the Colonna and Ursini.

C H A P.
LXIX.
State and revolutions
of Rome,
A. D.
1100—1500.

IN the first ages of the decline and fall of the Roman empire, our eye is invariably fixed on the royal city, which had given laws to the fairest portion of the globe. We contemplate her fortunes, at first with admiration, at length with pity, always with attention; and when that attention is diverted from the Capitol to the provinces, they are considered as so many branches which have been successively severed from the Imperial trunk. The foundation of a second Rome, on the shores of the Bosphorus, has compelled the historian to follow the successors of Constantine; and our curiosity has been tempted to visit the most remote countries of Europe and Asia, to explore the causes and the authors of the long decay of the Byzantine monarchy. By the conquests of Justinian, we have been recalled to the banks of the Tyber, to the deliverance of the ancient metropolis; but that deliverance was a change, or perhaps an aggravation, of servitude. Rome had been already stripped of her trophies, her gods, and her Cæsars: nor was the Gothic dominion more inglorious and oppressive than the tyranny of the Greeks. In the the eighth century of the Christian æra, a religious quarrel, the worship of images, provoked the Romans to assert their independence: their bishop became the temporal, as well as the spiritual, father of a free people; and of the Western empire, which was restored by Charlemagne, the title and image still decorate the singular constitution of modern Germany. The name of Rome must yet command our involuntary respect: the climate (whatsoever may be its influence) was no longer the same<sup>1</sup>: the purity of blood had been contaminated through a thousand channels; but the venerable aspect of her ruins, and the memory of past greatness, rekindled a spark of the national character. The darkness of the middle ages exhibits some scenes not unworthy of our notice. Nor shall I dismiss the present work till I have reviewed the state and revolutions of the ROMAN CITY, which acquiesced under the absolute dominion of the popes about the same time that Constantinople was enslaved by the Turkish arms.

In the beginning of the twelfth century<sup>2</sup>, the æra of the first crusade, Rome was revered by the Latins, as the metropolis of the world, as the throne of the pope and the emperor, who, from the eternal city, derived their title, their honours, and the right or exercise of temporal dominion. After so long an interruption, it may not be useless to repeat that the successors of Charlemagne and the Othos were chosen beyond the Rhine in a national diet; but that these princes were content with the humble names of kings of Germany and Italy, till they had passed the Alps and the Apennine, to seek their Imperial crown on the banks of the Tyber<sup>3</sup>. At some distance

<sup>1</sup> The abbé Dubos, who, with less genius than his successor Montesquieu, has asserted and magnified the influence of climate, objects to himself the degeneracy of the Romans and Batavians. To the first of these examples he replies, 1. That the change is less real than apparent, and that the modern Romans prudently conceal in themselves the virtues of their ancestors. 2. That the air, the soil, and the climate of Rome have suffered a great and visible alteration (Reflexions sur la Poésie et sur la Peinture, part. ii. sect. 16.).

<sup>2</sup> The reader has been so long absent from Rome, that I would advise him to recollect or review the sixth chapter, in the sixth volume of this History.

<sup>3</sup> The coronation of the German emperors at Rome, more especially in the sixth century,

C H A P.
LXIX.

The French and German emperors of Rome,
A. D.
800—1100.

C H A P.
LXIX.

distance from the city, their approach was saluted by a long procession of the clergy and people with palms and crosses; and the terrific emblems of wolves and lions, of dragons and eagles, that floated in the military banners, represented the departed legions and cohorts of the republic. The royal oath to maintain the liberties of Rome was thrice reiterated, at the bridge, the gate, and on the stairs of the Vatican; and the distribution of a customary donative feebly imitated the magnificence of the first Cæsars. In the church of St. Peter, the coronation was performed by his successor: the voice of God was confounded with that of the people; and the public consent was declared in the acclamations of, “ Long life and victory to our lord the pope! Long life and victory to our lord the emperor! Long life and victory to the Roman and Teutonic armies<sup>4</sup>!” The names of Cæsar and Augustus, the laws of Constantine and Justinian, the example of Charlemagne and Otho, established the supreme dominion of the emperors; their title and image was engraved on the papal coins<sup>5</sup>; and their jurisdiction was marked by the sword of justice, which they delivered to the præfect of the city. But every Roman prejudice was awakened by the name, the language, and the manners, of a Barbarian lord. The Cæsars of Saxony or Franconia were the chiefs of a feudal aristocracy; nor could they exercise the discipline of civil and military power, which alone secures the obedience of a distant people, impatient of servitude, though perhaps incapable of freedom. Once, and once only, in his life, each emperor, with an army of Teutonic vassals, is best represented from the original monuments by Muratori (Antiquitat. Italie medii ævi, tom. i. dissertat. ii. p. 99, &c.), and Cenni (Monument. Domin. Pontif. tom. ii. diss. vi. p. 261.), the latter of whom I only know from the copious extract of Schmidt (Hist. des Allemands, tom. iii. p. 255—266.).

<sup>4</sup> Exercitui Romano et Teutonico! The latter was both seen and felt; but the former was no more than magni nominis umbra.

<sup>5</sup> Muratori has given the series of the papal coins (Antiquitat. tom. ii. diss. xxvii. p. 548—554.). He finds only two more early than the year 800: fifty are still extant from Leo III. to Leo IX. with addition of the reigning emperor; none remain of Gregory VII. or Urban II.; but in those of Paschal II. he seems to have renounced this badge of dependence.

descended from the Alps. I have described the peaceful order of his entry and coronation; but that order was commonly disturbed by the clamour and sedition of the Romans, who encountered their sovereign as a foreign invader: his departure was always speedy, and often shameful; and, in the absence of a long reign, his authority was insulted and his name was forgotten. The progress of independence in Germany and Italy undermined the foundations of the Imperial sovereignty, and the triumph of the popes was the deliverance of Rome.

C H A P.
LXIX.

Of her two sovereigns, the emperor had precariously reigned by the right of conquest; but the authority of the pope was founded on the soft, though more solid, basis of opinion and habit. The removal of a foreign influence restored and endeared the shepherd to his flock. Instead of the arbitrary or venal nomination of a German court, the vicar of Christ was freely chosen by the college of cardinals, most of whom were either natives or inhabitants of the city. The applause of the magistrates and people confirmed his election; and the ecclesiastical power that was obeyed in Sweden and Britain, had been ultimately derived from the suffrage of the Romans. The same suffrage gave a prince, as well as a pontiff, to the capital. It was universally believed, that Constantine had invested the popes with the temporal dominion of Rome; and the boldest civilians, the most profane sceptics, were satisfied with disputing the right of the emperor and the validity of his gift. The truth of the fact, the authenticity of his donation, was deeply rooted in the ignorance and tradition of four centuries: and the fabulous origin was lost in the real and permanent effects. The name of Dominus or Lord was inscribed on the coin of the bishops: their title was acknowledged by acclamations and oaths of allegiance, and with the free, or reluctant, consent of the German Cæsars, they had long exercised a supreme or subordinate jurisdiction over the city and patrimony of St. Peter. The reign of the popes, which gratified

Authority of the popes in Rome.

from affection;
tion;

right;

C H A P.
LXIX.

the prejudices, was not incompatible with the liberties, of Rome ; and a more critical enquiry would have revealed a still nobler source of their power ; the gratitude of a nation, whom they had rescued from the heresy and oppression of the Greek tyrant. In an age of superstition, it should seem that the union of the royal and sacerdotal characters would mutually fortify each other ; and that the keys of paradise would be the surest pledge of earthly obedience. The sanctity of the office might indeed be degraded by the personal vices of the man. But the scandals of the tenth century were obliterated by the austere and more dangerous virtues of Gregory the seventh and his successors ; and in the ambitious contests which they maintained for the rights of the church, their sufferings or their success must equally tend to increase the popular veneration. They sometimes wandered in poverty and exile, the victims of persecution ; and the apostolic zeal with which they offered themselves to martyrdom, must engage the favour and sympathy of every Catholic breast. And sometimes, thundering from the Vatican, they created, judged, and deposed the kings of the world : nor could the proudest Roman be disgraced by submitting to a priest, whose feet were kissed, and whose stirrup was held, by the successors of Charlemagne<sup>6</sup>. Even the temporal interest of the city should have protected in peace and honour the residence of the popes ; from whence a vain and lazy people derived the greatest part of their subsistence and riches. The fixed revenue of the popes was probably impaired : many of the old patrimonial estates, both in Italy and the provinces, had been invaded by sacrilegious hands ; nor could the loss be compensated by the claim, rather than the possession, of the more ample gifts of Pepin and his descendants. But the Vatican and Capitol virtue ;

benefits.

<sup>6</sup> See Ducange, Gloss. mediæ et infimæ Latinitat. tom. vi. p. 364, 365. STAFFA. This homage was paid by kings to archbishops, and by vassals to their lords (Schmidt, tom. iii. p. 262.); and it was the nicest policy of Rome, to confound the marks of filial and of feudal subjection.

were nourished by the incessant and encreasing swarms of pilgrims and suppliant: the pale of Christianity was enlarged, and the pope and cardinals were overwhelmed by the judgment of ecclesiastical and secular causes. A new jurisprudence had established in the Latin church the right and practice of appeals<sup>7</sup>; and, from the north and west, the bishops and abbots were invited or summoned to solicit, to complain, to accuse, or to justify, before the threshold of the apostles. A rare prodigy is once recorded, that two horses, belonging to the archbishops of Mentz and Cologne, repassed the Alps, yet laden with gold and silver<sup>8</sup>: but it was soon understood, that the success, both of the pilgrims and clients, depended much less on the justice of their cause than on the value of their offering. The wealth and piety of these strangers were ostentatiously displayed; and their expences, sacred or profane, circulated in various channels for the emolument of the Romans.

C H A P.
LXIX.

Such powerful motives should have firmly attached the voluntary and pious obedience of the Roman people to their spiritual and temporal father. But the operation of prejudice and interest is often disturbed by the sallies of ungovernable passion. The Indian who fells the tree, that he may gather the fruit<sup>9</sup>, and the Arab who plunders the caravans of commerce, are actuated by the same impulse of savage nature, which overlooks the future in the present, and relinquishes for momentary rapine the long and secure possession of the most important blessings. And it was thus, that the shrine of superstition.

Inconstancy

<sup>7</sup> The appeals from all the churches to the Roman pontiff, are deplored by the zeal of St. Bernard (de Consideratione, l. iii. tom. ii. p. 431—442. edit. Mabillon, Venet. 1750) and the judgment of Fleury (Discours sur l'Hist. Ecclesiastique, iv. & vii.). But the saint, who believed in the false decretals, condemns only the abuse of these appeals; the more enlightened historian investigates the origin, and rejects the principles, of this new jurisprudence.

<sup>8</sup> Germanici . . . summarii non levatis far-

cinis onusti nihilominus repatriant invit. Nova res! quando hactenus aurum Roma refudit? Et nunc Romanorum consilio id usurpatum non credimus (Bernard de Consideratione, l. iii. c. 3. p. 437.). The first words of the passage are obscure, and probably corrupt.

<sup>9</sup> Quand les sauvages de la Louisiane veulent avoir du fruit, ils coupent l'arbre au pied et cueillent le fruit. Voilà le gouvernement despotique (Esprit des Loix, l. v. c. 13.); and passion and ignorance are always despotick.

C H A P.
LXIX.

of St. Peter was profaned by the thoughtless Romans; who pillaged the offerings, and wounded the pilgrims, without computing the number and value of similar visits, which they prevented by their inhospitable sacrilege. Even the influence of superstition is fluctuating and precarious: and the slave, whose reason is subdued, will often be delivered by his avarice or pride. A credulous devotion for the fables and oracles of the priesthood, most powerfully acts on the mind of a Barbarian: yet such a mind is the least capable of preferring imagination to sense, of sacrificing to a distant motive, to an invisible, perhaps an ideal, object, the appetites and interests of the present world. In the vigour of health and youth, his practice will perpetually contradict his belief; till the pressure of age, or sickness, or calamity, awakens his terrors, and compels him to satisfy the double debt of piety and remorse. I have already observed, that the modern times of religious indifference, are the most favourable to the peace and security of the clergy. Under the reign of superstition, they had much to hope from the ignorance, and much to fear from the violence, of mankind. The wealth, whose constant increase must have rendered them the sole proprietors of the earth, was alternately bestowed by the repentant father and plundered by the rapacious son: their persons were adored or violated; and the same idol, by the hands of the same votaries, was placed on the altar or trampled in the dust. In the feudal system of Europe, arms were the title of distinction and the measure of allegiance; and amidst their tumult, the still voice of law and reason was seldom heard or obeyed. The turbulent Romans disdained the yoke, and insulted the impotence, of their bishop<sup>10</sup>; nor would his education

Seditious of Rome against the popes.

<sup>10</sup> In a free conversation with his countryman Abbot IV. John of Salisbury accuses the avarice of the pope and clergy: Provinciarum deripiunt spolia, ac si thesauros Cœli fudeant reparare. Sed recte cum eis agit Altissimus, quoniam et ipsi aliis et sæpe vilissimis hominibus dati sunt in directionem (de Nugis Curialium, l. vi. c. 24. p. 387.). In the next page, he blames the rashness and infidelity of the Romans, whom their bishops vainly strove to conciliate by gifts, instead of virtues. It is pity that this miscellaneous writer has not given us less morality and erudition, and more pictures of himself and the times.

or character allow him to exercise, with decency or effect, the power of the sword. The motives of his election and the frailties of his life were exposed to their familiar observation; and proximity must diminish the reverence, which his name and his decrees impressed on a barbarous world. This difference has not escaped the notice of our philosophic historian: "Though the name and authority of the court of Rome were so terrible in the remote countries of Europe, which were sunk in profound ignorance, and were entirely unacquainted with its character and conduct, the pope was so little revered at home, that his inveterate enemies surrounded the gates of Rome itself, and even controlled his government in that city; and the ambassadors, who, from a distant extremity of Europe, carried to him the humble, or rather abject, submissions of the greatest potentate of the age, found the utmost difficulty to make their way to him, and to throw themselves at his feet."

C H A P.
LXIX.

Since the primitive times, the wealth of the popes was exposed to envy, their power to opposition, and their persons to violence. But the long hostility of the mitre and the crown increased the numbers, and inflamed the passions, of their enemies. The deadly factions of the Guelphs and Ghibelines, so fatal to Italy, could never be embraced with truth or constancy by the Romans, the subjects and adversaries both of the bishop and emperor; but their support was solicited by both parties; and they alternately displayed in their banners the keys of St. Peter and the German eagle. Gregory the seventh, who may be adored or detested as the founder of the papal monarchy, was driven from Rome, and died in exile at Salerno.

Successors of Gregory VII.
A. D.
1086—1305.

"Hume's History of England, vol. i. p. 419. The same writer has given us, from Fitz-Stephen, a singular act of cruelty perpetrated on the clergy by Geoffrey, the father of Henry II. "When he was master of Normandy, the chapter of Seez presumed, without his consent, to proceed to the election of a bishop: upon which he ordered all of them, with the bishop elect, to be castrated, and made all their testicles be brought him in a platter." Of the pain and danger they might justly complain; yet, since they had vowed chastity, he deprived them of a superfluous treasure.

C H A P.
LXIX.

Paschal II.
A. D.
1099—1113.

Gelasius II.
A. D.
1118, 1119.

Six-and-thirty of his successors<sup>12</sup>, till their retreat to Avignon, maintained an unequal contest with the Romans: their age and dignity were often violated; and the churches, in the solemn rites of religion, were polluted with sedition and murder. A repetition<sup>13</sup> of such capricious brutality, without connection or design, would be tedious and disgusting; and I shall content myself with some events of the twelfth century, which represent the state of the popes and the city. On Holy Thursday, while Paschal officiated before the altar, he was interrupted by the clamours of the multitude, who imperiously demanded the confirmation of a favourite magistrate. His silence exasperated their fury: his pious refusal to mingle the affairs of earth and heaven was encountered with menaces and oaths, that he should be the cause and the witness of the public ruin. During the festival of Easter, while the bishop and the clergy, barefoot and in procession, visited the tombs of the martyrs, they were twice assaulted, at the bridge of St. Angelo, and before the Capitol, with volleys of stones and darts. The houses of his adherents were levelled with the ground: Paschal escaped with difficulty and danger: he levied an army in the patrimony of St. Peter; and his last days were embittered by suffering and inflicting the calamities of civil war. The scenes that followed the election of his successor Gelasius the second were still more scandalous to the church and city. Cencio Frangipani<sup>14</sup>, a potent and factious

<sup>12</sup> From Leo IX. and Gregory VII. an authentic and contemporary series of the lives of the popes by the cardinal of Arragon, Pandolphus Pifanus, Bernard Guido, &c. is inserted in the Italian Historians of Muratori (tom. iii. P. i. p. 277—685.), and has been always before my eyes.

<sup>13</sup> The dates of years in the margin, may throughout this chapter be understood as tacit references to the Annals of Muratori, my ordinary and excellent guide. He uses, and indeed quotes, with the freedom of a master, his great Collection of the Italian Historians, in xxviii. volumes; and as that treasure is in my library, I have thought it an amusement, if not a duty, to consult the originals.

<sup>14</sup> I cannot refrain from transcribing the high-coloured words of Pandolphus Pifanus (p. 384.): Hoc audiens inimicus pacis atque turbator jam fatus Centius Frajapane, more draconis immanissimi sibilans, et ab imis pectoribus trahens longa suspiria, accinctus retro gladio sine more cucurrit, valvas afores confregit. Ecclesiam furibundus introiit,

factious baron, burst into the assembly furious and in arms: the cardinals were stripped, beaten, and trampled under foot; and he seized, without pity or respect, the vicar of Christ by the throat. Gelafius was dragged by his hair along the ground, buffeted with blows, wounded with spurs, and bound with an iron chain in the house of his brutal tyrant. An insurrection of the people delivered their bishop: the rival families opposed the violence of the Frangipani; and Cencio, who sued for pardon, repented of the failure, rather than of the guilt, of his enterprize. Not many days had elapsed, when the pope was again assaulted at the altar. While his friends and enemies were engaged in a bloody contest he escaped in his sacerdotal garments. In this unworthy flight, which excited the compassion of the Roman matrons, his attendants were scattered or unhorsed; and, in the fields behind the church of St. Peter, his successor was found alone and half-dead with fear and fatigue. Shaking the dust from his feet, the apostle withdrew from a city in which his dignity was insulted and his person was endangered; and the vanity of sacerdotal ambition is revealed in the involuntary confession, that one emperor was more tolerable than twenty<sup>15</sup>. These examples might suffice; but I cannot forget the sufferings of two pontiffs of the same age, the second and third of the name of Lucius. The former, as he ascended in battle-array to assault the Capitol, was struck on the temple by a stone, and expired in a few days. The latter was severely wounded in the persons of his servants. In a civil commotion, several of his priests had been made prisoners; and the inhuman Romans, reserving one as a guide for his brethren, put out their eyes, crowned them with ludicrous mitres, mounted them on asses with their faces to the tail, and extorted an

C H A P.
LXIX.

Lucius II.
A. D.
1144, 1145.

Lucius III.
A. D.
1181—1185.

troiit, inde custode remoto papam per gulam accepit, diftraxit, pugnis calcibusque percussit, et tanquam brutum animal intra limen ecclesiæ acriter calcariibus cruentavit; et latro tantum dominum per capillo: et brachia, Jesu bono interim dormiente, detraxit ad domum, usque deduxit, inibi catenavit et includit.

<sup>15</sup> Ego coram Deo et ecclesiâ dico, si unquam possibile esset, mallet unum imperatorem quam tot dominos (Vit. Gelaf. II. p. 398).

oath,

C. H. A. P.
LXIX.

oath, that, in this wretched condition, they should offer themselves as a lesson to the head of the church. Hope or fear, lassitude or remorse, the characters of the men, and the circumstances of the times, might sometimes obtain an interval of peace and obedience; and the pope was restored with joyful acclamations to the Lateran or Vatican, from whence he had been driven with threats and violence. But the root of mischief was deep and perennial; and a momentary calm was preceded and followed by such tempests as had almost sunk the bark of St. Peter. Rome continually presented the aspect of war and discord: the churches and palaces were fortified and assaulted by the factions and families; and, after giving peace to Europe, Calistus the second alone had resolution and power to prohibit the use of private arms in the metropolis. Among the nations who revered the apostolic throne, the tumults of Rome provoked a general indignation; and, in a letter to his disciple Eugenius the third, St. Bernard, with the sharpness of his wit and zeal,

Calistus II.
A. D.
1119—1124.
Innocent II.
A. D.
1130—1143.

Character of the Romans
by St. Bernard.

has stigmatised the vices of the rebellious people<sup>11</sup>. “Who is ignorant,” says the monk of Clairvaux, “of the vanity and arrogance of the Romans? a nation nursed in sedition, cruel, untractable, and scornful to obey, unless they are too feeble to resist. When they promise to serve, they aspire to reign; if they swear allegiance, they watch the opportunity of revolt; yet they vent their discontent in loud clamours if your doors, or your counsels, are shut against them. Dextrous in mischief, they have never learnt the science of doing good. Odious to earth and heaven, impious to God, seditious among themselves, jealous of their neighbours, inhuman to strangers, they love no one, by no one are they beloved; and while they wish to inspire fear, they live in base and continual apprehension. They will not submit; they know how non valet resistere (de Considerat. l. iv. c. 2. p. 441.). The saint takes breath, and then begins again: Illi, invisi terræ et cælo, utriusque injecere manus, &c. (p. 443.).

<sup>11</sup> Quid tam notum seculis quam protervia et cervicositas Romanorum? Gens insueta paci, tumultui assuetâ, gens immitis et intractabilis usque adhuc, subdâ nescia, nisi cum

“ to govern ; faithless to their superiors, intolerable to their equals, C H A P.
 “ ungrateful to their benefactors, and alike impudent in their de- LXXIX.
 “ mands and their refusals. Lefty in promise, poor in execution :
 “ adulation and calumny, perfidy and treason, are the familiar arts “ of their policy.” Surely this dark portrait is not coloured by the pencil of Christian charity<sup>17</sup> ; yet the features, however harsh and ugly, express a lively resemblance of the Romans of the twelfth century<sup>18</sup>.

The Jews had rejected the Christ when he appeared among them in a plebeian character ; and the Romans might plead their ignorance of his vicar when he assumed the pomp and pride of a temporal sovereign. In the busy age of the crusades, some sparks of curiosity and reason were rekindled in the Western world : the heresy of Bulgaria, the Paulician sect, was successfully transplanted into the soil of Italy and France ; the Gnostic visions were mingled with the simplicity of the gospel ; and the enemies of the clergy reconciled their passions with their conscience, the desire of freedom with the profession of piety<sup>19</sup>. The trumpet of Roman liberty was first sounded by Arnold of Brescia<sup>20</sup>, whose promotion in the church was confined to the lowest rank, and who wore the monastic habit rather as a garb of poverty than as an uniform of obedience. His adversaries could not deny the wit and eloquence which they severely Political heresy of Arnold of Brescia, A. D. 1140.

<sup>17</sup> As a Roman citizen, Petrarch takes leave to observe, that Bernard, though a saint, was a man ; that he might be provoked by resentment, and possibly repent of his hasty passion, &c. (Memoires sur la Vie de Petrarque, tom. i. p. 330.)

<sup>18</sup> Baronius, in his index to the xiith volume of his Annals, has found a fair and easy excuse. He makes two heads, of Romani Catholicici, and Schismatici: to the former he applies all the good, to the latter all the evil, that is told of the city.

<sup>19</sup> The heresies of the xiith century may be found in Mosheim (Institut. Hist. Eccles. p. 419—427.), who entertains a favourable opinion of Arnold of Brescia. In the vth volume, I have described the sect of the Paulicians, and followed their migration from Armenia to Thrace and Bulgaria, Italy and France.

<sup>20</sup> The original pictures of Arnold of Brescia, are drawn by Otho bishop of Frisingen (Chron. l. vii. c. 31. de Gestis Frederici l. i. c. 27. l. ii. c. 21.), and in the iii<sup>d</sup> book of the Ligurinus, a poem of Gunther, who flourished A. D. 1200, in the monastery of Paris near Basil (Fabric. Biblioth. Latin. med. et infimæ Ætatis, tom. iii. p. 174. 175.). The long passage that relates to Arnold, is produced by Guilliman (de Rebus Helveticis, l. iii. c. 5. p. 108.).

C H A P.
LXIX.

felt: they confess with reluctance the specious purity of his morals; and his errors were recommended to the public by a mixture of important and beneficial truths. In his theological studies, he had been the disciple of the famous and unfortunate Abelard<sup>21</sup>, who was likewise involved in the suspicion of heresy: but the lover of Eloisa was of a soft and flexible nature; and his ecclesiastic judges were edified and disarmed by the humility of his repentance. From this master, Arnold most probably imbibed some metaphysical definitions of the Trinity, repugnant to the taste of the times: his ideas of baptism and the eucharist are loosely censured; but a political heresy was the source of his fame and misfortunes. He presumed to quote the declaration of Christ, that his kingdom is not of this world: he boldly maintained, that the sword and the sceptre were entrusted to the civil magistrate; that temporal honours and possessions were lawfully vested in secular persons; that the abbots, the bishops, and the pope himself, must renounce either their state or their salvation; and that after the loss of their revenues, the voluntary tithes and oblations of the faithful would suffice, not indeed for luxury and avarice, but for a frugal life in the exercise of spiritual labours. During a short time, the preacher was revered as a patriot; and the discontent, or revolt, of Brescia against her bishop, was the first fruits of his dangerous lessons. But the favour of the people is less permanent than the resentment of the priest; and after the heresy of Arnold had been condemned by Innocent the second<sup>22</sup>, in the general council of the Lateran, the magistrates themselves were urged by prejudice and fear to execute the sentence of the church. Italy could no longer afford a refuge; and the disciple of Abelard escaped

<sup>21</sup> The wicked wit of Bayle was amused in composing, with much levity and learning, the articles of ABELARD, FOULQUES, HELOISE, in his Dictionnaire Critique. The dispute of Abelard and St. Bernard, of scholastic and positive divinity, is well understood by Mosheim (Instit. Hist. Eccles. p. 412—415.).

<sup>22</sup> ——— Damnatus ab illo Præfule, qui numeros vetitum contingere nostros Nomen ab innocenti dicit laudabile vitæ.
We may applaud the dexterity and correctness of Ligurinus, who turns the unpoetical name of Innocent II. into a compliment.

beyond the Alps, till he found a safe and hospitable shelter in Zurich, now the first of the Swiss cantons. From a Roman station <sup>23</sup>, a royal villa, a chapter of noble virgins, Zurich had gradually increased to a free and flourishing city; where the appeals of the Milanese were sometimes tried by the Imperial commissaries <sup>24</sup>. In an age less ripe for reformation, the præcursor of Zuinglius was heard with applause: a brave and simple people imbibed and long retained the colour of his opinions; and his art, or merit, seduced the bishop of Constance, and even the pope's legate, who forgot, for his sake, the interest of their master and their order. Their tardy zeal was quickened by the fierce exhortations of St. Bernard <sup>25</sup>; and the enemy of the church was driven by persecution to the desperate measure of erecting his standard in Rome itself, in the face of the successor of St. Peter.

C H A P.
LXIX.

Yet the courage of Arnold was not devoid of discretion; he was protected, and had perhaps been invited, by the nobles and people; and in the service of freedom, his eloquence thundered over the seven hills. Blending in the same discourse the texts of Livy and St. Paul, uniting the motives of gospel, and of classic, enthusiasm, he admonished the Romans, how strangely their patience and the vices of the clergy had degenerated from the primitive times of the church and the city. He exhorted them to assert the inalienable rights of men and Christians; to restore the laws and magistrates

He exhorts
the Romans to restore the republic,
A. D.
1144—1154.

<sup>23</sup> A Roman inscription of Statio Turicensis has been found at Zurich (d'Anville, Notice de l'ancienne Gaule, p. 642—644.): but it is without sufficient warrant, that the city and canton have usurped, and even monopolised, the names of Tigurum and Pagus Tigurinus.

<sup>24</sup> Guilliman (de Rebus Helveticis, l. iii. c. 5. p. 106.) recapitulates the donation (A. D. 833) of the emperor Lewis the Pious to his daughter the abbess Hildegardis. Curtim nostram Turegum in ducatu Alamannie in pago Durgaugensi, with villages, woods, meadows, waters, slaves, churches, &c. a noble gift. Charles the Bald gave the jus monetæ, the city was walled under Otho. and the line of the bishop of Frisingen,

Nobile Turegum multarum copiarum, is repeated with pleasure by the antiquaries of Zurich.

<sup>25</sup> Bernard, epistol. cxcv, cxcvi. tom. i. p. 187—190. Amidst his invectives he drops a precious acknowledgment, qui, utinam quam sanæ esset doctrinæ quam districtæ est vitæ. He owns that Arnold would be a valuable acquisition for the church.

C H A P.
LXIX.

of the republic ; to respect the name of the emperor ; but to confine their shepherd to the spiritual government of his flock<sup>25</sup>. Nor could his spiritual government escape the censure and control of the reformer ; and the inferior clergy were taught by his lessons to resist the cardinals, who had usurped a despotic command over the twenty-eight regions or parishes of Rome<sup>27</sup>. The revolution was not accomplished without rapine and violence, the effusion of blood and the demolition of houses : the victorious faction was enriched with the spoils of the clergy and the adverse nobles. Arnold of Brescia enjoyed, or deplored, the effects of his mission : his reign continued above ten years, while two popes, Innocent the second and Anastasius the fourth, either trembled in the Vatican, or wandered as exiles in the adjacent cities. They were succeeded by a more vigorous and fortunate pontiff, Adrian the fourth<sup>28</sup>, the only Englishman who has ascended the throne of St. Peter ; and whose merit emerged from the mean condition of a monk, and almost a beggar, in the monastery of St. Albans. On the first provocation, of a cardinal killed or wounded in the streets, he cast an interdict on the guilty people ; and from Christmas to Easter, Rome was deprived of the real or imaginary comforts of religious worship. The Romans had despised their temporal prince ; they submitted with grief and terror to the censures of their spiritual father ; their guilt was expiated by penance, and the banishment of the seditious preacher was the price of their absolution. But the revenge of Adrian was yet unsatisfied, and the approaching coronation of Frederic Barbarossa was fatal to the bold reformer, who had offended, though not in an equal degree, the heads of the church and state. In their in-

<sup>25</sup> He advised the Romans,
Consilis armisque sua moderamina summa
Arbitrio tractare suo: nil juris in hac re
Pontifici summo, modicum concedere regi
Suadebat populo. Sic læsâ stultus utraque Majestatem, reum geminæ se fecerat aulæ.

Nor is the poetry of Gunther different from the prose of Otho.

<sup>27</sup> See Baronius (A. D. 1148, N<sup>o</sup> 38, 39.)

from the Vatican MSS. He loudly condemns Arnold (A. D. 1141, N<sup>o</sup> 3.) as the father of the political heretics, whose influence then hurt him in France.

<sup>28</sup> The English reader may consult the Biographia Britannica, ADRIAN IV. but our own writers have added nothing to the fame or merits of their countryman.

terview at Viterbo, the pope represented to the emperor the furious ungovernable spirit of the Romans: the insults, the injuries, the fears, to which his person and his clergy were continually exposed; and the pernicious tendency of the heresy of Arnold, which must subvert the principles of civil, as well as ecclesiastical, subordination. Frederic was convinced by these arguments, or tempted by the desire of the Imperial crown; in the balance of ambition, the innocence or life of an individual is of small account; and their common enemy was sacrificed to a moment of political concord. After his retreat from Rome, Arnold had been protected by the viscounts of Campania, from whom he was extorted by the power of Cæsar: the præfect of the city pronounced his sentence; the martyr of freedom was burnt alive in the presence of a careless and ungrateful people; and his ashes were cast into the Tyber, lest the heretics should collect and worship the relics of their master<sup>29</sup>. The clergy triumphed in his death: with his ashes, his sect was dispersed; his memory still lived in the minds of the Romans. From his school they had probably derived a new article of faith, that the metropolis of the Catholic church is exempt from the penalties of excommunication and interdiction. Their bishops might argue, that the supreme jurisdiction, which they exercised over kings and nations, more specially embraced the city and diocese of the prince of the apostles. But they preached to the winds, and the same principle that weakened the effect, must temper the abuse, of the thunders of the Vatican.

The love of ancient freedom has encouraged a belief, that as early as the tenth century, in their first struggles against the Saxon

C H A P.
LXIX.

His execution,
A. D. 1155.

Restoration of the senate,
A. D. 1144.

and people of Rome; that two consuls were annually elected among the nobles, and that ten or twelve plebeian magistrates revived the name and office of the tribunes of the commons<sup>30</sup>. But this venerable

<sup>29</sup> Besides the historian and poet already quoted, the last adventures of Arnold are related by the Biographer of Adrian IV. (Muratori, Script. Rerum Ital. tom. iii. P. i. p. 441, 442.)

<sup>30</sup> Ducange (Gloss. Latinitatis medæ et infimæ

THE DECLINE AND FALL

C H A P.
LXIX.

rable structure disappears before the light of criticism. In the darkness of the middle ages, the appellations of senators, of consuls, of the sons of consuls, may sometimes be discovered<sup>31</sup>. They were bestowed by the emperors, or assumed by the most powerful citizens, to denote their rank, their honours<sup>32</sup>, and perhaps the claim of a pure and patrician descent: but they float on the surface, without a series or a substance, the titles of men, not the orders of government<sup>33</sup>; and it is only from the year of Christ one thousand one hundred and forty-four, that the establishment of the senate is dated, as a glorious æra, in the acts of the city. A new constitution was hastily framed by private ambition or popular enthusiasm; nor could Rome, in the twelfth century, produce an antiquary to explain, or a legislator to restore, the harmony and proportions of the ancient model. The assembly of a free, of an armed, people, will ever speak in loud and weighty acclamations. But the regular distribution of the thirty-five tribes, the nice balance of the wealth and numbers of the centuries, the debates of the adverse orators, and the slow operation of votes and ballots, could not easily be adapted by a infimi Ætatis, DECARCHONES, tom. ii. p. 726.) gives me a quotation from Blondus (decad. ii. l. ii.): Duo consules ex nobilitate quotannis fiebant, qui ad vetustum consulum exemplar summæ rerum præessent. And in Sigonius (de Regno Italiæ, l. vi. opp. tom. ii. p. 400.) I read of the consuls and tribunes of the xth century. Both Blondus, and even Sigonius, too freely copied the classic method of supplying from reason or fancy the deficiency of records.

<sup>31</sup> In the panegyric of Berengarius (Muratori, Script. Rer. Ital. tom. ii. P. i. p. 408.), a Roman is mentioned as consulis natus in the beginning of the xth century. Muratori (dissert. v.) discovers in the years 952 and 956, Gratjanus in Dei nomine consul et dux, Georgius consul et dux; and in 1015, Romanus, brother of Gregory VIII. proudly, but vaguely, styles himself consul et dux et omnium Romanorum senator.

<sup>32</sup> As late as the xth century, the Greek emperors conferred on the dukes of Venice, Naples, Amalphi, &c. the title of ὕπατος, or consuls (see Chron. Sagornini, passim); and the successors of Charlemagne would not abdicate any of their prerogative. But in general, the names of consul and senator, which may be found among the French and Germans, signify no more than count and lord (Signeur, Ducange, Glossar.). The monkish writers are often ambitious of fine classic words.

<sup>33</sup> The most constitutional form, is a diploma of Otho III. (A. D. 998), Consulibus senatus populique Romani; but the act is probably spurious. At the coronation of Henry I. A. D. 1014, the historian Dithmar (apud Muratori, dissert. xxiii.) describes him, a senatoribus duodecim vallatum, quorum sex rasi barbâ, alii prolixâ, mystice incedebant cum baculis. The senate is mentioned in the panegyric of Berengarius (p. 406.).

blind

blind multitude, ignorant of the arts, and insensible of the benefits, of legal government. It was proposed by Arnold to revive and discriminate the equestrian order ; but what could be the motive or measure of such distinction<sup>34</sup> ? The pecuniary qualification of the knights must have been reduced to the poverty of the times: those times no longer required their civil functions of judges and farmers of the revenue ; and their primitive duty, their military service on horseback, was more nobly supplied by feudal tenures and the spirit of chivalry. The jurisprudence of the republic was useless and unknown : the nations and families of Italy who lived under the Roman and Barbaric laws were insensibly mingled in a common mass ; and some faint tradition, some imperfect fragments, preserved the memory of the Code and Pandects of Justinian. With their liberty the Romans might doubtless have restored the appellation and office of consuls ; had they not disdained a title so promiscuously adopted in the Italian cities, that it has finally settled on the humble station of the agents of commerce in a foreign land. But the rights of the tribunes, the formidable word that arrested the public counsels, suppose or must produce a legitimate democracy. The old patricians were the subjects, the modern barons the tyrants, of the state ; nor would the enemies of peace and order, who insulted the vicar of Christ, have long respected the unarmed sanctity of a plebeian magistrate<sup>35</sup>.

In the revolution of the twelfth century, which gave a new existence and æra to Rome, we may observe the real and important events that marked or confirmed her political independence. I. The

The Capitols.

<sup>34</sup> In ancient Rome, the equestrian order was not ranked with the senate and people as a third branch of the republic till the consulship of Cicero, who assumes the merit of the establishment (Plin. Hist. Natur. xxxiii. 3. Beaufort, Republique Romaine, tom. i. p. 144—155.).

Brescia is thus stated by Gunther:

Quin etiam titulos urbis renovare vetuitos ;
Nimine plebeio fecerere nomen equestre,
Jura tribunorum, sanctam reparare senatum,
Et senio festas mutasque reponere leges.
Lapsa ruinosis, et adhuc pendente muris
Reddere primævo Capitolia prisca nitore.

But of these reformations, some were no more than ideas, others no more than words.

Ⓒ H A P.
LXIX.

Capitoline hill, one of her seven eminences<sup>36</sup>, is about four hundred yards in length, and two hundred in breadth. A flight of an hundred steps led to the summit of the Tarpeian rock; and far steeper was the ascent before the declivities had been smoothed and the precipices filled by the ruins of fallen edifices. From the earliest ages, the Capitol had been used as a temple in peace, a fortress in war: after the loss of the city, it maintained a siege against the victorious Gauls; and the sanctuary of empire was occupied, assaulted, and burnt, in the civil wars of Vitellius and Vespasian<sup>37</sup>. The temples of Jupiter and his kindred deities had crumbled into dust; their place was supplied by monasteries and houses; and the solid walls, the long and shelving porticoes, were decayed or ruined by the lapse of time. It was the first act of the Romans, an act of freedom, to restore the strength, though not the beauty, of the Capitol; to fortify the seat of their arms and counsels: and as often as they ascended the hill, the coldest minds must have glowed with the remembrance of their ancestors. II. The first Cæsars had been invested with the exclusive coinage of the gold and silver; to the senate they abandoned the baser metal of bronze or copper<sup>38</sup>: the emblems and legends were inscribed on a more ample field by the genius of flattery; and the prince was relieved from the care of celebrating his own virtues. The successors of Diocletian despised even the flattery of the senate: their royal officers at Rome, and in the provinces, assumed the sole direction of the mint; and the same prerogative was inherited by the Gothic kings of Italy, and the long series of the Greek, the French, and the German dynasties. After an abdi-

The coin.

<sup>36</sup> After many disputes among the antiquaries of Rome, it seems determined, that the summit of the Capitoline hill next the river is strictly the Mons Tarpeius, the Arx; and that on the other summit, the church and convent of Araceli, the barefoot friars of St. Francis, occupy the temple of Jupiter (Nardini, Roma Antica, l. v. c. 11—16.).

<sup>37</sup> Tacit. Hist. iii. 69, 70.

<sup>38</sup> This partition of the noble and baser metals between the emperor and senate, must however be adopted, not as a positive fact, but as the probable opinion of the best antiquaries (see the Science des Médailles of the Pere Joubert, tom. ii. p. 208—211. in the improved and scarce edition of the Baron de la Bastie).

cation of eight hundred years, the Roman senate asserted this honourable and lucrative privilege; which was tacitly renounced by the popes, from Paschal the second to the establishment of their residence beyond the Alps. Some of these republican coins of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, are shewn in the cabinets of the curious. On one of these, a gold medal, Christ is depicted holding in his left hand a book with this inscription: "THE VOW OF THE ROMAN SENATE AND PEOPLE: ROME THE CAPITAL OF THE WORLD;" on the reverse, St. Peter delivering a banner to a kneeling senator in his cap and gown, with the name and arms of his family impressed on a shield<sup>39</sup>. III. With the empire, the præfect of the city had declined to a municipal officer; yet he still exercised in the last appeal the civil and criminal jurisdiction; and a drawn sword, which he received from the successors of Otho, was the mode of his investiture and the emblem of his functions<sup>40</sup>. The dignity was confined to the noble families of Rome: the choice of the people was ratified by the pope; but a triple oath of fidelity must have often embarrassed the præfect in the conflict of adverse duties<sup>41</sup>. A servant, in whom they possessed but a third share, was dismissed by the independent Romans: in his place they elected a patrician; but this title, which Charlemagne had not disdained, was too lofty for a citizen or a subject; and, after the first fervour of

C. H. A. P.
LXXV.

The præfect of the city.

<sup>39</sup> In his xxviith dissertation on the Antiquities of Italy (tom. ii. p. 559—569.), Muratori exhibits a series of the senatorian coins, which bore the obscure names of Afortiati, Infortiati, Provisini, Papirini. During this period all the popes, without excepting Boniface VIII. obtained from the right of coining, which was resumed by his successor Benedict XI. and regularly exercised in the court of Avignon.

<sup>40</sup> A German historian, Gerard of Reicherspeg (in Baluz. Miscell. tom. v. p. 64. apud Schmidt, Hist. des Allemands, tom. iii. p. 265.), thus describes the constitution of Rome in the xth century: Grandiora urbis et orbis negotia spectant ad Romanum pontificem itemque ad Romanum imperatorem; sive illius vicarium urbis præfectum, qui de sua dignitate respicit utrumque, videlicet dominum papam cui facit hominum, et dominum imperatorum a quo accipit suæ potestatis insigne, scilicet gladium exertum.

<sup>41</sup> The words of a contemporary writer (Pandolph. Pitag. in Vit. Paschal. II. p. 357, 358.) describe the election and oath of the præfect in 1118, inconsultis patribus.... loca præfectoria.... Laudes præfectorie.... comitiorum applausum.... juraturum populo in ambonem sublevant.... confirmari eum in urbe præfectum petunt.

C H A P.
LXIX.
A. D.
1198—1216.

Number and choice of the senate.

rebellion, they consented without reluctance to the restoration of the præfect. About fifty years after this event, Innocent the third, the most ambitious, or at least the most fortunate, of the pontiffs, delivered the Romans and himself from this badge of foreign dominion: he invested the præfect with a banner instead of a sword, and absolved him from all dependence of oaths or service to the German emperors<sup>42</sup>. In his place an ecclesiastic, a present or future cardinal, was named by the pope to the civil government of Rome; but his jurisdiction has been reduced to a narrow compass; and in the days of freedom, the right or exercise was derived from the senate and people. IV. After the revival of the senate<sup>43</sup>, the consecrated fathers (if I may use the expression) were invested with the legislative and executive power; but their views seldom reached beyond the present day; and that day was most frequently disturbed by violence and tumult. In its utmost plenitude, the order or assembly consisted of fifty-six senators<sup>44</sup>, the most eminent of whom were distinguished by the title of counsellors; they were nominated, perhaps annually, by the people; and a previous choice of their electors, ten persons in each region or parish, might afford a basis for a free and permanent constitution. The popes, who in this tempest submitted rather to bend than to break, confirmed by treaty the establishment and privileges of the senate, and expected from time, peace, and religion, the restoration of their government. The motives of public and private interest might sometimes draw from the Romans an occasional and temporary sacrifice of their claims; and they renewed their oath of allegiance to the successor of St. Peter

<sup>42</sup> Urbis præfectum ad ligiam fidelitatem recepit, et per manum quod illi donavit de præfecturâ eum publice investivit, qui usque ad id tempus juramento fidelitatis imperatori fuit obligatus et ab eo præfecturæ tenuit honorem (Gesta Innocent. III. in Muratori, tom. iii. P. i. p. 487.).

<sup>43</sup> See Otho Frising. Chron. vii. 31. de

Gest. Frederic. I. l. i. c. 27.

<sup>44</sup> Our countryman, Roger Hoveden, speaks of the single senators, of the Ca'uzzo family, &c. quorum temporibus melius regebatur Roma quam nunc (A. D. 1194) est temporibus lvi. senatorum (Ducange, Gloss. tom. vi. p. 191. SENATORS).

and Constantine, the lawful head of the church and the re-public<sup>45</sup>.

C H A P.
LXIX.

The office of senator.

The union and vigour of a public council was dissolved in a lawless city; and the Romans soon adopted a more strong and simple mode of administration. They condensed the name and authority of the senate in a single magistrate, or two colleagues; and as they were changed at the end of a year, or of six months, the greatness of the trust was compensated by the shortness of the term. But in this transient reign, the senators of Rome indulged their avarice and ambition: their justice was perverted by the interest of their family and faction; and as they punished only their enemies, they were obeyed only by their adherents. Anarchy, no longer tempered by the pastoral care of their bishop, admonished the Romans that they were incapable of governing themselves; and they sought abroad those blessings which they were hopeless of finding at home. In the same age, and from the same motives, most of the Italian republics were prompted to embrace a measure, which, however strange it may seem, was adapted to their situation, and productive of the most salutary effects<sup>46</sup>. They chose, in some foreign but friendly city, an impartial magistrate of noble birth and unblemished character, a soldier and a statesman, recommended by the voice of fame and his country, to whom they delegated for a time the supreme administration of peace and war. The compact between the governor and the governed was sealed with oaths and subscriptions; and the duration of his power, the measure of his stipend, the nature of plissimi ordinis senatus, acclamatione P. R. publice Capitolio consentientis. It is there we find the difference of senatores consularii and simple senators (Muratori, dissert. liii. tom. iii. p. 787—789.).

<sup>45</sup> Muratori (dissert. xlii. tom. iii. p. 785—788.) has published an original treaty: Concordia inter D. nostrum papam Clementem III. et senatores populi Romani super regalibus et aliis dignitatibus urbis, &c. anno 44<sup>o</sup> senatus. The senate speaks, and speaks with authority: Reddimus ad presens... habebimus... dabitur presbyteria... jurabimus pacem et fidelitatem, &c. A chartula de Tenimentis Tusculani, dated in the 47th year of the same æra, and confirmed decreto am-

<sup>46</sup> Muratori (dissert. xlv. tom. iv. p. 64—62.) has fully explained this mode of government; and the Oculus Palearis, which he has given at the end, is a treatise or sermon on the duties of these foreign magistrates.

C H A P.
LXIX.

their mutual obligations, were defined with scrupulous precision. They swore to obey him as their lawful superior: he pledged his faith to unite the indifference of a stranger with the zeal of a patriot. At his choice, four or six knights and civilians, his assessors in arms and justice, attended the Podesta<sup>47</sup>, who maintained at his own expence a decent retinue of servants and horses: his wife, his son, his brother, who might bias the affections of the judge, were left behind; during the exercise of his office he was not permitted to purchase land, to contract an alliance, or even to accept an invitation in the house of a citizen; nor could he honourably depart till he had satisfied the complaints that might be urged against his government.

Brancaleone,
A. D.
1252—1258.

It was thus, about the middle of the thirteenth century, that the Romans called from Bologna the senator Brancaleone<sup>48</sup>, whose fame and merit have been rescued from oblivion by the pen of an English historian. A just anxiety for his reputation, a clear foresight of the difficulties of the task, had engaged him to refuse the honour of their choice: the statutes of Rome were suspended, and his office prolonged to the term of three years. By the guilty and licentious he was accused as cruel; by the clergy he was suspected as partial; but the friends of peace and order applauded the firm and upright magistrate by whom those blessings were restored. No criminals were so powerful as to brave, so obscure as to elude, the justice of the senator. By his sentence two nobles of the Annibaldi family were executed on a gibbet; and he inexorably demolished, in the city and neighbourhood, one hundred and forty towers, the strong shelters of rapine and mischief. The bishop, as a simple bishop, was

<sup>47</sup> In the Latin writers, at least of the silver age, the title of Potestas was transferred from the office to the magistrate:

Hujus qui trahitur pretextam fumere maxis.
An Fidenarum Gabiorumque esse Potestas.

(Juvenal. Satir. x. 99.)

<sup>48</sup> See the life and death of Brancaleone,

in the Historia Major of Matthew Paris, p. 741. 757. 792. 797. 799. 810. 823. 833. 836. 840. The multitude of pilgrims and suitors connected Rome and St. Alban's; and the resentment of the English clergy prompted them to rejoice whenever the popes were humbled and oppressed.

compelled to reside in his diocese; and the standard of Brancalione was displayed in the field with terror and effect. His services were repaid by the ingratitude of a people unworthy of the happiness which they enjoyed. By the public robbers, whom he had provoked for their sake, the Romans were excited to depose and imprison their benefactor; nor would his life have been spared, if Bologna had not possessed a pledge for his safety. Before his departure, the prudent senator had required the exchange of thirty hostages of the noblest families of Rome: on the news of his danger, and at the prayer of his wife, they were more strictly guarded; and Bologna, in the cause of honour, sustained the thunders of a papal interdict. This generous resistance allowed the Romans to compare the present with the past; and Brancalione was conducted from the prison to the Capitol amidst the acclamations of a repentant people. The remainder of his government was firm and fortunate; and as soon as envy was appeased by death, his head, enclosed in a precious vase, was deposited on a lofty column of marble<sup>49</sup>.

C H A P.
LXIX.

The impotence of reason and virtue recommended in Italy a more effectual choice: instead of a private citizen, to whom they yielded a voluntary and precarious obedience, the Romans elected for their senator some prince of independent power, who could defend them from their enemies and themselves. Charles of Anjou and Provence, the most ambitious and warlike monarch of the age, accepted at the same time the kingdom of Naples from the pope, and the office of senator from the Roman people<sup>50</sup>. As he passed through

Charles of Anjou,
A. D.
1265—1278.

<sup>49</sup> Matthew Paris thus ends his account: Caput vero ipsius Brancalionis in vase pretioso super marmoream columnam collocatum, in signum sui valoris et probitatis, quasi reliquias, superstitiose nimis et pompose sustulerunt. Fuerat enim superbiorum potentum et malefactorum urbis malleus et exilipator, et populi protector et defensor, veritatis et justitiæ imitator et amator (p. 840.). A biographer of Innocent IV. (Muratori, Script. tom. iii. P. i. p. 591, 592.) draws a less favourable portrait of this Ghibelline senator.

<sup>50</sup> The election of Charles of Anjou to the office of perpetual senator of Rome, is mentioned by the historians in the viiith volume of the Collection of Muratori, by Nicholas de Jamilla

C H A P.
LXIX.

through the city, in his road to victory, he received their oath of allegiance, lodged in the Lateran palace, and smoothed in a short visit the harsh features of his despotic character. Yet even Charles was exposed to the inconstancy of the people, who saluted with the same acclamations the passage of his rival, the unfortunate Conradin; and a powerful avenger, who reigned in the Capitol, alarmed the fears and jealousy of the popes. The absolute term of his life was superseded by a renewal every third year; and the enmity of Nicholas the third obliged the Sicilian king to abdicate the government of Rome. In his bull, a perpetual law, the imperious pontiff asserts the truth, validity, and use, of the donation of Constantine, not less essential to the peace of the city than to the independence of the church; establishes the annual election of the senator; and formally disqualifies all emperors, kings, princes, and persons of an eminent and conspicuous rank<sup>51</sup>. This prohibitory clause was repealed in his own behalf by Martin the fourth, who humbly solicited the suffrage of the Romans. In the presence, and by the authority, of the people, two electors conferred, not on the pope, but on the noble and faithful Martin, the dignity of senator, and the supreme administration of the republic<sup>52</sup>, to hold during his natural life, and to exercise at pleasure by himself or his deputies. About fifty years afterwards, the same title was granted to the emperor Lewis of Bavaria; and the liberty of Rome was acknowledged by her two sovereigns, who accepted a municipal office in the government of their own metropolis.

Pope Martin IV.
A. D. 1231.

The emperor
Lewis of Bavaria,
A. D. 1328.

Addresses of Rome to the emperors.

In the first moments of rebellion, when Arnold of Brescia had inflamed their minds against the church, the Romans artfully laboured Jamilla (p. 592.), the monk of Padua (p. 724.), Sabas Malaspina (l. ii. c. 9. p. 858.), and Ricordano Malaspini (c. 177. p. 999.).

<sup>51</sup> The high sounding bull of Nicholas III. which founds his temporal sovereignty on the donation of Constantine, is still extant; and as it has been inserted by Boniface VIII. in the Sexte of the Decretals, it must be received by the Catholics, or at least by the Papists, as a sacred and perpetual law.

<sup>52</sup> I am indebted to Fleury (Hist. Eccles. tom. xviii. p. 306.) for an extract of this Roman act, which he has taken from the Ecclesiastical Annals of Odericus Raynaldus, A. D. 1281, N<sup>o</sup> 14, 15.

to conciliate the favour of the empire, and to recommend their merit and services in the cause of Cæsar. The style of their ambassadors to Conrad the third and Frederic the first, is a mixture of flattery and pride, the tradition and the ignorance of their own history<sup>53</sup>. After some complaint of his silence and neglect, they exhort the former of these princes to pass the Alps, and assume from their hands the Imperial crown. “ We beseech your majesty, not “ to disdain the humility of your sons and vassals, not to listen to “ the accusations of our common enemies; who calumniate the “ senate as hostile to your throne, who sow the seeds of discord, “ that they may reap the harvest of destruction. The pope and the “ Sicilian are united in an impious league to oppose our liberty and “ your coronation. With the blessing of God, our zeal and courage “ has hitherto defeated their attempts. Of their powerful and factious adherents, more especially the Frangipani, we have taken “ by assault the houses and turrets: some of these are occupied by “ our troops, and some are levelled with the ground. The Milvian “ bridge, which they had broken, is restored and fortified for your “ safe passage; and your army may enter the city without being “ annoyed from the castle of St. Angelo. All that we have done, “ and all that we design, is for your honour and service, in the loyal “ hope, that you will speedily appear in person, to vindicate those “ rights which have been invaded by the clergy, to revive the dignity of the empire, and to surpass the fame and glory of your predecessors. May you fix your residence in Rome, the capital “ of the world; give laws to Italy, and the Teutonic kingdom; and “ imitate the example of Constantine and Justinian<sup>54</sup>, who by the “ vigour

C H A P
LXIX.
Conrad III.
A. D. 1131.

<sup>53</sup> These letters and speeches are preserved by Otho bishop of Frisingea (Fabric. Bibliot. Lat. med. et infim. tom. v. p. 186, 187.), perhaps the noblest of historians: he was son of Leopold marquis of Austria, his mother, Agnes, was daughter of the emperor Henry IV. and he was half-brother and uncle to Conrad III. and Frederic I. He has left, in seven books, a Chronicle of the Times; in two, the Gesta Frederici I. the last of which is inserted in the vith volume of Muratori's historians.

<sup>54</sup> We desire (said the ignorant Romans) to restore the empire in eum statum, quo fuit tempore

C H A P.
LXX.

“ vigour of the senate and people obtained the sceptre of the “ earth<sup>55</sup>.” But these splendid and fallacious wishes were not cherished by Conrad the Franconian, whose eyes were fixed on the Holy Land, and who died without visiting Rome soon after his return from the Holy Land.

Frederic I.
A. D. 1155.

His nephew and successor Frederic Barbarossa, was more ambitious of the Imperial crown; nor had any of the successors of Otho acquired such absolute sway over the kingdom of Italy. Surrounded by his ecclesiastical and secular princes, he gave audience in his camp at Sutri to the ambassadors of Rome, who thus addressed him in a free and florid oration: “ Incline your ear to the queen of cities; “ approach with a peaceful and friendly mind the precincts of “ Rome, which has cast away the yoke of the clergy, and is impa“ tient to crown her legitimate emperor. Under your auspicious “ influence, may the primitive times be restored. Assert the prero“ gatives of the eternal city, and reduce under her monarchy, the “ insolence of the world. You are not ignorant, that, in former “ ages, by the wisdom of the senate, by the valour and discipline “ of the equestrian order, she extended her victorious arms to the “ East and West, beyond the Alps, and over the islands of the “ ocean. By our sins, in the absence of our princes, the noble in“ stitution of the senate has sunk in oblivion: and with our pru“ dence, our strength has likewise decreased. We have revived the “ senate, and the equestrian order; the counsels of the one, the “ arms of the other, will be devoted to your person and the service “ of the empire. Do you not hear the language of the Roman “ matron? You were a guest, I have adopted you as a citizen; a “ Transalpine stranger, I have elected you for my sovereign<sup>56</sup>; and “ given you myself, and all that is mine. Your first and most sacred tempore Constantini et Justiniani, qui totum orbem vigore senatus et populi Romani suis tenere manibus.

<sup>55</sup> Otho Frising. de Gestis Frederici I.

l. i. c. 28. p. 662—664.

<sup>56</sup> Hospes eras, civem feci. Advena fuisti ex Transalpinis partibus; principem constitui.

“ duty,

“ duty, is to swear and subscribe, that you will shed your blood “ for the republic; that you will maintain in peace and justice, the “ laws of the city and the charters of your predecessors; and that “ you will reward with five thousand pounds of silver the faithful “ senators who shall proclaim your titles in the Capitol. With the “ name, assume the character, of Augustus.” The flowers of Latin rhetoric were not yet exhausted; but Frederic, impatient of their vanity, interrupted the orators in the high tone of royalty and conquest. “ Famous indeed have been the fortitude and wisdom “ of the ancient Romans: but your speech is not seasoned with “ wisdom, and I could wish that fortitude were conspicuous in your “ actions. Like all sublunary things, Rome has felt the vicissitudes “ of time and fortune. Your noblest families were translated to the “ East, to the royal city of Constantine; and the remains of your “ strength and freedom have long since been exhausted by the “ Greeks and Franks. Are you desirous of beholding the ancient “ glory of Rome, the gravity of the senate, the spirit of the knights, “ the discipline of the camp, the valour of the legions? you will “ find them in the German republic. It is not empire, naked and “ alone, the ornaments and virtues of empire have likewise mi“ grated beyond the Alps to a more deserving people<sup>57</sup>: they will “ be employed in your defence, but they claim your obedience.
 “ You pretend that myself or my predecessors have been invited by “ the Romans: you mistake the word, they were not invited; they “ were implored. From its foreign and domestic tyrants, the city “ was rescued by Charlemagne and Otho, whose ashes repose in our “ country: and their dominion was the price of your deliverance.
 “ Under that dominion your ancestors lived and died. I claim by “ the right of inheritance and possession, and who shall dare to ex-

C H A P
LXIX.

<sup>57</sup> Non cessit nobis nudum imperium, vir- Cicero or Livy would not have rejected these tute sua amictum venit, ornamenta sua secum images, the eloquence of a Barbarian born traxit. Penes nos sunt consules tui, &c. and educated in the Hercynian forest.

C H A P.
LXIX.

“tort you from my hands? Is the hand of the Franks<sup>58</sup> and Germans enfeebled by age? Am I vanquished? Am I a captive? Am I not encompassed with the banners of a potent and invincible army? You impose conditions on your master; you require oaths: if the conditions are just, an oath is superfluous; if unjust, it is criminal. Can you doubt my equity? It is extended to the meanest of my subjects. Will not my sword be unsheathed in the defence of the Capitol? By that sword the northern kingdom of Denmark has been restored to the Roman empire. You prescribe the measure and the objects of my bounty, which flows in a copious but a voluntary stream. All will be given to patient merit; all will be denied to rude importunity<sup>59</sup>.” Neither the emperor nor the senate could maintain these lofty pretensions of dominion and liberty. United with the pope, and suspicious of the Romans, Frederic continued his march to the Vatican: his coronation was disturbed by a fall from the Capitol; and if the numbers and valour of the Germans prevailed in the bloody conflict, he could not safely encamp in the presence of a city of which he styled himself the sovereign. About twelve years afterwards, he besieged Rome, to seat an antipope in the chair of St. Peter; and twelve Pisan galleys were introduced into the Tyber: but the senate and people were saved by the arts of negotiation and the progress of disease; nor did Frederic or his successors reiterate the hostile attempt. Their laborious reigns were exercised by the popes, the crusades, and the independence of Lombardy and Germany; they courted the alliance of the Romans; and Frederic the second offered in the Capitol the great standard, the Caroccio of Milan<sup>60</sup>. After the extinction of the house

<sup>58</sup> Otho of Frisingen, who surely understood the language of the court and diet of Germany, speaks of the Franks in the xiith century as the reigning nation (Proceres Franci, equites Franci, manus Francorum): he adds, however, the epithet of Teutonici.

<sup>59</sup> Otho Frising. de Gestis Frederici I. l. ii. c. 22. p. 720—723. These original and authentic acts I have translated and abridged with freedom, yet with fidelity.

<sup>60</sup> From the Chronicles of Ricobaldo and Francis Pipin, Muratori (dissert. xxvi. tom. ii. p. 492.)

house of Swabia, they were banished beyond the Alps; and their last coronations betrayed the impotence and poverty of the Teutonic Cæsars<sup>61</sup>.

C H A P.
LXIX.

Under the reign of Adrian, when the empire extended from the Euphrates to the ocean, from mount Atlas to the Grampian hills, a fanciful historian<sup>62</sup> amused the Romans with the picture of their infant wars. "There was a time," says Florus, "when Tibur and Præneste, our summer retreats, were the objects of hostile vows in the Capitol, when we dreaded the shades of the Arician groves, when we could triumph without a blush over the nameless villages of the Sabines and Latins, and even Corioli could afford a title not unworthy of a victorious general." The pride of his contemporaries was gratified by the contrast of the past and the present: they would have been humbled by the prospect of futurity; by the prediction, that after a thousand years, Rome, despoiled of empire and contracted to her primæval limits, would renew the same hostilities, on the same ground which was then decorated with her villas and gardens. The adjacent territory on either side of the Tyber was always claimed, and sometimes possessed, as the patrimony of St. Peter; but the barons assumed a lawless independence, and the cities too faithfully copied the revolt and discord of the metropolis. In the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, the Romans incessantly laboured

Wars of the Romans
against the neighbouring cities.

p. 492.) has transcribed this curious fact with the dogrel verses that accompanied the gift.

Ave decus orbis ave! victus tibi desit nor, ave!

Currus ab Augusto Frederico Cæsare julto.

Væ Mediolanum! jam sentis spernere vanum

Imperii vires, proprias tibi tollere vires.

Ergo triumphorum urbs potes memor esse priorum

Quos tibi mittebant reges qui bella gerebant.

Ne si dee tacere (I now use the Italian Dissertations, tom. i. p. 444.) che nell'anno 1727, una copia desso Caroccio in marmo dianzi ignoto si scopri nel Campidoglio, presso alle carcere di quel luogo, dove Sisto V. l'avea falto rinchiudere. Stava esso posto sopra quattro colonne di marmo sino colla seguente inscrizione, &c. to the same purpose as the old inscription.

<sup>61</sup> The decline of the Imperial arms and authority in Italy, is related with impartial learning in the Annals of Muratori (tom. x, xi, xii.); and the reader may compare his narrative with the Histoire des Allemands (tom. iii, iv.), by Schmidt, who has deserved the esteem of his countrymen.

<sup>62</sup> Tibur nunc suburbanum, et ætivræ Præneste delictæ, nuncupatis in Capitolio votis petebantur. The whole passage of Florus (l. i. c. 11.) may be read with pleasure, and has deserved the praise of a man of genius (Œuvres de Montesquieu, tom. iii. p. 634, 635. quarto edition).

C H A P.
LXIX.

to reduce or destroy the contumacious vassals of the church and senate; and if their headstrong and selfish ambition was moderated by the pope, he often encouraged their zeal by the alliance of his spiritual arms. Their warfare was that of the first consuls and dictators, who were taken from the plow. They assembled in arms at the foot of the Capitol; sallied from the gates, plundered or burnt the harvests of their neighbours, engaged in tumultuary conflict, and returned home after an expedition of fifteen or twenty days. Their sieges were tedious and unskilful: in the use of victory, they indulged the meaner passions of jealousy and revenge; and instead of adopting the valour, they trampled on the misfortunes, of their adversaries. The captives, in their shirts, with a rope round their necks, solicited their pardon: the fortifications and even the buildings of the rival cities were demolished, and the inhabitants were scattered in the adjacent villages. It was thus that the seats of the cardinal bishops, Porto, Ostia, Albanum, Tusculum, Prænestæ, and Tibur or Tivoli, were successively overthrown by the ferocious hostility of the Romans<sup>63</sup>. Of these<sup>64</sup>, Porto and Ostia, the two keys of the Tyber, are still vacant and desolate: the marshy and unwholesome banks are peopled with herds of buffalos, and the river is lost to every purpose of navigation and trade. The hills which afford a shady retirement from the autumnal heats, have again smiled with the blessings of peace: Fregati has arisen near the ruins of Tusculum: Tibur or Tivoli has resumed the honours of a city<sup>65</sup>, and the meaner towns of Albano and Palestrina are decorated with

<sup>63</sup> Ne a feritate Romanorum, sicut fuerant Hollienses, Portuenses, Tusculanenses, Albanenses, Labicenses, et nuper Tiburtini destruerentur (Matthew Paris, p. 757.). These events are marked in the Annals and Index (the xviiith volume) of Muratori.

<sup>64</sup> For the state or ruin of these suburban cities, the banks of the Tyber, &c. see the lively picture of the P. Labat (Voyage en Espagne et en Italie), who had long resided in the neighbourhood of Rome; and the more accurate description of which P. Eschinard (Roma, 1750, in octavo) has added to the topographical map of Cingolani.

<sup>65</sup> Labat (tom. iii. p. 233.) mentions a recent decree, of the Roman government, which has severely mortified the pride and poverty of Tivoli: in civitate Tiburtinâ non vivitur civiliter.

the villas of the cardinals and princes of Rome. In the work of destruction, the ambition of the Romans was often checked and repulsed by the neighbouring cities and their allies: in the first siege of Tibur, they were driven from their camp; and the battles of Tusculum<sup>66</sup> and Viterbo<sup>67</sup> might be compared in their relative state to the memorable fields of Thrasymene and Cannæ. In the first of these petty wars, thirty thousand Romans were overthrown by a thousand German horse, whom Frederic Barbarossa had detached to the relief of Tusculum; and if we number the slain at three, the prisoners at two, thousand, we shall embrace the most authentic and moderate account. Sixty-eight years afterward they marched against Viterbo in the ecclesiastical state with the whole force of the city; by a rare coalition, the Teutonic eagle was blended, in the adverse banners, with the keys of St. Peter; and the pope's auxiliaries were commanded by a count of Tholouse and a bishop of Winchester. The Romans were discomfited with shame and slaughter; but the English prelate must have indulged the vanity of a pilgrim, if he multiplied their numbers to one hundred, and their loss in the field to thirty, thousand men. Had the policy of the senate and the discipline of the legions been restored with the Capitol, the divided condition of Italy would have offered the fairest opportunity of a second conquest. But in arms, the modern Romans were not above, and in arts, they were far below, the common level of the neighbouring republics. Nor was their warlike spirit of any long continuance; after some irregular sallies, they subsided in the national apathy, in the neglect of military institutions, and in the disgraceful and dangerous use of foreign mercenaries.

C H A P.
LXIX.Battle of Tusculum,
A. D. 1107.Battle of Viterbo,
A. D. 1234.

<sup>66</sup> I depart from my usual method, of quoting only by the date the Annals of Muratori, in consideration of the critical balance in which he has weighed nine contemporary writers who mention the battle of Tusculum (tom. x. p. 42—44.).

<sup>67</sup> Matthew Paris, p. 345. This bishop of Winchester was Peter de Rupibus, who occupied the see thirty-two years (A. D. 1206—1238), and is described, by the English historian, as a soldier and a statesman (p. 178. 399.).

C H A P.
LXIX.

The election of the popes.

Ambition is a weed of quick and early vegetation in the vineyard of Christ. Under the first Christian princes, the chair of St. Peter was disputed by the votes, the venality, the violence, of a popular election: the sanctuaries of Rome were polluted with blood; and, from the third to the twelfth century, the church was distracted by the mischief of frequent schisms. As long as the final appeal was determined by the civil magistrate, these mischiefs were transient and local: the merits were tried by equity or favour; nor could the unsuccessful competitor long disturb the triumph of his rival. But after the emperors had been divested of their prerogatives, after a maxim had been established, that the vicar of Christ is amenable to no earthly tribunal, each vacancy of the holy see might involve Christendom in controversy and war. The claims of the cardinals and inferior clergy, of the nobles and people, were vague and litigious: the freedom of choice was over-ruled by the tumults of a city that no longer owned or obeyed a superior. On the decease of a pope, two factions proceeded in different churches to a double election: the number and weight of votes, the priority of time, the merit of the candidates, might balance each other: the most respectable of the clergy were divided; and the distant princes, who bowed before the spiritual throne, could not distinguish the spurious, from the legitimate, idol. The emperors were often the authors of the schism, from the political motive of opposing a friendly to an hostile pontiff; and each of the competitors was reduced to suffer the insults of his enemies, who were not awed by conscience; and to purchase the support of his adherents, who were instigated by avarice or ambition. A peaceful and perpetual succession was ascertained by Alexander the third<sup>68</sup>, who finally abolished the tumultuary votes of the clergy and people, and defined the right of election

Right of the cardinals established by Alexander
III.
A. D. 1179.

<sup>68</sup> See Mosheim, Institut. Hist. Ecclesiast. p. 401. 403. Alexander himself had nearly been the victim of a contested election; and the doubtful merits of Innocent had only preponderated by the weight of genius and learning which St. Bernard cast into the scale (see his life and writings).

in the sole college of cardinals<sup>69</sup>. The three orders of bishops, priests, and deacons, were assimilated to each other by this important privilege: the parochial clergy of Rome obtained the first rank in the hierarchy; they were indifferently chosen among the nations of Christendom; and the possession of the richest benefices, of the most important bishoprics, was not incompatible with their title and office. The senators of the Catholic church, the coadjutors and legates of the supreme pontiff, were robed in purple, the symbol of martyrdom or royalty; they claimed a proud equality with kings; and their dignity was enhanced by the smallness of their number, which, till the reign of Leo the tenth, seldom exceeded twenty, or twenty-five, persons. By this wise regulation, all doubt and scandal were removed, and the root of schism was so effectually destroyed, that in a period of six hundred years a double choice has only once divided the unity of the sacred college. But as the concurrence of two thirds of the votes had been made necessary, the election was often delayed by the private interest and passions of the cardinals; and while they prolonged their independent reign, the Christian world was left destitute of an head. A vacancy of almost three years had preceded the elevation of Gregory the tenth, who resolved to prevent the future abuse; and his bull, after some opposition, has been consecrated in the code of the canon law<sup>70</sup>. Nine days are allowed for the obsequies of the deceased pope, and the arrival of the absent cardinals: on the tenth, they are imprisoned, each with one domestic, in a common apartment or conclave, without any separation of walls or curtains; a small window is reserved for the introduction of necessaries; but the door is locked on both sides, and guarded by the magistrates of the city, to seclude them from all

C H A P.
LXIX.

Institution of the conclave by Gregory X.
A. D. 1274.

<sup>69</sup> The origin, titles, importance, dress, precedence, &c. of the Roman cardinals, are very ably discussed by Thomassin (Discipline de l'Eglise, tom. i. p. 1262-1287.); but their purple is now much faded. The sacred college was raised to the definite number of seventy-two, to represent, under his vicar, the disciples of Christ.

<sup>70</sup> See the bull of Gregory X. (approbante sacro concilio, in the Sexte of the Canon Law (l. i. tit. 6. c. 3.), a supplement to the Decretals, which Boniface VIII. promulgated at Rome in 1298, and addressed to all the universities of Europe.

C H A P.
LXIX.

correspondence with the world. If the election be not consummated in three days, the luxury of their table is contracted to a single dish at dinner and supper; and after the eighth day, they are reduced to a scanty allowance of bread, water, and wine. During the vacancy of the holy see, the cardinals are prohibited from touching the revenues, or assuming, unless in some rare emergency, the government, of the church: all agreements and promises among the electors are formally annulled; and their integrity is fortified by their solemn oath and the prayers of the Catholics. Some articles of inconvenient or superfluous rigour have been gradually relaxed, but the principle of confinement is vigorous and entire: they are still urged, by the personal motives of health and freedom, to accelerate the moment of their deliverance; and the improvement of ballot or secret votes has wrapt the struggles of the conclave<sup>71</sup> in the silky veil of charity and politeness<sup>72</sup>. By these institutions, the Romans were excluded from the election of their prince and bishop; and in the fever of wild and precarious liberty, they seemed insensible of the loss of this inestimable privilege. The emperor Lewis of Bavaria revived the example of the great Otho. After some negotiation with the magistrates, the Roman people was assembled<sup>73</sup> in the square before St. Peter's; the pope of Avignon, John the twenty-second, was deposed; the choice of his successor was ratified by

A. D. 1328.

<sup>71</sup> The genius of cardinal de Retz had a right to paint a conclave (of 1655), in which he was a spectator and an actor (Memoires, tom. iv. p. 15—57.): but I am at a loss to appreciate the knowledge or authority of an anonymous Italian, whose history (Conclavi de' Pontifici Romani, in 4<sup>to</sup>, 1667) has been continued since the reign of Alexander VII. The accidental form of the work furnishes a lesson, though not an antidote, to ambition. From a labyrinth of intrigues, we emerge to the adoration of the successful candidate: but the next page opens with his funeral.

<sup>72</sup> The expressions of cardinal de Retz are positive and picturesque: On y veçut toujours ensemble avec le même respect, et la même civilité que l'on observe dans le cabinet des rois, avec la même politesse qu'on avoit dans la cour de Henri III. avec la même familiarité que l'on voit dans les colleges; avec la même modestie, qui se remarque dans les noviciats; et avec la même charité, du moins en apparence, qui pourroit être entre des freres parfaitement unis.

<sup>73</sup> Rechieffi per bando (says John Villani) fanatori di Roma, e 52 del popolo, et capitani de' 25. e consoli (consoli?), et 13 buone huomini, uno per rione. Our knowledge is too imperfect to pronounce, how much of this constitution was temporary, and how much ordinary and permanent. Yet it is faintly illustrated by the ancient statutes of Rome.

their

their consent and applause. They freely voted for a new law, that their bishop should never be absent more than three months in the year, and two days journey from the city; and that if he neglected to return on the third summons, the public servant should be degraded and dismissed<sup>74</sup>. But Lewis forgot his own debility and the prejudices of the times: beyond the precincts of a German camp, his useless phantom was rejected; the Romans despised their own workmanship; the antipope implored the mercy of his lawful sovereign<sup>75</sup>; and the exclusive right of the cardinals was more firmly established by this unseasonable attack.

C H A P.
LXIX.

Absence of the popes
from Rome.

Had the election been always held in the Vatican, the rights of the senate and people would not have been violated with impunity. But the Romans forgot, and were forgotten, in the absence of the successors of Gregory the seventh, who did not keep as a divine precept their ordinary residence in the city and diocese. The care of that diocese was less important than the government of the universal church; nor could the popes delight in a city in which their authority was always opposed and their person was often endangered. From the persecution of the emperors, and the wars of Italy, they escaped beyond the Alps into the hospitable bosom of France; from the tumults of Rome they prudently withdrew to live and die in the more tranquil stations of Anagni, Perugia, Viterbo, and the adjacent cities. When the flock was offended or impoverished by the absence of the shepherd, they were recalled by a stern admonition, that St. Peter had fixed his chair, not in an obscure village, but in the capital of the world; by a ferocious menace that the Romans would march in arms to destroy the place and people that should <sup>74</sup> Villani (l. x. c. 68—71. in Muratori, Script. tom. xiii. p. 641—645.) relates this law, and the whole transaction, with much less abhorrence than the prudent Muratori. Any one conversant with the darker ages must have observed how much the sense (I mean the nonsense) of superstition is fluctuating and inconsistent.

<sup>75</sup> In the 1st volume of the Popes of Avignon, see the second original Life of John XXII. p. 142—145. the confession of the antipope, p. 145—152. and the laborious notes of Baluze, p. 714, 715.

C H A P.
LXIX.

Boniface VIII.
A. D.
1294—1303.

dare to afford them a retreat. They returned with timorous obedience; and were saluted with the account of an heavy debt, of all the losses which their desertion had occasioned, the hire of lodgings, the sale of provisions, and the various expences of servants and strangers who attended the court<sup>76</sup>. After a short interval of peace, and perhaps of authority, they were again banished by new tumults, and again summoned by the imperious or respectful invitation of the senate. In these occasional retreats, the exiles and fugitives of the Vatican were seldom long, or far, distant from the metropolis; but in the beginning of the fourteenth century the apostolic throne was transported, as it might seem for ever, from the Tyber to the Rhône; and the cause of the transmigration may be deduced from the furious contest between Boniface the eighth and the king of France<sup>77</sup>. The spiritual arms of excommunication and interdict were repulsed by the union of the three estates, and the privileges of the Gallican church; but the pope was not against the carnal weapons which Philip the Fair had courage to employ. As the pope resided at Anagni, without the suspicion of danger, his palace and person were assaulted by three hundred horse, who had been secretly levied by William of Nogaret, a French minister, and Sciarra Colonna, of a noble but hostile family of Rome. The cardinals fled; the inhabitants of Anagni were seduced from their allegiance and gratitude; but the dauntless Boniface, unarmed and

<sup>76</sup> Romani autem non valentes nec volentes ultra suam celare cupiditatem gravissimam contra papam movere cœperunt questionem, exigentes ab eo urgentissime omnia quæ subierant per ejus absentiam damna et jacturas, videlicet in hospitibus locandis, in mercimoniis, in usuris, in redditibus, in provisionibus, et in aliis modis innumerabilibus. Quod cum audisset papa, præcordialiter ingemuit et se comperiens muscipulatum, &c. Matt. Paris, p. 757. For the ordinary history of the popes, their life and death, their residence and absence, it is enough to refer to the ecclesiastical annalists, Spondanus and Fleury.

<sup>77</sup> Besides the general historians of the church of Italy and of France, we possess a valuable treatise composed by a learned friend of Thuanus, which his last and best editors have published in the appendix (Histoire particuliere du grand Differend entre Boniface VIII. et Philippe le Bel, par Pierre du Puis, tom. viii. P. xi. p. 61—82.).

alone,

alone, seated himself in his chair, and awaited, like the conscript fathers of old, the swords of the Gauls. Nogaret, a foreign adversary, was content to execute the orders of his master: by the domestic enmity of Colonna, he was insulted with words and blows; and during a confinement of three days his life was threatened by the hardships which they inflicted on the obstinacy which they provoked. Their strange delay gave time and courage to the adherents of the church, who rescued him from sacrilegious violence; but his imperious soul was wounded in a vital part; and Boniface expired at Rome in a frenzy of rage and revenge. His memory is stained with the glaring vices of avarice and pride; nor has the courage of a martyr promoted this ecclesiastical champion to the honours of a saint; a magnanimous sinner (say the chronicles of the times), who entered like a fox, reigned like a lion, and died like a dog. He was succeeded by Benedict the eleventh, the mildest of mankind. Yet he excommunicated the impious emissaries of Philip, and devoted the city and people of Anagni by a tremendous curse, whose effects are still visible to the eyes of superstition<sup>73</sup>.

After his decease, the tedious and equal suspense of the conclave was fixed by the dexterity of the French faction. A specious offer was made and accepted, that, in the term of forty days, they would elect one of the three candidates who should be named by their opponents. The archbishop of Bourdeaux, a furious enemy of his king and country, was the first on the list; but his ambition was known; and his conscience obeyed the calls of fortune and the commands of a benefactor, who had been informed by a swift messenger that the choice of a pope was now in his hands. The terms were regulated in a private interview; and with such speed and secrecy was the business transacted, that the unanimous conclave applauded

C H A P.
LXIX.

Translation of the holy see to Avignon,
A. D. 1302.

<sup>73</sup> It is difficult to know whether Labat (tom. iv. p. 53—57.) be in jest or in earnest, when he supposes that Anagni still feels the weight of this curse, and that the corn-fields, or vineyards, or olive-trees, are annually blasted by nature, the obsequious handmaid of the popes.

C H A P.
LXIX.

the elevation of Clement the fifth<sup>79</sup>. The cardinals of both parties were soon astonished by a summons to attend him beyond the Alps; from whence, as they soon discovered, they must never hope to return. He was engaged, by promise and affection, to prefer the residence of France; and, after dragging his court through Poitou and Gascony, and devouring, by his expence, the cities and convents on the road, he finally reposed at Avignon<sup>80</sup>, which flourished above seventy years<sup>81</sup> the seat of the Roman pontiff and the metropolis of Christendom. By land, by sea, by the Rhone, the position of Avignon was on all sides accessible: the southern provinces of France do not yield to Italy itself; new palaces arose for the accommodation of the pope and cardinals; and the arts of luxury were soon attracted by the treasures of the church. They were already possessed of the adjacent territory, the Venaissin county<sup>82</sup>, a populous and fertile spot; and the sovereignty of Avignon was afterwards purchased from the youth and distress of Jane, the first queen of Naples and countess of Provence, for the inadequate price of fourscore thousand florins<sup>83</sup>. Under the shadow of the French monarchy, <sup>79</sup> See in the Chronicle of Giovanni Villani (l. viii. c. 63, 64. 80. in Muratori, tom. xliii.) the imprisonment of Boniface VIII. and the election of Clement V. the last of which, like most anecdotes, is embarrassed with some difficulties.

<sup>80</sup> The original lives of the eight popes of Avignon, Clement V. John XXII. Benedict XII. Clement VI. Innocent VI. Urban V. Gregory XI. and Clement VII. are published by Stephen Baluze (Vitæ Papatum Avenionensium; Paris, 1693, 2 vols. in 4<sup>to</sup>) with copious and elaborate notes, and a second volume of acts and documents. With the true zeal of an editor and a patriot, he devoutly justifies or excuses the characters of his countrymen.

<sup>81</sup> The exile of Avignon is compared by the Italians with Babylon, and the Babylonish captivity. Such furious metaphors, more suitable to the ardour of Petrarch than to the judgment of Muratori, are gravely refuted in Baluze's preface. The abbé de Sade is distracted between the love of Petrarch and of his country. Yet he modestly pleads, that many of the local inconveniencies of Avignon are now removed; and many of the vices against which the poet declaims, had been imported with the Roman court by the strangers of Italy (tom. i. p. 23—28.).

<sup>82</sup> The comtat Venaissin was ceded to the popes in 1273 by Philip III. king of France, after he had inherited the dominions of the count of Tholouse. Forty years before, the heresy of count Raymond had given them a pretence of seizure, and they derived some obscure claim from the xith century to some lands citra Rhodanum (Valesii Notitia Galliarum, p. 459. 610. Longuerue, Description de la France, tom. i. p. 376—381.).

<sup>83</sup> If a possession of four centuries were not itself a title, such objections might annul the bargain;

narchy, amidst an obedient people, the popes enjoyed an honourable and tranquil state, to which they long had been strangers: but Italy deplored their absence; and Rome, in solitude and poverty, might repent of the ungovernable freedom which had driven from the Vatican the successor of St. Peter. Her repentance was tardy and fruitless: after the death of the old members, the sacred college was filled with French cardinals<sup>84</sup>, who beheld Rome and Italy with abhorrence and contempt, and perpetuated a series of national, and even provincial, popes, attached by the most indissoluble ties to their native country.

The progress of industry had produced and enriched the Italian republics: the æra of their liberty is the most flourishing period of population and agriculture, of manufactures and commerce; and their mechanic labours were gradually refined into the arts of elegance and genius. But the position of Rome was less favourable, the territory less fruitful; the character of the inhabitants was debased by indolence and elated by pride; and they fondly conceived that the tribute of subjects must for ever nourish the metropolis of the church and empire. This prejudice was encouraged in some degree by the resort of pilgrims to the shrines of the apostles; and the last legacy of the popes, the institution of the HOLY YEAR<sup>85</sup>, was not less beneficial to the people than to the clergy. Since the loss of Palestine, the gift of plenary indulgences, which had been applied

C H A P.
LXIX.

Institution of the jubilee,
or holy year,
A. D. 1300.

bargain; but the purchase-money must be refunded, for indeed it was paid. Civitatem Avenionem emit... per ejusmodi venditionem pecuniâ redundantes, &c. (ii<sup>da</sup> Vita Clement. VI. in Baluz. tom. i. p. 272. Muratori, Script. tom. iii. P. ii. p. 565.) The only temptation for Jane and her second husband was ready money, and without it they could not have returned to the throne of Naples.

<sup>84</sup> Clement V. immediately promoted ten cardinals, nine French and one English (Vita iv<sup>a</sup>, p. 63. et Baluz. p. 625, &c.). In 1331, the pope refused two candidates recommended by the king of France, quod xx. Cardinales, de quibus xvii. de regno Franciæ originem traxisse noscuntur in memorato collegio existant (Thomassin, Discipline de l'Eglise, tom. i. p. 1281.).

<sup>85</sup> Our primitive account is from cardinal James Caietan (Maxima Bibliot. Patrum, tom. xxv.); and I am at a loss to determine whether the nephew of Boniface VIII. be a fool or a knave: the uncle is a much clearer character.

C H A P.
LXIX.

to the crusades, remained without an object; and the most valuable treasure of the church was sequestered above eight years from public circulation. A new channel was opened by the diligence of Boniface the eighth, who reconciled the vices of ambition and avarice; and the pope had sufficient learning to recollect and revive the secular games, which were celebrated in Rome at the conclusion of every century. To sound without danger the depth of popular credulity, a sermon was seasonably pronounced, a report was artfully scattered, some aged witnesses were produced; and on the first of January of the year thirteen hundred, the church of St. Peter was crowded with the faithful, who demanded the customary indulgence of the holy time. The pontiff, who watched and irritated their devout impatience, was soon persuaded by ancient testimony of the justice of their claim; and he proclaimed a plenary absolution to all Catholics who, in the course of that year, and at every similar period, should respectfully visit the apostolic churches of St. Peter and St. Paul. The welcome sound was propagated through Christendom; and at first from the nearest provinces of Italy, and at length from the remote kingdoms of Hungary and Britain, the highways were thronged with a swarm of pilgrims who sought to expiate their sins in a journey, however costly or laborious, which was exempt from the perils of military service. All exceptions of rank or sex, of age or infirmity, were forgotten in the common transport; and in the streets and churches many persons were trampled to death by the eagerness of devotion. The calculation of their numbers could not be easy nor accurate; and they have probably been magnified by a dextrous clergy, well apprised of the contagion of example: yet we are assured by a judicious historian, who assisted at the ceremony, that Rome was never replenished with less than two hundred thousand strangers; and another spectator has fixed at two millions the total concourse of the year. A trifling oblation from each individual would accumulate a royal treasure; and two priests stood night and day, with rakes in their hands, to collect, without counting, the heaps of gold and silver that were poured on the altar of St. Paul<sup>86</sup>. It was fortunately a season of peace and plenty; and if forage was scarce, if inns and lodgings were extravagantly dear, an inexhaustible supply of bread and wine, of meat and fish, was provided by the policy of Boniface and the venal hospitality of the Romans. From a city without trade or industry, all casual riches will speedily evaporate: but the avarice and envy of the next generation solicited Clement the sixth<sup>87</sup> to anticipate the distant period of the century. The gracious pontiff complied with their wishes; afforded Rome this poor consolation for his loss; and justified the change by the name and practice of the Mosaic Jubilee<sup>88</sup>. His summons was obeyed; and the number, zeal, and liberality, of the pilgrims did not yield to the primitive festival. But they encountered the triple scourge of war, pestilence, and famine: many wives and virgins were violated in the castles of Italy; and many strangers were pilaged or murdered by the savage Romans, no longer moderated by the presence of their bishop<sup>89</sup>. To the impatience of the popes we may ascribe the successive reduction to fifty, thirty-three, and twenty-five, years; although the second of these terms is commensurate with the life of Christ. The profusion of indulgences, the revolt of the Protestants, and the decline of superstition, have much diminished the value of the jubilee: yet even the nineteenth and last festival was a year of pleasure and profit to the Romans; and a philosophic

C H A P.
LXIX.

The second jubilee,
A. D. 1350.

<sup>86</sup> See John Villani (l. viii. c. 36.) in the xiith, and the Chronicon Astense, in the xiith volume (p. 191, 192.) of Muratori's Collection. Papa innumerabilem pecuniam ab eisdem accepit, nam duo clerici, cum rastris, &c.

<sup>87</sup> The two bulls of Boniface VIII. and Clement VI. are inserted in the Corpus Juris Canonici (Extravagant. Commun. l. v. tit. ix. c. 1, 2.).

<sup>88</sup> The sabbatic years and jubilees of the Mosaic law (Car. Sigon. de Republicâ Hebraicâ, Opp. tom. iv. l. iii. c. 14, 15. p. 151, 152.), the suspension of all care and labour, the periodical release of lands, debts, servitude, &c. may seem a noble idea, but the execution would be impracticable in a profane republic; and I should be glad to learn that this ruinous festival was observed by the Jewish people.

<sup>89</sup> See the Chronicle of Matteo Villani (l. i. c. 56.) in the xiith volume of Muratori, and the Memoires sur la Vie de Petrarque, tom. iii. p. 75—89.

C H A P.
LXIX.

The nobles or barons of Rome.

family will not disturb the triumph of the priest or the happiness of the people<sup>90</sup>.

In the beginning of the eleventh century, Italy was exposed to the feudal tyranny alike oppressive to the sovereign and the people. The rights of human nature were vindicated by her numerous republics, who soon extended their liberty and dominion from the city to the adjacent country. The sword of the nobles was broken; their slaves were enfranchised; their castles were demolished; they assumed the habits of society and obedience; their ambition was confined to municipal honours, and in the proudest aristocracy of Venice or Genoa, each patrician was subject to the laws<sup>91</sup>. But the feeble and disorderly government of Rome was unequal to the task of curbing her rebellious sons, who scorned the authority of the magistrate within and without the walls. It was no longer a civil contention between the nobles and plebeians for the government of the state: the barons asserted in arms their personal independence; their palaces and castles were fortified against a siege; and their private quarrels were maintained by the numbers of their vassals and retainers. In origin and affection, they were aliens to their country<sup>92</sup>: and a genuine Roman, could such have been produced, might have renounced these haughty strangers, who disdained the appellation of citizens, and proudly styled themselves the princes, of Rome<sup>93</sup>. After a dark series of revolutions, all records of pedigree were lost; the distinction of surnames was abolished; the blood of the nations was

<sup>90</sup> The subject is exhausted by M. Chais, a French minister at the Hague, in his Lettres Historiques et Dogmatiques, sur les Jubiles et les Indulgences; la Haye, 1751, 3 vols. in 12<sup>mo</sup>; an elaborate and pleasing work, had not the author preferred the character of a polemic to that of a philosopher.

<sup>91</sup> Muratori (Dissert. xlvii.) alleges the Annals of Florence, Padua, Genoa, &c. the analogy of the rest, the evidence of Otho of Frisingen (de Gest. Fred. I. l. ii. c. 13.), and the submission of the marquis of Este.

<sup>92</sup> As early as the year 824, the emperor Lothaire I. found it expedient to interrogate the Roman people, to learn from each individual, by what national law he chose to be governed (Muratori, Dissert. xxii.).

<sup>93</sup> Petrarch attacks these foreigners, the tyrants of Rome, in a declamation or epistle, full of bold truths and absurd pedantry, in which he applies the maxims, and even prejudices, of the old republic to the state of the sixteenth century (Memoires, tom. iii. p. 157—169.).

mingled in a thousand channels; and the Goths and Lombards, the Greeks and Franks, the Germans and Normans, had obtained the fairest possessions by royal bounty, or the prerogative of valour. These examples might be readily presumed: but the elevation of an Hebrew race to the rank of senators and consuls, is an event without a parallel in the long captivity of these miserable exiles<sup>94</sup>. In the time of Leo the ninth, a wealthy and learned Jew was converted to christianity; and honoured at his baptism with the name of his godfather, the reigning pope. The zeal and courage of Peter the son of Leo were signalised in the cause of Gregory the seventh, who entrusted his faithful adherent with the government of Adrian's mole, the tower of Crescentius, or, as it is now called, the castle of St. Angelo. Both the father and the son were the parents of a numerous progeny; their riches, the fruits of usury, were shared with the noblest families of the city; and so extensive was their alliance, that the grandson of the proselyte was exalted by the weight of his kindred to the throne of St. Peter. A majority of the clergy and people supported his cause; he reigned several years in the Vatican, and it is only the eloquence of St. Bernard, and the final triumph of Innocent the second, that has branded Anacletus with the epithet of antipope. After his defeat and death, the posterity of Leo is no longer conspicuous; and none will be found of the modern nobles ambitious of descending from a Jewish stock. It is not my design to enumerate the Roman families, which have failed at different periods, or those which are continued in different degrees of splendour to the present time<sup>95</sup>. The old consular line of the Frangipani dis-

C H A P
LXIX.

Family of Leo the Jew.

<sup>94</sup> The origin and adventures of this Jewish family are noticed by Pagi (Critica, tom. iv. p. 435. A. D. 1124, N<sup>o</sup> 3, 4.), who draws his information from the Chronographus Maurigniacensis, and Arnulphus Sagiensis de Schismate (in Muratori, Script. Ital. tom. iii. P. i. p. 425—432.). The fact must in some degree be true; yet I could wish that it had been coolly related, before it was turned into a reproach against the antipope.

<sup>95</sup> Muratori has given two dissertations (xli and xlii.) to the names, surnames, and families of Italy. Some nobles, who glory in their domestic fables, may be offended with his firm and temperate criticism; yet surely some ounces of pure gold are of more value than many pounds of base metal.

C H A P.
LXIX.

cover their name in the generous act of breaking or dividing bread in a time of famine; and such benevolence is more truly glorious than to have enclosed, with their allies the Corfi, a spacious quarter of the city in the chains of their fortifications: the Savelli, as it should seem a Sabine race, have maintained their original dignity; the obsolete surname of the Capizucchi is inscribed on the coins of the first senators; the Conti preserve the honour, without the estate, of the counts of Signia; and the Annibaldi must have been very ignorant, or very modest, if they had not descended from the Carthaginian hero<sup>96</sup>.

The Colonna,
na,

But among, perhaps above, the peers and princes of the city, I distinguish the rival houses of COLONNA and URSINI, whose private story is an essential part of the annals of modern Rome. I. The name and arms of Colonna<sup>97</sup> have been the theme of much doubtful etymology; nor have the orators and antiquarians overlooked either Trajan's pillar, or the columns of Hercules, or the pillar of Christ's flagellation, or the luminous column that guided the Israelites in the desert. Their first historical appearance in the year eleven hundred and four, attests the power and antiquity, while it explains the simple meaning, of the name. By the usurpation of Cava, the Colonna provoked the arms of Paschal the second; but they lawfully held in the Campagna of Rome, the hereditary fiefs of Zagarola

<sup>96</sup> The cardinal of St. George, in his poetical, or rather metrical, history of the election and coronation of Boniface VIII. (Muratori, Script. Ital. tom. iii. P. i. p. 641, &c.), describes the state and families of Rome at the coronation of Boniface VIII. (A. D. 1295):

Interea titulis redimitti sanguine et armis
Illustresque viri Romanâ a stirpe trahentes
Nomen in emeritis tantæ virtutis honores
Intulerant sese medios festumque colebant
Aurata fulgentes toga sociante catervâ.
Ex ipsis devota domus præstantis ab Ursâ
Fœciliæ, vultumque gerens demissius altum
Fœta Colonna jocos, necnon Sabellia mitis;

Stephanides senior, C. mitis, Anibalica proles,
Præfectusque urbis magnum sine viribus nomen.
(l. ii. c. 5. 100. p. 647, 648.).

The ancient statutes of Rome (l. iii. c. 59. p. 174, 175.) distinguish eleven families of barons, who are obliged to swear in concilio communi, before the senator, that they would not harbour or protect any malefactors, outlaws, &c.—a feeble security!

<sup>97</sup> It is pity that the Colonna themselves have not favoured the world with a complete and critical history of their illustrious house. I adhere to Muratori (Dissert. xlii. tom. iii. p. 647, 648.).

and

and Colonna; and the latter of these towns was probably adorned with some lofty pillar, the relic of a villa or temple<sup>98</sup>. They likewise possessed one moiety of the neighbouring city of Tusculum; a strong presumption of their descent from the counts of Tusculum, who in the tenth century were the tyrants of the apostolic see. According to their own and the public opinion, the primitive and remote source was derived from the banks of the Rhine<sup>99</sup>; and the sovereigns of Germany were not ashamed of a real or fabulous affinity with a noble race, which in the revolutions of seven hundred years has been often illustrated by merit, and always by fortune<sup>100</sup>. About the end of the thirteenth century, the most powerful branch was composed of an uncle and six brothers, all conspicuous in arms, or in the honours of the church. Of these, Peter was elected senator of Rome, introduced to the Capitol in a triumphant car, and hailed in some vain acclamations with the title of Cæsar; while John and Stephen were declared marquis of Ancona and count of Romagna, by Nicholas the fourth, a patron so partial to their family, that he has been delineated in satirical portraits, imprisoned as it were in a hollow pillar<sup>101</sup>. After his decease, their haughty behaviour provoked the displeasure of the most implacable of mankind. The two cardinals, the uncle and the nephew, denied the election of Boniface the eighth; and the Colonna were oppressed for a moment by his

C H A P.
LXIX.

<sup>98</sup> Pandolph. Pisan. in Vit. Paschal. II. in Muratori, Script. Ital. tom. iii. P. i. p. 335. The family has still great possessions in the Campagna of Rome; but they have alienated to the Rospigliosi this original fief of Colonna (Eschinard, p. 258, 259.).

<sup>99</sup> Te longinqua dedit tellus et pascua Rheni, says Petrarch; and, in 1417, a duke of Guelders and Juliers acknowledges (Lenfant, Hist. du Concile de Constance, tom. ii. p. 539.) his descent from the ancestors of Martin V. (Otho Colonna): but the royal author of the Memoirs of Brandenburg observes, that the sceptre in his arms has been confounded with the column. To maintain the Roman origin of the Colonna, it was ingeniously supposed (Diario di Monaldeschi, in the Script. Ital. tom. xii. p. 533.), that a cousin of the emperor Nero escaped from the city, and founded Mentz in Germany.

<sup>100</sup> I cannot overlook the Roman triumph or ovation of Marco Antonio Colonna, who had commanded the pope's galleys at the naval victory of Lepanto (Thuan. Hist. l. 7. tom. iii. p. 55, 56. Muret. Oratio x. Opp. tom. i. p. 180—190.).

<sup>101</sup> Muratori, Annali d'Italia, tom. x. p. 216. 220.

C H A P.
LXIX.

temporal and spiritual arms<sup>102</sup>. He proclaimed a crusade against his personal enemies; their estates were confiscated; their fortresses on either side of the Tyber were besieged by the troops of St. Peter and those of the rival nobles; and after the ruin of Palestrina or Præneste, their principal seat, the ground was marked with a ploughshare, the emblem of perpetual desolation. Degraded, banished, proscribed, the six brothers, in disguise and danger, wandered over Europe without renouncing the hope of deliverance and revenge. In this double hope, the French court was their surest asylum: they prompted and directed the enterprise of Philip; and I should praise their magnanimity, had they respected the misfortune and courage of the captive tyrant. His civil acts were annulled by the Roman people, who restored the honours and possessions of the Colonna; and some estimate may be formed of their wealth by their losses, of their losses by the damages of one hundred thousand gold florins which were granted them against the accomplices and heirs of the deceased pope. All the spiritual censures and disqualifications were abolished<sup>103</sup> by his prudent successors; and the fortune of the house was more firmly established by this transient hurricane. The boldness of Sciarra Colonna was signalised in the captivity of Boniface; and long afterwards in the coronation of Lewis of Bavaria; and by the gratitude of the emperor, the pillar in their arms was encircled with a royal crown. But the first of the family in fame and merit was the elder Stephen, whom Petrarch loved and esteemed as an hero superior <sup>102</sup> Petrarch's attachment to the Colonna, has authorised the abbé de Sade to expatiate on the state of the family in the fourteenth century, the persecution of Boniface VIII. the character of Stephen and his sons, their quarrels with the Ursini, &c. (Memoires sur Petrarque, tom. i. p. 98—110. 146—148. 174—176. 222—230. 275—280.) His criticism often rectifies the hearsay stories of Villani, and the errors of the less diligent moderns. I understand the branch of Stephen to be now extinct.

<sup>103</sup> Alexander III. had declared the Colonna who adhered to the emperor Frederic I. incapable of holding any ecclesiastical benefice (Villani, l. v. c. 1.); and the last flains of annual excommunication, were purified by Sixtus V. (Vita di Sisto V. tom. iii. p. 416.). Treason, sacrilege, and proscription, are often the best titles of ancient nobility.

to his own times, and not unworthy of ancient Rome. Persecution and exile displayed to the nations his abilities in peace and war; in his distress, he was an object, not of pity, but of reverence; the aspect of danger provoked him to avow his name and country: and when he was asked, "where is now your fortress?" he laid his hand on his heart, and answered, "here." He supported with the same virtue the return of prosperity; and, till the ruin of his declining age, the ancestors, the character, and the children of Stephen Colonna, exalted his dignity in the Roman republic, and at the court of Avignon. II. The Ursini migrated from Spoleto<sup>104</sup>; the sons of Ursus, as they are styled in the twelfth century, from some eminent person who is only known as the father of their race. But they were soon distinguished among the nobles of Rome, by the number and bravery of their kinsmen, the strength of their towers, the honours of the senate and sacred college, and the elevation of two popes, Celestin the third and Nicholas the third, of their name and lineage<sup>105</sup>. Their riches may be accused as an early abuse of nepotism: the estates of St. Peter were alienated in their favour by the liberal Celestin<sup>106</sup>; and Nicholas was ambitious for their sake to solicit the alliance of monarchs; to found new kingdoms in Lombardy and Tuscany; and to invest them with the perpetual office of senators of Rome. All that has been observed of the greatness of the Colonna, will likewise redound to the glory of

and Ursini.

<sup>104</sup> — Vallis te proxima misit
Appenninigenæ quæ præta virentia sylvæ
Spoletana metunt armenta greges protevi.

Monaldeschi (tom. xii. Script. Ital. p. 533.) gives the Ursini a French origin, which may be remotely true.

<sup>105</sup> In the metrical life of Celestin V. by the cardinal of St. George (Muratori, tom. iii. P. i. p. 613, &c.), we find a luminous, and not inelegant passage (l. i. c. 3. p. 203, &c.):

— genuit quem nobilis Ursæ (Ursi)
Progenies, Romana domus, veterataque magnis Fascibus in clero, pompasque experta senatûs, Bellorumque manû grandi stipata parentum

Cardineas apices necnon fastigia dudum Papatus iterata tenens.

Muratori (Dissert. xlii. tom. iii. p. . .) observes, that the first Ursini pontificate of Celestine III. was unknown: he is inclined to read Ursi progenies.

<sup>106</sup> Filii Ursi, quondam Cœlestini papæ nepotes, de bonis ecclesiæ Romanæ ditati (Vit. Innocent. III. in Muratori, Script. tom. iii. P. i.). The partial prodigality of Nicholas III. is more conspicuous in Villani and Muratori. Yet the Ursini would disdain the nephews of a modern pope.

the

C H A P.
LXIX.

Their hereditary feuds.

the Urfini, their constant and equal antagonists in the long hereditary feud, which distracted above two hundred and fifty years the ecclesiastical state. The jealousy of pre-eminence and power was the true ground of their quarrel; but as a specious badge of distinction, the Colonna embraced the name of Ghibelines and the party of the empire; the Urfini espoused the title of Guelphs and the cause of the church. The eagle and the keys were displayed in their adverse banners; and the two factions of Italy most furiously raged when the origin and nature of the dispute were long since forgotten<sup>107</sup>. After the retreat of the popes to Avignon, they disputed in arms the vacant republic: and the mischiefs of discord were perpetuated by the wretched compromise of electing each year two rival senators. By their private hostilities, the city and country were desolated, and the fluctuating balance inclined with their alternate success. But none of either family had fallen by the sword, till the most renowned champion of the Urfini was surpris'd and slain by the younger Stephen Colonna<sup>108</sup>. His triumph is stained with the reproach of violating the truce; their defeat was basely avenged by the assassination, before the church door, of an innocent boy and his two servants. Yet the victorious Colonna, with an annual colleague, was declared senator of Rome during the term of five years. And the muse of Petrarch inspired a wish, a hope, a prediction, that the generous youth, the son of his venerable hero, would restore Rome and Italy to their pristine glory; that his justice would extirpate the wolves and lions, the serpents and bears, who laboured to subvert the eternal basis of the marble COLUMN<sup>109</sup>.

<sup>107</sup> In his list Dissertation on the Italian Antiquities, Muratori explains the factions of the Guelphs and Ghibelines.

<sup>108</sup> Petrarch (tom. i. p. 222—230.) has celebrated this victory according to the Colonna; but two contemporaries, a Florentine (Giovanni Villani, l. x. c. 220.), and a Roman (Ludovico Monaldeschi, p. 533, 534.), are less favourable to their arms.

<sup>109</sup> The abbé de Sade (tom. i. Notes, p. 61—66.) has applied the vith Canzone of Petrarch, Sfırto Gentil, &c. to Stephen Colonna the younger:

O! lupo, leoni, aquile e serpi
Ad una gran maimorosa colonna
Fanno noja fivente e à te danno.

C H A P. LXX.

Character and Coronation of Petrarch.—Restoration of the Freedom and Government of Rome by the Tribune Rienzi.—His Virtues and Vices, his Expulsion and Death.—Return of the Popes from Avignon.—Great Schism of the West.—Re-union of the Latin Church.—Last Struggles of Roman Liberty.—Statutes of Rome.—Final Settlement of the Ecclesiastical State.

IN the apprehension of modern times, Petrarch<sup>1</sup> is the Italian songster of Laura and love. In the harmony of his Tuscan rhymes, Italy applauds, or rather adores, the father of her lyric poetry: and his verse, or at least his name, is repeated by the enthusiasm, or affectation, of amorous sensibility. Whatever may be the private taste of a stranger, his slight and superficial knowledge should humbly acquiesce in the taste of a learned nation: yet I may hope or presume, that the Italians do not compare the tedious uniformity of sonnets and elegies, with the sublime compositions of their epic muse, the original wildness of Dante, the regular beauties of Tasso, and the boundless variety of the incomparable Ariosto. The merits of the lover, I am still less qualified to appreciate: nor am I deeply interested in a metaphysical passion for a nymph so shadowy, that her existence has been ques-

C H A P.
LXX.

Petrarch,
A. D. 1304,
June 19—
A. D. 1374,
July 19.

<sup>1</sup> The Memoires sur la Vie de François Petrarque (Amsterdam, 1764, 1767. 3 vols. in 4<sup>to</sup>), form a copious, original, and entertaining work, a labour of love, composed from the accurate study of Petrarch and his contemporaries; but the hero is too often lost in the general history of the age, and the author too often languishes in the affectation of politeness and gallantry. In the preface to his first volume, he enumerates and weighs twenty Italian biographers, who have professedly treated of the same subject.

C H A P.
LXX.

tioned<sup>2</sup>; for a matron so prolific<sup>3</sup>, that she was delivered of eleven legitimate children<sup>4</sup>, while her amorous swain fished and sung at the fountain of Vacluse<sup>5</sup>. But in the eyes of Petrarch, and those of his graver contemporaries, his love was a sin, and Italian verse a frivolous amusement. His Latin works of philosophy, poetry, and eloquence, established his serious reputation, which was soon diffused from Avignon over France and Italy: his friends and disciples were multiplied in every city; and if the ponderous volume of his writings<sup>6</sup> be now abandoned to a long repose, our gratitude must applaud the man, who by precept and example revived the spirit and study of the Augustan age. From his earliest youth, Petrarch aspired to the poetic crown. The academical honours of the three faculties had introduced a royal degree of master or doctor in the art of poetry<sup>7</sup>; and the title of poet-laureat, which custom, rather than vanity, perpetuates in the English court<sup>8</sup>, was first invented

<sup>2</sup> The allegorical interpretation prevailed in the xvth century; but the wise commentators were not agreed whether they should understand by Laura, religion, or virtue, or the blessed Virgin, or —. See the prefaces to the 1st and 2<sup>d</sup> volume.

<sup>3</sup> Laure de Noves, born about the year 1307, was married in January 1325 to Hugues de Sade, a noble citizen of Avignon, whose jealousy was not the effect of love, since he married a second wife within seven months of her death, which happened the 6th of April 1348, precisely one-and-twenty years after Petrarch had seen and loved her.

<sup>4</sup> Corpus crebris partibus exhaustum; from one of these is issued, in the tenth degree, the abbé de Sade, the fond and grateful biographer of Petrarch; and this domestic motive most probably suggested the idea of his work, and urged him to enquire into every circumstance that could affect the history and character of his grandmother (see particularly tom. i. p. 122—133. notes, p. 7—58. tom. ii. p. 455—495. not. p. 76—82.).

<sup>5</sup> Vacluse, so familiar to our English

travellers, is described from the writings of Petrarch, and the local knowledge of his biographer (Memoires, tom. i. p. 340—359.). It was, in truth, the retreat of an hermit; and the moderns are much mistaken, if they place Laura and an happy lover in the grotto.

<sup>6</sup> Of 1250 pages, in a close print, at Basil in the xvith century, but without the date of the year. The abbé de Sade calls aloud for a new edition of Petrarch's Latin works; but I much doubt whether it would redound to the profit of the bookseller, or the amusement of the public.

<sup>7</sup> Consult Selden's Titles of Honour, in his works (vol. iii. p. 457—466.). An hundred years before Petrarch, St. Francis received the visit of a poet, qui ab imperatore fuerat coronatus et exinde rex versuum dictus.

<sup>8</sup> From Augustus to Louis, the muse has too often been false and venal: but I much doubt whether any age or court can produce a similar establishment of a stipendiary poet, who in every reign, and at all events, is bound to furnish twice a year a measure of praise vented by the Cæsars of Germany. In the musical games of antiquity, a prize was bestowed on the victor<sup>9</sup>: the belief that Virgil and Horace had been crowned in the Capitol, inflamed the emulation of a Latin bard<sup>10</sup>; and the laurel<sup>11</sup> was endeared to the lover by a verbal resemblance with the name of his mistress. The value of either object was enhanced by the difficulties of the pursuit; and if the virtue or prudence of Laura was inexorable<sup>12</sup>, he enjoyed, and might boast of enjoying, the nymph of poetry. His vanity was not of the most delicate kind, since he applauds the success of his own labours; his name was popular; his friends were active; the open or secret opposition of envy and prejudice, was surmounted by the dexterity of patient merit. In the thirty-sixth year of his age, he was solicited to accept the object of his wishes: and on the same day, in the solitude of Vaucluse, he received a similar and solemn invitation from the senate of Rome and the university of Paris. The learning of a theological school, and the ignorance of a lawless city, were alike unqualified to bestow the ideal though immortal wreath which genius may obtain from the free applause of the praise and verse, such as may be sung in the chapel, and, I believe, in the presence, of the sovereign. I speak the more freely, as the best time for abolishing this ridiculous custom, is while the prince is a man of virtue, and the poet a man of genius.

<sup>9</sup> Isocrates (in Panegyrico, tom. i. p. 116, 117. edit. Battie, Cantab. 1729) claims for his native Athens the glory of first instituting and recommending the αγωνα και τα αθλα μουσικα μη μόνον τῶν ποιητων και ζυγμων, αλλα και λογων και γραμματος. The example of the Panathenæa was imitated at Delphi; but the Olympic games were ignorant of a musical crown, till it was extorted by the vain tyranny of Nero (Sueton. in Nerone, c. 23.; Philostrat. apud Casaubon ad locum; Dion Cassius, or Xiphilius, l. lxxiii. p. 1032. 1041. Potter's Greek Antiquities, vol. i. p. 445. 450.).

<sup>10</sup> The Capitoline games (certamen quinquennale, musicum, equestre, gymnicum), were instituted by Domitian (Sueton. c. 4.) in the year of Christ 86 (Censorin. de Die Natali, c. 18. p. 100. edit. Havercamp), and were not abolished in the ivth century (Ausonius de Professoribus Burdegal. V.). If the crown were given to superior merit, the exclusion of Statius (Capitolia nostræ inficiata lyræ, Silv. l. iii. v. 31.) may do honour to the games of the Capitol; but the Latin poets who lived before Domitian were crowned only in the public opinion.

<sup>11</sup> Petrarch and the senators of Rome were ignorant that the laurel was not the Capitoline, but the Delphic, crown (Plin. Hist. Natur. xv. 39. Hist. Critique de la Republique des Lettres, tom. i. p. 150—220.). The victors in the Capitol were crowned with a garland of oak leaves (Martial, l. iv. epigram 54.).

<sup>12</sup> The pious grandson of Laura has laboured, and not without success, to vindicate her immaculate chastity against the censures of the grave and the sneers of the profane (tom. ii. notes, p. 76—82.).

C H A P.
LXX.

His poetic coronation at Rome,
A. D. 1341,
April 8.

public and of posterity : but the candidate dismissed this troublesome reflection, and, after some moments of complacency and suspense, preferred the summons of the metropolis of the world.

The ceremony of his coronation<sup>13</sup> was performed in the Capitol, by his friend and patron the supreme magistrate of the republic. Twelve patrician youths were arrayed in scarlet ; six representatives of the most illustrious families, in green robes, with garlands of flowers, accompanied the procession ; in the midst of the princes and nobles, the senator, count of Anguillara, a kinsman of the Colonna, assumed his throne ; and at the voice of an herald Petrarch arose. After discoursing on a text of Virgil, and thrice repeating his vows for the prosperity of Rome, he knelt before the throne and received from the senator a laurel crown, with a more precious declaration, “ This is the reward of merit.” The people shouted, “ Long life “ to the Capitol and the poet !” A sonnet in praise of Rome was accepted as the effusion of genius and gratitude ; and after the whole procession had visited the Vatican, the profane wreath was suspended before the shrine of St. Peter. In the act or diploma<sup>14</sup> which was presented to Petrarch, the title and prerogatives of poet laureat are revived in the Capitol, after the lapse of thirteen hundred years ; and he receives the perpetual privilege of wearing, at his choice, a crown of laurel, ivy, or myrtle, of assuming the poetic habit, and of teaching, disputing, interpreting, and composing, in all places whatsoever, and on all subjects of literature. The grant was ratified by the authority of the senate and people ; and the character of citizen was the recompense of his affection for the Roman name. They did him honour, but they did him justice. In the familiar society of Cicero and Livy, he had imbibed the ideas of an ancient without mixing in this authentic narrative the more recent fables of Sannuccio Delbene.

<sup>13</sup> The whole process of Petrarch's coronation is accurately described by the abbé de Sade (tom. i. p. 425—435. tom. ii. p. 1—6. notes, p. 1—13.) from his own writings, and the Roman Diary of Ludovico Monaldeschi,

<sup>14</sup> The original act is printed among the Pieces Justificatives in the Memoires sur Petrarque, tom. iii. p. 50—53.

patriot; and his ardent fancy kindled every idea to a sentiment, and every sentiment to a passion. The aspect of the seven hills and their majestic ruins, confirmed these lively impressions; and he loved a country by whose liberal spirit he had been crowned and adopted. The poverty and debasement of Rome excited the indignation and pity of her grateful son: he dissembled the faults of his fellow-citizens; applauded with partial fondness the last of their heroes and matrons; and in the remembrance of the past, in the hope of the future, was pleased to forget the miseries of the present time. Rome was still the lawful mistress of the world: the pope and the emperor, her bishop and general, had abdicated their station by an inglorious retreat to the Rhône and the Danube; but if she could resume her virtue, the republic might again vindicate her liberty and dominion. Amidst the indulgence of enthusiasm and eloquence<sup>15</sup>, Petrarch, Italy, and Europe, were astonished by a revolution which realized for a moment his most splendid visions. The rise and fall of the tribune Rienzi will occupy the following pages<sup>16</sup>: the subject is interesting, the materials are rich, and the glance of a patriot-bard<sup>17</sup> will sometimes vivify the copious, but simple, narrative of the Florentine<sup>18</sup>, and more especially of the Roman<sup>19</sup>, historian.

C H A P.
LXX.

In

<sup>15</sup> To find the proofs of his enthusiasm for Rome, I need only request that the reader would open, by chance, either Petrarch, or his French biographer. The latter has described the poet's first visit to Rome (tom. i. p. 323—335.). But in the place of much idle rhetoric and morality, Petrarch might have amused the present and future age with an original account of the city and his coronation.

<sup>16</sup> It has been treated by the pen of a Jesuit, the P. du Cerçeau, whose posthumous work (Conjuraton de Nicolas Gabrini, dit de Rienzi Tyran de Rome, en 1347) was published at Paris 1748, in 12<sup>mo</sup>. I am indebted to him for some facts and documents in John Hocsemius, canon of Liege, a contemporary historian (Fabricius, Bibliot. Latin. med. Ævi, tom. iii. p. 273. tom. iv. p. 85.).

<sup>17</sup> The abbé de Sade, who so freely expatiates on the history of the sixteenth century, might treat, as his proper subject, a revolution in which the heart of Petrarch was so deeply engaged (Memoires, tom. ii. p. 50, 51. 320—417. notes, p. 70—76. tom. iii. p. 221—243. 366—375.). Not an idea or a fact in the writings of Petrarch has probably escaped him.

<sup>18</sup> Giovanni Villani, l. xii. c. 89. 104. in Muratori, Rerum Italicarum Scriptores, tom. xiii. p. 969, 970. 981—983.

<sup>19</sup> In his 11th volume of Italian Antiquities (p. 249—548.), Muratori has inserted the Fragmenta Historiæ Romanæ ab Anno 1327

C. H. A. P.
LXX.

Birth, character, and patriotic delirium of Rienzi.

In a quarter of the city which was inhabited only by mechanics and Jews, the marriage of an innkeeper and a washerwoman produced the future deliverer of Rome<sup>20</sup>. From such parents Nicholas Rienzi Gabrini could inherit neither dignity nor fortune; and the gift of a liberal education, which they painfully bestowed, was the cause of his glory and untimely end. The study of history and eloquence, the writings of Cicero, Seneca, Livy, Cæsar, and Valerius Maximus, elevated above his equals and contemporaries the genius of the young plebeian: he perused with indefatigable diligence the manuscripts and marbles of antiquity; loved to dispense his knowledge in familiar language; and was often provoked to exclaim, "Where are now these Romans? their virtue, their justice, their power? why was I not born in those happy times?" When the republic addressed to the throne of Avignon an embassy of the three orders, the spirit and eloquence of Rienzi recommended him to a place among the thirteen deputies of the commons. The orator had the honour of haranguing pope Clement the sixth, and the satisfaction of conversing with Petrarch, a congenial mind: but his aspiring hopes were chilled by disgrace and poverty; and usque ad Annum 1354, in the original dialect of Rome or Naples in the xivth century, and a Latin version for the benefit of strangers. It contains the most particular and authentic life of Cola (Nicholas) di Rienzi; which had been printed at Bracciano 1627, in 4<sup>to</sup>, under the name of Tomaso Fortifiocca, who is only mentioned in this work as having been punished by the tribune for forgery. Human nature is scarcely capable of such sublime or stupid impartiality: but whosoever is the author of these Fragments, he wrote on the spot and at the time, and paints, without design or art, the manners of Rome and the character of the tribune.

<sup>20</sup> The first and splendid period of Rienzi, his tribunitian government, is contained in the xviith chapter of the Fragments (p. 399—479.), which, in the new division, forms the ii<sup>d</sup> book of the history in xxxviii smaller chapters or sections.

<sup>21</sup> The reader may be pleased with a specimen of the original idiom: Fò da soa juventutine nutricato di latte de eloquentia, bono gramatico, migliore rettuorico, autorista bravo. Deh como et quanto era veloce lettore! moito ufava Tito Livio, Seneca, et Tullio, et Balerio Massimo, moito li dilettava le magnificentie di Julio Cesare raccontare. Tutta la die se speculava negli<sup>3</sup> intagli di marmo lequali iaccio intorno Roma. Non era altri che esso, che sapeffe lejere li antichi pataffii. Tutte scritte antiche velgarizzava; queste fure di marmo justamente interpretava. Oh come spesso diceva, "Dove fuoco quelli bueni Romani? dove ene loro somma justitia? poleramme trovare in tempo che quelli furiano!"

the

the patriot was reduced to a single garment and the charity of the hospital. From this misery he was relieved by the sense of merit or the smile of favour; and the employment of apostolic notary afforded him a daily stipend of five gold florins, a more honourable and extensive connection, and the right of contrasting, both in words and actions, his own integrity with the vices of the state. The eloquence of Rienzi was prompt and persuasive: the multitude is always prone to envy and censure: he was stimulated by the loss of a brother and the impunity of the assassins; nor was it possible to excuse or exaggerate the public calamities. The blessings of peace and justice, for which civil society has been instituted, were banished from Rome: the jealous citizens, who might have endured every personal or pecuniary injury, were most deeply wounded in the dishonour of their wives and daughters<sup>22</sup>: they were equally oppressed by the arrogance of the nobles and the corruption of the magistrates; and the abuse of arms or of laws was the only circumstance that distinguished the lions, from the dogs and serpents, of the Capitol. These allegorical emblems were variously repeated in the pictures which Rienzi exhibited in the streets and churches; and while the spectators gazed with curious wonder, the bold and ready orator unfolded the meaning, applied the satire, inflamed their passions, and announced a distant hope of comfort and deliverance. The privileges of Rome, her eternal sovereignty over her princes and provinces, was the theme of his public and private discourse; and a monument of servitude became in his hands a title and incentive of liberty. The decree of the senate, which granted the most ample prerogatives to the emperor Vespasian, had been inscribed on a copper-plate still extant in the choir of the church of St. John Lateran<sup>23</sup>. A numerous assembly of nobles and plebeians

C H A P.
LXX.

<sup>22</sup> Petrarch compares the jealousy of the Romans, with the easy temper of the husbands of Avignon (Memoires, tom. i. p. 330.).

<sup>23</sup> The fragments of the Lex Regia may be found in the Inscriptions of Gruter, tom. i. p. 242. and at the end of the Tacitus of Ernesti, with some learned notes of the editor, tom. ii.

C H A P.
LXX.

was invited to this political lecture, and a convenient theatre was erected for their reception. The notary appeared, in a magnificent and mysterious habit, explained the inscription by a version and commentary<sup>24</sup>, and descanted with eloquence and zeal on the ancient glories of the senate and people, from whom all legal authority was derived. The supine ignorance of the nobles was incapable of discerning the serious tendency of such representations: they might sometimes chastise with words and blows the plebeian reformer; but he was often suffered in the Colonna palace to amuse the company with his threats and predictions; and the modern Brutus<sup>25</sup> was concealed under the mask of folly and the character of a buffoon. While they indulged their contempt, the restoration of the good estate, his favourite expression, was entertained among the people as a desirable, a possible, and at length as an approaching, event; and while all had the disposition to applaud, some had the courage to assist, their promised deliverer.

He assumes the government of Rome,
A. D. 1347,
May 20;

A prophecy, or rather a summons, affixed on the church door of St. George, was the first public evidence of his designs; a nocturnal assembly of an hundred citizens on mount Aventine, the first step to their execution. After an oath of secrecy and aid, he represented to the conspirators the importance and facility of their enterprise; that the nobles, without union or resources, were strong only in the fear of their imaginary strength; that all power, as well as right, was in the hands of the people; that the revenues of the apostolical chamber might relieve the public distress; and that the pope himself would approve their victory over the common

<sup>24</sup> I cannot overlook a stupendous and laughable blunder of Rienzi. The Lex Regia empowers Vespasian to enlarge the Pomærium, a word familiar to every antiquary. It was not so to the tribune; he confounds it with pomarium an orchard, translates lo Jardino de Roma cioene Italia, and is copied by the less excusable ignorance of the Latin translator (p. 406.) and the French historian

(p. 33.). Even the learning of Muratori has slumbered over the passage.

<sup>25</sup> Priori (Bruto) tamen similiter, juvenis uterque, longe ingenio quam cujus simulationem induerat, ut sub hoc obtentu liberator ille P. R. aperiretur tempore suo.... Ille regibus, hic tyrannis contemptus (Opp. p. 536).

enemies of government and freedom. After securing a faithful band to protect his first declaration, he proclaimed through the city, by sound of trumpet, that on the evening of the following day all persons should assemble without arms, before the church of St. Angelo, to provide for the re-establishment of the good estate. The whole night was employed in the celebration of thirty masses of the Holy Ghost; and in the morning, Rienzi, bareheaded, but in complete armour, issued from the church, encompassed by the hundred conspirators. The pope's vicar, the simple bishop of Orvieto, who had been persuaded to sustain a part in this singular ceremony, marched on his right-hand; and three great standards were borne aloft as the emblems of their design. In the first, the banner of liberty, Rome was seated on two lions, with a palm in one hand and a globe in the other: St. Paul, with a drawn sword, was delineated in the banner of justice; and in the third, St. Peter held the keys of concord and peace. Rienzi was encouraged by the presence and applause of an innumerable crowd, who understood little, and hoped much; and the procession slowly rolled forwards from the castle of St. Angelo to the Capitol. His triumph was disturbed by some secret emotions which he laboured to suppress: he ascended without opposition, and with seeming confidence, the citadel of the republic; harangued the people from the balcony; and received the most flattering confirmation of his acts and laws. The nobles, as if destitute of arms and counsels, beheld in silent consternation this strange revolution; and the moment had been prudently chosen, when the most formidable, Stephen Colonna, was absent from the city. On the first rumour, he returned to his palace, affected to despise this plebeian tumult, and declared to the messenger of Rienzi, that at his leisure he would cast the madman from the windows of the Capitol. The great bell instantly rang an alarm, and so rapid was the tide, so urgent was the danger, that Colonna escaped with precipitation to the suburb of St. Laurence: from thence, after a mo-

C H A P.
LXX.

ment's

C H A P.
LXX.

ment's refreshment, he continued the same speedy career till he reached in safety his castle of Palestrina; lamenting his own imprudence, which had not trampled the spark of this mighty conflagration. A general and peremptory order was issued from the Capitol to all the nobles, that they should peaceably retire to their estates: they obeyed; and their departure secured the tranquillity of the free and obedient citizens of Rome.

with the title and office of tribune.

But such voluntary obedience evaporates with the first transports of zeal; and Rienzi felt the importance of justifying his usurpation by a regular form and a legal title. At his own choice, the Roman people would have displayed their attachment and authority, by lavishing on his head the names of senator or consul, of king or emperor: he preferred the ancient and modest appellation of tribune; the protection of the commons was the essence of that sacred office; and they were ignorant, that it had never been invested with any share in the legislative or executive powers of the republic. In this character, and with the consent of the Romans, the tribune enacted the most salutary laws for the restoration and maintenance of the good estate. By the first he fulfils the wish of honesty and inexperience, that no civil suit should be protracted beyond the term of fifteen days. The danger of frequent perjury might justify the pronouncing against a false accuser the same penalty which his evidence would have inflicted: the disorders of the times might compel the legislator to punish every homicide with death, and every injury with equal retaliation. But the execution of justice was hopeless till he had previously abolished the tyranny of the nobles. It was formally provided, that none, except the supreme magistrate, should possess or command the gates, bridges, or towers, of the state: that no private garrisons should be introduced into the towns or castles of the Roman territory; that none should bear arms or presume to fortify their houses in the city or country; that the barons should be responsible for the safety of the highways and the free passage

Laws of the good estate.

of provisions; and that the protection of malefactors and robbers should be expiated by a fine of a thousand marks of silver. But these regulations would have been impotent and nugatory; had not the licentious nobles been awed by the sword of the civil power. A sudden alarm from the bell of the Capitol, could still summon to the standard above twenty thousand volunteers: the support of the tribune and the laws required a more regular and permanent force. In each harbour of the coast, a vessel was stationed for the assurance of commerce; a standing militia of three hundred and sixty horse and thirteen hundred foot was levied, cloathed, and paid in the thirteen quarters of the city: and the spirit of a commonwealth may be traced in the grateful allowance of one hundred florins, or pounds, to the heirs of every soldier who lost his life in the service of his country. For the maintenance of the public defence, for the establishment of granaries, for the relief of widows, orphans, and indigent convents, Rienzi applied, without fear of sacrilege, the revenues of the apostolic chamber: the three branches of hearth-money, the salt-duty, and the customs, were each of the annual produce of one hundred thousand florins<sup>26</sup>; and scandalous were the abuses, if in four or five months the amount of the salt-duty could be trebled by his judicious œconomy. After thus restoring the forces and finances of the republic, the tribune recalled the nobles from their solitary independence; required their personal appearance in the Capitol; and imposed an oath, of allegiance to the new government, and of submission to the laws of the good estate. Apprehensive for their safety, but still more apprehensive of the danger of a refusal, the princes and barons returned to their houses at Rome in the garb of simple and peaceful citizens: the Colonna and Urfini, the Savelli

<sup>26</sup> In one MS. I read (l. ii. c. 4. p. 409.) perfumante quatro folli, in another quatro forini, an important variety, since the florin was worth ten Roman folidi (Muratori, dissert. xviii.). The former reading would give us a population of 25,000, the latter of 250,000 families; and I much fear, that the former is more consistent with the decay of Rome and her territory.

C H A P. and Frangipani, were confounded before the tribunal of a plebeian, LXX. of the vile buffoon whom they had so often derided, and their disgrace was aggravated by the indignation which they vainly struggled to disguise. The same oath was successively pronounced by the several orders of society, the clergy and gentlemen, the judges and notaries, the merchants and artificers, and the gradual descent was marked by the increase of sincerity and zeal. They swore to live and die with the republic and the church, whose interest was artfully united by the nominal association of the bishop of Orvieto, the pope's vicar, to the office of tribune. It was the boast of Rienzi, that he had delivered the throne and patrimony of St. Peter from a rebellious aristocracy; and Clement the sixth, who rejoiced in its fall, affected to believe the professions, to applaud the merits, and to confirm the title, of his trusty servant. The speech, perhaps the mind, of the tribune, was inspired with a lively regard for the purity of the faith; he insinuated his claim to a supernatural mission from the Holy Ghost: enforced by an heavy forfeiture the annual duty of confession and communion; and strictly guarded the spiritual as well as temporal welfare of his faithful people<sup>27</sup>.

Freedom and prosperity of the Roman republic.

Never perhaps has the energy and effect of a single mind been more remarkably felt than in the sudden, though transient, reformation of Rome by the tribune Rienzi. A den of robbers was converted to the discipline of a camp or convent: patient to hear, swift to redress, inexorable to punish, his tribunal was always accessible to the poor and stranger; nor could birth, or dignity, or the immunities of the church, protect the offender or his accomplices. The privileged houses, the private sanctuaries in Rome, on which no officer of justice would presume to trespass, were abolished; and he applied the timber and iron of their barricades in the fortifications of the Capitol. The venerable father of the Colonna was exposed in his own palace to the double shame of being desirous, and of being unable, to protect a criminal. A mule, with a jar of oil, had been stolen near Capranica; and the lord, of the Ursini family, was condemned to restore the damage, and to discharge a fine of four hundred florins for his negligence in guarding the highways. Nor were the persons of the barons more inviolate than their lands or houses: and either from accident or design, the same impartial rigour was exercised against the heads of the adverse factions. Peter Agapet Colonna, who had himself been senator of Rome, was arrested in the street for injury or debt; and justice was appeased by the tardy execution of Martin Ursini, who, among his various acts of violence and rapine, had pillaged a shipwrecked vessel at the mouth of the Tyber<sup>28</sup>. His name, the purple of two cardinals, his uncles, a recent marriage, and a mortal disease, were disregarded by the inflexible tribune, who had chosen his victim. The public officers dragged him from his palace and nuptial bed: his trial was short and satisfactory: the bell of the Capitol convened the people: stripped of his mantle, on his knees, with his hands bound behind his back, he heard the sentence of death; and after a brief confession, Ursini was led away to the gallows. After such an example, none who were conscious of guilt could hope for impunity, and the flight of the wicked, the licentious, and the idle, soon purified the city and territory of Rome. In this time (says the historian) the woods began to rejoice that they were no longer infested with robbers;

<sup>27</sup> Hocsemius, p. 398. apud du Cerçeau, historian (whom for brevity I shall name) Hist. de Rienzi, p. 194. The fifteen tribunitian laws may be found in the Roman Fortificocca, l. ii. c. 4.

C H A P.
LXX.

<sup>28</sup> Fortificca, l. ii. c. 11. From the account of this shipwreck, we learn some circumstances of the trade and navigation of the age. 1. The ship was built and freighted at Naples for the ports of Marseilles and Avignon. 2. The sailors were of Naples and the isle of CEnaria, less skilful than those of Sicily and Genoa. 3. The navigation from Marseilles was a coasting voyage to the mouth of the Tyber, where they took shelter in a storm, but, instead of finding the current, unfortunately ran on a shoal: the vessel was stranded, the mariners escaped. 4. The cargo, which was pillaged, consisted of the revenue of Provence for the royal treasury, many bags of pepper and cinnamon, and bales of French cloth, to the value of 20,000 florins: a rich prize.

C H A P.
LXX.

the oxen began to plow; the pilgrims visited the sanctuaries; the roads and inns were replenished with travellers; trade, plenty, and good faith were restored in the markets; and a purse of gold might be exposed without danger in the midst of the highway. As soon as the life and property of the subject are secure, the labours and rewards of industry spontaneously revive: Rome was still the metropolis of the Christian world; and the fame and fortunes of the tribune were diffused in every country by the strangers who had enjoyed the blessings of his government.

The tribune is respected in Italy, &c.

The deliverance of his country inspired Rienzi with a vast, and perhaps visionary, idea of uniting Italy in a great fœderative republic, of which Rome should be the ancient and lawful head, and the free cities and princes the members and associates. His pen was not less eloquent than his tongue; and his numerous epistles were delivered to swift and trusty messengers. On foot, with a white wand in their hand, they traversed the forests and mountains; enjoyed, in the most hostile states, the sacred security of ambassadors; and reported, in the style of flattery or truth, that the highways along their passage were lined with kneeling multitudes, who implored Heaven for the success of their undertaking. Could passion have listened to reason; could private interest have yielded to the public welfare; the supreme tribunal and confederate union of the Italian republic might have healed their intestine discord, and closed the Alps against the Barbarians of the North. But the propitious season had elapsed; and if Venice, Florence, Sienna, Perugia, and many inferior cities, offered their lives and fortunes to the good estate, the tyrants of Lombardy and Tuscany must despise, or hate, the plebeian author of a free constitution. From them, however, and from every part of Italy, the tribune received the most friendly and respectful answers: they were followed by the ambassadors of the princes and republics; and in this foreign conflux, on all the occasions of pleasure or business, the low-born notary could assume the familiar or majestic courtesy of a sovereign<sup>29</sup>. The most glorious circumstance of his reign was an appeal to his justice from Lewis king of Hungary, who complained, that his brother, and her husband, had been perfidiously strangled by Jane queen of Naples<sup>30</sup>: her guilt or innocence was pleaded in a solemn trial at Rome; but after hearing the advocates<sup>31</sup>, the tribune adjourned this weighty and invidious cause, which was soon determined by the sword of the Hungarian. Beyond the Alps, more especially at Avignon, the revolution was the theme of curiosity, wonder, and applause. Petrarch had been the private friend, perhaps the secret counsellor, of Rienzi: his writings breathe the most ardent spirit of patriotism and joy; and all respect for the pope, all gratitude for the Colonna, was lost in the superior duties of a Roman citizen. The poet-laureat of the Capitol maintains the act, applauds the hero, and mingles with some apprehension and advice the most lofty hopes of the permanent and rising greatness of the republic<sup>32</sup>.

C H A P.
LXX.

and celebrated by Petrarch.

While Petrarch indulged these prophetic visions, the Roman hero was fast declining from the meridian of fame and power; and the people, who had gazed with astonishment on the ascending meteor, began to mark the irregularity of its course, and the vicissitudes of light and obscurity. More eloquent than judicious, more enterprising than resolute, the faculties of Rienzi were not balanced by

His vices and follies.

<sup>29</sup> It was thus that Oliver Cromwell's old acquaintance, who remembered his vulgar and ungracious entrance into the House of Commons, were astonished at the ease and majesty of the protector on his throne (see Harris's Life of Cromwell, p. 27—34. from Clarendon, Warwick, Whitelocke, Waller, &c.). The consciousness of merit and power, will sometimes elevate the manners to the station.

<sup>30</sup> See the causes, circumstances, and effects of the death of Andrew, in Giannone (tom. iii. l. xxiii, p. 220—229.), and the Life of Petrarch (Memoires, tom. ii. p. 143—148. 245—250. 375—379. notes, p. 21—37.). The Abbe de Sade wishes to extenuate her guilt.

<sup>31</sup> The advocate who pleaded against Jane, could add nothing to the logical force and brevity of his master's epistle. Johanna! inordinata vita præcedens, retentio potestatis in regno, neglecta vindicta, vir alter susceptus, et excusatio subsequens, necis viri tui te probant fuisse participem et consortem. Jane of Naples, and Mary of Scotland, have a singular conformity.

<sup>32</sup> See the Epistola Hortatoria de Capesfenda Republica, from Petrarch to Nicholas Rienzi (Opp. p. 535—540.), and the 1st eclogue or pastoral, a perpetual and obscure allegory.

C H A P.
LXX.

cool and commanding reason: he magnified in a tenfold proportion the objects of hope and fear; and prudence, which could not have erected, did not presume to fortify, his throne. In the blaze of prosperity, his virtues were insensibly tinged with the adjacent vices; justice with cruelty, liberality with profusion, and the desire of fame with puerile and ostentatious vanity. He might have learned, that the ancient tribunes, so strong and sacred in the public opinion, were not distinguished in style, habit, or appearance, from an ordinary plebeian<sup>33</sup>; and that as often as they visited the city on foot, a single viator, or beadle, attended the exercise of their office. The Gracchi would have frowned or smiled, could they have read the sonorous titles and epithets of their successor, "NICHOLAS, "SEVERE AND MERCIFUL; DELIVERER OF ROME; DEFENDER "OF ITALY"<sup>34</sup>; FRIEND OF MANKIND, AND OF LIBERTY, PEACE, "AND JUSTICE; TRIBUNE AUGUST:" his theatrical pageants had prepared the revolution; but Rienzi abused, in luxury and pride, the political maxim of speaking to the eyes, as well as the understanding, of the multitude. From nature he had received the gift of an handsome person<sup>35</sup>, till it was swelled and disfigured by intemperance; and his propensity to laughter was corrected in the magistrate by the affectation of gravity and sternness. He was clothed, at least on public occasions, in a party-coloured robe of velvet or fatten, lined with fur, and embroidered with gold: the rod of justice, which <sup>33</sup> In his Roman Questions, Pletarch (Opuscul. tom. i. p. 505, 506. edit. Græc. Hen. Steph.) states, on the most constitutional principles, the simple greatness of the tribunes, who were not properly magistrates, but a check on magistracy. It was their duty and interest ὁμοιοῦσθαι σχήματι, καὶ φόρῃ καὶ διαίτη τοῖς ἐπιτυγχάνουσι τῶν πολιτῶν... καταπαταίσσαι δὲ (a saying of C. Curio) καὶ μὴ σέβειν οὐκ αὖτὲν τῆ ἀρχῆς οὐκ αὖτὲν... οὐδὲ μάλῶν ἐκταταίνονται τῷ σώματι, τοσούτω μάλῶν αἰξίται τῆ δυνάμει, &c. Rienzi, and Petrarch himself, were incapable perhaps of reading a Greek philosopher; but they might have imbibed the same modest doctrines from their favourite Latins, Livy and Valerius Maximus.

<sup>34</sup> I could not express in English the forcible, though barbarous title of Zelator Italiae, which Rienzi assumed.

<sup>35</sup> Era bell' homo (l. ii. c. 1. p. 399.). It is remarkable, that the rifo farcatico of the Bracciano edition is wanting in the Roman MS. from which Muratori has given the text. In his second reign, when he is painted almost as a monster, Rienzi travea una ventresca tonna trionfale, a modo de uno Abbate Afiano, or Afimino (l. iii. c. 18. p. 523.).

he carried in his hand, was a sceptre of polished steel, crowned with a globe and cross of gold, and inclosing a small fragment of the true and holy wood. In his civil and religious processions through the city, he rode on a white steed, the symbol of royalty: the great banner of the republic, a sun with a circle of stars, a dove with an olive branch, was displayed over his head; a shower of gold and silver was scattered among the populace; fifty guards with halberds encompassed his person; a troop of horse preceded his march; and their tymbals and trumpets were of massy silver.

The ambition of the honours of chivalry<sup>36</sup> betrayed the meanness of his birth, and degraded the importance of his office; and the equestrian tribune was not less odious to the nobles, whom he adopted, than to the plebeians, whom he deserted. All that yet remained of treasure, or luxury, or art, was exhausted on that solemn day. Rienzi led the procession from the Capitol to the Lateran; the tediousness of the way was relieved with decorations and games; the ecclesiastical, civil, and military orders marched under their various banners; the Roman ladies attended his wife; and the ambassadors of Italy might loudly applaud, or secretly deride, the novelty of the pomp. In the evening, when they had reached the church and palace of Constantine, he thanked and dismissed the numerous assembly, with an invitation to the festival of the ensuing day. From the hands of a venerable knight he received the order of the Holy Ghost; the purification of the bath was a previous ceremony; but in no step of his life did Rienzi excite such scandal and censure as by the prophane use of the porphyry vase, in which Constantine (a foolish legend) had been healed of his leprosy by

C H A P.
LXX.

The pomp of his knighthood,
A. D. 1347,
August 1.

<sup>36</sup> Strange as it may seem, this festival was not without a precedent. In the year 1327, two barons, a Colonna, and an Ursini, the usual balance, were created knights by the Roman people: their bath was of rose-water, their beds were decked with royal magnificence, and they were served at St. Maria of Araceli in the Capitol, by the twenty-eight Lucumini. They afterwards received from Robert king of Naples the sword of chivalry (Hist. Rom. l. i. c. 2. p. 259.).

C H A P.
LXX.

poppe Sylvester<sup>37</sup>. With equal presumption the tribune watched or reposed within the consecrated precincts of the baptistery; and the failure of his state-bed was interpreted as an omen of his approaching downfall. At the hour of worship he shewed himself to the returning crowds in a majestic attitude, with a robe of purple, his sword, and gilt spurs; but the holy rites were soon interrupted by his levity and insolence. Rising from his throne, and advancing towards the congregation, he proclaimed in a loud voice: "We summon to our tribunal pope Clement; and command him to reside in his diocese of Rome: we also summon the sacred college of cardinals<sup>38</sup>. We again summon the two pretenders, Charles of Bohemia and Lewis of Bavaria, who style themselves emperors: we likewise summon all the electors of Germany, to inform us on what pretence they have usurped the inalienable right of the Roman people, the ancient and lawful sovereigns of the empire<sup>39</sup>." Unsheathing his maiden-sword, he thrice brandished it to the three parts of the world, and thrice repeated the extravagant declaration, "And this too is mine!" The pope's vicar, the bishop of Orvieto, attempted to check this career of folly; but his feeble protest was silenced by martial music; and instead of withdrawing from the assembly, he consented to dine with his brother tribune, at a table which had hitherto been reserved for the supreme pontiff. A banquet, such as the Cæsars had given, was prepared for the Romans. The apartments, porticoes, and courts, of the La-

<sup>37</sup> All parties believed in the leprosy and bath of Constantine (Petrarch, Epist. Famil. vi. 2.), and Rienzi justified his own conduct by observing to the court of Avignon, that a vase which had been used by a Pagan, could not be profaned by a pious Christian. Yet this crime is specified in the bill of excommunication (Hocsemius, apud du Cerceau, p. 189, 190.).

<sup>38</sup> This verbal summons of pope Clement VI. which rests on the authority of the Roman historian and a Vatican MS. is disputed by the biographer of Petrarch (tom. ii. not. p. 70—76.) with arguments rather of decency than of weight. The court of Avignon might not chuse to agitate this delicate question.

<sup>39</sup> The summons of the two rival emperors, a monument of freedom and folly, is extant in Hocsemius (Cerceau, p. 163—166.).

teran were spread with innumerable tables for either sex, and every condition; a stream of wine flowed from the nostrils of Constantine's brazen horse; no complaint, except of the scarcity of water, could be heard; and the licentiousness of the multitude was curbed by discipline and fear. A subsequent day was appointed for the coronation of Rienzi<sup>40</sup>; seven crowns of different leaves or metals were successively placed on his head by the most eminent of the Roman clergy; they represented the seven gifts of the Holy Ghost; and he still professed to imitate the example of the ancient tribunes. These extraordinary spectacles might deceive or flatter the people; and their own vanity was gratified in the vanity of their leader. But in his private life he soon deviated from the strict rule of frugality and abstinence; and the plebeians, who were awed by the splendour of the nobles, were provoked by the luxury of their equal. His wife, his son, his uncle (a barber in name and profession), exposed the contrast of vulgar manners and princely expence; and without acquiring the majesty, Rienzi degenerated into the vices, of a king.

C H A P.
LXX.

and coronation.

A simple citizen describes with pity, or perhaps with pleasure, the humiliation of the barons of Rome. "Bareheaded, their hands crossed on their breast, they stood with downcast looks in the presence of the tribune; and they trembled, good God, how they trembled!" As long as the yoke of Rienzi was that of justice and their country, their conscience forced them to esteem the man, whom pride and interest provoked them to hate: his extravagant conduct soon fortified their hatred by contempt; and they conceived the hope of subverting a power which was no longer so deeply rooted in the public confidence. The old animosity of the Colonna

Fear and hatred of the nobles of Rome.

<sup>40</sup> It is singular, that the Roman historian should have overlooked this sevenfold coronation, which is sufficiently proved by internal evidence, and the testimony of Hocfemius, and even of Rienzi (Cerçeau, p. 167 — 170. 229.).

<sup>41</sup> Puoi se faceva stare denante a se, mentre sedeva, li baroni tutti in piedi ritti co le vraccia piecate, e co li capucci tratti. Deh como stavano paurosi! (Hist. Rom. l. ii. c. 20. p. 439.) He saw them, and we see them.

C H A P.
LXX.

and Urfini was suspended for a moment by their common disgrace : they associated their wishes, and perhaps their designs ; an assassin was seized and tortured ; he accused the nobles ; and as soon as Rienzi deserved the fate, he adopted the suspicions and maxims, of a tyrant. On the same day, under various pretences, he invited to the Capitol his principal enemies, among whom were five members of the Urfini and three of the Colonna name. But instead of a council or a banquet, they found themselves prisoners under the sword of despotism or justice ; and the consciousness of innocence or guilt might inspire them with equal apprehensions of danger. At the sound of the great bell the people assembled ; they were arraigned for a conspiracy against the tribune's life ; and though some might sympathise in their distress, not a hand, nor a voice, was raised to rescue the first of the nobility from their impending doom. Their apparent boldness was prompted by despair ; they passed in separate chambers a sleepless and painful night ; and the venerable hero, Stephen Colonna, striking against the door of his prison, repeatedly urged his guards to deliver him by a speedy death from such ignominious servitude. In the morning they understood their sentence from the visit of a confessor and the tolling of the bell. The great hall of the Capitol had been decorated for the bloody scene with red and white hangings ; the countenance of the tribune was dark and severe ; the swords of the executioners were untheathed ; and the barons were interrupted in their dying speeches by the sound of trumpets. But in this decisive moment, Rienzi was not less anxious or apprehensive than his captives : he dreaded the splendour of their names, their surviving kinsmen, the inconstancy of the people, the reproaches of the world ; and, after rashly offering a mortal injury, he vainly presumed that, if he could forgive, he might himself be forgiven. His elaborate oration was that of a Christian and a suppliant ; and, as the humble minister of the commons, he entreated his masters to pardon these noble criminals, for whose repentance and future service he pledged his faith and authority. “If you are spared,” said the tribune, “by the mercy of the Romans, will you not promise to support the good estate with your lives and fortunes?” Astonished by this marvellous clemency, the barons bowed their heads; and, while they devoutly repeated the oath of allegiance, might whisper a secret, and more sincere, assurance of revenge. A priest, in the name of the people, pronounced their absolution: they received the communion with the tribune, assisted at the banquet, followed the procession; and, after every spiritual and temporal sign of reconciliation, were dismissed in safety to their respective homes, with the new honours and titles of generals, consuls, and patricians<sup>42</sup>.

During some weeks they were checked by the memory of their danger, rather than of their deliverance, till the most powerful of the Ursini, escaping with the Colonna from the city, erected at Marino the standard of rebellion. The fortifications of the castle were hastily restored; the vassals attended their lord; the outlaws armed against the magistrate; the flocks and herds, the harvests and vineyards, from Marino to the gates of Rome, were swept away or destroyed; and the people arraigned Rienzi as the author of the calamities which his government had taught them to forget. In the camp, Rienzi appeared to less advantage than in the rostrum: and he neglected the progress of the rebel barons till their numbers were strong and their castles impregnable. From the pages of Livy he had not imbibed the art, or even the courage, of a general: an army of twenty thousand Romans returned without honour or effect from the attack of Marino: and his vengeance was amused by painting his enemies, their heads downwards, and drowning two dogs (at least they should have been bears) as the representatives of

C H A P.
LXX.

They oppose Rienzi in arm

<sup>42</sup> The original letter, in which Rienzi justifies his treatment of the Colonna (Hoc-femius, apud du Cerçeau, p. 222—229.), dif- plays, in genuine colours, the mixture of the knave and the madman.

C H A P.
LXX.

Defeat and death of the Colonna,
Nov. 20.

the Urfini. The belief of his incapacity encouraged their operations: they were invited by their secret adherents; and the barons attempted with four thousand foot and sixteen hundred horse, to enter Rome by force or surprize. The city was prepared for their reception: the alarm-bell rung all night; the gates were strictly guarded, or insolently open; and after some hesitation they founded a retreat. The two first divisions had passed along the walls, but the prospect of a free entrance tempted the headstrong valour of the nobles in the rear; and after a successful skirmish, they were overthrown and massacred without quarter by the crowds of the Roman people. Stephen Colonna the younger, the noble spirit to whom Petrarch ascribed the restoration of Italy, was preceded or accompanied in death by his son John, a gallant youth, by his brother Peter, who might regret the case and honours of the church, by a nephew of legitimate birth, and by two bastards of the Colonna race; and the number of seven, the seven crowns, as Rienzi styled them, of the Holy Ghost, was completed by the agony of the deplorable parent, of the veteran chief, who had survived the hope and fortune of his house. The vision and prophecies of St. Martin and pope Boniface had been used by the tribune to animate his troops<sup>43</sup>: he displayed, at least in the pursuit, the spirit of an hero; but he forgot the maxims of the ancient Romans, who abhorred the triumphs of civil war. The conqueror ascended the Capitol; deposited his crown and sceptre on the altar; and boasted with some truth, that he had cut off an ear which neither pope nor emperor had been able to amputate<sup>44</sup>. His base and implacable revenge denied

<sup>43</sup> Rienzi, in the above-mentioned letter, ascribes to St. Martin the tribune, Boniface VIII. the enemy of Colonna, himself, and the Roman people, the glory of the day, which Villani likewise (l. xii. c. 104.) describes as a regular battle. The disorderly skirmish, the flight of the Romans, and the cowardice of Rienzi, are painted in the simple and minute narrative of Fortificca, or the anonymous Citizen (l. ii. c. 34—37.).

<sup>44</sup> In describing the fall of the Colonna, I speak only of the family of Stephen the elder, who is often confounded by the P. du Cerçeau, with his son. That family was extinguished, but the house has been perpetuated in the collateral branches, of which I have denied the honours of burial; and the bodies of the Colonna, which he threatened to expose with those of the vilest malefactors, were secretly interred by the holy virgins of their name and family<sup>45</sup>. The people sympathised in their grief, repented of their own fury, and detested the indecent joy of Rienzi, who visited the spot where these illustrious victims had fallen. It was on that fatal spot, that he conferred on his son the honour of knighthood: and the ceremony was accomplished by a slight blow from each of the horsemen of the guard, and by a ridiculous and inhuman ablution from a pool of water, which was yet polluted with patrician blood<sup>46</sup>.

A short delay would have saved the Colonna, the delay of a single month, which elapsed between the triumph and the exile of Rienzi. In the pride of victory, he forfeited what yet remained of his civil virtues, without acquiring the fame of military prowess. A free and vigorous opposition was formed in the city; and when the tribune proposed in the public council<sup>47</sup> to impose a new tax, and to regulate the government of Perugia, thirty-nine members voted against his measures; repelled the injurious charge of treachery and corruption; and urged him to prove, by their forcible exclusion, that, if the populace adhered to his cause, it was already disclaimed by the most respectable citizens. The pope and the sacred college had never been dazzled by his specious professions; they were justly offended by the insolence of his conduct; a cardinal legate was sent

C H A P.
LXX.

Fall and flight of the tribune Rienzi,
A. D. 1347.
Dec. 15.

have not a very accurate knowledge. Circumspice (says Petrarch) familie tue statum, Columnensium domos: solito pauciores habeat columnas. Quid ad rem? modo fundamentum stabile, solidumque; permaneat.

<sup>45</sup> The convent of St. Silvester was founded, endowed, and protected by the Colonna cardinals, for the daughters of the family who embraced a monastic life, and who, in the year 1318, were twelve in number. The others were allowed to marry with their kinsmen in the fourth degree, and the dispensation was justified by the small number and close alliances of the noble families of Rome (Memoires sur Petrarque, tom. i. p. 110. tom. ii. p. 201.).

<sup>46</sup> Petrarch wrote a stiff and pedantic letter of consolation (Fam. l. vii. epist. 13. p. 682, 683.). The friend was lost in the patriot. Nulla toto orbe principum familia carior; carior tamen respublica, carior Roma, carior Italia.

Je rends grâces aux Dieux de n'être pas Romain.

<sup>47</sup> This council and opposition is obscurely mentioned by Polliflore, a contemporary writer, who has preserved some curious and original facts (Res. Italicarum, tom. xxv. c. 31. p. 798—804.).

C H A P.
LXX.

to Italy, and after some fruitless treaty, and two personal interviews, he fulminated a bull of excommunication, in which the tribune is degraded from his office, and branded with the guilt of rebellion, sacrilege, and heresy<sup>48</sup>. The surviving barons of Rome were now humbled to a sense of allegiance; their interest and revenge engaged them in the service of the church; but as the fate of the Colonna was before their eyes, they abandoned to a private adventurer the peril and glory of the revolution. John Pepin, count of Minorbino<sup>49</sup> in the kingdom of Naples, had been condemned for his crimes, or his riches, to perpetual imprisonment; and Petrarch, by soliciting his release, indirectly contributed to the ruin of his friend. At the head of one hundred and fifty soldiers, the count of Minorbino introduced himself into Rome; barricaded the quarter of the Colonna; and found the enterprise as easy as it had seemed impossible. From the first alarm, the bell of the Capitol incessantly tolled; but, instead of repairing to the well-known sound, the people was silent and inactive; and the pusillanimous Rienzi, deploring their ingratitude with sighs and tears, abdicated the government and palace of the republic.

Revolutions
of Rome,
A. D.

1347—1354

Without drawing his sword, count Pepin restored the aristocracy and the church; three senators were chosen, and the legate assuming the first rank, accepted his two colleagues from the rival families of Colonna and Ursini. The acts of the tribune were abolished, his head was proscribed; yet such was the terror of his name, that the barons hesitated three days before they would trust themselves in the city, and Rienzi was left above a month in the castle of St. Angelo, from whence he peaceably withdrew, after labouring, without effect, character, and death of this count of Minorbino, a man da natura inconstante e senza fede, whose grandfather, a crafty notary, was enriched and ennobled by the spoils of the Saracens of Nocera (l. vii. c. 102, 103.). See his imprisonment, and the efforts of Petrarch, tom. ii. p. 149—151.

<sup>48</sup> The briefs and bulls of Clement VI. against Rienzi, are translated by the P. du Cerceau (p. 196. 232.) from the Ecclesiastical Annals of Odericus Raynaldus (A. D. 1347, N<sup>o</sup> 15. 17. 21, &c.), who found them in the archives of the Vatican.

<sup>49</sup> Matteo Villani describes the origin,

to revive the affection and courage of the Romans. The vision of freedom and empire had vanished: their fallen spirit would have acquiesced in servitude, had it been smoothed by tranquillity and order: and it was scarcely observed, that the new senators derived their authority from the Apostolic See, that four cardinals were appointed to reform with dictatorial power the state of the republic. Rome was again agitated by the bloody feuds of the barons, who detested each other, and despised the commons: their hostile fortresses, both in town and country, again rose and were again demolished; and the peaceful citizens, a flock of sheep, were devoured, says the Florentine historian, by these rapacious wolves. But when their pride and avarice had exhausted the patience of the Romans, a confraternity of the Virgin Mary protected or avenged the republic: the bell of the Capitol was again tolled, the nobles in arms trembled in the presence of an unarmed multitude; and of the two senators, Colonna escaped from the window of the palace, and Urfini was stoned at the foot of the altar. The dangerous office of tribune was successively occupied by two plebeians, Cerroni and Baroncelli. The mildness of Cerroni was unequal to the times; and after a faint struggle, he retired with a fair reputation and a decent fortune to the comforts of rural life. Devoid of eloquence or genius, Baroncelli was distinguished by a resolute spirit: he spoke the language of a patriot, and trode in the footsteps of tyrants; his suspicion was a sentence of death, and his own death was the reward of his cruelties. Amidst the public misfortunes, the faults of Rienzi were forgotten; and the Romans sighed for the peace and prosperity of the good estate<sup>50</sup>.

C H A P.
I X.

After an exile of seven years, the first deliverer was again restored to his country. In the disguise of a monk or a pilgrim, he escaped of Rienzi.

Adventures

<sup>50</sup> The troubles of Rome, from the departure to the return of Rienzi, are related by Matteo Villani (l. ii. c. 47. l. iii. c. 53. 57. 78.) and Thomas Fortifioeca (l. iii. c. 1—4.). I have slightly passed over these secondary characters, who imitated the original tribune.

from

C H A P. from the castle of St. Angelo, implored the friendship of the king LXX. of Hungary at Naples, tempted the ambition of every bold adventurer, mingled at Rome with the pilgrims of the jubilee, lay concealed among the hermits of the Apennine, and wandered through the cities of Italy, Germany, and Bohemia. His person was invisible, his name was yet formidable; and the anxiety of the court of Avignon supposed, and even magnified, his personal merit. The emperor Charles the fourth gave audience to a stranger, who frankly revealed himself as the tribune of the republic; and astonished an assembly of ambassadors and princes, by the eloquence of a patriot and the visions of a prophet, the downfall of tyranny and the kingdom of the Holy Ghost<sup>51</sup>. Whatever had been his hopes, Rienzi found himself a captive; but he supported a character of independence and dignity, and obeyed, as his own choice, the irresistible summons of the supreme pontiff. The zeal of Petrarch, which had been cooled by the unworthy conduct, was rekindled by the sufferings and the presence, of his friend; and he boldly complains of the times, in which the favour of Rome was delivered by her emperor into the hands of her bishop. Rienzi was transported slowly, but in safe custody, from Prague to Avignon: his entrance into the city was that of a malefactor; in his prison he was chained by the leg; and four cardinals were named to enquire into the crimes of heresy and rebellion. But his trial and condemnation would have involved some questions, which it was more prudent to leave under the veil of mystery: the temporal supremacy of the popes; the duty of residence; the civil and ecclesiastical privileges of the clergy and people of Rome. The reigning pontiff well deserved the appellation of Clement: the strange vicissitudes and magnanimous spirit of the captive excited his pity and esteem; and Petrarch believes

A prisoner at Avignon,
 A. D. 1351.

<sup>51</sup> These visions, of which the friends and enemies of Rienzi seem alike ignorant, are surely magnified by the zeal of Pollifore, a Dominican inquisitor (Rer. Ital. tom. xxv. c. 36. p. 81). Had the tribune taught, that Christ was succeeded by the Holy Ghost, that the tyranny of the pope would be abolished, he might have been convicted of heresy and treason, without offending the Roman people.

that that he respected in the hero the name and sacred character of a poet<sup>52</sup>. Rienzi was indulged with an easy confinement and the use of books; and in the assiduous study of Livy and the bible, he sought the cause and the consolation of his misfortunes.

C H A P.
LXX.

The succeeding pontificate of Innocent the sixth opened a new prospect of his deliverance and restoration; and the court of Avignon was persuaded, that the successful rebel could alone appease and reform the anarchy of the metropolis. After a solemn profession of fidelity, the Roman tribune was sent into Italy, with the title of senator; but the death of Baroncelli appeared to supersede the use of his mission; and the legate, cardinal Albornoz<sup>53</sup>, a consummate statesman, allowed him with reluctance, and without aid, to undertake the perilous experiment. His first reception was equal to his wishes: the day of his entrance was a public festival; and his eloquence and authority revived the laws of the good estate. But this momentary sunshine was soon clouded by his own vices and those of the people: in the Capitol he might often regret the prison of Avignon; and after a second administration of four months, Rienzi was massacred in a tumult which had been fomented by the Roman barons. In the society of the Germans and Bohemians, he is said to have contracted the habits of intemperance and cruelty: adversity had chilled his enthusiasm, without fortifying his reason or virtue; and that youthful hope, that lively assurance, which is the pledge of success, was now succeeded by the cold impotence of distrust and despair. The tribune had reigned with absolute dominion, by the Rienzi, senator of Rome, A. D. 1354.

<sup>52</sup> The astonishment, the envy almost, of Petrarch is a proof, if not of the truth of this incredible fact, at least of his own veracity. The abbé de Sade (Memoires, tom. iii. p. 242.) quotes the vith epistle of the xiiith book of Petrarch, but it is of the royal MS. which he consulted, and not of the ordinary Basil edition (p. 920.).

<sup>53</sup> Ægidius, or Giles Albornoz, a noble

Spaniard, archbishop of Toledo, and cardinal legate in Italy (A. D. 1353—1367), restored, by his arms and counsels, the temporal dominion of the popes. His life has been separately written by Sepulveda; but Dryden could not reasonably suppose, that his name, or that of Wolfey, had reached the ears of the Mufti in Don Sebastian.

C H A P.
LXX.

choice, and in the hearts, of the Romans: the senator was the fervile minister of a foreign court; and while he was suspected by the people, he was abandoned by the prince. The legate Albornoz, who seemed desirous of his ruin, inflexibly refused all supplies of men and money; a faithful subject could no longer presume to touch the revenues of the apostolical chamber; and the first idea of a tax was the signal of clamour and sedition. Even his justice was tainted with the guilt or reproach of selfish cruelty: the most virtuous citizen of Rome was sacrificed to his jealousy; and in the execution of a public robber, from whose purse he had been assisted, the magistrate too much forgot, or too much remembered, the obligations of the debtor<sup>54</sup>. A civil war exhausted his treasures, and the patience of the city: the Colonna maintained their hostile station at Palestrina; and his mercenaries soon despised a leader whose ignorance and fear were envious of all subordinate merit. In the death as in the life of Rienzi, the hero and the coward were strangely mingled. When the Capitol was invested by a furious multitude, when he was basely deserted by his civil and military servants, the intrepid senator, waving the banner of liberty, presented himself on the balcony, addressed his eloquence to the various passions of the Romans, and laboured to persuade them, that in the same cause himself and the republic must either stand or fall. His oration was interrupted by a volley of imprecations and stones; and after an arrow had transpierced his hand, he sunk into abject despair, and fled weeping to the inner chambers, from whence he was let down by a sheet before the windows of the prison. Destitute of aid or hope, he was besieged till the evening: the doors of the Capitol were destroyed with axes and fire; and while the senator attempted to escape in a plebeian habit, he was discovered and dragged to the

<sup>54</sup> From Matteo Villani, and Fortifiocca, the P. du Cerçeau (p. 344—394.) has extracted the life and death of the chevalier Montreal, the life of a robber and the death of an hero. At the head of a free company, the first that desolated Italy, he became rich and formidable: he had money in all the banks, 60,000 ducats in Padua alone.

platform

platform of the palace, the fatal scene of his judgments and executions. A whole hour, without voice or motion, he stood amidst the multitude half naked and half dead; their rage was hushed into curiosity and wonder; the last feelings of reverence and compassion yet struggled in his favour; and they might have prevailed, if a bold assassin had not plunged a dagger in his breast. He fell senseless with the first stroke; the impotent revenge of his enemies inflicted a thousand wounds; and the senator's body was abandoned to the dogs, to the Jews, and to the flames. Posterity will compare the virtues and failings of this extraordinary man; but in a long period of anarchy and servitude, the name of Rienzi has often been celebrated as the deliverer of his country, and the last of the Roman patriots<sup>55</sup>.

C H A P.
LXX.

His death,
A. D. 1354,
September 8.

The first and most generous wish of Petrarch was the restoration of a free republic; but after the exile and death of his plebeian hero, he turned his eyes from the tribune, to the king, of the Romans. The Capitol was yet stained with the blood of Rienzi, when Charles the fourth descended from the Alps to obtain the Italian and Imperial crowns. In his passage through Milan he received the visit, and repaid the flattery, of the poet-laureat; accepted a medal of Augustus; and promised, without a smile, to imitate the founder of the Roman monarchy. A false application of the names and maxims of antiquity was the source of the hopes and disappointments of Petrarch; yet he could not overlook the difference of times and characters; the immeasurable distance between the first Cæsars and a Bohemian prince, who by the favour of the clergy had been elected the titular head of the German aristocracy. Instead of restoring to Rome her glory and her provinces, he had bound himself, by a secret treaty with the pope, to evacuate the city on the

Petrarch invites and up-braids the emperor
Charles IV.
A. D. 1355,
January—
May.

<sup>55</sup> The exile, second government, and friend nor his enemy (l. iii. c. 12—25.). death of Rienzi, are minutely related by the anonymous Roman, who appears neither his friend nor his enemy (l. iii. c. 12—25.). Petrarch, who loved the tribune, was indifferent to the fate of the senator.

C H A P.
LXX.

He solicits
the popes of Avignon to fix their residence at
Rome.

day of his coronation; and his shameful retreat was pursued by the reproaches of the patriot bard<sup>56</sup>.

After the loss of liberty and empire, his third and more humble wish, was to reconcile the shepherd with his flock; to recal the Roman bishop to his ancient and peculiar diocese. In the fervour of youth, with the authority of age, Petrarch addressed his exhortations to five successive popes, and his eloquence was always inspired by the enthusiasm of sentiment and the freedom of language<sup>57</sup>. The son of a citizen of Florence invariably preferred the country of his birth to that of his education: and Italy, in his eyes, was the queen and garden of the world. Amidst her domestic factions, she was doubtless superior to France both in art and science, in wealth and politeness; but the difference could scarcely support the epithet of barbarous, which he promiscuously bestows on the countries beyond the Alps. Avignon, the mystic Babylon, the sink of vice and corruption, was the object of his hatred and contempt; but he forgets that her scandalous vices were not the growth of the soil, and that in every residence they would adhere to the power and luxury of the papal court. He confesses, that the successor of St. Peter is the bishop of the universal church; yet it was not on the banks of the Rhône, but of the Tyber, that the apostle had fixed his everlasting throne: and while every city in the Christian world was blessed with a bishop, the metropolis alone was desolate and forlorn. Since the removal of the Holy See, the sacred buildings of the Lateran and the Vatican, their altars and their saints, were left in a state of poverty and decay; and Rome was often painted under the image

<sup>56</sup> The hopes and the disappointment of Petrarch, are agreeably described in his own words by the French biographer (Memoires, tom. iii. p. 375—413.); but the deep, though secret, wound, was the coronation of Zanubi the poet laureat by Charles IV.

<sup>57</sup> See in his accurate and amusing biographer, the application of Petrarch and Rome to Benedict XII. in the year 1334 (Memoires, tom. i. p. 261—265.), to Clement VI. in 1342 (tom. ii. p. 45—47.), and to Urban V. in 1366 (tom. iii. p. 677—691.): his praise (p. 711—715.) and excuse (p. 771.) of the last of these pontiffs. His angry controversy on the respective merits of France and Italy may be found (Opp. p. 1069—1085.).

of a difconfolate matron, as if the wandering husband could be reclaimed by the homely portrait of the age and infirmities of his weeping fpoufe<sup>53</sup>. But the cloud which hung over the feven hills, would be difpelled by the prefence of their lawful fovereign: eternal fame, the profperity of Rome, and the peace of Italy, would be the recompence of the pope who fhould dare to embrace this generous refolution. Of the five whom Petrarch exhorted, the three firft, John the twenty-second, Benediét the twelfth, and Clement the fixth, were importuned or amufed by the boldnefs of the orator; but the memorable change which had been attempted by Urban the fifth, was finally accomplifhed by Gregory the eleventh. The execution of their defign was oppofed by weighty and almoft infuperable obftacles. A king of France who has deferved the epithet of wife, was unwilling to releafe them from a local dependance: the cardinals, for the moft part his fubjects, were attached to the language, manners, and climate, of Avignon; to their ftately palaces; above all, to the wines of Burgundy. In their eyes, Italy was foreign or hostile; and they reluctantly embarked at Marfeilles, as if they had been fold or banifhed into the land of the Saracens. Urban the fifth refided three years in the Vatican with fafety and honour: his fanctity was protected by a guard of two thoufand horfe; and the king of Cyprus, the queen of Naples, and the emperors of the Eaft and Weft devoutly faluted their common father in the chair of St. Peter. But the joy of Petrarch and the Italians was foon turned into grief and indignation. Some reafons of public or private moment, his own impatience or the prayers of the cardinals, recalled Urban to France; and the approaching election was faved from the tyrannic patriotifm of the Romans. The powers of heaven were interefted in their caufe: Bridget of Sweden, a faint and pilgrim, difapproved the re-

C H A P.
LXX.

Return of Urban V.
A. D. 1367,
October 16—
A. D. 1370,
April 17.

<sup>53</sup> Squalida fed quoniam facies, neglecta cultû
Cæfaris; multifque malis laffata fenectus
Eripuit folitam effigiem: vetus accipe nomen;
Roma vocor. (Carm. l. 2. p. 77.)
He spins this allegory beyond all meafure or patience. The Epiftles to Urban V. in profe, are more fimple and perfuafive (Senilium,

l. vii. p. 811—827. l. ix. epift. i. p. 844—854.).

turn,

C H A P.
LXX.

Final return
of Gregory XI.
A. D. 1377,
January 17.

turn, and foretold the death, of Urban the fifth; the migration of Gregory the eleventh was encouraged by St. Catherine of Sienna, the spouse of Christ and ambassadress of the Florentines; and the popes themselves, the great masters of human credulity, appear to have listened to these visionary females<sup>59</sup>. Yet those celestial admonitions were supported by some arguments of temporal policy. The residence of Avignon had been invaded by hostile violence: at the head of thirty thousand robbers, an hero had extorted ransom and absolution from the vicar of Christ and the sacred college; and the maxim of the French warriors, to spare the people and plunder the church, was a new heresy of the most dangerous import<sup>60</sup>. While the pope was driven from Avignon, he was strenuously invited to Rome. The senate and people acknowledged him as their lawful sovereign, and laid at his feet the keys of the gates, the bridges, and the fortresses; of the quarter at least beyond the Tyber<sup>61</sup>. But this loyal offer was accompanied by a declaration, that they could no longer suffer the scandal and calamity of his absence; and that his obstinacy would finally provoke them to revive and assert the primitive right of election. The abbot of mount Cassin had been consulted, whether he would accept the triple crown<sup>62</sup> from the clergy <sup>59</sup> I have not leisure to expatiate on the legends of St. Bridget or St. Catherine, the last of which might furnish some amusing stories. Their effect on the mind of Gregory XI. is attested by the last solemn words of the dying pope, who admonished the assistants, ut caverent ab hominibus, five viris, five mulieribus, sub specie religionis loquentibus visones sui capitis, quia per tales ipse seductus, &c. (Baluz. Not. ad Vit. Pap. Avenionensium, tom. i. p. 1223.).

<sup>60</sup> This predatory expedition is related by Froissard (Chronique, tom. i. p. 230.), and in the life of du Guesclin (Collection Generale des Memoires Historiques, tom. iv. c. 16. p. 107—113.). As early as the year 1361, the court of Avignon had been molested by similar freebooters, who afterwards passed the Alps (Memoires sur Petrarque, tom. iii. p. 563—569.).

<sup>61</sup> Fleury alleges, from the Annals of Odericus Raynaldus, the original treaty which was signed the 21st of December 1376, between Gregory XI. and the Romans (Hist. Eccles. tom. xx. p. 275.).

<sup>62</sup> The first crown or regnum (Ducange, Gloss. Latin. tom. v. p. 702.) on the episcopal mitre of the popes, is ascribed to the gift of Constantine, or Clovis. The second was added by Boniface VIII. as the emblem not only of a spiritual, but of a temporal, kingdom. The three states of the church are represented clergy and people: "I am a citizen of Rome"<sup>63</sup>; replied that venerable ecclesiastic, "and my first law is the voice of my country"<sup>64</sup>.

C H A P.
LXX.

If superstition will interpret an untimely death<sup>65</sup>; if the merit of counsels be judged from the event; the heavens may seem to frown on a measure of such apparent reason and propriety. Gregory the eleventh did not survive above fourteen months his return to the Vatican; and his decease was followed by the great schism of the West, which distracted the Latin church above forty years. The sacred college was then composed of twenty-two cardinals: six of these had remained at Avignon; eleven Frenchmen, one Spaniard, and four Italians, entered the conclave in the usual form. Their choice was not yet limited to the purple; and their unanimous votes acquiesced in the archbishop of Bari, a subject of Naples, conspicuous for his zeal and learning, who ascended the throne of St. Peter under the name of Urban the sixth. The epistle of the sacred college affirms his free and regular election; which had been inspired, as usual, by the Holy Ghost: he was adored, invested, and crowned, with the customary rights; his temporal authority was obeyed at Rome and Avignon, and his ecclesiastical supremacy was acknowledged in the Latin world. During several weeks, the cardinals attended their new master with the fairest professions of attachment and loyalty; till

His death,
A. D. 1378,
March 27.

Election of Urban VI.
April 9.

presented by the triple crown which was introduced by John XXII. or Benedict XII. (Memoires sur Petrarque, tom. i. p. 258, 259.)

<sup>63</sup> Baluze (Not. ad Pap. Avenion. tom. i. p. 1194, 1195.) produces the original evidence which attests the threats of the Roman ambassadors, and the resignation of the abbot of mount Cassin, qui, ultro se offerens, respondit se civem Romanum esse, et illud velle quod ipsi vellent.

<sup>64</sup> The return of the popes from Avignon to Rome, and their reception by the people, are related in the original Lives of Urban V. and Gregory XI. in Baluze (Vit. Papporum Avenionensium, tom. i. p. 363—486.) and Muratori (Script. Rer. Italicarum, tom. iii.

P. i. p. 610—712.). In the disputes of the schism, every circumstance was severely, though partially, scrutinised; more especially in the great inquest, which decided the obedience of Castile, and to which Baluze, in his notes, so often and so largely appeals, from a MS. volume in the Harlay library (p. 1281, &c.).

<sup>65</sup> Can the death of a good man be esteemed a punishment by those who believe in the immortality of the soul? They betray the instability of their faith. Yet as a mere philosopher, I cannot agree with the Greeks, ὅτι αἱ βίαι φιλανθρωπίας ἀπὸ βίαιων καὶ νεκρῶν (Brunck, Poeticæ Gnomici, p. 231.). See in Herodotus (l. i. c. 31.) the moral and pleasing tale of the Argive youths.

C H A P.
LXX.

Election of Clement VII.
Sept. 21.

the summer-heats permitted a decent escape from the city. But as soon as they were united at Anagni and Fundi, in a place of security, they cast aside the mask, accused their own falsehood and hypocrisy, excommunicated the apostate and antichrist of Rome, and proceeded to a new election of Robert of Geneva, Clement the seventh, whom they announced to the nations as the true and rightful vicar of Christ. Their first choice, an involuntary and illegal act, was annulled by the fear of death and the menaces of the Romans; and their complaint is justified by the strong evidence of probability and fact. The twelve French cardinals, above two-thirds of the votes, were masters of the election; and whatever might be their provincial jealousies, it cannot fairly be presumed that they would have sacrificed their right and interest to a foreign candidate, who would never restore them to their native country. In the various, and often inconsistent, narratives<sup>66</sup>, the shades of popular violence are more darkly or faintly coloured: but the licentiousness of the seditious Romans was inflamed by a sense of their privileges, and the danger of a second emigration. The conclave was intimidated by the shouts, and encompassed by the arms, of thirty thousand rebels; the bells of the Capitol and St. Peter's rang an alarm; "Death, or an Italian pope!" was the universal cry; the same threat was repeated by the twelve bannerets or chiefs of the quarters, in the form of charitable advice; some preparations were made for burning the obstinate cardinals; and had they chosen a Transalpine subject, it is probable that they would never have departed alive from the Vatican. The same constraint imposed the necessity of dissembling in the eyes of Rome and of the world: the pride and cruelty of Urban presented a more inevitable danger; and they soon discovered the features of the tyrant, who could walk in his garden

<sup>66</sup> In the first book of the Histoire du Concile de Pise, M. Lenfant has abridged and compared the original narratives of the adherents of Urban and Clement, of the Italians and Germans, the French and Spaniards.

The latter appear to be the most active and loquacious, and every fact and word in the original Lives of Gregory XI. and Clement VII. are supported in the notes of their editor Baluze.

and

and recite his breviary, while he heard from an adjacent chamber six cardinals groaning on the rack. His inflexible zeal, which loudly censured their luxury and vice, would have attached them to the stations and duties of their parishes at Rome; and had he not fatally delayed a new promotion, the French cardinals would have been reduced to an helpless minority in the sacred college. For these reasons, and in the hope of repassing the Alps, they rashly violated the peace and unity of the church; and the merits of their double choice are yet agitated in the Catholic schools<sup>67</sup>. The vanity, rather than the interest, of the nation determined the court and clergy of France<sup>68</sup>. The states of Savoy, Sicily, Cyprus, Arragon, Castille, Navarre, and Scotland, were inclined by their example and authority to the obedience, of Clement the seventh, and, after his decease, of Benedict the thirteenth. Rome and the principal states of Italy, Germany, Portugal, England<sup>69</sup>, the Low Countries, and the kingdoms of the North, adhered to the prior election of Urban the sixth, who was succeeded by Boniface the ninth, Innocent the seventh, and Gregory the twelfth.

From the banks of the Tyber and the Rhône, the hostile pontiffs encountered each other with the pen and the sword: the civil and ecclesiastical order of society was disturbed; and the Romans had their full share of the mischiefs of which they may be arraigned as the primary authors<sup>70</sup>. They had vainly flattered themselves with

C. H. A. P.
LXX.

Great schism of the West,
A. D.
1378—1418.

<sup>67</sup> The ordinal numbers of the popes seem to decide the question against Clement VII. and Benedict XIII. who are boldly stigmatised as anti-popes by the Italians, while the French are content with authorities and reasons to plead the cause of doubt and toleration (Baluz. in Prefat.). It is singular, or rather it is not singular, that saints, visions, and miracles, should be common to both parties.

<sup>68</sup> Baluze strenuously labours (Not. p. 1271—1280.) to justify the pure and pious motives of Charles V. king of France; he refused to hear the arguments of Urban; but were not the Urbanists equally deaf to the reasons of Clement, &c.?

<sup>69</sup> An epistle, or declamation, in the name of Edward III. (Baluz. Vit. Pap. Avenion. tom. i. p. 553.) displays the zeal of the English nation against the Clementines. Nor was their zeal confined to words: the bishop of Norwich led a crusade of 60,000 bigots beyond sea (Hume's History, vol. iii. p. 57, 58.)

<sup>70</sup> Besides the general historians, the Diarist of Delphinus Genalis, Peter Antonius, and Stephen Infellara, in the great Calendar of Muratori, represent the state and misfortunes of Rome.

C H A P.
LXX.

Calamities of Rome.

the hope of restoring the seat of the ecclesiastical monarchy, and of relieving their poverty with the tributes and offerings of the nations; but the separation of France and Spain diverted the stream of lucrative devotion; nor could the loss be compensated by the two jubilees which were crowded into the space of ten years. By the avocations of the schism, by foreign arms, and popular tumults, Urban the sixth and his three successors were often compelled to interrupt their residence in the Vatican. The Colonna and Ursini still exercised their deadly feuds: the bannerets of Rome asserted and abused the privileges of a republic: the vicars of Christ, who had levied a military force, chastised their rebellion with the gibbet, the sword, and the dagger; and, in a friendly conference, eleven deputies of the people were perfidiously murdered and cast into the street. Since the invasion of Robert the Norman, the Romans had pursued their domestic quarrels without the dangerous interposition of a stranger. But in the disorders of the schism, an aspiring neighbour, Ladislaus king of Naples, alternately supported and betrayed the pope and the people: by the former, he was declared gouffalonier, or general, of the church, while the latter submitted to his choice the nomination of their magistrates. Besieging Rome by land and water, he thrice entered the gates as a Barbarian conqueror; profaned the altars, violated the virgins, pillaged the merchants, performed his devotions at St. Peter's, and left a garrison in the castle of St. Angelo. His arms were sometimes unfortunate, and to a delay of three days he was indebted for his life and crown; but Ladislaus triumphed in his turn, and it was only his premature death that could save the metropolis and the ecclesiastical state from the ambitious conqueror, who had assumed the title, or at least the powers, of king of Rome<sup>71</sup>.

<sup>71</sup> It is supposed by Giannone (tom. iii. p. 292.) that he styled himself Rex Romæ, a title unknown to the world since the expulsion of Tarquin. But a nearer inspection has justified the reading of Rex Ramæ, of Rama, an obscure kingdom annexed to the crown of Hungary.

I have not undertaken the ecclesiastical history of the schism; but Rome, the object of these last chapters, is deeply interested in the disputed succession of her sovereigns. The first counsels for the peace and union of Christendom arose from the university of Paris, from the faculty of the Sorbonne, whose doctors were esteemed, at least in the Gallican church, as the most consummate masters of theological science<sup>72</sup>. Prudently waving all invidious enquiry into the origin and merits of the dispute, they proposed, as an healing measure, that the two pretenders of Rome and Avignon should abdicate at the same time, after qualifying the cardinals of the adverse factions to join in a legitimate election; and that the nations should subtract<sup>73</sup> their obedience, if either of the competitors preferred his own interest to that of the public. At each vacancy, these physicians of the church deprecated the mischiefs of an hasty choice; but the policy of the conclave and the ambition of its members were deaf to reason and entreaties; and whatsoever promises were made, the pope could never be bound by the oaths of the cardinal. During fifteen years, the pacific designs of the university were eluded by the arts of the rival pontiffs, the scruples or passions of their adherents, and the vicissitudes of French factions, that ruled the insanity of Charles the sixth. At length a vigorous resolution was embraced; and a solemn embassy, of the titular patriarch of Alexandria, two archbishops, five bishops, five abbots, three knights, and twenty doctors, was sent to the courts of Avignon and Rome, to require, in the name of the church and king, the abdication of the two pretenders, of Peter de Luna, who styled himself Benedict

C. H. A. P.
LXX.
Negotiations
for peace and union,
A. D.
1302—1307.

<sup>72</sup> The leading and decisive part which France assumed in the schism, is stated by Peter du Puis in a separate history, extracted from authentic records, and inserted in the viiith volume of the last and best edition of his friend Thuanus (P. xi. p. 110—134.).

<sup>73</sup> Of this measure, John Gerson, a stout doctor, was the author or the champion.

The proceedings of the university of Paris and the Gallican church were often prompted by his advice, and are copiously displayed in his theological writings, of which Le Clerc (Bibliothèque Choisie, tom. x. p. 1—78.) has given a valuable extract. John Gerson acted an important part in the councils of Pisa and Constance.

C H A P.
LXX.

the thirteenth, and of Angelo Corrario, who assumed the name of Gregory the twelfth. For the ancient honour of Rome, and the success of their commission, the ambassadors solicited a conference with the magistrates of the city, whom they gratified by a positive declaration, that the most Christian king did not entertain a wish of transporting the holy see from the Vatican, which he considered as the genuine and proper seat of the successor of St. Peter. In the name of the senate and people, an eloquent Roman asserted their desire to co-operate in the union of the church, deplored the temporal and spiritual calamities of the long schism, and requested the protection of France against the arms of the king of Naples. The answers of Benedict and Gregory were alike edifying and alike deceitful; and, in evading the demand of their abdication, the two rivals were animated by a common spirit. They agreed on the necessity of a previous interview, but the time, the place, and the manner, could never be ascertained by mutual consent. “If the one advances,” says a servant of Gregory, “the other retreats; the one appears an animal fearful of the land, the other a creature apprehensive of the water. And thus for a short remnant of life and power, will these aged priests endanger the peace and salvation of the Christian world<sup>74</sup>.”

Council of Pisa,
A. D. 1409.

The Christian world was at length provoked by their obstinacy and fraud: they were deserted by their cardinals, who embraced each other as friends and colleagues; and their revolt was supported by a numerous assembly of prelates and ambassadors. With equal justice, the council of Pisa deposed the popes of Rome and Avignon; the conclave was unanimous in the choice of Alexander the fifth, and his vacant seat was soon filled by a similar election of John the (Fabric. Bibliot. medii ævi, tom. i. p. 290.). Lenfant has given the version of this curious epistle (Concile de Pise, tom. i. p. 192—195.).

<sup>74</sup> Leonardus Brunus Aretinus, one of the revivers of classic learning in Italy, who, after serving many years as secretary in the Roman court, retired to the honourable office of chancellor of the republic of Florence

twenty-third, the most profligate of mankind. But instead of extinguishing the schism, the rashness of the French and Italians had given a third pretender to the chair of St. Peter. Such new claims of the synod and conclave were disputed: three kings, of Germany, Hungary, and Naples, adhered to the cause of Gregory the twelfth; and Benedict the thirteenth, himself a Spaniard, was acknowledged by the devotion and patriotism of that powerful nation. The rash proceedings of Pisa were corrected by the council of Constance; the emperor Sigismund acted a conspicuous part as the advocate or protector of the Catholic church; and the number and weight of civil and ecclesiastical members might seem to constitute the states general of Europe. Of the three popes, John the twenty-third was the first victim: he fled and was brought back a prisoner: the most scandalous charges were suppressed; the vicar of Christ was only accused of piracy, murder, rape, sodomy, and incest; and after subscribing his own condemnation, he expiated in prison the imprudence of trusting his person to a free city beyond the Alps. Gregory the twelfth, whose obedience was reduced to the narrow precincts of Rimini, descended with more honour from the throne, and his ambassador convened the session, in which he renounced the title and authority of lawful pope. To vanquish the obstinacy of Benedict the thirteenth or his adherents, the emperor in person undertook a journey from Constance to Perpignan. The kings of Castille, Arragon, Navarre, and Scotland, obtained an equal and honourable treaty: with the concurrence of the Spaniards, Benedict was deposed by the council; but the harmless old man was left in a solitary castle to excommunicate twice each day the rebel kingdoms which had deserted his cause. After thus eradicating the remains of the schism, the synod of Constance proceeded with slow and cautious steps, to elect the sovereign of Rome and the head of the church. On this momentous occasion, the college of twenty-three cardinals was fortified with thirty deputies; six of whom were chosen in each of the five great nations of Christendom, the Italian, the German, the French,

C H A P.
LXX.

Council of Constance,
A. D.
1414—1418.

C. H. A. P.
LXX.
Election of
Martin V.

French, the Spanish, and the English<sup>75</sup>: the interference of strangers was softened by their generous preference of an Italian and a Roman; and the hereditary, as well as personal, merit of Otho Colonna recommended him to the conclave. Rome accepted with joy and obedience the noblest of her sons, the ecclesiastical state was defended by his powerful family, and the elevation of Martin the fifth is the æra of the restoration and establishment of the popes in the Vatican<sup>76</sup>.

Martin V.
A. D. 1417.
Eugenius IV.
A. D. 1431.
Nicholas V.
A. D. 1447.

The royal prerogative of coining money, which had been exercised near three hundred years by the senate, was first resumed by Martin the fifth<sup>77</sup>, and his image and superscription introduce the series of the papal medals. Of his two immediate successors, Eugenius the fourth

<sup>75</sup> I cannot overlook this great national cause, which was vigorously maintained by the English ambassadors against those of France. The latter contended, that Christendom was essentially distributed into the four great nations and votes, of Italy, Germany, France, and Spain; and that the lesser kingdoms (such as England, Denmark, Portugal, &c.) were comprehended under one or other of these great divisions. The English asserted, that the British islands, of which they were the head, should be considered as a fifth and co-ordinate nation, with an equal vote; and every argument of truth or fable was introduced to exalt the dignity of their country. Including England, Scotland, Wales, the four kingdoms of Ireland, and the Orknies, the British islands are decorated with eight royal crowns, and discriminated by four or five languages, English, Welsh, Cornish, Scotch, Irish, &c. The greater island from north to south measures 800 miles, or 40 days journey; and England alone contains 32 counties, and 52,000 parish churches, (a bold account!) besides cathedrals, colleges, priories, and hospitals. They celebrate the mission of St. Joseph of Arimathea, the birth of Constantine, and the legantine powers of the two primates, without forgetting the testimony of Bartholemy de Glanville (A. D. 1360), who reckons only four Christian kingdoms, 1. of Rome, 2. of Constantinople, 3. of Ireland, which had been transferred to the English monarchs, and, 4. of Spain. Our countrymen prevailed in the council, but the victories of Henry V. added much weight to their arguments. The adverse pleadings were found at Constance by Sir Robert Wingfield, ambassador from Henry VIII. to the emperor Maximilian I. and by him printed in 1517 at Louvain. From a Leipzig MS. they are more correctly published in the Collection of Von der Hardt, tom. v.; but I have only seen Lenfant's abstract of these acts (Concile de Constance, tom. ii. p. 447. 453, &c.).

<sup>76</sup> The histories of the three successive councils, Pisa, Constance, and Basil, have been written with a tolerable degree of candour, industry, and elegance, by a Protestant minister, M. Lenfant, who retired from France to Berlin. They form six volumes in quarto; and as Basil is the worst, so Constance is the best, part of the collection.

<sup>77</sup> See the xxviith Dissertation of the Antiquities of Muratori, and the 1st Instruction of the Science des Medailles of the Pere Joubert and the Baron de la Bassie. The Metallic History of Martin V. and his successors, has been composed by two monks, Moulinet a Frenchman, and Bonanni an Italian: but I understand, that the first part of the series is restored from more recent coins.

was the last pope expelled by the tumults of the Roman people<sup>78</sup>, and Nicholas the fifth, the last who was importuned by the presence of a Roman emperor<sup>79</sup>. I. The conflict of Eugenius, with the fathers of Basil, and the weight or apprehension of a new excise, emboldened and provoked the Romans to usurp the temporal government of the city. They rose in arms, elected seven governors of the republic, and a constable of the Capitol; imprisoned the pope's nephew; besieged his person in the palace; and shot volleys of arrows into his bark as he escaped down the Tyber in the habit of a monk. But he still possessed in the castle of St. Angelo a faithful garrison and a train of artillery: their batteries incessantly thundered on the city, and a bullet more dextrously pointed broke down the barricade of the bridge, and scattered with a single shot the heroes of the republic. Their constancy was exhausted by a rebellion of five months. Under the tyranny of the Ghibeline nobles, the wisest patriots regretted the dominion of the church; and their repentance was unanimous and effectual. The troops of St. Peter again occupied the Capitol; the magistrates departed to their homes; the most guilty were executed or exiled; and the legate, at the head of two thousand foot and four thousand horse, was saluted as the father of the city. The synods of Ferrara and Florence, the fear or resentment of Eugenius, prolonged his absence: he was received by a submissive people; but the pontiff understood from the acclamations of his triumphal entry, that to secure their loyalty and his own repose, he must grant without delay the abolition of the odious excise. II. Rome was restored, adorned, and enlightened, by the peaceful reign of Nicholas the fifth. In the midst of these laudable occupa-

C H A P.
LXX.

Last revolt of Rome,
A. D. 1434,
May 29—
October 26.

<sup>78</sup> Besides the Lives of Eugenius IV. (Rerum Italic. tom. iii. P. i. p. 869. and tom. xxv. p. 256.), the Diaries of Paul Petroni and Stephen Infessura are the best original evidence for the revolt of the Romans against Eugenius IV. The former, who lived at the time and on the spot, speaks the language of a citizen, equally afraid of priestly and popular tyranny.

<sup>79</sup> The coronation of Frederic III. is described by Lensant (Concile de Balle, tom. ii. p. 276—283.), from Aeneas Sylvius, a spectator and actor in that splendid scene.

tious.

C H A P.
LXX.

La<sup>3</sup> coronation of a German emperor, Frederic III. A. D. 1452, March 18.

The statutes and government of Rome.

tions, the pope was alarmed by the approach of Frederic the third of Austria; though his fears could not be justified by the character or the power of the Imperial candidate. After drawing his military force to the metropolis, and imposing the best security of oaths<sup>80</sup> and treaties, Nicholas received with a smiling countenance the faithful advocate and vassal of the church. So tame were the times, so feeble was the Austrian, that the pomp of his coronation was accomplished with order and harmony: but the superfluous honour was so disgraceful to an independent nation, that his successors have excused themselves from the toilsome pilgrimage to the Vatican; and rest their Imperial title on the choice of the electors of Germany.

A citizen has remarked, with pride and pleasure, that the king of the Romans, after passing with a slight salute the cardinals and prelates who met him at the gate, distinguished the dress and person of the senator of Rome; and in this last farewell, the pageants of the empire and the republic were clasped in a friendly embrace<sup>81</sup>. According to the laws of Rome<sup>82</sup>, her first magistrate was required to be a doctor of laws, an alien, of a place at least forty miles from the city; with whose inhabitants he must not be connected in the third canonical degree of blood or alliance. The election was annual: a severe scrutiny was instituted into the conduct of the departing senator; nor could he be recalled to the same office till after the expiration of two years. A liberal salary of three thousand florins was assigned for his expence and reward; and his public <sup>80</sup> The oath of fidelity imposed on the emperor by the pope, is recorded and sanctified in the Clementines (l. ii. tit. ix.); and Æneas Sylvius, who objects to this new demand, could not foresee, that in a few years he should ascend the throne, and imbibe the maxims, of Boniface VIII.

<sup>81</sup> Lo senatore di Roma, vestito di brocarto con quella beretta, e con quelle maniche, et ornamenti di pelle, co' quali va aile feste di Testaccio e Nagone, might escape the eye of Æneas Sylvius, but he is viewed with admiration and complacency by the Roman citizen (Diario di Stephano Infesura, p. 1133.).

<sup>82</sup> See in the statutes of Rome, the senator and three judges (l. i. c. 3—14.), the conservators (l. i. c. 15, 16, 17. l. iii. c. 4.), the caporioni (l. i. c. 18. l. iii. c. 8.), the secret council (l. iii. c. 2.), the common council (l. iii. c. 3.). The title of feuds, defiance, acts of violence, &c. is spread through many a chapter (c. 14—40.) of the second book.

appearance

appearance represented the majesty of the republic. His robes were of gold brocade or crimson velvet, or in the summer season of a lighter silk; he bore in his hand an ivory sceptre; the sound of trumpets announced his approach; and his solemn steps were preceded at least by four lictors or attendants, whose red wands were enveloped with bands or streamers of the golden colour or livery of the city. His oath in the Capitol proclaims his right and duty, to observe and assert the laws, to control the proud, to protect the poor, and to exercise justice and mercy within the extent of his jurisdiction. In these useful functions he was assisted by three learned strangers; the two collaterals, and the judge of criminal appeals: their frequent trials of robberies, rapes, and murders, are attested by the laws; and the weakness of these laws connives at the licentiousness of private feuds and armed associations for mutual defence. But the senator was confined to the administration of justice: the Capitol, the treasury, and the government of the city and its territory were entrusted to the three conservators, who were changed four times in each year: the militia of the thirteen regions assembled under the banners of their respective chiefs, or caporioni; and the first of these was distinguished by the name and dignity of the prior. The popular legislature consisted of the secret and the common councils of the Romans. The former was composed of the magistrates and their immediate predecessors, with some fiscal and legal officers, and three classes of thirteen, twenty-six, and forty, counsellors; amounting in the whole to about one hundred and twenty persons. In the common council all male citizens had a right to vote; and the value of their privilege was enhanced by the care with which any foreigners were prevented from usurping the title and character of Romans. The tumult of a democracy was checked by wise and jealous precautions: except the magistrates, none could propose a question; none were permitted to speak, except from an open pulpit or tribunal; all disorderly acclamations were suppressed; the sense of the

C H A P.
LXX

C H A P.
LXX.

majority was decided by a secret ballot ; and their decrees were promulgated in the venerable name of the Roman senate and people. It would not be easy to assign a period in which this theory of government has been reduced to accurate and constant practice, since the establishment of order has been gradually connected with the decay of liberty. But in the year one thousand five hundred and eighty, the ancient statutes were collected, methodised in three books, and adapted to present use, under the pontificate, and with the approbation, of Gregory the thirteenth<sup>83</sup> : this civil and criminal code is the modern law of the city ; and, if the popular assemblies have been abolished, a foreign senator, with the three conservators, still resides in the palace of the Capitol<sup>84</sup>. The policy of the Cæsars has been repeated by the popes ; and the bishop of Rome affected to maintain the form of a republic, while he reigned with the absolute powers of a temporal, as well as spiritual, monarch.

Conspiracy of Porcario,
A. D. 1453,
January 9.

It is an obvious truth, that the times must be suited to extraordinary characters, and that the genius of Cromwell or Retz might now expire in obscurity. The political enthusiasm of Rienzi had exalted him to a throne ; the same enthusiasm, in the next century, conducted his imitator to the gallows. The birth of Stephen Porcario was noble, his reputation spotless ; his tongue was armed with eloquence, his mind was enlightened with learning ; and he aspired, beyond the aim of vulgar ambition, to free his country and immortalise his name. The dominion of priests is most odious to a liberal spirit : every scruple was removed by the recent knowledge of the fable and forgery of Constantine's donation ; Petrarch was now the oracle of the Italians ; and as often as Porcario revolved the ode

<sup>83</sup> Statuta almæ Urbis Romæ Auctoritate S. D. N. Gregorii XIII. Pont. Max. a Senatu Populoque Rom. reformata et edita. Romæ, 1580, in folio. The obsolete, repugnant statutes of antiquity, were confounded in five books, and Lucas Patrus, a lawyer and antiquarian, was appointed to act as the modern Tribonian. Yet I regret the old code, with the rugged crust of freedom and barbarism.

<sup>84</sup> In my time (1765), and in M. Grofley's (Observations sur l'Italie, tom. ii. p. 361.), the senator of Rome was M. Bielke, a noble Swede, and a profelyte to the Catholic faith. The pope's right to appoint the senator and the conservator is implied, rather than affirmed, in the Statutes.

which

which describes the patriot and hero of Rome, he applied to himself the visions of the prophetic bard. His first trial of the popular feelings was at the funeral of Eugenius the fourth: in an elaborate speech he called the Romans to liberty and arms; and they listened with apparent pleasure, till Porcaro was interrupted and answered by a grave advocate, who pleaded for the church and state. By every law the seditious orator was guilty of treason; but the benevolence of the new pontiff, who viewed his character with pity and esteem, attempted by an honourable office to convert the patriot into a friend. The inflexible Roman returned from Anagni with an increase of reputation and zeal; and, on the first opportunity, the games of the place Navona, he tried to inflame the casual dispute of some boys and mechanics into a general rising of the people. Yet the humane Nicholas was still averse to accept the forfeit of his life; and the traitor was removed from the scene of temptation to Bologna, with a liberal allowance for his support, and the easy-obligation of presenting himself each day before the governor of the city. But Porcaro had learned from the younger Brutus, that with tyrants no faith or gratitude should be observed: the exile declaimed against the arbitrary sentence; a party and a conspiracy was gradually formed; his nephew, a daring youth, assembled a band of volunteers; and on the appointed evening a feast was prepared at his house for the friends of the republic. Their leader, who had escaped from Bologna, appeared among them in a robe of purple and gold: his voice, his countenance, his gestures, bespoke the man who had devoted his life or death to the glorious cause. In a studied oration, he expatiated on the motives and the means of their enterprise: the name and liberties of Rome; the sloth and pride of their ecclesiastical tyrants; the active or passive consent of their fellow-citizens; three hundred soldiers, and four hundred exiles, long exercised in arms or in wrongs; the licence of revenge to edge their swords, and a million of ducats to reward their victory. It would

C H A P.
LXX.

C H A P.
LXX.

be easy (he said), on the next day, the festival of the Epiphany, to seize the pope and his cardinals before the doors, or at the altar, of St. Peter's; to lead them in chains under the walls of St. Angelo; to extort by the threat of their instant death a surrender of the castle; to ascend the vacant Capitol; to ring the alarm-bell; and to restore in a popular assembly the ancient republic of Rome. While he triumphed, he was already betrayed. The senator, with a strong guard, invested the house: the nephew of Porcaro cut his way through the crowd; but the unfortunate Stephen was drawn from a chest, lamenting that his enemies had anticipated by three hours the execution of his design. After such manifest and repeated guilt, even the mercy of Nicholas was silent. Porcaro, and nine of his accomplices, were hanged without the benefit of the sacraments; and amidst the fears and invectives of the papal court, the Romans pitied, and almost applauded, these martyrs of their country<sup>85</sup>. But their applause was mute, their pity ineffectual, their liberty for ever extinct; and, if they have since risen in a vacancy of the throne or a scarcity of bread, such accidental tumults may be found in the bosom of the most abject servitude.

Disorders of the nobles
of Rome.

But the independence of the nobles, which was fomented by discord, survived the freedom of the commons, which must be founded in union. A privilege of rapine and oppression was long maintained by the barons of Rome; their houses were a fortress and a sanctuary: and the ferocious train of banditti and criminals whom they protected from the law, repaid the hospitality with the service of their swords and daggers. The private interest of the pontiffs, or their nephews, sometimes involved them in these domestic feuds.

<sup>85</sup> Besides the curious though concise narrative of Machiavel (Storia Fiorentina, l. vi. Opere, tom. i. p. 210, 211. edit. Londra, 1747, in 4<sup>to</sup>), the Porcarian conspiracy is related in the Diary of Stephen Infessura (Mem. Ital. tom. iii. P. ii. p. 1134, 1135.), and in a separate tract by Leo Baptista Alberti (Mem. Ital. tom. xxv. p. 609—614.).

It is amusing to compare the style and sentiments of the courtier and citizen. Facinus profecto quo.... neque periculo horribilius, neque audacia detestabilius, neque crudelitate tetrius, a quoquam perditissimo usquam excogitatum sit.... Perdette la vita quell' huomo da bene, e amatore dello bene et liberta di Roma.

Under

Under the reign of Sixtus the fourth, Rome was distracted by the battles and sieges of the rival houses: after the conflagration of his palace, the protonotary Colonna was tortured and beheaded; and Savelli, his captive friend, was murdered on the spot, for refusing to join in the acclamations of the victorious Ur lini<sup>86</sup>. But the popes no longer trembled in the Vatican: they had strength to command, if they had resolution to claim, the obedience of their subjects; and the strangers, who observed these partial disorders, admired the easy taxes and wise administration of the ecclesiastical state<sup>87</sup>.

C H A P.
LXX.

The spiritual thunders of the Vatican depend on the force of opinion: and, if that opinion be supplanted by reason or passion, the sound may idly waste itself in the air; and the helpless priest is exposed to the brutal violence of a noble or a plebeian adversary. But after their return from Avignon, the keys of St. Peter were guarded by the sword of St. Paul. Rome was commanded by an impregnable citadel: the use of cannon is a powerful engine against popular seditions: a regular force of cavalry and infantry was enlisted under the banners of the pope: his ample revenues supplied the resources of war; and, from the extent of his domain, he could bring down on a rebellious city an army of hostile neighbours and loyal subjects<sup>88</sup>. Since the union of the duchies of Ferrara and

The popes acquire the absolute dominion of Rome, A. D. 1507. &c.

<sup>86</sup> The disorders of Rome, which were much increased by the partiality of Sixtus IV. are exposed in the Diaries of two spectators, Stephen Infeltra, and an anonymous citizen. See the troubles of the years 1484, and the death of the protonotary Colonna, in tom. iii. P. ii. p. 1033, 1158.

<sup>87</sup> La toute la terre de l'eglise troublée pour cette partialité (des Colonnas et des Ur lins), come nous dirions Lucc et Grammont, ou en Hollande Houc et Cibellan; et quand ce ne seroit ce différent la terre de l'eglise seroit la plus heureuse habitation pour les sujets, qui se font dans tout le monde (car ils ne payent ni tailles ni guerres autres autres choses); et seroient toujours bien conduits (car toujours les papes sont sages et bien conduits); mais très souvent en advient de grands et cruels meurtres et pilleries.

<sup>88</sup> By the economy of Sixtus V. the revenue of the ecclesiastical state was raised to two millions and a half of Roman crowns (Vita, tom. ii. p. 291—296.); and so regular was the military establishment, that in one month Clement VIII. could invade the duchy of Ferrara with three thousand horse and twenty thousand foot (tom. iii. p. 64.). Since that time (A. D. 1597.), the papal arms are happily ruled; but the revenue must have gained some nominal increase.

C H A P.
LXX.

Urbino, the ecclesiastical state extends from the Mediterranean to the Adriatic, and from the confines of Naples to the banks of the Po; and as early as the sixteenth century, the greater part of that spacious and fruitful country acknowledged the lawful claims and temporal sovereignty of the Roman pontiffs. Their claims were readily deduced from the genuine, or fabulous, donations of the darker ages: the successive steps of their final settlement would engage us too far in the transactions of Italy, and even of Europe; the crimes of Alexander the sixth, the martial operations of Julius the second, and the liberal policy of Leo the tenth, a theme which has been adorned by the pens of the noblest historians of the times<sup>89</sup>. In the first period of their conquests, till the expedition of Charles the eighth, the popes might successfully wrestle with the adjacent princes and states, whose military force was equal, or inferior, to their own. But as soon as the monarchs of France, Germany, and Spain, contended with gigantic arms for the dominion of Italy, they supplied with art the deficiency of strength; and concealed, in a labyrinth of wars and treaties, their aspiring views, and the immortal hope of chasing the Barbarians beyond the Alps. The nice balance of the Vatican was often subverted by the soldiers of the North and West, who were united under the standard of Charles the fifth: the feeble and fluctuating policy of Clement the seventh exposed his person and dominions to the conqueror; and Rome was abandoned seven months to a lawless army, more cruel and rapacious than the Goths and Vandals<sup>90</sup>. After this severe lesson, the popes contracted their ambition, which was almost satisfied, resumed the character of a common parent, and abstained from all offensive hostilities, <sup>89</sup> More especially by Guicciardini and Machiavel; in the general history of the former, in the Florentine history, the Prince, and the political discourses of the latter. These, with their worthy successors, Fra-Paolo and Davila, were justly esteemed the first historians of modern languages, till, in the present age, Scotland arose, to dispute the prize with Italy herself.

<sup>90</sup> In the history of the Gothic siege, I have compared the Barbarians with the subjects of Charles V. (vol. iii. p. 242—244.); an anticipation, which, like that of the Tartar conquests, I indulged with the less scruple, as I could scarcely hope to reach the conclusion of my work.

except

except in an hasty quarrel, when the vicar of Christ and the Turkish sultan were armed at the same time against the kingdom of Naples<sup>91</sup>. The French and Germans at length withdrew from the field of battle: Milan, Naples, Sicily, Sardinia, and the sea-coast of Tuscany, were firmly possessed by the Spaniards; and it became their interest to maintain the peace and dependence of Italy, which continued almost without disturbance from the middle of the sixteenth to the opening of the eighteenth century. The Vatican was swayed and protected by the religious policy of the Catholic king: his prejudice and interest disposed him in every dispute to support the prince against the people; and instead of the encouragement, the aid, and the asylum, which they obtained from the adjacent states, the friends of liberty, or the enemies of law, were enclosed on all sides within the iron circle of despotism. The long habits of obedience and education subdued the turbulent spirit of the nobles and commons of Rome. The barons forgot the arms and factions of their ancestors, and insensibly became the servants of luxury and government. Instead of maintaining a crowd of tenants and followers, the produce of their estates was consumed in the private expences, which multiply the pleasures, and diminish the power, of the lord<sup>92</sup>. The Colonna and Ursini vied with each other in the decoration of their palaces and chapels; and their antique splendour was rivalled or surpassed by the sudden opulence of the papal families. In Rome the voice of freedom and discord is no longer heard; and, instead of the foaming torrent, a smooth and stagnant lake reflects the image of idleness and servitude.

C H A P.
LXX.

<sup>91</sup> The ambitious and feeble hostilities of the Caraffa pope, Paul IV. may be seen in Thuanus (l. xvi—xviii.) and Giannone (tom. iv. p. 149—163.). Those Catholic bigots, Philip II. and the duke of Alva, presumed to separate the Roman prince from the vicar of Christ: yet the holy character, which would have sanctified his victory, was decently applied to protect his defeat.

<sup>92</sup> This gradual change of manners and expence, is admirably explained by Dr. Adam Smith (Wealth of Nations, vol. i. p. 495—504.), who proves, perhaps too severely, that the most salutary effects have flowed from the meanest and most selfish causes.

C H A P.
LXX.

The ecclesiastical government.

A Christian, a philosopher<sup>93</sup>, and a patriot, will be equally scandalized by the temporal kingdom of the clergy; and the local majesty of Rome, the remembrance of her consuls and triumphs, may seem to embitter the sense, and aggravate the shame, of her slavery. If we calmly weigh the merits and defects of the ecclesiastical government, it may be praised in its present state as a mild, decent, and tranquil system, exempt from the dangers of a minority, the follies of youth, the expences of luxury, and the calamities of war. But these advantages are overbalanced by a frequent, perhaps a septennial, election of a sovereign, who is seldom a native of the country: the reign of a young statesman of threescore, in the decline of his life and abilities, without hope to accomplish, and without children to inherit, the labours of his transitory reign. The successful candidate is drawn from the church, and even the convent; from the mode of education and life the most adverse to reason, humanity, and freedom. In the trammels of servile faith, he has learned to believe because it is absurd, to revere all that is contemptible, and to despise whatever might deserve the esteem of a rational being; to punish error as a crime, to reward mortification and celibacy, as the first of virtues; to place the saints of the kalendar<sup>94</sup> above the heroes of Rome and the sages of Athens; and to consider the missal, or the crucifix, as more useful instruments than the plough or the loom. In the office of nuncio, or the rank of cardinal, he may acquire some knowledge of the world, but the primitive stain will adhere to his mind and manners; from study and experience he may suspect the mystery of his profession; but the sacerdotal artist will imbibe some portion of the bigotry which he inculcates. The genius of Sixtus the fifth<sup>55</sup> burst from the gloom of a Franciscan cloister. In a reign of five years, he exterminated the outlaws and banditti, abolished the profane sanctuaries of Rome<sup>56</sup>, formed a naval and military force, restored and emulated the monuments of antiquity, and after a liberal use and large encrease of the revenue, left five millions of crowns in the castle of St. Angelo. But his justice was sullied with cruelty, his activity was prompted by the ambition of conquest; after his decease, the abuses revived; the treasure was dissipated; he entailed on posterity thirty-five new taxes and the venality of offices; and, after his death, his statue was demolished by an ungrateful, or an injured, people<sup>57</sup>. The wild and original character of Sixtus the fifth stands alone in the series of the pontiffs: the maxims and effects of their temporal government may be collected from the positive and comparative view of the arts and philosophy, the agriculture and trade, the wealth and population, of the ecclesiastical state. For myself, it is my wish to depart in charity with all mankind; nor

<sup>93</sup> Mr. Hume (Hist. of England, vol. i. p. 367.) too hastily concludes, that if the civil and ecclesiastical powers be united in the same person, it is of little moment whether he be styled prince or prelate, since the temporal character will always predominate.

<sup>94</sup> A protestant may disdain the unworthy preference of St. Francis or St. Dominic, but he will not rashly condemn the zeal or judgment of Sixtus V. who placed the statues of the apostles, St. Peter and St. Paul, on the vacant columns of Trajan and Antonine.

C H A P.
LXX.

Sixtus V.
A. D.

1585—1590

<sup>55</sup> A wandering Italian, Gregorio Leti, has given the Vita di Sisto-Quinto (Amstel. 1721, 3 vols. in 12<sup>mo</sup>), a copious and amusing work, but which does not command our absolute confidence. Yet the character of the man, and the principal facts, are supported by the Annals of Spondanus and Muratori (A. D. 1585—1590), and the contemporary history of the great Thuanus (l. lxxxii. c. 1, 2. l. lxxxiv. c. 10. l. c. c. 8.).

<sup>56</sup> These privileged places, the quartieri or franchises, were adopted from the Roman nobles by the foreign ministers. Julius II. had once abolished the abominandum et detestandum franchitiarum hujusmodi nomen; and after Sixtus V. they again revived. I cannot discern either the justice or magnanimity of Louis XIV. who in 1687 sent his ambassador, the marquis de Lavardin, to Rome, with an armed force of a thousand officers, guards, and domestics, to maintain this iniquitous claim, and insult pope Innocent XI. in the heart of his capital (Vita di Sisto V. tom. iii. p. 260—273. Muratori, Annali d'Italia, tom. xv. p. 494—496. and Voltaire, Siecle de Louis XIV. tom. ii. c. 14. p. 58, 59.).

<sup>57</sup> This outrage produced a decree, which was inscribed on marble, and placed in the Capitol. It is expressed in a style of manly simplicity and freedom: Si quis, sine privatus, sine magistratum gerens de collocandâ vivo pontifici statuâ mentionem facere ausit, legitimo S. P. Q. R. decreto in perpetuum infamis et publicorum munerum expers erit. MDXC. mense Augusto (Vita di Sisto V. tom. iii. p. 469.). I believe that this decree is still observed, and I know that every monarch who deserves a statue, should himself impose the prohibition.

C H A P. am I willing, in these last moments, to offend even the pope and LXX. clergy of Rome<sup>s</sup>.

<sup>s</sup> The histories of the church, Italy, and Christendom, have contributed to the chapter which I now conclude. In the original Lives of the Popes, we often discover the city and republic of Rome; and the events of the xivth and xvth centuries are preserved in the rude and domestic chronicles which I have carefully inspected, and shall recapitulate in the order of time.

1. Monaldeschi (Ludovici Boncomitis) Fragmenta Annalium Roman. A. D. 1328, in the Scriptores Rerum Italicarum of Muratori, tom. xii. p. 525. N. B. The credit of this fragment is somewhat hurt by a singular interpolation, in which the author relates his own death at the age of 115 years.
2. Fragmenta Historiæ Romanæ (vulgo Thomæ Fortificæ), in Romana Dialecto vulgari (A. D. 1327—1354, in Muratori, Antiquitat. mediæ Ævi Italiæ, tom. iii. p. 247—548.): the authentic ground-work of the history of Rienzi.
3. Delphini (Gentilis) Diarium Romanum (A. D. 1370—1410), in the Rerum Italicarum, tom. iii. P. ii. p. 846.
4. Antonii (Petri) Diarium Rom. (A. D. 1404—1417.), tom. xxiv. p. 969.
5. Petroni (Pauli) Miscellanea Historica Romana (A. D. 1433—1446), tom. xxiv. p. 1101.
6. Volaterrani (Jacob.) Diarium Rom. (A. D. 1472—1484), tom. xxiii. p. 81.
7. Anonymi Diarium Urbis Romæ (A. D. 1481—1492), tom. iii. P. ii. p. 1069.
8. Infessuræ (Stephani) Diarium Romanum (A. D. 1294, or 1378—1494.), tom. iii. P. ii. p. 1109.
9. Historia Arcana Alexandri VI. five Excerpta ex Diario Joh. Burcardi (A. D. 1472—1573), edita a Godefr. Gulielm. Leibnizio, Hanover, 1697, in 4<sup>to</sup>. The large and valuable Journal of Burcard might be completed from the MSS. in different libraries of Italy and France (M. de Ponceinagne, in the Memoires de l'Acad. des Inscript. tom. xvii. p. 597—606.).

Except the last, all these fragments and diaries are inserted in the Collections of Muratori, my guide and master in the history of Italy. His country, and the public, are indebted to him for the following works on that subject: 1. Rerum Italicarum Scriptores (A. D. 500—1500), quorum potissima pars nunc primum in lucem prodit, &c. xviii vols. in folio, Milan, 1723—1738. 1751. A volume of chronological and alphabetical tables is still wanting as a key to this great work, which is yet in a disorderly and defective state. 2. Antiquitates Italiæ mediæ Ævi, vi vols. in folio, Milan, 1738—1743, in lxxv curious dissertations on the manners, government, religion, &c. of the Italians of the darker ages, with a large supplement of charters, chronicles, &c. 3. Dissertioni sopra le Antiquità Italiane, iii vols. in 4<sup>to</sup>, Milano, 1751, a free version by the author, which may be quoted with the same confidence as the Latin text of the Antiquities. 4. Annali d'Italia, xviii vols. in octavo, Milan, 1753—1756, a dry, though accurate and useful, abridgement of the history of Italy from the birth of Christ to the middle of the xviiith century. 5. Dell' Antichità Estense ed Italiane, ii vols. in folio, Modena, 1717. 1740. In the history of this illustrious race, the parent of our Brunswick kings, the critic is not seduced by the loyalty or gratitude of the subject. In all his works, Muratori approves himself a diligent and laborious writer, who aspires above the prejudices of a Catholic priest. He was born in the year 1672, and died in the year 1750, after passing near sixty years in the libraries of Milan and Modena (Vita del Proposto Ludovico Antonio Muratori, by his nephew and successor Gian. Francesco Soli Muratori, Venezia, 1756, in 4<sup>to</sup>).

C H A P. LXXI.

*Prospect of the Ruins of Rome in the Fifteenth Century.
—Four Causes of Decay and Destruction.—Example of the Coliseum.—Renovation of the City.—Conclusion of the whole Work.*

IN the last days of pope Eugenius the fourth, two of his servants, the learned Poggius<sup>1</sup> and a friend, ascended the Capitoline hill; reposed themselves among the ruins of columns and temples; and viewed from that commanding spot the wide and various prospect of desolation<sup>2</sup>. The place and the object gave ample scope for moralising on the vicissitudes of fortune, which spares neither man nor the proudest of his works, which buries empires and cities in a common grave; and it was agreed, that in proportion to her former greatness, the fall of Rome was the more awful and deplorable. “ Her primæval state, such as she might appear in a remote age, when Evander entertained the stranger of Troy<sup>3</sup>, has been delineated by the fancy of Virgil. This Tarpeian rock was then a savage and solitary thicket: in the time of the poet, it was crowned with the golden roofs of a temple; the temple is overthrown, the gold has been pillaged, the wheel of fortune has ac-

C H A P.
LXXI.

View and discourse of Poggius from the Capito-
line hill,
A. D. 1430.

<sup>1</sup> I have already (not. 50, 51. on chap. 65.) mentioned the age, character, and writings of Poggius; and particularly noticed the date of this elegant moral lecture on the varieties of fortune.

<sup>2</sup> Confedimus in ipsis Tarpeie arcis ruinis, pone iogens portæ cujusdam, ut puto, templi, marmoreum limen, plurimasque passim con-

fractas columnas, unde magnâ ex parte prospectus urbis patet (p. 5.).

<sup>3</sup> Æneid viii. 97—369. This ancient picture, so artfully introduced, and so exquisitely finished, must have been highly interesting to an inhabitant of Rome; and our early studies allow us to sympathise in the feelings of a Roman.

C H A P.
LXXI.

“ completed her revolution, and the sacred ground is again dis“ figured with thorns and brambles. The hill of the Capitol, on “ which we sit, was formerly the head of the Roman empire, the “ citadel of the earth, the terror of kings; illustrated by the foot“ steps of so many triumphs, enriched with the spoils and tributes “ of so many nations. This spectacle of the world, how is it “ fallen! how changed! how defaced! the path of victory is obli“ terated by vines, and the benches of the senators are concealed “ by a dunghill. Cast your eyes on the Palatine hill, and seek “ among the shapeless and enormous fragments, the marble theatre,
 “ the obelisks, the colossal statues, the porticoes of Nero’s palace:
 “ survey the other hills of the city, the vacant space is interrupted “ only by ruins and gardens. The forum of the Roman people, “ where they assembled to enact their laws and elect their magis“ trates, is now enclosed for the cultivation of pot-herbs, or thrown “ open for the reception of swine and buffaloes. The public and “ private edifices, that were founded for eternity, lie prostrate, “ naked, and broken, like the limbs of a mighty giant; and the “ ruin is the more visible, from the stupendous relics that have “ survived the injuries of time and fortune*.”

His description of the ruins.

These relics are minutely described by Poggius, one of the first who raised his eyes from the monuments of legendary, to those of classic, superstition<sup>5</sup>. 1. Besides a bridge, an arch, a sepulchre, and the pyramid of Cestius, he could discern, of the age of the republic, a double row of vaults in the salt-office of the Capitol, which were inscribed with the name and munificence of Catulus. 2. Eleven temples were visible in some degree, from the perfect form of the Pantheon, to the three arches and a marble column of the temple of peace, which Vespasian erected after the civil wars and the * Capitolium adeo . . . immutatum ut vineæ in senatorum subsellia successerint, stercorem ac purgamentorum receptaculum factum. Respice ad Palatinum montem . . . vasta rudera . . . ceteros colles perlustra omnia vacua ædificiis, ruinis vineisque oppleta conspicias (Poggius de Varietat. Fortunæ, p. 21.).

<sup>5</sup> See Poggius, p. 8--22.

Jewish triumph. 3. Of the number, which he rashly defines, of seven thermæ or public baths, none were sufficiently entire to represent the use and distribution of the several parts; but those of Diocletian and Antoninus Caracalla still retained the titles of the founders, and astonished the curious spectator, who, in observing their solidity and extent, the variety of marbles, the size and multitude of the columns, compared the labour and expence with the use and importance. Of the baths of Constantine, of Alexander, of Domitian, or rather of Titus, some vestige might yet be found. 4. The triumphal arches of Titus, Severus, and Constantine, were entire, both the structure and the inscriptions; a falling fragment was honoured with the name of Trajan; and two arches, then extant, in the Flaminian way, have been ascribed to the baser memory of Faustina and Gallienus. 5. After the wonder of the Coliseum, Poggius might have overlooked a small amphitheatre of brick, most probably for the use of the prætorian camp: the theatres of Marcellus and Pompey were occupied in a great measure by public and private buildings; and in the Circus, Agonalis and Maximus, little more than the situation and the form could be investigated. 6. The columns of Trajan and Antonine were still erect; but the Egyptian obelisks were broken or buried. A people of gods and heroes, the workmanship of art, was reduced to one equestrian figure of gilt brass, and to five marble statues, of which the most conspicuous were the two horses of Phidias and Praxiteles. 7. The two mausoleums or sepulchres of Augustus and Hadrian could not totally be lost; but the former was only visible as a mound of earth; and the latter, the castle of St. Angelo, had acquired the name and appearance of a modern fortress. With the addition of some separate and nameless columns, such were the remains of the ancient city: for the marks of a more recent structure might be detected in the walls, which formed a circumference of ten miles, included three hundred and seventy-nine turrets, and opened into the country by thirteen gates.

C H A P.
LXXI.

C. H. A. P.
LXXI.
Gradual decline of Rome.

This melancholy picture was drawn above nine hundred years after the fall of the Western empire, and even of the Gothic kingdom of Italy. A long period of distress and anarchy, in which empire, and arts, and riches, had migrated from the banks of the Tyber, was incapable of restoring or adorning the city; and, as all that is human must retrograde if it do not advance, every successive age must have hastened the ruin of the works of antiquity. To measure the progress of decay, and to ascertain at each æra the state of each edifice, would be an endless and a useless labour, and I shall content myself with two observations which will introduce a short enquiry into the general causes and effects. 1. Two hundred years before the eloquent complaint of Poggius, an anonymous writer composed a description of Rome<sup>6</sup>. His ignorance may repeat the same objects under strange and fabulous names. Yet this barbarous topographer had eyes and ears, he could observe the visible remains, he could listen to the tradition of the people, and he distinctly enumerates seven theatres, eleven baths, twelve arches, and eighteen palaces, of which many had disappeared before the time of Poggius. It is apparent, that many stately monuments of antiquity survived till a late period<sup>7</sup>, and that the principles of destruction acted with vigorous and increasing energy in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. 2. The same reflection must be applied to the three last ages; and we should vainly seek the Septizonium of Severus<sup>8</sup>, which is celebrated by Petrarch and the antiquarians of bitur qui Romanis antiquitatibus indagandis operam navabit (p. 283.).

<sup>6</sup> Liber de Mirabilibus Romæ, ex Registro Nicolai Cardinalis de Arragoniâ, in Bibliothecâ St. Iuliani Armario LV. N<sup>o</sup> 67. This treatise, with some short but pertinent notes, has been published by Montfaucon (Diarium Italicum, p. 273—274.), who thus delivers his own critical opinion: Scriptor xiiii<sup>m</sup> circiter sæculi, ut ibidem notatur; antiquariæ rei imperitus, et, ut ab illo r. o. magis et anilibus fabulis refertur: sed, quia monumenta quæ illi temporibus Romæ supererant pro modulo recenset, non parum inde lucis mutua-

<sup>7</sup> The Pere Mabillon (Analecæ, tom. iv. p. 302.) has published an anonymous pilgrim of the ixth century, who, in his visit round the churches and holy places of Rome, touches on several buildings, especially porticoes, which had disappeared before the xiiith century.

<sup>8</sup> On the Septizonium, see the Memoires sur Petrarque (tom. i. p. 325.), Donatus (p. 338.), and Nardini (p. 117. 414.).

the sixteenth century. While the Roman edifices were still entire, the first blows, however weighty and impetuous, were resisted by the solidity of the mass and the harmony of parts; but the slightest touch would precipitate the fragments of arches and columns, that already nodded to their fall.

C. H. A. P.
LXXI.

After a diligent enquiry, I can discern four principal causes of the ruin of Rome, which continued to operate in a period of more than a thousand years. I. The injuries of time and nature. II. The hostile attacks of the Barbarians and Christians. III. The use and abuse of the materials. And, IV. The domestic quarrels of the Romans.

Four causes of destruction.

I. The art of man is able to construct monuments far more permanent than the narrow span of his own existence: yet these monuments, like himself, are perishable and frail; and in the boundless annals of time, his life and his labours must equally be measured as a fleeting moment. Of a simple and solid edifice, it is not easy however to circumscribe the duration. As the wonders of ancient days, the pyramids<sup>9</sup> attracted the curiosity of the ancients: an hundred generations, the leaves of autumn<sup>10</sup>, have dropt into the grave; and after the fall of the Pharaohs and Ptolemies, the Cæsars and caliphs, the same pyramids stand erect and unshaken above the floods of the Nile. A complex figure of various and minute parts is more accessible to injury and decay; and the silent lapse of time is often accelerated by hurricanes and earthquakes, by fires and inundations. The air and earth have doubtless been shaken; and the lofty turrets of Rome have tottered from their foundations: but the seven hills do not appear to be placed on the great cavities of the globe; nor has the city, in any age, been exposed to the convul-

I. The injuries of nature;

hurricanes,
and earthquakes;

<sup>9</sup> The age of the pyramids is remote and unknown, since Dioſorus Siculus (tom. i. l. i. c. 44. p. 72.) is unable to decide whether they were constructed 1000, or 3400, years before the cxxxth Olympiad. Sir John Jansſon's contracted scale of the Egyptian dynasties would fix them about 2000 years before Christ (Canon. Chronicus, p. 27.).

<sup>10</sup> See the speech of Glaucus in the Iliad (Z. 146.). This natural but melancholy image is familiar to Homer.

CHAPTER
LXXI.
Fires;

sions of nature, which, in the climate of Antioch, Lisbon, or Lima, have crumbled in a few moments the works of ages into dust. Fire is the most powerful agent of life and death: the rapid mischief may be kindled and propagated by the industry or negligence of mankind; and every period of the Roman annals is marked by the repetition of similar calamities. A memorable conflagration, the guilt or misfortune of Nero's reign, continued, though with unequal fury, either six, or nine days<sup>11</sup>. Innumerable buildings, crowded in close and crooked streets, supplied perpetual fuel for the flames; and when they ceased, four only of the fourteen regions were left entire; three were totally destroyed, and seven were deformed by the relics of smoking and lacerated edifices<sup>12</sup>. In the full meridian of empire, the metropolis arose with fresh beauty from her ashes; yet the memory of the old deplored their irreparable losses, the arts of Greece, the trophies of victory, the monuments of primitive or fabulous antiquity. In the days of distress and anarchy, every wound is mortal, every fall irretrievable; nor can the damage be restored either by the public care of government or the activity of private interest. Yet two causes may be alleged, which render the calamity of fire more destructive to a flourishing than a decayed city. 1. The more combustible materials of brick, timber, and metals, are first melted or consumed; but the flames may play without injury or effect on the naked walls, and massy arches, that have been despoiled of their ornaments. 2. It is among the common and plebeian habitations, that a mischievous spark is most easily blown to a miusta. Among the old relics that were irreparably lost, Tacitus enumerates the temple of the moon of Servius Tullius; the fane and altar consecrated by Evander præfenti Herculi; the temple of Jupiter Stator, a vow of Romulus; the palace of Numa; the temple of Vesta cum Penatibus populi Romani. He then deplores the opes tot victoriis quæsitæ et Græcarum artium decora. . . . multa quæ seniores meminerant, quæ reparari nequibant (Annal. xv. 40, 41.).

<sup>11</sup> The learning and criticism of M. des Vignoles (Histoire Critique de la Republique des Lettres, tom. viii. p. 74—118. ix. p. 172—187.) dates the fire of Rome from A. D. 64, July 19, and the subsequent persecution of the Christians from November 15, of the same year.

<sup>12</sup> Quippe in regiones quatuordecim Roma dividitur, quarum quatuor integræ manebant, tres solo tenuis dejectæ: septem reliquis pauca tectorum vestigia supererant, lacera et se-

confla-

conflagration; but as soon as they are devoured, the greater edifices which have resisted or escaped, are left as so many islands in a state of solitude and safety. From her situation, Rome is exposed to the danger of frequent inundations. Without excepting the Tyber, the rivers that descend from either side of the Apennine have a short and irregular course: a shallow stream in the summer heats; an impetuous torrent, when it is swelled in the spring or winter, by the fall of rain, and the melting of the snows. When the current is repelled from the sea by adverse winds, when the ordinary bed is inadequate to the weight of waters, they rise above the banks, and overspread, without limits or control, the plains and cities of the adjacent country. Soon after the triumph of the first Punic war, the Tyber was increased by unusual rains; and the inundation, surpassing all former measure of time and place, destroyed all the buildings that were situate below the hills of Rome. According to the variety of ground, the same mischief was produced by different means; and the edifices were either swept away by the sudden impulse, or dissolved and undermined by the long continuance, of the flood<sup>13</sup>. Under the reign of Augustus, the same calamity was renewed: the lawless river overturned the palaces and temples on its banks<sup>14</sup>; and, after the labours of the emperor in cleansing and widening the bed that was incumbered with ruins<sup>15</sup>, the vigilance of his successors was exercised by similar dangers and designs. The project

C H A P.
LXXI.inunda-
tions.

<sup>13</sup> A. U. C. 507, repentina subversio ipsius Romæ prævenit triumphum Romanorum . . . diversæ ignium aquarumque clades pene absumere urbem. Nam Tiberis insolitis auctus imbribus et ultra opinionem, vel diurnitate vel magnitudine redundans, omnia Romæ ædificia in plano posita delevit. Diversæ qualitates locorum ad unam convenere perniciem: quoniam et quæ seignior inundatio tenuit madefacta dissolvit, et quæ cursus torrentis invenit impulsâ dejecit (Orosius, Hist. l. iv. c. 11. p. 244. edit. Havercamp). Yet we may observe, that it is the plan and study of the Christian apologist, to magnify the calamities of the pagan world.

<sup>14</sup> Vidimus flavum Tiberim, retortis

Littore Etrusco violenter undis

Ire dejectum monumenta Regis

Templaque Vestæ. (Horat. Carm. I. 2.)

If the palace of Numa, and temple of Vesta, were thrown down in Horace's time, what was consumed of those buildings by Nero's fire could hardly deserve the epithets of vetustissima or incompacta.

<sup>15</sup> Ad coercendas inundationes alveum Tiberis laxavit, ac repurgavit, completum olim ruderibus, et ædificiorum prolapsionibus contractatum (Suetonius in Augusto, c. 30.).

C H A P.
LXXI.

of diverting into new channels the Tyber itself, or some of the dependent streams, was long opposed by superstition and local interests<sup>16</sup>; nor did the use compensate the toil and cost of the tardy and imperfect execution. The servitude of rivers is the noblest and most important victory which man has obtained over the licentiousness of nature<sup>17</sup>; and if such were the ravages of the Tyber under a firm and active government, what could oppose, or who can enumerate, the injuries of the city after the fall of the Western empire? A remedy was at length produced by the evil itself: the accumulation of rubbish and the earth, that has been washed down from the hills, is supposed to have elevated the plain of Rome, fourteen or fifteen feet, perhaps, above the ancient level<sup>18</sup>; and the modern city is less accessible to the attacks of the river<sup>19</sup>.

II. The hostile attacks of the Barbarians and Christians.

II. The crowd of writers of every nation, who impute the destruction of the Roman monuments to the Goths and the Christians, have neglected to enquire how far they were animated by an hostile principle, and how far they possessed the means and the leisure to satiate their enmity. In the preceding volumes of this History, I have described the triumph of barbarism and religion; and I can only resume, in a few words, their real or imaginary connection with the ruin of ancient Rome. Our fancy may create, or adopt, a pleasing romance, that the Goths and Vandals sallied from Scandinavia, ardent to avenge the flight of Odin<sup>20</sup>, to break the chains, and

<sup>16</sup> Tacitus (Annal. i. 79.) reports the petitions of the different towns of Italy to the senate against the measure; and we may applaud the progress of reason. On a similar occasion, local interests would undoubtedly be consulted: but an English house of commons would reject with contempt the arguments of superstition, "that nature had assigned to the rivers their proper course, &c."

<sup>17</sup> See the Epoques de la Nature of the eloquent and philosophic Buffon. His picture of Guyana in South America, is that of a new and savage land, in which the waters are abandoned to themselves, without being regulated by human industry (p. 212. 561. quarto edition).

<sup>18</sup> In his Travels in Italy, Mr. Addison (his works, vol. ii. p. 98. Baskerville's edition) has observed this curious and unquestionable fact.

<sup>19</sup> Yet in modern times, the Tyber has sometimes damaged the city; and in the years 1530, 1557, 1598, the Annals of Muratori record three mischievous and memorable inundations (tom. xiv. p. 268. 429. tom. xv. p. 99, &c.).

<sup>20</sup> I take this opportunity of declaring, that in the course of twelve years I have forgotten.

and to chastise the oppressors, of mankind ; that they wished to burn the records of classic literature, and to found their national architecture on the broken members of the Tuscan and Corinthian orders. But in simple truth, the northern conquerors were neither sufficiently savage, nor sufficiently refined, to entertain such aspiring ideas of destruction and revenge. The shepherds of Scythia and Germany had been educated in the armies of the empire, whose discipline they acquired, and whose weakness they invaded : with the familiar use of the Latin tongue, they had learned to reverence the name and titles of Rome ; and, though incapable of emulating, they were more inclined to admire, than to abolish, the arts and studies of a brighter period. In the transient possession of a rich and unresisting capital, the soldiers of Alaric and Genferic were stimulated by the passions of a victorious army ; amidst the wanton indulgence of lust or cruelty, portable wealth was the object of their search ; nor could they derive either pride or pleasure from the unprofitable reflection, that they had battered to the ground the works of the consuls and Cæsars. Their moments were indeed precious ; the Goths evacuated Rome on the sixth<sup>21</sup>, the Vandals on the fifteenth, day<sup>22</sup> ; and, though it be far more difficult to build than to destroy, their hasty assault would have made a slight impression on the solid piles of antiquity. We may remember, that both Alaric and Genferic affected to spare the buildings of the city ; that they subsisted in strength and beauty under the auspicious government of Theodoric<sup>23</sup> ; and that the momentary resentment of Totila<sup>24</sup> was disarmed by his own temper and the advice of his friends and enemies. From these innocent Barbarians, the reproach may be transferred to the Catholics of Rome. The statues, altars, and houses, of gotten, or renounced, the flight of Odin from Azoph to Sweden, which I never very seriously believed (vol. i. p. 294.). The Goths are apparently Germans : but all beyond Cæsar and Tacitus, is darkness or fable, in the antiquities of Germany.

<sup>21</sup> History of the Decline, &c. vol. iii. p. 246.

<sup>22</sup> _____ vol. iii. p. 440.

<sup>23</sup> _____ vol. iv. p. 23
—26.

<sup>24</sup> _____ vol. iv. p. 289.
293.

C H A P.
LXXXI.

the dæmons were an abomination in their eyes; and in the absolute command of the city, they might labour with zeal and perseverance to erase the idolatry of their ancestors. The demolition of the temples in the East<sup>25</sup> affords to them an example of conduct, and to us an argument of belief; and it is probable, that a portion of guilt or merit may be imputed with justice to the Roman profelytes. Yet their abhorrence was confined to the monuments of heathen superstition; and the civil structures that were dedicated to the business or pleasure of society might be preserved without injury or scandal. The change of religion was accomplished, not by a popular tumult, but by the decrees of the emperors, of the senate, and of time. Of the Christian hierarchy, the bishops of Rome were commonly the most prudent and least fanatic: nor can any positive charge be opposed to the meritorious act of saving and converting the majestic structure of the Pantheon<sup>26</sup>.

III. The use and abuse of the materials.

III. The value of any object that supplies the wants or pleasures of mankind, is compounded of its substance and its form, of the materials and the manufacture. Its price must depend on the number of persons by whom it may be acquired and used; on the extent of the market; and consequently on the ease or difficulty of remote exportation, according to the nature of the commodity, its local situation, and the temporary circumstances of the world. The Barbarian conquerors of Rome usurped in a moment the toil and treasure of successive ages; but, except the luxuries of immediate consumption, they must view without desire all that could not be removed from the city in the Gothic waggons or the fleet of the Van-

<sup>25</sup> History of the Decline, &c. vol. iii. c. xxviii. p. 79—82.

<sup>26</sup> Eodem tempore petiit a Phocate principe templum, quod appellatur Pantheon, in quo fecit ecclesiam Sanctæ Mariæ semper Virginis, et omnium martyrum; in quâ ecclesiæ princeps multa bona obtulit (Anastasius vel postius Liber Pontificalis in Bonifacio IV. in Muratori, Script. Rerum Italicarum, tom. iii. P. i. p. 135.). According to the anonymous writer in Montfaucon, the Pantheon had been vowed by Agrippa to Cybele and Neptune, and was dedicated by Boniface IV. on the calends of November to the Virgin, quæ est mater omnium sanctorum (p. 297, 298.).

dals<sup>27</sup>. Gold and silver were the first objects of their avarice; as in every country, and in the smallest compass, they represent the most ample command of the industry and possessions of mankind. A vase or a statue of those precious metals might tempt the vanity of some Barbarian chief; but the grosser multitude, regardless of the form, was tenacious only of the substance; and the melted ingots might be readily divided and stamped into the current coin of the empire. The less active or less fortunate robbers were reduced to the baser plunder of brass, lead, iron, and copper: whatever had escaped the Goths and Vandals was pillaged by the Greek tyrants; and the emperor Constant, in his rapacious visit, stripped the bronze tiles from the roof of the Pantheon<sup>28</sup>. The edifices of Rome might be considered as a vast and various mine; the first labour of extracting the materials was already performed; the metals were purified and cast; the marbles were hewn and polished; and after foreign and domestic rapine had been satiated, the remains of the city, could a purchaser have been found, were still venal. The monuments of antiquity had been left naked of their precious ornaments, but the Romans would demolish with their own hands the arches and walls, if the hope of profit could surpass the cost of the labour and exportation. If Charlemagne had fixed in Italy the seat of the Western empire, his genius would have aspired to restore, rather than to violate, the works of the Cæsars: but policy confined the French monarch to the forests of Germany; his taste could be gratified only by destruction; and the new palace of Aix la Chapelle was decorated with the marbles of

C H A P.
LXXI.

<sup>27</sup> Flaminus Vacca (apud Monfaucon, p. 155, 156. His Memoir is likewise printed, pp. 21. at the end of the Roma Antica of Nardini), and several Romans, doctrinâ graves, were persuaded that the Goths buried their treasures at Rome, and bequeathed the secret marks filiis nepotibusque. He relates some anecdotes to prove, that in his own time, these places were visited and rifled by the Transalpine pilgrims, the heirs of the Gothic conquerors.

<sup>28</sup> Omnia quæ erant in ære ad ornatum civitatis deposuit: sed et ecclesiam B. Mariæ ad martyres quæ de tegulis arcis cooperta discooperuit (Anast. in Vitalian. p. 141.). The base and sacrilegious Greek had not even the poor pretence of plundering an heathen temple; the Pantheon was already a Catholic church.

C H A P.
LXXI.

Ravenna<sup>29</sup> and Rome<sup>30</sup>. Five hundred years after Charlemagne, a king of Sicily, Robert, the wisest and most liberal sovereign of the age, was supplied with the same materials by the easy navigation of the Tyber and the sea; and Petrarch sighs an indignant complaint, that the ancient capital of the world should adorn from her own bowels the slothful luxury of Naples<sup>31</sup>. But these examples of plunder or purchase were rare in the darker ages; and the Romans, alone and unenvied, might have applied to their private or public use the remaining structures of antiquity, if in their present form and situation they had not been useless in a great measure to the city and its inhabitants. The walls still described the old circumference, but the city had descended from the seven hills into the Campus Martius; and some of the noblest monuments which had braved the injuries of time were left in a desert, far remote from the habitations of mankind. The palaces of the senators were no longer adapted to the manners or fortunes of their indigent successors: the

<sup>29</sup> For the spoils of Ravenna (musiva atque marmora) see the original grant of pope Adrian I. to Charlemagne (Codex Carolin. epit. lxxvii. in Muratori, Script. Ital. tom. iiii. P. ii. p. 223.).

<sup>30</sup> I shall quote the authentic testimony of the Saxon poet (A. D. 887—899), de Rebus gestis Caroli magni, l. v. 437—440. in the Historians of France (tom. v. p. 180.):

Ad quæ marmoreas præstabat ROMA columnas, Quasdam præcipuas pulchra Ravenna dedit
De tam longinquâ poterit regione vetustas.
Illius ornatum Francia ferre tibi.

And I shall add, from the Chronicle of Sigebert (Historians of France, tom. v. p. 378.), extruxit etiam Aquisgrani basilicam plurimæ pulchritudinis, ad cujus structuram a ROMA et Ravenna columnas et marmora devehit fecit.

<sup>31</sup> I cannot refuse to transcribe a long passage of Petrarch (Opp. p. 536, 537. in Epistolâ hortatoriâ ad Nicolaum Laurentium); it is so strong and full to the point: Nec pudor aut pietas continuit quominus impii spoliata Dei templa, occupatas arces, opes publicas regiones urbis, atque honores magistratuum inter se divisos; (habeant?) quam unâ in re, turbulenti ac feditiosi homines et totius reliquæ vitæ consiliis et rationibus discordes, inhumani fœderis stupendâ societate convenerant, in pontes et mœnia atque immeritos lapides descenderent. Denique post vi vel senio collapsa palatia, quæ quondam ingentes tenuerunt viri, post diruptos arcus triumphales (unde majores horum forsitan corruerunt), de ipsius vetustatis ac propriæ impietatis fragminibus vilem questum turpi mercimonio captare non puduit. Itaque nunc, heu dolor! heu scelus indignum! de vestris marmoreis columnis, de liminibus templorum (ad quæ nuper ex orbe toto concursus devotissimus fiebat), de imaginibus sepulchrorum sub quibus patrum vestrorum venerabilis civis (civis?) erat, ut reliquas fileam, desidiose Neapolis adornatur. Sic paullatim ruinæ ipse descidunt. Yet king Robert was the friend of Petrarch.

use of baths<sup>32</sup> and porticoes was forgotten: in the sixth century, the games of the theatre, amphitheatre, and circus, had been interrupted: some temples were devoted to the prevailing worship; but the Christian churches preferred the holy figure of the cross; and fashion, or reason, had distributed after a peculiar model the cells and offices of the cloyster. Under the ecclesiastical reign, the number of these pious foundations was enormously multiplied; and the city was crowded with forty monasteries of men, twenty of women, and sixty chapters and colleges of canons and priests<sup>33</sup>, who aggravated, instead of relieving, the depopulation of the tenth century. But if the forms of ancient architecture were disregarded by a people insensible of their use and beauty, the plentiful materials were applied to every call of necessity or superstition; till the fairest columns of the Ionic and Corinthian orders, the richest marbles of Paros and Numidia, were degraded, perhaps to the support of a convent or a stable. The daily havock which is perpetrated by the Turks in the cities of Greece and Asia, may afford a melancholy example; and in the gradual destruction of the monuments of Rome, Sixtus the fifth may alone be excused for employing the stones of the Septizonium in the glorious edifice of St. Peter's<sup>34</sup>. A fragment, a ruin, howsoever mangled or profaned, may be viewed with pleasure and regret; but the greater part of the marble was deprived of substance, as well as of place and proportion; it was burnt to lime for the purpose of cement. Since the arrival of Poggius, the temple of Concord<sup>35</sup>, and many capital structures, had vanished from his eyes;

and

C H A P.
LXXI.

<sup>32</sup> Yet Charlemagne washed and swam at Aix la Chapelle with an hundred of his courtiers (Eginhart, c. 22. p. 108, 109.), and Muratori describes as late as the year 814, the public baths which were built at Spoleto in Italy (Annali, tom. vi. p. 416.).

<sup>33</sup> See the Annals of Italy, A. D. 938. For this and the preceding fact, Muratori himself is indebted to the Benedictine history of Père Mabillon.

<sup>34</sup> Vita di Silo Quinto, da Gregorio Leti, tom. iii. p. 50.

<sup>35</sup> Porticus adis Concordia, quam cum primum ad urbem accessi vidi fere integram opere marmoreo admodum specioso: Romani postmodum ad calcem eadem totam et porticus partem disiectis columnis sunt demoliti (p. 12.). The temple of Concord was therefore not destroyed by a sedition in the xiiith century, as I have read in a MS. treatise del and an epigram of the same age expresses a just and pious fear, that the continuance of this practice would finally annihilate all the monuments of antiquity<sup>36</sup>. The smallness of their numbers was the sole check on the demands and depredations of the Romans. The imagination of Petrarch might create the presence of a mighty people<sup>37</sup>; and I hesitate to believe, that, even in the fourteenth century, they could be reduced to a contemptible list of thirty-three thousand inhabitants. From that period to the reign of Leo the tenth, if they multiplied to the amount of eighty-five thousand<sup>38</sup>, the increase of citizens was in some degree pernicious to the ancient city.

C H A P.
LXXI.

IV. The domestic quarrels of the Romans.

IV. I have reserved for the last, the most potent and forcible cause of destruction, the domestic hostilities of the Romans themselves. Under the dominion of the Greek and French emperors, the peace of the city was disturbed by accidental, though frequent, seditions: it is from the decline of the latter, from the beginning of the tenth century, that we may date the licentiousness of private war, which violated with impunity the laws of the Code and the Gospel; without respecting the majesty of the absent sovereign, or the presence and person of the vicar of Christ. In a dark period of five hundred years, Rome was perpetually afflicted by the sanguinary quarrels of the nobles and the people, the Guelphs and Ghibelines, the Colonna and Ursini; and if much has escaped the knowledge, and much is unworthy of the notice, of history, I have exposed in the two preceding chapters, the causes and effects of the public disorders. At such Governo civile di Rome, lent me formerly at Rome, and ascribed (I believe falsely) to the celebrated Gravina. Poggius likewise affirms, that the sepulchre of Cæcilia Metella was burnt for lime (p. 19, 20.).

<sup>36</sup> Composed by Æneas Sylvius, afterwards pope Pius II. and published by Mabillon from a MS. of the queen of Sweden (Musæum Italicum, tom. i. p. 97.).

Obleat me, Roma, tuas spectare ruinas;
Ex cujus lapsu gloria præca patet.
Sed tuus hic populus muris defossa vetustis

*Calcis in obsequium marmora dura coquit
Impia tercentum si sic gens egerit annos Nullum hinc indicium nobilitatis erit.*

<sup>37</sup> Vagabamur pariter in illâ urbe tam magnâ; que, cum propter spatium vacua videretur, populum habet immensum (Opp. p. 605. Epist. Familiares, ii. 14.).

<sup>38</sup> These states of the population of Rome at different periods, are derived from an ingenious treatise of the physician Lancisi, de Romani Cœli Qualitatibus (p. 122.).

a time,

a time, when every quarrel was decided by the sword; and none could trust their lives or properties to the impotence of law; the powerful citizens were armed for safety or offence, against the domestic enemies, whom they feared or hated. Except Venice alone, the same dangers and designs were common to all the free republics of Italy; and the nobles usurped the prerogative of fortifying their houses, and erecting strong towers<sup>22</sup> that were capable of resisting a sudden attack. The cities were filled with these hostile edifices; and the example of Lucca, which contained three hundred towers; her law, which confined their height to the measure of fourscore feet, may be extended with suitable latitude to the more opulent and populous states. The first step of the senator Brancalione in the establishment of peace and justice, was to demolish (as we have already seen) one hundred and forty of the towers of Rome; and, in the last days of anarchy and discord, as late as the reign of Martin the fifth, forty-four still stood in one of the thirteen or fourteen regions of the city. To this mischievous purpose, the remains of antiquity were most readily adapted: the temples and arches afforded a broad and solid basis for the new structures of brick and stone; and we can name the modern turrets that were raised on the triumphal monuments of Julius Cæsar, Titus, and the Antonines<sup>23</sup>. With some slight alterations, a theatre, an amphitheatre, a mausoleum, was transformed into a strong and spacious citadel. I need not repeat, that the mole of Adrian has assumed the title and form of the castle of St. Angelo<sup>24</sup>; the Septizonium of Severus was capable

C H A P.
LXXII.

<sup>22</sup> All the facts that relate to the towers at Rome, and in other free cities of Italy, may be found in the laborious and entertaining compilation of Muratori, Antiquitates Italix mediæ ævi, dissertat. xxvii. (tom. ii. p. 493—496. of the Latin, tom. i. p. 446. of the Italian work).

<sup>23</sup> As for instance, Templum Jani nunc dicitur, turris Centii Frangapanis; et sane
Vol. VI

Jani impolita turris lateritia conspicua hodieque vestigia supersensit (Lambertson Diarium Italicum, p. 1200). The anonymous writer (p. 213) enumerates, arcus Titii, turris Castellanæ; Arcus Junii Cæsaræ et Antoninorum, turris de Brachis; arcus Antonini, turris de Colonna, &c.

<sup>24</sup> Has tunc molem... magna ex parte Romanorum injuria... edificavit (Lambertson op. cit.)

C H A P.
LXXI.

capable of standing against a royal army<sup>42</sup>; the sepulchre of Metella has sunk under its outworks<sup>43</sup>; the theatres of Pompey and Marcellus were occupied by the Savelli and Urfini families<sup>44</sup>; and the rough fortress has been gradually softened to the splendour and elegance of an Italian palace. Even the churches were encompassed with arms and bulwarks, and the military engines on the roof of St. Peter's were the terror of the Vatican and the scandal of the Christian world. Whatever is fortified will be attacked; and whatever is attacked may be destroyed. Could the Romans have wrested from the popes the castle of St. Angelo, they had resolved by a public decree to annihilate that monument of servitude. Every building of defence was exposed to a siege; and in every siege the arts and engines of destruction were laboriously employed. After the death of Nicholas the fourth, Rome, without a sovereign or a senate, was abandoned six months to the fury of civil war. "The houses," says a cardinal and poet of the times<sup>45</sup>, "were crushed by the weight and velocity of enormous stones<sup>46</sup>"; the walls were perforated by the strokes of the battering-ram; the towers were involved in fire and smoke; and the certe funditus evertissent, si eorum manibus pervia, absumptis grandibus saxis, reliqua moles exstitisset (Poggius de Varietate Fortium, p. 12.).

<sup>42</sup> Against the emperor Henry IV. (Muratori, Annali d'Italia, tom. ix. p. 147.).

<sup>43</sup> I must copy an important passage of Montfaucon: Terris ingens rotunda... Ceciliæ Metellæ...sepulchrum erat, cujus muri tam solidi, ut spatium perquam minimum intus vacuum superfit; et Terre di Bove dicitur, a boum capitibus muro inscriptis. Huic sequiori ævo, tempore intestinorum bellorum, ceu urbecula adjuncta fuit, cujus moenia et turres etiamnum visuntur; ita ut sepulchrum Metellæ quasi arx oppiduli fuerit. Perventibus in urbe partibus, cum Urfini atque Columnensîs mutuis cladibus perniciem interrent civitati, in utriusque partis ditionem cederet magis momenti erat (p. 142.).

<sup>44</sup> See the testimonies of Donatus, Nardini, and Montfaucon. In the Savelli palace, the remains of the theatre of Marcellus are still great and conspicuous.

<sup>45</sup> James cardinal of St. George, ad velum aureum, in his metrical Life of Pope Celestin V. (Muratori, Script. Ital. tom. i. P. iii. p. 621. l. i. c. 1. ver. 132, &c.)

Hoc dixisse sit est, Romani caruisse Senatû
Mensibus exactis heu rex; belloque vocatum (vocatus)
In scelus, in socios fratre:naque vulnera patres;
'Tormentis jecisse viros immania saxa;
Perfodisse domus trabibus, fecisse ruinas
Ignibus; incensas turres, obscuratque fumo
Lumina vicino, quo sit spoliata sepulchra.

<sup>46</sup> Muratori (Dissertazione sopra le Antiquità Italiane, tom. i. p. 427--431.) finds, that stone bullets of two or three hundred pounds weight were not uncommon; and they are sometimes computed at xii or xviii cantari of Genoa, each cantaro weighing 150 pounds.

"assailants

“ assailants were stimulated by rapine and revenge.” The work was consummated by the tyranny of the laws; and the factions of Italy alternately exercised a blind and thoughtless vengeance on their adversaries, whose houses and castles they razed to the ground<sup>47</sup>. In comparing the days of foreign, with the ages of domestic, hostility, we must pronounce, that the latter have been far more ruinous to the city, and our opinion is confirmed by the evidence of Petrarch. “ Behold,” says the laureat, “ the relics of Rome, the image of her “ pristine greatness! neither time nor the Barbarian can boast the “ merit of this stupendous destruction: it was perpetrated by her “ own citizens, by the most illustrious of her sons; and your an“ cestors (he writes to a noble Annibaldi) have done with the bat“ tering-ram, what the Punic hero could not accomplish with the “ sword<sup>48</sup>.” The influence of the two last principles of decay must in some degree be multiplied by each other; since the houses and towers, which were subverted by civil war, required a new and perpetual supply from the monuments of antiquity.

These general observations may be separately applied to the amphitheatre of Titus, which has obtained the name of the COLISEUM<sup>49</sup>, either from its magnitude or from Nero’s colossal statue: an edifice, had it been left to time and nature, which might perhaps have claimed an eternal duration. The curious antiquaries,

The Colifeum or amphitheatre of Titus.

<sup>47</sup> The vith law of the Visconti prohibits this common and mischievous practice; and strictly enjoins, that the houses of banished citizens should be preserved pro communi utilitate (Gualvaneus de la Flamma, in Muratori, Script. Rerum Italicarum, tom. xii. p. 1041.).

<sup>48</sup> Petrarch thus addresses his friend who, with shame and tears, had shewn him the mœnia, lacera specimen miserabile Romæ, and declared his own intention of restoring them (Carmina Latina, l. ii. epist. Paulo Annibalensi, xii. p. 97, 98.):

Nec te parva manet servatis fama ruinis
Quanta quod integre fuit olim gloria Romæ

Reliquiæ testantur adhuc; quas longior ætas
Frangere non valuit; non vis aut ira cruenti Hostis, ab egregiis franguntur civibus heri! heri!
————— Quod ille nequivit (Annibal)

Perficit hic aries.

<sup>49</sup> The fourth part of the Verona Illustrata of the Marquis Maffei, professedly treats of amphitheatres, particularly those of Rome and Verona, of their dimensions, wooden galleries, &c. It is from magnitude that he derives the name of Coliseum, or Colysium: since the same appellation was applied to the amphitheatre of Capua, without the aid of a colossal statue; since that of Nero was erected in the court (in atrio) of his palace, and not in the Coliseum (P. iv. p. 15—19. l. i. c. 4.).

C H A P.
LXXI.

who have computed the numbers and feats, are disposed to believe, that above the upper row of stone steps, the amphitheatre was encircled and elevated with several stages of wooden galleries, which were repeatedly consumed by fire, and restored by the emperors. Whatever was precious, or portable, or profane, the statues of gods and heroes, and the costly ornaments of sculpture, which were cast in brass, or overspread with leaves of silver and gold, became the first prey of conquest or fanaticism, of the avarice of the Barbarians or the Christians. In the massy stones of the Coliseum, many holes are discerned; and the two most probable conjectures represent the various accidents of its decay. These stones were connected by solid links of brass or iron, nor had the eye of rapine overlooked the value of the baser metals<sup>50</sup>: the vacant space was converted into a fair or market; the artificers of the Coliseum are mentioned in an ancient survey; and the chasms were perforated or enlarged to receive the poles that supported the shops or tents of the mechanic trades<sup>51</sup>. Reduced to its naked majesty, the Flavian amphitheatre was contemplated with awe and admiration by the pilgrims of the North; and their rude enthusiasm broke forth in a sublime proverbial expression, which is recorded in the eighth century, in the fragments of the venerable Bede: “As long as the Coliseum stands, Rome shall stand; when the Coliseum falls, Rome will fall; when Rome falls, the world will fall<sup>52</sup>.” In the modern system of war, a situation commanded by three hills would not be chosen for a fortress; but the strength of the walls and arches could resist

<sup>50</sup> Joseph Maria Suarés, a learned bishop, and the author of an history of Præneste, has composed a separate dissertation on the seven or eight probable causes of these holes, which has been since reprinted in the Roman Thesaurus of Sallengre. Montfaucon (Diarium, p. 233.) pronounces the rapine of the Barbarians to be the unam germanamque causam foraminum.

<sup>51</sup> Donatus, Roma Vetus et Nova, p. 285.

<sup>52</sup> Quamdiu stabit Colyseus, stabit et Roma; quando cadet Colyseus, cadet Roma; quando cadet Roma, cadet et mundus (Beda in Excerptis seu Collectaneis apud Ducange Glossar. med. et infimæ Latinitatis, tom. ii. p. 407. edit. Bafil). This saying must be ascribed to the Anglo-Saxon pilgrims who visited Rome before the year 735, the æra of Bede's death; for I do not believe that our venerable monk ever passed the sea.

the

the engines of assault ; a numerous garrison might be lodged in the enclosure ; and while one faction occupied the Vatican and the Capitol, the other was intrenched in the Lateran and the Coliseum<sup>53</sup>.

C H A P.
LXXI.

The abolition at Rome of the ancient games must be understood with some latitude ; and the carnival sports, of the Testacean mount and the Circus Agonalis<sup>54</sup>, were regulated by the law<sup>55</sup> or custom of the city. The senator presided with dignity and pomp to adjudge and distribute the prizes, the gold ring, or the pallium<sup>56</sup>, as it was styled, of cloth or silk. A tribute on the Jews supplied the annual expence<sup>57</sup> ; and the races, on foot, on horseback, or in chariots, were ennobled by a tilt and tournament of seventy-two of the Roman youth. In the year one thousand three hundred and thirty-two, a bull-feast, after the fashion of the Moors and Spaniards, was celebrated in the Coliseum itself ; and the living manners are painted in a diary of the times<sup>58</sup>. A convenient order of benches was restored ; and a general proclamation, as far as Rimini and Ravenna,

Games of Rome.

A bull-feast
in the Coliseum,
A. D. 1332,
September 3.

<sup>53</sup> I cannot recover in Muratori's original Lives of the Popes (Script. Rerum Italicarum, tom. iii. P. i.) the passage that attests this hostile partition, which must be applied to the end of the xth or the beginning of the xiiith century.

<sup>54</sup> Although the structure of the Circus Agonalis be destroyed, it still retains its form and name (Agona, Nagona, Navona): and the interior space affords a sufficient level for the purpose of racing. But the Monte Testaceo, that strange pile of broken pottery, seems only adapted for the annual practice of hurling from top to bottom some waggon-loads of live hogs for the diversion of the populace (Statuta Urbis Romæ, p. 186.).

<sup>55</sup> See the Statuta Urbis Romæ, l. iii. c. 87, 83, 89. p. 185, 186. I have already given an idea of this municipal code. The races of Nagona and Monte Testaceo are likewise mentioned in the Diary of Peter Antonius from 1404 to 1417 (Muratori, Script. Rerum Italicarum, tom. xxiv. p. 1124.).

<sup>56</sup> The Pallium, which Menage so foolishly derives from Palmarium, is an easy extension of the idea and the words, from the robe or cloak, to the materials, and from thence to their application as a prize (Muratori, dissert. xxxiii.).

<sup>57</sup> For these expences, the Jews of Rome paid each year 1130 florins, of which the odd thirty represented the pieces of silver for which Judas had betrayed his master to their ancestors. There was a foot-race of Jewish, as well as of Christian youths (Statuta Urbis, ibidem).

<sup>58</sup> This extraordinary bull-feast in the Coliseum, is described from tradition, rather than memory, by Ludovico Buonconte Monaldesco, in the most ancient fragments of Roman annals (Muratori, Script. Rerum Italicarum, tom. xii. p. 535, 536.): and however fanciful they may seem, they are deeply marked with the colours of truth and nature.

C H A P. invited the nobles to exercise their skill and courage in this perilous LXXI. adventure. The Roman ladies were marshalled in three squadrons, and seated in three balconies, which on this day, the third of September, were lined with scarlet cloth. The fair Jacova di Rovere led the matrons from beyond the Tyber, a pure and native race, who still represent the features and character of antiquity. The remainder of the city was divided as usual between the Colonna and Ursini: the two factions were proud of the number and beauty of their female bands: the charms of Savella Ursini are mentioned with praise; and the Colonna regretted the absence of the youngest of their house, who had sprained her ancle in the garden of Nero's tower. The lots of the champions were drawn by an old and respectable citizen; and they descended into the arena, or pit, to encounter the wild-bulls, on foot as it should seem, with a single spear.
 Amidst the crowd, our annalist has selected the names, colours, and devices, of twenty of the most conspicuous knights. Several of the names are the most illustrious of Rome and the ecclesiastical state;
 Malatesta, Polenta, della Valle, Cafarello, Savelli, Capoccio, Conti, Annibaldi, Altieri, Corsi; the colours were adapted to their taste and situation; the devices are expressive of hope or despair, and breathe the spirit of gallantry and arms. "I am alone, like the "youngest of the Horatii," the confidence of an intrepid stranger:
 "I live disconsolate," a weeping widower: "I burn under the "ashes," a discreet lover: "I adore Lavinia, or Lucretia," the ambiguous declaration of a modern passion: "My faith is as pure," the motto of a white livery: "Who is stronger than myself?" of a lion's hide: "If I am drowned in blood, what a pleasant death," the wish of ferocious courage. The pride or prudence of the Ursini restrained them from the field, which was occupied by three of their hereditary rivals, whose inscriptions denoted the lofty greatness of the Colonna name: "Though sad, I am strong:" "Strong as I "am great:" "If I fall," addressing himself to the spectators, "you "fall

“fall with me:”—intimating (says the contemporary writer) that while the other families were the subjects of the Vatican, they alone were the supporters of the Capitol. The combats of the amphitheatre were dangerous and bloody. Every champion successively encountered a wild bull; and the victory may be ascribed to the quadrupedes, since no more than eleven were left on the field, with the loss of nine wounded and eighteen killed on the side of their adversaries. Some of the noblest families might mourn, but the pomp of the funerals, in the churches of St. John Lateran and St. Maria Maggiore, afforded a second holiday to the people. Doubtless it was not in such conflicts that the blood of the Romans should have been shed; yet in blaming their rashness, we are compelled to applaud their gallantry; and the noble volunteers, who display their magnificence, and risk their lives, under the balconies of the fair, excite a more generous sympathy than the thousands of captives and malefactors who were reluctantly dragged to the scene of slaughter<sup>59</sup>.

C H A P.
LXXI.

This use of the amphitheatre was a rare, perhaps a singular, festival: the demand for the materials was a daily and continual want, which the citizens could gratify without restraint or remorse. In the fourteenth century, a scandalous act of concord secured to both factions the privilege of extracting stones from the free and common quarry of the Coliseum<sup>60</sup>; and Poggius laments that the greater part of these stones had been burnt to lime by the folly of the Romans<sup>61</sup>. To check this abuse, and to prevent the nocturnal crimes that might be perpetrated in the vast and gloomy recess, Eugenius the fourth

Injuries,

<sup>59</sup> Muratori has given a separate dissertation (the xxixth) to the games of the Italians in the middle ages.

<sup>60</sup> In a concise but instructive memoir, the abbé Barthelemy (Memoires de l'Academie des Inscriptions, tom. xxviii. p. 585.) has mentioned this agreement of the factions of the xivth century, de Tiburtino faciendò in the Coliseum, from an original act in the archives of Rome.

<sup>61</sup> Coliseum....ob stultitiam Romanorum majori ex parte ad calcem deletum, says the indignant Poggius (p. 17.): but his expression, too strong for the present age, must be very tenderly applied to the xvth century.

surrounded

C H A P.
LXXI.

furrounded it with a wall; and, by a charter long extant, granted both the ground and edifice to the monks of an adjacent convent<sup>62</sup>. After his death, the wall was overthrown in a tumult of the people; and had they themselves respected the noblest monument of their fathers, they might have justified the resolve that it should never be degraded to private property. The inside was damaged; but in the middle of the sixteenth century, an æra of taste and learning, the exterior circumference of one thousand six hundred and twelve feet was still entire and inviolate; a triple elevation of fourscore arches, which rose to the height of one hundred and eight feet. Of the present ruin, the nephews of Paul the third are the guilty agents; and every traveller who views the Farnese palace may curse the sacrilege and luxury of these upstart princes<sup>63</sup>. A similar reproach is applied to the Barberini; and the repetition of injury might be dreaded from every reign, till the Coliseum was placed under the safeguard of religion, by the most liberal of the pontiffs, Benedict the fourteenth, who consecrated a spot which persecution and fable had stained with the blood of so many Christian martyrs<sup>64</sup>.

and consecration of the Coliseum.

Ignorance and barbarism of the Romans.

When Petrarch first gratified his eyes with a view of those monuments, whose scattered fragments so far surpass the most eloquent descriptions, he was astonished at the supine indifference<sup>65</sup> of the

<sup>62</sup> Of the Olivetan monks, Montfaucon (p. 142.) affirms this fact from the memorials of Flaminius Vacca (N<sup>o</sup> 72.). They still hoped, on some future occasion, to revive and vindicate their grant.

<sup>63</sup> After measuring the priscus amphitheatrum gyrus, Montfaucon (p. 142.) only adds, that it was entire under Paul III.; tacendo clamat. Muratori (Annali d'Italia, tom. xiv. p. 371.) more freely reports the guilt of the Farnese pope, and the indignation of the Roman people. Against the nephews of Urban VIII. I have no other evidence than the vulgar saying, "Quod non fecerunt Barbari, fecere Barbarini," which was perhaps suggested by the resemblance of the words.

<sup>64</sup> As an antiquarian and a priest, Montfaucon thus deprecates the ruin of the Coliseum: Quòd si non suo pte merito atque pulchritudine dignum fuisset quod improbas arceret manus, indigna res utique in locum tot martyrum cruore sacrum tantopere favitum esse.

<sup>65</sup> Yet the Statutes of Rome (l. iii. c. 81. p. 182.) impose a fine of 500 aurei on whosoever shall demolish any ancient edifice, ne ruinis civitas deformetur, et ut antiqua aedificia decorem urbis perpetuo representent.

Romans themselves<sup>66</sup>; he was humbled rather than elated by the discovery, that, except his friend Rienzi and one of the Colonna, a stranger of the Rhône was more conversant with these antiquities than the nobles and natives of the metropolis<sup>67</sup>. The ignorance and credulity of the Romans are elaborately displayed in the old survey of the city which was composed about the beginning of the thirteenth century; and, without dwelling on the manifold errors of name and place, the legend of the Capitol<sup>68</sup> may provoke a smile of contempt and indignation. “The Capitol,” says the anonymous writer, “is so named as being the head of the world; where the consuls and senators formerly resided for the government of the city and the globe. The strong and lofty walls were covered with glass and gold, and crowned with a roof of the richest and most curious carving. Below the citadel stood a palace, of gold for the greatest part, decorated with precious stones, and whose value might be esteemed at one third of the world itself. The statues of all the provinces were arranged in order, each with a small bell suspended from its neck; and such was the contrivance of art magic<sup>69</sup>, that if the province rebelled against Rome, the erat, statim imago illius provinciæ vertebat se contra illam; unde tintinnabulum resonabat quod pendebat ad collum; tuncque vates Capitolii qui erant custodes senatui, &c. He mentions an example of the Saxons and Suevi, who, after they had been subdued by Agrippa, again rebelled: tintinnabulum sonuit; sacerdos qui erat in speculo in hebdomadâ senatoribus nuntiavit: Agrippa marched back and reduced the—Persians (Anonym. in Montfaucon, p. 297, 298.).

<sup>66</sup> In his first visit to Rome (A. D. 1337. See Memoires sur Petrarque, tom. i. p. 322, &c.), Petrarch is struck mute miraculo rerum tantarum, et stuporis mole obrutus. . . . Præsentia vero, mirum dictû, nihil imminuit: vere major fuit Roma majoresque sunt reliquæ quam rebar. Jam non orbem ab hâc urbe domitum, sed tam sero domitum, miror (Opp. p. 605. Familiares, ii. 14. Joanni Colum-næ).

<sup>67</sup> He excepts and praises the rare knowledge of John Colonna. Qui enim hodie magis ignari rerum Romanarum, quam Romani cives? Invitus dico nusquam minus Roma cognoscitur quam Romæ.

<sup>68</sup> After the description of the Capitol, he adds, statuæ erant quot sunt mundi provinciæ; et habebat quælibet tintinnabulum ad collum. Et erant ita per magicam artem dispositæ, ut quando aliqua regio Romano Imperio rebellis

<sup>69</sup> The same writer affirms, that Virgil captus a Romanis inviabiliter exiit, ivitque Neapolim. A Roman magician, in the 15th century, is introduced by William of Malm-bury (de Gestis Regum Anglorum, l. ii. p. 86.); and in the time of Flaminius Vacca (N<sup>o</sup> 81. 103.) it was the vulgar belief that the strangers (the Goths) invoked the demons for the discovery of hidden treasures.

C H A P.
LXXI.

“ statue turned round to that quarter of the heavens, the bell rang, the prophet of the Capitol reported the prodigy, and the senate was admonished of the impending danger.” A second example of less importance, though of equal absurdity, may be drawn from the two marble horses, led by two naked youths, which have since been transported from the baths of Constantine to the Quirinal hill. The groundless application of the names of Phidias and Praxiteles may perhaps be excused; but these Grecian sculptors should not have been removed above four hundred years from the age of Pericles to that of Tiberius: they should not have been transformed into two philosophers or magicians, whose nakedness was the symbol of truth and knowledge, who revealed to the emperor his most secret actions; and, after refusing all pecuniary recompense, solicited the honour of leaving this eternal monument of themselves<sup>70</sup>. Thus awake to the power of magic, the Romans were insensible to the beauties of art: no more than five statues were visible to the eyes of Poggius; and of the multitudes which chance or design had buried under the ruins, the resurrection was fortunately delayed till a safer and more enlightened age<sup>71</sup>. The Nile, which now adorns the Vatican, had been explored by some labourers in digging a vineyard near the temple, or convent, of the Minerva; but the impatient proprietor, who was tormented by some visits of curiosity, restored the unprofitable marble to its former grave<sup>72</sup>. The discovery of a statue

<sup>70</sup> Anonym. p. 289. Montfaucon (p. 191.) justly observes, that if Alexander be represented, these statues cannot be the work of Phidias (Olympiad lxxxiii.) or Praxiteles (Olympiad civ.), who lived before that conqueror (Plin. Hist. Natur. xxxiv. 19.).

<sup>71</sup> William of Malmibury (l. ii. p. 86, 87.) relates a marvellous discovery (A. D. 1046) of Pallas, the son of Evander, who had been slain by Turnus; the perpetual light in his sepulchre, a Latin epithet, the corpse, yet entire, of a young giant, the enormous wound in his breast (pectus perforat ingens),

&c. If this fable rests on the slightest foundation, we may pity the bodies, as well as the statues, that were exposed to the air in a barbarous age.

<sup>72</sup> Prope porticum Minervæ, statua est recubantis, cujus caput integrâ effigie, tantæ magnitudinis, ut signa omnia excedat. Quidam ad plantandos arbores serobes faciens detexit. Ad hoc visendum cum plures in dies magis concurrerent, strepitum adeuntium fastidiumque pertæsus, horti patronus congestâ humo texit (Poggius de Varietate Fortunæ, p. 12.).

of Pompey, ten feet in length, was the occasion of a law-suit. It had been found under a partition-wall: the equitable judge had pronounced, that the head should be separated from the body to satisfy the claims of the contiguous owners; and the sentence would have been executed, if the intercession of a cardinal, and the liberality of a pope, had not rescued the Roman hero from the hands of his barbarous countrymen<sup>73</sup>.

C H A P.
LXXI.

But the clouds of barbarism were gradually dispelled; and the peaceful authority of Martin the fifth and his successors, restored the ornaments of the city as well as the order of the ecclesiastical state. The improvements of Rome, since the fifteenth century, have not been the spontaneous produce of freedom and industry. The first and most natural root of a great city, is the labour and populousness of the adjacent country, which supplies the materials of subsistence, of manufactures, and of foreign trade. But the greater part of the Campagna of Rome is reduced to a dreary and desolate wilderness: the overgrown estates of the princes and the clergy are cultivated by the lazy hands of indigent and hopeless vassals; and the scanty harvests are confined or exported for the benefit of a monopoly. A second and more artificial cause of the growth of a metropolis, is the residence of a monarch, the expence of a luxurious court, and the tributes of dependent provinces. Those provinces and tributes had been lost in the fall of the empire: and if some streams of the silver of Peru and the gold of Brasil have been attracted by the Vatican; the revenues of the cardinals, the fees of office, the oblations of pilgrims and clients, and the remnant of ecclesiastical taxes, afford a poor and precarious supply, which maintains however the idleness of the court and city. The population of Rome, far below the

Restoration and ornaments of the city,
A. D. 1420,
&c.

<sup>73</sup> See the Memorials of Flaminius Vacca, N<sup>o</sup> 57. p. 11, 12. at the end of the Roma Antica of Nardini (1704, in 4<sup>to</sup>).

C H A P.
LXXI.

measure of the great capitals of Europe, does not exceed one hundred and seventy thousand inhabitants<sup>74</sup>; and within the spacious inclosure of the walls, the largest portion of the seven hills is overspread with vineyards and ruins. The beauty and splendour of the modern city may be ascribed to the abuses of the government, to the influence of superstition. Each reign (the exceptions are rare) has been marked by the rapid elevation of a new family, enriched by the childless pontiff at the expence of the church and country. The palaces of these fortunate nephews are the most costly monuments of elegance and servitude; the perfect arts of architecture, painting, and sculpture, have been prostituted in their service, and their galleries and gardens are decorated with the most precious works of antiquity, which taste or vanity has prompted them to collect. The ecclesiastical revenues were more decently employed by the popes themselves in the pomp of the Catholic worship; but it is superfluous to enumerate their pious foundations of altars, chapels, and churches, since these lesser stars are eclipsed by the sun of the Vatican, by the dome of St. Peter, the most glorious structure that ever has been applied to the use of religion. The fame of Julius the second, Leo the tenth, and Sixtus the fifth, is accompanied by the superior merit of Bramante and Fontana, of Raphael and Michael-Angelo: and the same munificence which had been displayed in palaces and temples, was directed with equal zeal to revive and emulate the labours of antiquity. Prostrate obelisks were raised from the ground, and erected in the most conspicuous places; of the eleven aqueducts of the Cæsars and consuls, three were restored; the artificial rivers were conducted over a long series of old, or of <sup>74</sup> In the year 1709, the inhabitants of Rome (without including eight or ten thousand Jews) amounted to 138,568 souls (Labat, Voyages en Espagne et en Italie, tom. iii.

p. 217, 218.). In 1740 they had increased to 146,080; and in 1765, I left them, without the Jews, 161,899. I am ignorant whether they have since continued in a progressive state.

new, arches, to discharge into marble basins a flood of salubrious and refreshing waters: and the spectator, impatient to ascend the steps of St. Peter's, is detained by a column of Egyptian granite, which rises between two lofty and perpetual fountains, to the height of one hundred and twenty feet. The map, the description, the monuments of ancient Rome, have been elucidated by the diligence of the antiquarian and the student<sup>75</sup>: and the footsteps of heroes, the relics, not of superstition, but of empire, are devoutly visited by a new race of pilgrims from the remote, and once savage, countries of the North.

C H A P.
LXXI.

Of these pilgrims, and of every reader, the attention will be excited by an history of the decline and fall of the Roman empire; the greatest, perhaps, and most awful scene, in the history of mankind. The various causes and progressive effects are connected with many of the events most interesting in human annals: the artful policy of the Cæsars, who long maintained the name and image of a free republic; the disorders of military despotism; the rise, establishment,

Final conclusion.

<sup>75</sup> The Pere Montfaucon distributes his own observations into twenty days, he should have styled them weeks, or months, of his visits to the different parts of the city (Diarium Italicum, c. 8—20. p. 104—301.). That learned Benedictine reviews the topographers of ancient Rome; the first efforts of Blondus, Fulvius, Martianus, and Faunus, the superior labours of Pyrius Ligorius, had his learning been equal to his labours; the writings of Onuphrius Panvinius, qui omnes obsecravit; and the recent but imperfect books of Donatus and Nardini. Yet Montfaucon still sighs for a more complete plan and description of the old city, which must be attained by the three following methods: 1. The measurement of the space and intervals of the ruins. 2. The study of inscriptions, and the places where they were found. 3. The investigation of all the acts, charters, diaries of the middle ages, which name any spot or building of Rome. The laborious work, such as Montfaucon desired, must be promoted by princely or public munificence: but the great modern plan of Nolli (A. D. 1748) would furnish a solid and accurate basis for the ancient topography of Rome.

and

C H A P.
LXXI.

and sects of Christianity; the foundation of Constantinople; the division of the monarchy; the invasion and settlements of the Barbarians of Germany and Scythia; the institutions of the civil law; the character and religion of Mahomet; the temporal sovereignty of the popes; the restoration and decay of the Western empire of Charlemagne; the crusades of the Latins in the East; the conquests of the Saracens and Turks; the ruin of the Greek empire; the state and revolutions of Rome in the middle age. The historian may applaud the importance and variety of his subject; but, while he is conscious of his own imperfections, he must often accuse the deficiency of his materials. It was among the ruins of the Capitol, that I first conceived the idea of a work which has amused and exercised near twenty years of my life, and which, however inadequate to my own wishes, I finally deliver to the curiosity and candour of the Public.

LAUSANNE,
June 27, 1787.

GENERAL INDEX.

N. B. The Roman Numerals refer to the Volume, and the Figures to the Page.

A

A B A N, the Saracen, heroism of his widow, v. 306.

Abbasides, elevation of the house of, to the office of caliph of the Saracens, v. 412.

Abdallah, the Saracen, his excursion to plunder the fair of Abyla, v. 312. His African expedition, 350.

Abdalmalek, caliph of the Saracens, refuses tribute to the emperor of Constantinople, and establishes a national mint, v. 396.

Abdulrahman, the Saracen, establishes his throne at Cordova in Spain, v. 417. Splendour of his court, 420. His estimate of his happiness, 421.

Abdelazir, the Saracen, his treaty with Theodemir the Gothic prince of Spain, v. 375. His death, 378.

Abderams, his expedition to France, and victories there, v. 407. His death, 411.

Abdel Metallek, the grandfather of the prophet Mahomet, his history, v. 197.

Abgarus, inquiry into the authenticity of his correspondence with Jesus Christ, v. 92.

Abgarus, the last king of Edessa, sent in chains to Rome, i. 252.

Ablavius, the confidential præfect under Constantine the Great, a conspiracy formed against him on that emperor's death, ii. 97. Is put to death, 99.

Abu Ayub, his history, and the veneration paid to his memory by the Mahometans, v. 395. vi. 509.

Abubeker, the friend of Mahomet, is one of his first converts, v. 220. Flies from Mecca with him, 224. Succeeds Mahomet as caliph of the Saracens, 258. His character, 279.

Abu Caab commands the Andalusian Moors who subdued the island of Crete, v. 436.

Abu Sophian, prince of Mecca, conspires the death of Mahomet, v. 224. Battles of Beder and Ohud, 232. Besieges Medina without success, 234. Surrenders Mecca to Mahomet, and receives him as a prophet, 238.

Abu Taber, the Carmathian, pillages Mecca, v. 451.

Abulfeda, his account of the splendour of the caliph Moctader, v. 420.

Abulpharagius, primate of the Eastern Jacobites, some account of, iv. 604. His encomium on wisdom and learning, v. 423.

Abundantius, general of the East, and patron of the eunuch Eutropius, is disgraced and exiled by him, iii. 288.

Abyla, the fair of, plundered by the Saracens, v. 313.

Abyssinia, the inhabitants of, described, iv. 267: Their alliance with the emperor Justinian, 269. Ecclesiastical history of, 615.

Acacius, bishop of Amida, an uncommon instance of episcopal benevolence, iii. 323.

Achaia, its extent, i. 29.

Acre, the memorable siege of, by the crusaders, vi. 102. Final loss of, 119.

Adiens, institutes of Justinian respecting, iv. 393.

Adriani, a review of Roman affairs after the battle of, i. 72.

Adausus, the only martyr of distinction during the persecution under Diocletian, i. 692.

Adolphus, the brother of Maric, brings him a reinforcement of troops, iii. 224. Is made count of the domestic to the new emperor Attalus, 231. Succeeds his brother as king of the Goths, and concludes a peace with Honorius, 250.

Adopriem, the two kinds of, under the Greek empire, vi. 35. note.

Adoration

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- Adoration* of the Roman emperor, custom of, and derivation of the term, v. 487.
- Adorno*, the Genoese governor of Phocæa, conveys Amarah II. from Asia to Europe, vi. 368.
- Adrian I.* pope, his alliance with Charlemagne against the Lombards, v. 117. His reception of Charlemagne at Rome, 121. Asserts the siditious denation of Constantine the Great, 125.
- Adultery*, distinctions of, and how punished by Augustus, iv. 406. By the Christian emperors, 408.
- Ælia Capitelina* founded on mount Sion by Hadrian, i. 545.
- Alius Pætus*, his Tripartitæ, the oldest work of Roman jurisprudence, iv. 350.
- Æmiltianus*, governor of Pannonia and Mæsia, routs the barbarous invaders of the empire, and is declared emperor by his troops, i. 306.
- Æneas of Gaza*, his attestation of the miraculous gift of speech to the Catholic confessors of Tifafa, whose tongues had been cut out, iii. 546.
- Æneas Sylvius*, his account of the impracticability of an European crusade against the Turks, vi. 515. His epigram on the destruction of ancient buildings in Rome, 632. note.
- Æra* of the world, remarkable epochas in, pointed out, iv. 121. note.
- Gelalaan, of the Turks, when settled, v. 670.
- Ærial* tribute, in the Eastern empire, what, iv. 83.
- Ætius*, surnamed the Atheist, his character and adventures, ii. 256. 267. 284. note.
- , The Roman general under Valentinian III. his character, iii. 332. His treacherous scheme to ruin count Boniface, 334. Is forced to retire into Pannonia, 345. His invitation of the Huns into the empire, 355. Seizes the administration of the Western empire, 393. His character as given by Renatus a cotemporary historian, 394. Employs the Huns and Alani in the defence of Gaul, 396. Concludes a peace with Theodoric, 399. Raises the siege of Orleans, 408. Battle of Chalons, 410. His prudence on the invasion of Italy by Attila, 423. Is murdered by Valentinian, 430.
- Africa*, its situation and revolutions, i. 31. Great revenue raised from, by the Romans, 195. Progress of Christianity there, 609.
- , Is distracted with religious discord in the time of Constantine the Great, ii. 233. Character and revolt of the Circumcellions, 300. Oppressions of, under the government of count Romanus, 533. General state of Africa, 538.
- , Revolt of count Boniface there, iii. 334. Arrival of Genseric king of the Vandals, 336. Persecution of the Donatists, 338. Devastation of, by the Vandals, 341. Carthage surprised by Genseric, 347. Persecution of the Catholics, 536.
- , Expedition of Belisarius to, iv. 132. Is recovered by the Romans, 146. The government - of, settled by Justinian, 140. Revolt of the troops there, under Steza, 273. Devastation of the war, 277.
- Africa*, invasion of, by the Saracens, v. 349. Conquest of, by Akbah, 355. Decline and extinction of Christianity there, 386. Revolt and independence of the Saracens there, 453.
- Aglabites*, the Saracen dynasty of, v. 453.
- Aglæe*, a Roman lady, patronises St. Boniface, i. 694.
- Agricola*, review of his conduct in Britain, i. 5.
- Agriculture*, great improvement of, in the western countries of the Roman empire, i. 63. State of, in the Eastern empire, under Justinian, iv. 70.
- Ajax*, the sepulchre of, how distinguished, ii. 9.
- Aiznadin*, battle of, between the Saracens and the Greeks, v. 302.
- Akbab*, the Saracen, his exploits in Africa, v. 355.
- Alani*, occasion of these people invading Asia, i. 391. Conquest of, by the Huns, ii. 586. Join the Goths who had emigrated into Thrace, 608. See Goths, and Vandals.
- Alaric*, the Goth, learns the art of war under Theodosius the Great, iii. 61. Becomes the leader of the Gothic revolt, and ravages Greece, 135. Escapes from Stilicho, 141. Is appointed master general of the Eastern Illyricum, 143. His invasion of Italy, 144. Is defeated by Stilicho at Pollentia, 151. Is driven out of Italy, 154. Is, by treaty with Honorius, declared master general of the Roman armies throughout the præfecture of Illyricum, 178. His pleas and motives for marching to Rome, 192. Encamps under the walls of that city, 194. Accepts a ransom, and raises the siege, 223. His negotiations with the emperor Honorius, 225. His second siege of Rome, 229. Places Attalus on the Imperial throne, 231. Degrades him, 234. Seizes the city of Rome, 235. His sack of Rome compared with that by the emperor Charles V. 244. Retires from Rome, and ravages Italy, 246. His death and burial, 249.
- Alaric II.* king of the Goths, his overthrow by Clovis king of the Franks, iii. 574.
- Alberic*, the son of Marczia, his revolt, and government of Rome, v. 156.
- Albigensis* of France, persecution of, v. 535.
- Alboin*, king of the Lombards, his history, iv. 421. His alliance with the Avars against the Gepidæ, 423. Reduces the Gepidæ, 424. He undertakes the conquest of Italy, 425. Overruns what is now called Lombardy, 428. Assumes the regal title there, 429. Takes Pavia, and makes it his capital city, 430. Is murdered at the instigation of his queen Rosamond, 432.
- Alchemy*, the books of, in Egypt, destroyed by Diocletian, i. 441.
- Alippo*, siege and capture of, by the Saracens, v. 323. Is recovered by the Greeks, 461.

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- Is taken and sacked by Tamerlane, vi. 346.
- Alexander III.* pope, establishes the papal election in the college of cardinals, vi. 550.
- Alexander* archbishop of Alexandria, excommunicates Arius for his heresy, ii. 247.
- Alexander Severus*, is declared Cæsar by the emperor Elagabalus, i. 180. Is raised to the throne, 182. Examination into his pretended victory over Artaxerxes, 253. Shewed a regard for the Christian religion, 670.
- Alexandria*, a general massacre there, by order of the emperor Caracalla, i. 166. The city described, 339. Is ruined by ridiculous intestine commotions, 340. By famine and pestilence, 342. Is besieged and taken by Diocletian, 439. The Christian theology reduced to a systematical form in the school of, 607. Number of martyrs who suffered there in the persecution by Decius, 654.
- , The theological system of Plato taught in the school of, and received by the Jews there, ii. 238. Questions concerning the nature of the trinity, agitated in the philosophical and Christian schools of, 242. 247. History of the archbishop St. Athanasius, 269. Outrages attending his expulsion and the establishment of his successor, George of Cappadocia, 286. The city distracted by pious factions, 293. Disgraceful life and tragical death of George of Cappadocia, 400. Restoration of Athanasius, 406. Athanasius banished by Julian, 407. Suffers greatly by an earthquake, 502.
- , History of the temple of Serapis there, iii. 82. This temple, and the famous library, destroyed by bishop Theophilus, 84.
- Is taken by Amrou the Saracen, v. 339. The famous library destroyed, 342.
- Alexius Angelus*, his usurpation of the Greek empire, and character, vi. 132. Flies before the crusaders, 152.
- Alexius I. Comnenus*, emperor of Constantinople, v. 64. New titles of dignity invented by him, 484. Battle of Durazzo, 616. Solicits the aid of the emperor Henry III. 620.
- Solicits the aid of the Christian princes against the Turks, vi. 5. His suspicious policy on the arrival of the crusaders, 32. Exacts homage from them, 34. Profits by the success of the crusaders, 72.
- Alexius II. Comnenus*, emperor of Constantinople, v. 72.
- Alexius Strategopulus*, the Greek general, retakes Constantinople from the Latins, vi. 201.
- Alexius*, the son of Isaac Angelus, his escape from his uncle, who had deposed his father, vi. 133. His treaty with the crusaders for his restoration, 144. Restoration of his father, 155. His death, 161.
- Alfred* sends an embassy to the shrine of St. Thomas in India, iv. 599.
- Algebra*, by whom invented, v. 427.
- Ali*, joins Mahomet in his prophetic mission, v. 221. His heroism, 234. 235. His character, 256. Is chosen caliph of the Saracens, 259. Devotion paid at his tomb, 265. His posterity, 266.
- Alizern*, defends Cumæ, for his brother Teia, king of the Goths, iv. 305. Is reduced, 307.
- Allesius* murders Carauliu-, and usurps his station, i. 434.
- Allemanni*, the origin and warlike spirit of, i. 313. Are driven out of Italy by the senate and people, 314. Invade the empire under Aurelian, 357. Are totally routed, 360. Gaul delivered from their depredations by Constantius Chlorus, 457.
- Invade and establish themselves in Gaul, ii. 161. Are defeated at Straiburgh by Julian, 167. Are reduced by Julian in his expeditions beyond the Rhine, 172. Invade Gaul under the emperor Valentinian, 515. Are reduced by Jo. inus, 517. And chastised by Valentinian, 519.
- Are subdued by Clovis king of the Franks, iii. 563.
- Alp Arslan*, sultan of the Turks, his reign, v. 659.
- Alypius*, governor of Britain, is commissioned by the emperor Julian to rebuild the temple of Jerusalem, ii. 387.
- Amala*, king of the Goths, his high credit among them, i. 296.
- Amalafantha*, queen of Italy, her history and character, iv. 161. Her death, 165.
- Amalphi*, description of the city, and its commerce, v. 605.
- Amazons*, improbability of any society of, i. 376. note.
- Ambition*, reflections on the violence, and various operations of that passion, v. 85.
- Ambrosè*, St. composed a treatise on the trinity, for the use of the emperor Gratian, iii. 3. note. His birth, and promotion to the archbishopric of Milan, 29. Opposes the Arian worship of the empress Justina, 30. Refuses obedience to the Imperial power, 34. Controls the emperor Theodosius, 52. Imposes penance on Theodosius for his cruel treatment of Thessalonica, 54. Employed his influence over Gratian and Theodosius, to inspire them with maxims of persecution, 69. Opposes Symmachus, the advocate for the old Pagan religion, 75. Comforts the citizens of Florence with a dream, when besieged by Radagaisus, 165.
- Amida*, siege of, by Sapor king of Persia, ii. 154. Receives the fugitive inhabitants of Nisibis, 453. Is besieged and taken by Cabades king of Persia, iv. 103.
- Amir*, prince of Ionia, his character, and passage into Europe, vi. 315.
- Amilianus* the historian, his religious character of the emperor Constantius, ii. 260. His remark on the enmity of Christians toward each other, 304. His account of the fiery obstructions to restoring the temple of Jerusalem, 380. His account of the hostile contest of Damasus and Ursinus for the bishopric

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- shopric of Rome, 512. Testimony in favour of his historical merit, 627. His character of the nobles of Rome, iii. 202.
- Ammonius*, the mathematician, his measurement of the circuit of Rome, iii. 217.
- Ammunius*, the monk of Alexandria, his martyrdom, iv. 548.
- Amorium*, siege and destruction of, by the caliph Motaslem, v. 444.
- Amphilochus*, bishop of Iconium, gains the favour of the emperor Theodosius by an orthodox homot. iii. 12.
- Amphitheatre* at Rome, a description of, i. 417. vi. 635.
- Amru*, his birth and character, v. 331. His invasion and conquest of Egypt, 333. His administration there, 335. His description of the country, 347.
- Amurath I.* sultan of the Turks, his reign, vi. 319.
- Amurath II.* sultan, his reign and character, vi. 440.
- Anachorets*, in monkish history, described, iii. 523.
- Anacletus*, pope, his Jewish extraction, vi. 561.
- Anasthasius I.* marries the empress Ariadne, iv. 5. His war with Theodoric, the Ostrogoth king of Italy, 19. His economy celebrated, 79. His long wall from the Propontis to the Euxine, 101. Is humbled by the Catholic clergy, 576.
- Anasthasius II.* emperor of Constantinople, v. 19. His preparations of defence against the Saracens, 397.
- Anasthasius*, St. his brief history and martyrdom, iv. 504. note.
- Anatho*, the city of, on the banks of the Euphrates, described, ii. 431.
- Andalusia*, derivation of the name of that province, v. 364. note.
- Andronicus*, president of Lybia, excommunicated by Synesius bishop of Ptolemais, ii. 225.
- Andronicus Comnenus*, his character, and first adventure, v. 72. Seizes the empire of Constantinople, 81. His unhappy fate, 81.
- Andronicus the Elder*, emperor of Constantinople, his superstitious, vi. 257. His war with his grandson, and abdication, 262.
- Andronicus the Younger*, emperor of Constantinople, his licentious character, vi. 260. His civil war against his grandfather, 262. His reign, 265. Is vanquished and wounded by sultan Orchan, 312. His private application to pope Benedict XII. of Rome, 372).
- Angera*, battle of, between Tamerlane and Bajazet, vi. 349.
- Anianus*, bishop of Orleans, his pious anxiety for the relief of that city when besieged by Attila the Hun, iii. 407.
- Anician family* at Rome. brief history of, iii. 197.
- Anna Ceremonia*, character of her history of her father, Athenas I. emperor of Constantinople, v. 64. Her conspiracy against her brother John, 67.
- Anthemas*, emperor of the West, his descent, and investiture by Leo the Great, iii. 471. His election confirmed at Rome, 472. Is killed in the sack of Rome by Ricimer, 489.
- Anthemius*, prefect of the East, character of his admiration, in the minority of the emperor Theodosius the younger, iii. 313.
- Anthemius* the architect, instances of his great knowledge in mechanics, iv. 90. Forms the design of the church of St. Sophia at Constantinople, 92.
- Anthony*, St. father of the Egyptian monks, his history, iii. 507.
- Anthropomorphites*, among the early Christians, persons of the Deity, iv. 539.
- Antioch*, taken and destroyed by Sapor king of Persia, i. 328. Flourishing state of the Christian church there, in the reign of Theodosius, 605.
- , History of the body of St. Babylas, bishop of, ii. 399. The cathedral of, shut up, and its wealth confiscated, by the emperor Julian, 400. Licentious manners of the citizens, 416. Popular discontents during the residence of Julian there, 417.
- , Sedition there, against the emperor Theodosius, iii. 45. The city pardoned, 49.
- Is taken, and ruined, by Chosroes king of Persia, iv. 245. Great destruction there by an earthquake, 326. Is again seized by Chosroes II. 501.
- , Is reduced by the Saracens, and ransomed, v. 325. Is recovered by the Greeks, 461.
- , Besieged and taken by the first crusaders, vi. 46.
- Antonina*, the wife of Belisarius, her character, iv. 129. Examines and convicts pope Sylvester of treachery, 187. Her activity during the siege of Rome, 189. Her secret history, 204. Founda a convent for her retreat, 319.
- Antoninus*, a Roman refugee at the court of Sapor king of Persia, stimulates him to an invasion of the Roman provinces, ii. 152.
- Antoninus Pius*, his character, and that of Hadrian, compared, i. 9. Is adopted by Hadrian, 92.
- Antoninus Marcus*, his defensive wars, i. 10. Is adopted by Pius at the instance of Hadrian, 93. His character, 102. His war against the united Germans, 286. Suspicious story of his edict in favour of the Christians, 667.
- Aper*, Arrius, praetorian prefect, and father-in-law to the emperor Numerian, is killed by Diocletian as the presumptive murderer of that prince, i. 421.
- Asparban*, the Persian, his embassy from Narses king of Persia, to the emperor Galerius, i. 450.
- Ascalysse*, why now admitted into the canon of the Scriptures, i. 563. note.
- Aspecaucus*, admiral of Constantinople, his confederacy against John Cantacuzene, vi. 269. His death, 272.
- Asellianus*, bishop of Laodicea, his hypothesis of the divine incarnation of Jesus Christ, iv. 542.
- Aspollinarius*, patriarch of Alexandria, butchers his flock

GENERAL INDEX.

- flock in defence of the Catholic doctrine of the incarnation, iv. 611.
Apollonius of Tyana, his doubtful character, i. 369. note.
Apotheosis of the Roman emperors, how this custom was introduced, i. 84.
Aspinar dethrones Leontius emperor of Constantinople, and usurps his place, v. 15.
Apulia, is conquered by the Normans, v. 572. Is confirmed to them by papal grant, 598.
Aquila, besieged by the emperor Maximin, i. 223. Is taken and destroyed by Attila king of the Huns, iii. 418.
Aquitain, is settled by the Goths, under their king Wallia, iii. 270. Is conquered by Clovis king of the Franks, 578.
Arabia, its situation, soil, and climate, v. 1-1. Its division into the Sandy, the Stony, and the Happ, 173. The pastoral Arabs, 174. Their hories and camels, 175. Cities of, 176. Manners and customs of the Arabs, 178. Their language, 186. Their benevolence, 188. History and description of the Caaba of Mecca, 190. Religions, 194. Life and doctrine of Mahomet, 197. Conquest of, by Mahomet, 240. Character of the caliphs, 279. Rapid conquests of, 282. Limits of their conquests, 392. Three caliphs established, 417. Introduction of learning among the Arabians, 423. Their progress in the sciences, 425. Their literary deficiencies, 430. Decline and fall of the caliphs, 452.
Arbetio, a veteran under Constantine the Great, leaves his retirement to oppose the usurper Procopius, ii. 494.
Arbogastes, the Frank, his military promotion under Theodosius in Gaul, and conspiracy against Valentinian the Younger, iii. 59. Is defeated and killed by Theodosius, 64.
Arcadius, son of the emperor Theodosius, succeeds to the empire of the East, iii. 104. His magnificence, 282. Extent of his dominions, 283. Administration of his favourite eunuch Eutropius, 284. His cruel law against treason, 290. Signs the condemnation of Eutropius, 295. His interview with the revolters Tribigild and Gainas, 297. His death, and supposed testament, 311.
Architecture, Roman, the general magnificence of, indicated by the existing ruins, i. 53.
Ardaburius, his expedition to Italy, to reduce the usurper John, iii. 329.
Argonauts, the object of their expedition to Colchos, iv. 252.
Ariadne, daughter of the emperor Leo, and wife of Zeno, her character, and marriage afterward with Anastasius, iv. 5.
Arii, a tribe of the Lygians, their terrific mode of waging war, i. 398.
Arimbaus, is appointed general of the horse by the emperor Julian on his Persian expedition, ii. 429. Distinguishes himself against the usurper Procopius, 494.
Ariovistus seizes two-thirds of the land of the Sequani in Gaul, for himself and his German followers, iii. 591.
Aristobulus, principal minister of the house of Cappas, is received into confidence by the emperor Diocletian, i. 425.
Aristotle, his logic better adapted to the detection of error, than for the discovery of truth, v. 427.
Arius, is excommunicated for heretical notions concerning the Trinity, ii. 247. Strength of his party, 248. His opinions examined in the council of Nice, 250. Account of Arian sects, 255. Council of Rimini, 259. His banishment and recall, 267. His suspicious death, 293.
 —, The Arians persecute the Catholics in Africa, iii. 536.
Armenia, is seized by Sapor king of Persia, i. 426. Tiridates restored, 443. He is again expelled by the Persians, 446. Is resigned to Tiridates by treaty between the Romans and Persians, 454.
 —, Is rendered tributary to Persia, on the death of Tiridates, ii. 103. Character of Ariaces Tiranus king of, and his conduct toward the emperor Julian, 426. Is reduced by Sapor to a Persian province, 541.
 —, Its distractions and division between the Persians and the Romans, iii. 323.
 —, History of Christianity there, iv. 607.
Armies of the Eastern empire, state of, under the emperor Maurice, iv. 488.
Armerica, the provinces of, form a free government independent on the Romans, iii. 274. Submits to Clovis king of the Franks, 563. Settlement of Britons in, 617.
Armour, defensive, is laid aside by the Romans, and adopted by the Barbarians, iii. 67.
Arnold of Brescia, his heresy, and history, vi. 520.
Arragon, derivation of the name of that province, i. 24. note.
Arrian, his visit to, and description of, Colchos, iv. 256.
Arsaces Tiranus, king of Armenia, his character, and disaffection to the emperor Julian, ii. 426. Withdraws his troops treacherously from the Roman service, 446. His disastrous end, 541.
Arsenius, patriarch of Constantinople, excommunicates the emperor Michael Paleologus, vi. 235. Faction of the Arsenites, 236.
Artaban, king of Parthia, is defeated and slain by Artaxerxes king of Persia, i. 239.
Artaban, his conspiracy against the emperor Justinian, iv. 293. Is intrusted with the conduct of the armament sent to Italy, 296.
Artafires, king of Armenia, is deposed by the Persians at the instigation of his own subjects, iii. 325.
Artaxasides, his revolt against the Greek emperor Constantine V. at Constantinople, v. 101.
Artaxerxes, restores the Persian monarchy, i. 239. Prohibits every worship but that of Zoroaster, 246.

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

245. His war with the Romans, 253. His character and maxims, 257.
- Artenius*, duke of Egypt under Constantius, is condemned to death under Julian, for cruelty and corruption, ii. 346.
- Arthur*, king of the Britons, his history obscured by monkish fictions, iii. 618.
- Arvandus*, prætorian præfect of Gaul, his trial and condemnation by the Roman senate, iii. 482.
- Ascalon*, battle of, between Godfrey king of Jerusalem, and the sultan of Egypt, vi. 62.
- Asetics*, in ecclesiastical history, account of, iii. 506.
- Aspurgatus* reduces and kills the British usurper Alleclus, i. 435.
- Asia*, summary view of the revolutions in that quarter of the world, i. 237.
- Asia Minor* described, i. 29. Amount of its tribute to Rome, 194. Is conquered by the Turks, v. 673.
- Astarch*, the nature of this office among the ancient Pagans, i. 600.
- Aspar* is commissioned by Theodosius the Younger to conduct Valentinian III. to Italy, iii. 329. Places his steward Leo on the throne of the Eastern empire, 470. He and his sons murdered by Leo, iv. 4.
- Assassins*, the principality of, destroyed by the Moguls, vi. 299.
- Assemblies* of the people abolished under the Roman emperors, i. 82. The nature of, among the ancient Germans, 272.
- Astria*, the province of, described, ii. 432. Is invaded by the emperor Julian, 434. His retreat, 453.
- Astarte*, her image brought from Carthage to Rome, as a spouse for Elagabalus, i. 178.
- Astolphus*, king of the Lombards, takes the city of Ravenna, and attacks Rome, v. 115. Is repelled by Pepin king of France, 116.
- Astronomy*, why cultivated by the Arabian astronomers, v. 428.
- Atalaric*, the son of Amalasontha queen of Italy, his education and character, iv. 163.
- Atanaric* the Gothic chief, his war against the emperor Valens, ii. 551. His alliance with Theodosius, his death and funeral, 632.
- Atanasius*, St. confesses his understanding bewildered by meditating on the divinity of the Logos, ii. 243. General view of his opinions, 253. Is banished, 263. His character and adventures, 268. 406. 479. 507. Was not the author of the famous creed under his name, iii. 544.
- Atanasius*, patriarch of Constantinople, his contests with the Greek emperor Andronicus the Elder, vi. 257.
- Athanasia*, daughter of the philosopher Leontius. See Eudocia.
- Aticus*, the libraries in that city, why said to have been spared by the Goths, i. 326. Naval strength of the republic of, during its prosperity, 529. note.
- Atens* is laid under contribution by Alaric the Goth, iii. 137.
- , Review of the philosophical history of, iv. 112. The schools of, silenced by the emperor Julianian, 118.
- , Revolutions of, after the crusades, and its present state, vi. 253.
- Atos*, mount, beatific visions of the monks of, vi. 278.
- Atlantic Ocean*, derivation of its name, i. 32.
- Attacetti*, a Caledonian tribe of cannibals, account of, ii. 530.
- Attalus*, præfect of Rome, is chosen emperor by the senate, under the influence of Alaric, iii. 231. Is publicly degraded, 234. His future fortune, 263.
- Attalus*, a noble youth of Auvergne, his adventures, iii. 670.
- Attila*, the Hun, iii. 356. Description of his person and character, 357. His conquests, 360. His treatment of his captives, 367. Imposes terms of peace on Theodosius the Younger, 372. Oppresses Theodosius by his ambassadors, 375. Description of his royal residence, 381. His reception of the ambassadors of Theodosius, 383. His behaviour on discovering the scheme of Theodosius to get him assassinated, 388. His haughty messages to the emperors of the East and West, 393. His invasion of Gaul, 406. His oration to his troops on the approach of Ætius and Theodoric, 412. Battle of Chalons, 415. His invasion of Italy, 417. His retreat purchased by Valentinian, 424. His death, 426.
- Atys* and Cybele, the fable of, allegorised by the pen of Julian, ii. 362.
- Avars*, are discomfited by the Turks, iv. 227. Their embassy to the emperor Justinian, 228. Their conquests in Poland and Germany, 229. Their embassy to Justin II. 419. They join the Lombards against the Gepidæ, 423. Pride, policy, and power, of their chagan Baian, 481. Their conquests, 485. Invest Constantinople, 519.
- Averroes*, his religious infidelity, how far justifiable, v. 431. note.
- Aversa*, a town near Naples, built as a settlement for the Normans, v. 590.
- Augurs*, Roman, their number and peculiar office, iii. 70.
- Augustin*, his account of the miracles wrought by the body of St. Stephen, iii. 98. Celebrates the piety of the Goths in the sacking of Rome, 237. Approves the persecution of the Donatists of Africa, 339. His death, character, and writings, 345. History of his relics, iv. 146. note.
- Augustulus*, son of the patrician Orestes, is chosen emperor of the West, iii. 493. Is deposed by Odoacer, 494. His banishment to the Lucullan villa in Campania, 497.
- Augustus*, emperor, his moderate exercise of power, i. 2.

GENERAL INDEX.

i. 2. Is initiated by his successors, 3. His naval regulations, 22. His division of Gaul, 24. His situation after the battle of Actium, 72. He reforms the senate, 73. Procures a senatorial grant of the Imperial dignity, 74. Division of the provinces between him and the senate, 77. Is allowed his military command and guards in the city of Rome, 78. Obtains the consular and tribunitian offices for life, 79. His character and policy, 86. Adopts Tiberius, 90. Formed an accurate register of the revenues and expenses of the empire, 104. Taxes instituted by him, 107. His naval establishments at Ravenna, iii. 1-8.

Augustus and Cæsar, those titles explained and discriminated, i. 85.

Avianus, his character and embassy from Valentinian III. to Attila king of the Huns, iii. 424.

Avignon, the holy see how transferred from Rome to that city, vi. 555. Return of pope Urban V. to Rome, 597.

Avitus, his embassy from Ætius to Theodoric king of the Visigoths, iii. 409. Assumes the empire, 444. His deposition and death, 450.

Aurelian, emperor, his birth and services, i. 353. His expedition against Palmyra, 369. His triumph, 375. His cruelty, and death, 381.

Aurengzebe, account of his immense camp, i. 250. note.

Aurelius is invested with the purple on the Upper Danube, i. 347.

Ausonius, the tutor of the emperor Gratian, his promotions, iii. 3. note.

Auvaris, king of the Lombards in Italy, his wars with the Franks, iv. 442. His adventurous gallantry, 449.

Aulun, the city of, stormed and plundered by the legions in Gaul, i. 365.

Auvergne, province and city of, in Gaul, revolutions of, iii. 597.

Auxiliaries, Barbarian, fatal consequences of their admission into the Roman armies, ii. 49.

Axuch, a Turkish slave, his generous friendship to the princess Anne Comnena, v. 67. And to Manuel Comnenus, 69.

Azimuntium, the citizens of, defend their privileges against Peter, brother of the Eastern emperor Maurice, iv. 487.

Azinus, remarkable spirit shewn by the citizens of, against Attila and his Huns, iii. 374.

B

Baalbec, description of the ruins of, v. 315.

Babylas, St. bishop of Antioch, his posthumous history, ii. 399.

Bagaudæ, in Gaul, revolt of, its occasion, and suppression by Maximian, i. 429.

Bagdad becomes the royal residence of the Abbassides, v. 418. Derivation of the name, 419. note. The fallen state of the caliphs of, 456.

The city of, stormed and sacked by the Moguls vi. 300.

Babram, the Persian general, his character and exploits, iv. 471. Is provoked to rebellion, 473. Dethrones Chosroes, 476. His usurpation and death, 478.

Baian, chagan of the Avars, his pride, policy, and power, iv. 481. His perfidious seizure of Sirmium and Singidunum, 484. His conquests, 485. His treacherous attempt to seize the emperor Heraclius, 508. Invests Constantinople in conjunction with the Persians, 519. Retires, 520.

Bajazet I. sultan of the Turks, his reign, vi. 321. His correspondence with Tamerlane, 343. Is defeated and captured by Tamerlane, 350. Inquiry into the story of the iron cage, 353. His sons, 364.

Balbinus elected joint emperor with Maximus, by the senate, on the deaths of the two Gordians, i. 219.

Baldwin, count of Flanders, engages in the fourth crusade, vi. 136. Is chosen emperor of Constantinople, 176. Is taken prisoner by Calo-John, king of the Bulgarians, 186. His death, 188.

Baldwin II. emperor of Constantinople, vi. 196. His distresses and expedients, 198. His expulsion from that city, 206.

Baldwin, brother of Godfrey of Bouillon, accompanies him on the first crusade, vi. 22. Found the principality of Edessa, 45.

Baltic Sea, progressive subsidence of the water of, i. 260. note. How the Romans acquired a knowledge of the naval powers of, ii. 523. note.

Baptism, theory and practice of, among the primitive Christians, ii. 205.

Barbary, the name of that country, whence derived, v. 361. note. The Moors of, converted to the Mahometan faith, 363.

Barbatio, general of infantry in Gaul under Julian, his misconduct, ii. 166.

Barchochebas, his rebellion against the emperor Hadrian, i. 623.

Bards, Celtic, their power of exciting a martial enthusiasm in the people, i. 281.

Bards, British, their peculiar office and duties, iii. 624.

Bardas, Cæsar, one of the restorers of learning, v. 412.

Bari is taken from the Saracens by the joint efforts of the Latin and Greek empires, v. 581.

Barlaam, a Calabrian monk, his dispute with the Greek theologians about the light of mount Thabor, vi. 279. His embassy to Rome, from Andronicus the Younger, 379. His literary character, 418.

Basil I. the Macedonian, emperor of Constantinople, v. 38. Reduces the Paulicians, 530.

Basil II. emperor of Constantinople, v. 52. His great wealth, 478. His inhuman treatment of the Bulgarians, 547.

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- Besl*, archbishop of Casarea. no evidence of his having been persecuted by the emperor Valens, ii. 509. Intuits his friend Gregory Nazianzen, under the appearance of promotion, iii. 15. The father of the monks of Pontus, 510.
- Basilias*, brother of the empress Verina, entrusted with the command of the armament sent against the Vandals in Africa, iii. 477. His fleet destroyed by Genferic, 479. His promotion to the empire, and death, iv. 5.
- Bassianus*, high priest of the sun, his parentage, i. 173. Is proclaimed emperor at Emesa, ibid. See Elagabalus.
- Bassianus*, brother-in-law to Constantine, revolts against him, i. 519.
- Bastara*, its foundation and situation, v. 286.
- Baths*, public, of Rome described, iii. 214.
- Batava*, reception of the emperor Julian there, ii. 423.
- Beasts*, wild, the variety of, introduced in the circus, for the public games at Rome, i. 415.
- Beausobre*, M. de, character of his Histoire Critique du Manichéisme, iv. 523. note.
- Beder*, battle of, between Mahomet and the Koreish of Mecca, v. 232.
- Bedoueens* of Arabia, their mode of life, v. 174.
- Bees*, remarks on the structure of their combs and cells, v. 424. note.
- Belisarius*, his birth and military promotion, iv. 127. Is appointed by Justinian to conduct the African war, 129. Embarkation of his troops, 132. Lands in Africa, 134. Defeats Gelimer, 138. Is received into Carthage, 139. Second defeat of Gelimer, 144. Reduction of Africa, 146. Surrender of Gelimer, 151. His triumphant return to Constantinople, 152. Is declared sole consul, 153. He menaces the Ostrogoths of Italy, 161. He seizes Sicily, 166. Invades Italy, 170. Takes Naples, 172. He enters Rome, 175. He is besieged in Rome by the Goths, 176. The siege raised, 192. Causes Constantine, one of his generals, to be killed, 193. Siege of Ravenna, 198. Takes Ravenna by stratagem, 200. Returns to Constantinople, 202. His character and behaviour, 203. Scandalous life of his wife Antonina, 204. His disgrace and submission, 209. Is sent into the East to oppose Chosroes king of Persia, 247. His politic reception of the Persian ambassadors, 248. His second campaign in Italy, 282. His ineffectual attempt to raise the siege of Rome, 286. Dissuades Totila from destroying Rome, 289. Recovers the city, 290. His final recall from Italy, 292. Rescues Constantinople from the Bulgarians, 316. His disgrace and death, 319.
- Benecke*, in feudal language, explained, iii. 593.
- Benevento*, battle of, between Charles of Anjou, and Mainfroy the Sicilian usurper, vi. 243.
- Beneventum*, anecdotes relating to the siege of, v. 585.
- Benjamin* of Tudela, his account of the riches of Constantinople, v. 478.
- Berea*, or Aleppo, reception of the emperor Julian there, ii. 423.
- Beruard*, St. his character and influence in promoting the second crusade, vi. 83. His character of the Romans, 528.
- Berytus*, account of the law school established there, ii. 40. Is destroyed by an earthquake, iv. 326.
- Bernier*, his account of the camp of Aurengzebe, i. 250. note.
- Bessarion*, cardinal, his character, vi. 425.
- Bisias*, governor of Rome for Justinian, his rapacity during the siege of that city by Totila the Goth, iv. 284. Occasions the loss of Rome, 286.
- Bizade*, is taken and garrisoned by Sapor king of Persia, ii. 158. Is ineffectually besieged by Constantius, 159.
- Bindoes*, a Saffian prince, deposes Hormouz king of Persia, iv. 473.
- Birbright* the least invidious of all human distinctions, i. 205.
- Bishops*, among the primitive Christians, the office of, explained, i. 583. Progress of episcopal authority, 587. Assumed dignity of episcopal government, 598.
- , Number of, at the time of Constantine the Great, ii. 213. Mode of their election, 214. Their power of ordination, 216. The ecclesiastical revenue of each diocese how divided, 221. Their civil jurisdiction, 222. Their spiritual censures, 224. Their legislative assemblies, 228.
- Bishops*, rural, their rank and duties, ii. 214.
- Bisextile*, superstitious regard to this year by the Romans, ii. 486.
- Bitthynia*, the cities of, plundered by the Goths, i. 320.
- Blemmyes*, their revolt against the emperor Diocletian, i. 439.
- Boccace*, his literary character, vi. 421.
- Boethius*, the learned senator of Rome, his history, iv. 33. His imprisonment and death, 33.
- Bobemond*, the son of Robert Guiscard, his character and military exploits, v. 619. vi. 25. His route to Constantinople on the crusade, 31. His flattering reception by the emperor Alexius Comnenus, 35. Takes Antioch, and obtains the principality of it, 48. His subsequent transactions, and death, 73.
- Boniface*, St. his history, i. 694.
- Boniface*, count, the Roman general under Valentinian III. his character, iii. 332. Is betrayed into a revolt by Ætius, 334. His repentance, 340. Is besieged in Hippo Regius by Genferic king of the Vandals, 342. Returns to Italy, and is killed by Ætius, 344.
- Boniface VIII.* pope, his violent contest with Philip the Fair king of France, and his character, vi. 554. Institutes the jubilee, 557.
- Boniface*, marquis of Montferrat, is chosen general of the fourth crusade to the Holy Land, vi. 142. Is made king of Macedonia, 179. Is killed by the Bulgarians, 189.

Bosphorus,

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

Belshorus, revolutions of that kingdom, i. 316. Is seized by the Goths, 317. The strait of, described, ii. 4.

Bysra, siege of, by the Saracens, v. 298.

Butberic, the Imperial general in Theffalonica, murdered in a sedition, iii. 50.

Bouccault, marshal, defends Constantinople against Bajazet, vi. 329.

Bulagus, the port of, recovered from Carausius, by Constantius Chlorus, i. 434.

Bovides, the Persian dynasty of, v. 455.

Brancaleone, senator of Rome, his character, vi. 540.

Bretagne, the province of, in France, settled by Britons, iii. 617.

Britain, reflections on the conquest of, by the Romans, i. 4. Description of, 25. Colonies planted in, 44. note. A colony of Vandals settled there by Probus, 402. Revolt of Carausius, 431. —, How first peopled, ii. 526. Invasions of, by the Scots and Picts, 529. Is restored to peace by Theodosius, 531. —, Revolt of Maximus there, iii. 6. Revolt of the troops there against Honorius, 173. Is abandoned by the Romans, 274. State of, until the arrival of the Saxons, 275. Descent of the Saxons on, 611. Establishment of the Saxon heptarchy, 614. Wars in, 615. Saxon devastation of the country, 6.0. Manners of the independent Britons, 623. Description of, by Procopius, 626. —, Conversion of the Britons by a mission from pope Gregory the Great, iv. 459. The doctrine of the incarnation received there, 590.

Brutus the Trojan, his colonization of Britain now given up by intelligent historians, ii. 526. note.

Buzon, M. his extraordinary burning mirrors, iv. 89. note.

Bulgarians, their character, iv. 218. Their incursions on the Eastern empire, 221. Invasion of, under Zabergan, 314. Repulsed by Belisarius, 316. —, The kingdom of, destroyed by Basil II. the Greek emperor, v. 53. 547. —, Revolt of, from the Greek empire, and submission to the pope of Rome, vi. 131. War with the Greeks under Calo-John, 184.

Bull fest, in the Coliseum at Rome, described, vi. 637.

Burgundians, their settlement on the Elbe, and maxims of government, ii. 520. Their settlement in Gaul, iii. 271. Limits of the kingdom of, under Gundobald, 569. Are subdued by the Franks, 573.

Eurnet, character of his Sacred Theory of the Earth, i. 5. note.

Burranpooter, source of that river, vi. 341. note.

Busr, in Egypt, four several places known under this name, v. 435. note.

Buzurg, the philosophical preceptor of Hormouz king of Persia, his high reputation, iv. 409. note.

Byzantine historians, list and character of, vi. 517. note.

Byzantium, siege of, by the emperor Severus, i. 147. Is taken by Maximin, 515. Siege of, by Constantine the Great, 531. Its situation described, ii. 3. By whom founded, ibid. note. See Constantino, le.

C

Cuaba, or temple of Mecca, described, v. 190. The idols in, destroyed by Mahomet, 239.

Cabades, king of Persia, besieges and takes Amida, iv. 108. Seizes the straits of Caucasus, 111. Vicissitudes of his reign, 233.

Cadesa, battle of, between the Saracens and the Persians, v. 284.

Cadijah, her marriage with Mahomet, v. 179. Is converted by him to his new religion, 200. Her death, 223. Mahomet's veneration for her memory, 255.

Cæcilian, the peace of the church in Africa disturbed by him and his party, ii. 233.

Cæcilius, the authority of his account of the famous vision of Constantine the Great, inquired into, ii. 106.

Cælestian, senator of Carthage, his distresses on the taking of that city by Genseric, iii. 349.

Cæsar, Julius, his inducement to the conquest of Britain, i. 4. Degrades the senatorial dignity, 73. note. Assumes a place among the tutelary deities of Rome, in his lifetime, 84. His address in appealing a military sedition, 191. note. His prudent application of the coronary gold presented to him, ii. 72.

Cæsar and Augustus, those titles explained and discriminated, i. 85.

Cæsar, of the emperor Julian, the philosophical fable of that work delineated, ii. 412.

Cæsarea, capital of Cappadocia, taken by Sapor king of Persia, i. 329. Is reduced by the Saracens, v. 327.

Cabina, queen of the Moors of Africa, her policy to drive the Arabs out of the country, v. 362.

Cairoan, the city of, founded in the kingdom of Turis, v. 358.

Calid, deserts from the idolatrous Arabs to the party of Mahomet, v. 238. His gallant conduct at the battle of Muta, 244. His victories under the caliph Abubeker, 283. Attends the Saracen army on the Syrian expedition, 298. His valour at the siege of Damascus, 301. Distinguishes himself at the battle of Aiznadin, 305. His cruel treatment of the refugees from Damascus, 311. Joins in plundering the fair of Abyla, 315. Commands the Saracens at the battle of Yermuk, 318. His death, 329.

Calabaria, and its ancient inhabitants, described, ii. 527.

Calabrian war, under the emperor Severus, an account of, i. 150.

Caliph

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- Caliphs* of the Saracens, character of, v. 279. Their rapid conquests, 281. Extent and power of, 390. Triple division of the office, 417. They patronise learning, 423. Decline and fall of their empire, 452. vi. 300.
- Callinicum*, the punishment of a religious sedition in that city, opposed by St. Ambrose, iii. 52.
- Callinicus* of Heliopolis, assails in defending Constantinople against the Saracens, by his chymical inflammable compositions, v. 402.
- Calucks*, black, recent emigration of, from the confines of Russia to those of China, ii. 585.
- Calo-John*, the Bulgarian chief, his war with Baldwin, the Latin emperor of the Greeks, vi. 184. Defeats, and takes him prisoner, 186. His savage character and death, 190.
- Calocerus*, a camel-driver, excites an insurrection in the island of Cyprus, ii. 89.
- Calphurnius*, the machinery of his eclogue on the accession of the emperor Carus, i. 409.
- Calvin*, the reformer, his doctrine of the Eucharist, v. 536. Examination of his conduct to Servetus, 538.
- Camel*, of Arabia, described, v. 175.
- Camisards* of Languedoc, their enthusiasm compared with that of the Circumcellions of Numidia, ii. 302.
- Campania*, the province of, desolated by the ill policy of the Roman emperors, ii. 65. Description of the Lucullan villa in, iii. 498.
- Canada*, the present climate and circumstances of, compared with those of ancient Germany, i. 262.
- Cannon*, enormous one of the sultan Mahomet II. described, vi. 475. Bursts, 485.
- Canoes*, Russian, a description of, v. 567.
- Cantacuzene, John*, character of his Greek History, vi. 259. His good fortune under the younger Andronicus, 267. Is driven to assume the purple, 270. His lively distinction between foreign and civil war, 272. His entry into Constantinople, and reign, 274. Abdicates, and turns monk, 277. His war with the Genoese factory at Pera, 283. Marries his daughter to a Turk, 310. His negotiation with pope Clement VI. 381.
- Cantemir's History of the Ottoman Empire*, a character of, vi. 312. note.
- Capelianus*, governor of Mauritania, defeats the younger Gordian, and takes Carthage, i. 218.
- Capitation-tax*, under the Roman emperors, an account of, ii. 65.
- Capito*, Ateius, the civilian, his character, iv. 354.
- Capitol* of Rome, burning and restoration of, i. 642.
- Cappadocia*, famous for its fine breed of horses, ii. 57.
- Capraria*, iste of, character of the monks there, iii. 127.
- Captives*, how treated by the Barbarians, iii. 367. 595.
- Caracalla*, son of the emperor Severus, his fixed antipathy to his brother Geta, i. 156. Succeeds to the empire jointly with him, 160. Tendency of his edict to extend the privileges of Roman citizens to all the free inhabitants of his empire, 193. His view in this transaction, 201. Doubles the tax on legacies and inheritances, 202.
- Caracorum*, the Tartar settlement of, described, vi. 305.
- Caravans*, Sogdian, their route to and from China, for silk, to supply the Roman empire, iv. 74.
- Carausius*, his revolt in Britain, i. 431. Is acknowledged by Diocletian and his colleagues, 433.
- Carbeus*, the Paulician, his revolt from the Greek emperor to the Saracens, v. 528.
- Cardinals*, the election of a pope vested in them, vi. 550. Institution of the coaclave, 551.
- Carduene*, situation and history of that territory, i. 453.
- Carinus*, the son of Carus, succeeds his father in the empire, jointly with his brother Numerian, i. 412.
- Carizmians*, their invasion of Syria, vi. 113.
- Carlovingian* race of kings, commencement of, in France, v. 119.
- Carmath*, the Arabian reformer, his character, v. 449. His military exploits, 450.
- Carmelites*, from whom they derive their pedigree, iii. 507. note.
- Carpathian* mountains, their situation, i. 260.
- Carthage*, the bishopric of, bought for Majorinus, i. 673. note.
- , Religious discord generated there by the factions of Cæcilian and Donatus, ii. 234.
- , The temple of Venus there, converted into a Christian church, iii. 81. Is surpris'd by Genserich king of the Vandals, 347.
- , The gates of, opened to Belisarius, iv. 139. Natural alterations produced by time in the situation of this city, 140. note. The walls of, repaired by Belisarius, 142. Insurrection of the Roman troops there, 273.
- , Is reduced and pillaged by Hassan the Saracen, v. 359. Subsequent history of, 360.
- Carthagena*, an extraordinary rich silver mine worked there for the Romans, i. 195.
- Carus*, emperor, his election and character, i. 408.
- Caspian* and Iberian gates of mount Caucasus, distinguished, iv. 110.
- Cassians*, the party of, among the Roman civilians, explained, iv. 355.
- Cassiodorus*, his Gothic history, i. 291. His account of the infant state of the republic of Venice, ii. 421. His long and prosperous life, iv. 23.
- Castriot, George*; see Scanderbeg.
- Catalans*, their service and war in the Greek empire, vi. 248.
- Catholic* church, the doctrines of, how discriminated from the opinions of the Platonic school, ii. 243. The authority of, extended to the minds of mankind, 246. Faith of the Western or Latin church, 258.

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

258. Is distracted by factions in the cause of Athanasius, 271. The doxology, how introduced, and how perverted, 293. The revenue of, transferred to the heathen priests, by Julian, 391.
- , Edict of Theodosius for the establishment of the Catholic faith, iii. 11. The progressive steps of idolatry in, 93. Persecution of the Catholics in Africa, 536. Pious frauds of the Catholic clergy, 544.
- , How bewildered by the doctrine of the incarnation, iv. 544. Union of the Greek and Latin churches, 590.
- , Schism of the Greek church, vi. 121.
- Celestine*, pope, espouses the party of Cyril against Nestorius, and pronounces the degradation of the latter from his episcopal dignity, iv. 553.
- Celtic* language, driven to the mountains by the Latin, i. 45, 46. note.
- Censor*, the office of, revived under the emperor Decius, i. 301. But without effect, 302.
- Ceos*, the manufacture of silk, first introduced to Europe from that island, iv. 72.
- Cerca*, the principal queen of Attila king of the Huns, her reception of Maximin the Roman ambassador, iii. 382.
- Cerintus*, his opinion of the twofold nature of Jesus Christ, iv. 540.
- Ceylon*, ancient names given to that island, and the imperfect knowledge of, by the Romans, ii. 414. note.
- Chalcedon*, the injudicious situation of this city signified by proverbial contempt, ii. 5. A tribunal erected there by the emperor Julian, to try and punish the evil ministers of his predecessor Constantius, 344.
- , A stately church built there by Rufinus, the infamous minister of the emperor Theodosius, iii. 103.
- , Is taken by Chosroes II. king of Persia, iv. 503.
- Chelondyles*, the Greek historian, his remarks on the several nations of Europe, vi. 391.
- Chalens*, battle of, between the Romans and Attila king of the Huns, iii. 410.
- Chamarians* reduced and generously treated by Julian, ii. 170.
- Chancellor*, the original and modern application of this word compared, i. 414.
- Characters*, national, the distinctions of, how formed, ii. 563.
- Charicts* of the Romans described, iii. 204. note.
- Charlemagne* conquers the kingdom of Lombardy, v. 117. His reception at Rome, 121. Eludes fulfilling the promises of Pepin and himself to the Roman pontiff, 124. His coronation at Rome by the pope Leo III. 135. His reign and character, 136. Extent of his empire, 140. His neighbours and enemies, 144. His successors, 146. His negotiations and treaty with the Eastern empire, 149. State of his family and dominions in the tenth century, 505.
- Charles* the Fat emperor of the Romans, v. 147.
- Charles* of Anjou subdues Naples and Sicily, vi. 245. The Sicilian Vespers, 247. His character as a senator of Rome, 541.
- Charles* IV. emperor of Germany, his weakness and poverty, v. 166. His public ostentation, 167. Contrast between him and Augustus, 168.
- Charles* V. emperor, parallel between him and Diocletian, i. 466. And between the sack of Rome by him, and that by Alaric the Goth, iii. 244.
- Chastity*, its high esteem among the ancient Germans, i. 276. And the primitive Christians, 578.
- Chemistry*, the art of, from whom derived, v. 429.
- Chersonesus*, Thracian, how fortified by the emperor Justinian, iv. 101.
- Chersonites* assist Constantine the Great against the Goths, ii. 93. Are cruelly persecuted by the Greek emperor Justinian II. v. 17.
- Chefs*, the object of the game of, and by whom invented, iv. 241.
- Childeeric*, king of France, deposed under papal sanction, v. 119.
- Children*, the exposing of, a prevailing vice of antiquity, iv. 373. Natural, according to the Roman laws, what, 382.
- China*, how distinguished in ancient history, i. 444. note. Great numbers of children annually exposed there, 595. note.
- , Its situation, ii. 575. The high chronology claimed by the historians of, 576. The great wall of, when erected, 578. Was twice conquered by the northern tribes, 580.
- , The Romans supplied with silk by the caravans from, iv. 73.
- , Is conquered by the Moguls, vi. 297. 306. Expulsion of the Moguls, 307.
- Chivalry*, origin of the order of, vi. 26.
- Chnodomar*, prince of the Alemanni, taken prisoner by Julian at the battle of Strasburg, ii. 108.
- Chosroes*, king of Armenia, assassinated by the emissaries of Sapor king of Persia, i. 326.
- Chosroes*, son of Tiridates, king of Armenia, his character, ii. 104.
- Chosroes* I. king of Persia, protects the last surviving philosophers of Athens, in his treaty with the emperor Justinian, iv. 119. Review of his history, 234. Sells a peace to Justinian, 241. His invasion of Syria, 244. His negotiations with Justinian, 264. His prosperity, 266. Battle of Melitene, 467. His death, 468.
- Chosroes* II. king of Persia, is raised to the throne on the deposition of his father Hormouz, iv. 475. Is reduced to implore the assistance of the emperor Maurice, 477. His restoration and policy, 479. Conquers Syria, 501. Palestine, 502. Egypt and Asia Minor, 503. His reign and

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- and magnificence, 504. Rejects the Mahometan religion, 506. Imposes an ignominious peace on the emperor Heraclius, 509. His flight, deposition, and death, 525.
- Chozars*, the lord of, sent by the Turks to the assistance of the emperor Heraclius, iv. 521.
- Christ*, the festival of his birth, why fixed by the Romans at the winter solstice, ii. 326. note.
- Christians*, primitive, the various sects into which they branched out, i. 544. Ascribed the Pagan idolatry to the agency of demons, 552. Believed the end of the world to be near at hand, 561. The miraculous powers ascribed to the primitive church, 567. Their faith stronger than in modern times, 571. Their superior virtue and austerity, 572. Repentance a virtue in high esteem among them, 573. Their notions of marriage and chastity, 577. They disclaim war and government, 580. Were active however in the internal government of their own society, 581. Bishops, 583. Synods, 586. Metropolitans and archbishops, 588. Bishop of Rome, 589. Their probable proportion to the Pagan subjects of the empire before the conversion of Constantine the Great, 613. Enquiry into their persecutions, 620. Why more odious to the governing powers than the Jews, 624. Their religious meetings suspected, 629. Are persecuted by Nero, as the incendiaries of Rome, 637. Instructions of the emperor Trajan to Pliny the Younger for the regulation of his conduct toward them, 647. Remained exposed to popular resentment on public festivities, 648. Legal mode of proceeding against them, 650. The ardour with which they courted martyrdom, 661. When allowed to erect places for public worship, 669. Their persecution under Diocletian and his associates, 682. An edict of toleration for them published by Galerius just before his death, 695. Some considerations necessary to be attended to in reading the sufferings of the martyrs, 700.
- , Edict of Milan published by Constantine the Great, ii. 184. Political recommendations of the Christian morality to Constantine, 186. Theory and practice of passive obedience, 187. Their loyalty and zeal, 190. The sacrament of baptism, how administered in early times, 205. Extraordinary propagation of Christianity after it obtained the Imperial sanction, 208. Becomes the established religion of the Roman empire, 211. Spiritual and temporal powers distinguished, 212. Review of the episcopal order in the church, 213. The ecclesiastical revenue of each diocese, how divided, 221. Their legislative assemblies, 228. Edict of Constantine the Great against heretics, 232. Mysterious doctrine of the Trinity, 242. The doctrines of the Catholic church, how discriminated from the opinions of the Platonic school, 243. General character of the Christian sects, 304. Christian schools prohibited by the emperor Julian, 392. They are removed from all offices of trust, 393. Are obliged to reinstate the Pagan temples, 394. Their imprudent and irregular zeal against idolatry, 409.
- Christians*, distinction of, into vulgar and ascetic, iii. 505. Conversion of the barbarous nations, 527.
- Christianity*, enquiry into the progress and establishment of, 535. Religion and character of the Jews, 537. The Jewish religion the basis of Christianity, 541. Is offered to all mankind, 542. The sects into which the Christians divided, 544. The theology of, reduced to a systematical form in the school of Alexandria, 607. Injudicious conduct of its early advocates, 617. Its persecutions, 620. First erection of churches, 669.
- , The system of, found in Plato's doctrine of the Logos, ii. 240.
- , Salutary effects resulting from the conversion of the barbarous nations, iii. 532.
- , Its progress in the north of Europe, v. 576.
- Chrysofostom*, the Eunuch, engages Edecon, to assassinate his king Attila, iii. 387. Is put to death by the empress Pulcheria, 390. Assisted at the second council of Ephesus, iv. 564.
- Chrysocheir*, general of the revolted Paulicians, over-runs and pillages Asia Minor, v. 529. His death, 530.
- Chrysoleas*, Manuel, the Greek envoy, his character, vi. 425. His admiration of Rome and Constantinople, 434.
- Chrysopolis*, battle of, between Constantine the Great and Licinius, i. 532.
- Chrysothem*, St. his account of the pompous luxury of the emperor Arcadius, iii. 282. Protects his fugitive patron the eunuch Eutropius, 296. History of his promotion to the archiepiscopal see of Constantinople, 301. His character and administration, 302. His persecution, 305. His death, 309. His relics removed to Constantinople, 310. His encomium on the monastic life, 512. note.
- Churches*, Christian, the first erection of, i. 669. Demolition of, under Diocletian, 688. Splendour of, under Constantine the Great, ii. 220. Seven, of Asia, the fate of, vi. 314.
- Cibalis*, battle of, between Constantine the Great and Licinius, i. 521.
- Cicero*, his view of the philosophical opinions as to the immortality of the soul, i. 556. His encomium on the study of the law, iv. 338. System of his republic, 351.
- Cimmerian* darknets, the expression of, whence derived, iii. 206. note.
- Circumcellions* of Africa, Donatist schismatics, history of their revolt, ii. 300. Their religious suicides, 303. Persecution of, by the emperor Honorius, iii. 338.
- Circumcision* of both sexes, a physical custom in Aethiopia, unconnected with religion, iv. 619.
- Circus*,

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- Circus*, Roman, the four factions in, described, iv. 60. Constantinople, and the Eastern empire, distracted by these factions, 61.
- Cities* in the Roman empire enumerated, i. 58.
- , Commercial, of Italy, rise, and government of, v. 160.
- Citizens* of Rome, motive of Caracalla for extending the privileges of, to all the free inhabitants of the empire, i. 193. 202. Political tendency of this grant, 203.
- City*, the birth of a new one, how celebrated by the Romans, ii. 11. note.
- Civilians* of Rome, origin of the profession, and the three periods in the history of, iv. 348.
- Civilis*, the Batavian, his successful revolt against the Romans, i. 283.
- Claudian* the poet, and panegyrist of Stilicho, his works supply the deficiencies of history, iii. 114. Celebrates the murder of Rufinus, 120. His death and character, 187. His character of the eunuch Eutropius, 286.
- Claudius*, emperor, chosen by the Pretorian guards, without the concurrence of the senate, i. 88.
- Claudius*, emperor, successor to Gallienus, his character and elevation to the throne, i. 345.
- Cleander*, minister of the emperor Commodus, his history, i. 110.
- Clemens*, Flavius, and his wife Domitilla, why distinguished as Christian martyrs, i. 645.
- Clement III.* pope, and the emperor Henry III. mutually confirm each other's sovereign characters, v. 622.
- Clement V.* pope, transfers the holy see from Rome to Avignon, vi. 556.
- Clergy*, when first distinguished from the laity, i. 590. ii. 212.
- , The ranks and numbers of, how multiplied, ii. 218. Their property, 219. Their offences only cognizable by their own order, 223. Valentinian's edict to restrain the avarice of, 510.
- Clodion*, the first of the Merovingian race of kings of the Franks in Gaul, his reign, iii. 401.
- Clodius Albinus*, governor of Britain, his steady fidelity during the revolutions at Rome, i. 133. Declares himself against Julianus, 135.
- Clotilda*, niece of the king of Burgundy, is married to Clovis king of the Franks, and converts her Pagan husband, iii. 565. Exhorts her husband to the Gothic war, 574.
- Clovis*, king of the Franks, his descent, and reign, iii. 559.
- Cluverius*, his account of the objects of adoration among the ancient Germans, i. 278. note.
- Cochineal*, importance of the discovery of, in the art of dying, iv. 71. note.
- Code* of Justinian, how formed, iv. 359. New edition of, 365.
- Codicils*, how far admitted by the Roman law respecting testaments, iv. 392.
- Cœnobites*, in monkish history, described, iii. 523.
- Coinage*, how regulated by the Roman emperors, vi. 536.
- Colchis*, the modern Mingrelia, described, iv. 250. Manners of the natives, 252. Revolt of, from the Romans to the Persians, and repentance, 258. Colchian war, in consequence, 261.
- Colosseum*, of the emperor Titus, observations on, vi. 635. Exhibition of a bull feast in, 637.
- Collyridian* heretics, an account of, v. 203.
- Colonies*, Roman, how planted, i. 43.
- Colonna*, history of the Roman family of, vi. 562.
- Colossus* of Rhodes, some account of, v. 331.
- Columns* of Hercules, their situation, i. 32.
- Comana*, the rich temple of, suppressed, and the revenues confiscated, by the emperors of the East, ii. 56.
- Combat*, judicial, origin of, in the Salic laws, iii. 589. The laws of, according to the affize of Jerusalem, vi. 68. Apology for the practice of, 229. note.
- Comets*, account of those which appeared in the reign of Justinian, iv. 322.
- Commentiolus*, his disgraceful warfare against the Avars, iv. 487.
- Commodus*, emperor, his education, character, and reign, i. 195.
- Comneni*, origin of the family of, on the throne of Constantinople, v. 57. Its extinction, vi. 511.
- Conception*, immaculate, of the Virgin Mary, the doctrine of, from whence derived, v. 206.
- Concubine*, according to the Roman civil law, explained, iv. 382.
- Conflagration*, general, ideas of the primitive Christians, concerning, i. 564.
- Conquest*, the vanity of, not so justifiable as the desire of spoil, ii. 530. Is rather achieved by art, than personal valour, iii. 353.
- Conrad III.* emperor, engages in the second crusade, vi. 75. His disastrous expedition, 80.
- Conrad* of Montferrat, defends Tyre against Saladin, vi. 100. Is assassinated, 104.
- Constance*, treaty of, v. 161.
- Constantians*, the third son of Constantine the Great, is sent to govern the western provinces of the empire, ii. 88. Division of the empire among him and his brothers, on the death of their father, 100. Is invaded by his brother Constantine, 110. Is killed, on the usurpation of Magnentius, 112. Espoused the cause of Athanasius against his brother Constantius, 277.
- Constantians II.* emperor of Constantinople, v. 10.
- Constantia*, princess, grand-daughter of Constantine the Great, is carried by her mother to the camp of the usurper Procopius, ii. 49. Narrowly escapes falling into the hands of the Quadi, 554. Marries the emperor Gratian, 538.
- Constantina*, daughter of Constantine the Great, and widow of Hannibalianus, places the diadem on the head of the general Vetricano, ii. 113. Is married

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- married to Gallus, 129. Her character, 130. Dies, 134.
- Constantina*, widow of the Eastern emperor Maurice, the cruel fate of, and her daughters, iv. 496.
- Constantine the Great*, the several opinions as to the place of his birth, i. 480. His history, 481. He is saluted emperor by the British legions on the death of his father, 483. Marries Fausta, the daughter of Maximian, 489. Puts Maximian to death, 495. General review of his administration in Gaul, 498. Undertakes to deliver Rome from the tyranny of Maxentius, 502. Defeats Maxentius, and enters Rome, 510. His alliance with Licinius, 514. Defeats Licinius, 520. Peace concluded with Licinius, 523. His laws, 524. Chastises the Goths, 526. Second civil war with Licinius, 528.
- , Motives which induced him to make Byzantium the capital of his empire, ii. 3. Declares his determination to spring from divine command, 11. Despoils other cities of their ornaments to decorate his new capital, 15. Ceremony of dedicating his new city, 22. Form of civil and military administration established there, 23. Separates the civil from the military administration, 43. Corrupted military discipline, 44. His character, 74. Account of his family, 78. His jealousy of his son Crispus, 81. Mysterious deaths of Crispus and Licinius, 83. His repentance and acts of atonement inquired into, 84. His sons and nephews, 86. Sends them to superintend the several provinces of the empire, 88. Assists the Sarmatians, and provokes the Goths, 92. Reduces the Goths to peace, 94. His death, 96. Attempt to ascertain the date of his conversion to Christianity, 180. His Pagan superstition, 182. Protects the Christians in Gaul, 183. Publishes the edict of Milan, 184. Motives which recommended the Christians to his favour, 186. Exhorts his subjects to embrace the Christian profession, 190. His famous standard the Labarum described, 194. His celebrated vision previous to his battle with Maxentius, 196. Story of the miraculous cross in the air, 199. His conversion accounted for, from natural and probable causes, 201. His theological discourses, 203. His devotion and privileges, 204. The delay of his baptism accounted for, 205. Is commemorated as a saint by the Greeks, 207. His edict against heretics, 231. Favours the cause of Cæcilian against Donatus, 235. His sensible letter to the bishop of Alexandria, 260. How prevailed on to ratify the Nicene creed, 261. His levity in religion, 263. Granted a toleration to his Pagan subjects, 305. His reform of Pagan abuses, 306. Was associated with the Heathen Deities after his death, by a decree of the senate, 308. His discovery of the holy sepulchre, 383.
- , Publication of his fictitious donation to the bishops of Rome, v. 125. Fabulous interdiction of marriage with strangers, ascribed to him, 491.
- Constantine II.*, the son of Constantine the Great, is sent to preside over Gaul, ii. 88. Division of the empire among him and his brothers, on the death of their father, 100. Invades his brother Constans, and is killed, 110.
- Constantine III.*, emperor of Constantinople, v. 8.
- Constantine IV.*, Pogonatus, emperor of Constantinople, v. 12.
- Constantine V.*, Copronymus, emperor of Constantinople, v. 21. Fates of his five sons, 23. Revolt of Artavasdes, and troubles on account of image worship, 101. Abolishes the monkish order, 102.
- Constantine VI.*, emperor of Constantinople, v. 24.
- Constantine VII.*, Porphyrogenitus, emperor of Constantinople, v. 4. His cautions against discovering the secret of the Greek fire, 404. Account of his works, 464. Their imperfections pointed out, 466. His account of the ceremonies of the Byzantine court, 490. Justifies the marriage of his son with the princess Bertha of France, 492.
- Constantine VIII.*, emperor of Constantinople, v. 46.
- Constantine IX.*, emperor of Constantinople, v. 52.
- Constantine X.*, Monomachus, emperor of Constantinople, v. 56.
- Constantine XI.*, Ducas, emperor of Constantinople, v. 60.
- Constantine Palæologus*, the last of the Greek emperors, his reign, vi. 459.
- Constantine Sylvanus*, founder of the Paulicians, his death, v. 526.
- Constantine*, a private soldier in Britain, elected emperor, for the sake of his name, iii. 174. He reduces Gaul and Spain, 175. 258. His reduction and death, 259.
- Constantine*, general under Belisarius in Italy, his death, iv. 193.
- Constantinople*, its situation described, with the motives which induced Constantine the Great to make this city the capital of his empire, ii. 3. Its local advantages, 9. Its extent, 12. Progress of the work, 14. Principal edifices, 15. How furnished with inhabitants, 18. Privileges granted to it, 20. Its dedication, 21. Review of the new form of civil and military administration established there, 23. Is allotted to Constantine the Younger, in the division of the empire, on the emperor's death, 100. Violent contests there between the rival bishops, Paul and Macedonius, 296. Bloody engagement between the Athanasians and Arians on the removal of the body of Constantine, 298. Triumphant entry of the emperor Julian, 336. The senate of, allowed the same powers and honours as that at Rome, 350. Arrival of Valens, as emperor of the East, 489. Revolt of Procopius, 491.
- , Continued the principal seat of the Arian heresy, during the reigns of Constantius and Valens, iii. 13. Is purged from Arianism by the

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- the emperor Theodosius, 17. Council of, 20. Is enriched by the bodies of saints and martyrs, 95. Insurrection against Gainas and his Arian Goths, 298. Persecution of the archbishop, St. Chrysostram, 305. Popular tumults on his account, 306. Earthquake there, 366.
- , The city and eastern empire distracted by the factions of the circus, iv. 61. Foundation of the church of St. Sophia, 91. Other churches erected there by Justinian, 96. Triumph of Belisarius over the Vandals, 152. The walls of, injured by an earthquake, 315. State of the armies, under the emperor Maurice, 488. The armies and city revolt against him, 491. Deliverance of the city from the Persians and Avars, 519. Religious war about the Trisagion, 575.
- , Prospectus of the remaining history of the Eastern empire, v. 1. Summary review of the five dynasties of the Greek empire, 85. Tumults in the city to oppose the destruction of images, 100. Abolition of the monkish order by Constantine, 102. First siege of, by the Saracens, 393. Second siege by the Saracens, 397. Review of the provinces of the Greek empire, in the tenth century, 468. Riches of the city of Constantinople, 478. The imperial palace of, 480. Officers of state, 485. Military character of the Greeks, 500. The name and character of Romans, supported to the last, 510. Decline, and revival of literature, 511. The city menaced by the Turks, 556. Account of the Varangians, 561. Naval expeditions of the Russians against the city, 566.
- , Origin of the separation of the Greek and Latin churches, vi. 121. Massacre of the Latins, 129. Invasion of the Greek empire, and conquest of Constantinople by the crusaders, 149. The city taken, and Isaac Angelus restored, 157. Part of the city burned by the Latins, 159. Second siege of the city by the Latins, 162. Is pillaged, 165. Account of the statues destroyed, 171. Partition of the Greek empire by the French and Venetians, 174. The Greeks rise against their Latin conquerors, 185. The city retaken by the Greeks, 204. The suburb of Galata, assigned to the Genoese, 280. Hostilities between the Genoese and the emperor, 283. How the city escaped the Moguls, 303. Is besieged by the sultan Amurath II. 371. Is compared with Rome, 434. Is besieged by Mahomet II. sultan of the Turks, 477. Is stormed and taken, 500. Becomes the capital of the Turkish empire, 508.
- Constantius Chlorus*, governor of Dalmatia, was intended to be adopted by the emperor Carus, in the room of his vicious son Carinus, i. 414. Is associated as Cæsar by Diocletian in his administration, 427. Assumes the title of Augustus, on the abdication of Diocletian, 476. His death, 482. Granted a toleration to the Christians, 691.
- Constantius*, the second son of Constantine the Great, his education, ii. 87. Is sent to govern the Eastern provinces of the empire, 88. Seizes Constantinople on the death of his father, 98. Conspires the deaths of his kinsmen, 99. Division of the empire among him and his brothers, 100. Rellors Chosroes king of Armenia, 104. Battle of Singara with Sapor king of Persia, 105. Rejects the offers of Magnentius and Vetricio, on the plea of a vision, 114. His oration to the Illyrian troops at the interview with Vetricio, 116. Defeats Magnentius at the battle of Mursa, 120. His councils governed by eunuchs, 126. Education of his cousins Gallus and Julian, 123. Disgrace and death of Gallus, 134. Sends for Julian to court, 139. Invests him with the title of Cæsar, 141. Visits Rome, 144. Presents an obelisk to that city, 146. The Quadii and Sarmatian wars, 147. His Persian negotiations, 150. Mismanagement of affairs in the East, 158. Favours the Arians, 264. His religious character by Ammianus the historian, 266. His restless endeavours to establish an uniformity of Christian doctrine, 267. Athanasius driven into exile by the council of Antioch, 275. Is intimidated by his brother Constans, and invites Athanasius back again, 278. His severe treatment of those bishops who refused to concur in deposing Athanasius, 282. His scrupulous orthodoxy, 284. His cautious conduct in expelling Athanasius from Alexandria, 285. His strenuous efforts to seize his person, 288. Athanasius writes invectives to expose his character, 291. Is constrained to restore Liberius bishop of Rome, 295. Supports Macedonius, bishop of Constantinople, and countenances his persecutions of the Catholics and Novatians, 299. His conduct toward his Pagan subjects, 307. Envy the fame of Julian, 312. Recalls the legions from Gaul, 313. Negotiations between him and Julian, 324. His preparations to oppose Julian, 333. His death and character, 335.
- Constantius*, general, relieves the British emperor Constantine when besieged in Arles, iii. 259. His character and victories, 260. His marriage with Placidia, and death, 327.
- Constantius*, secretary to Attila king of the Huns, his matrimonial negotiation at the court of Constantinople, iii. 376.
- Consul*, the office of, explained, i. 79. Alterations this office underwent under the emperors, and when Constantinople became the seat of empire, ii. 26. The office of, suppressed by the emperor Justinian, iv. 119. Is now sunk to a commercial agent, vi. 535.
- Contracts*, the Roman laws respecting, iv. 395.
- Copts* of Egypt, brief history of, iv. 610.
- Corinth*, reviving as a Roman colony, celebrates the Isthmian games, under the emperor Julian, ii. 349. The isthmus of, fortified by the emperor Justinian, iv. 101.

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- Corvinus*, Matthias, king of Hungary, his character, vi. 453.
- Cornwall*, reduction of, by the Saxons, iii. 617.
- Coronary gold*, nature of those offerings to the Roman emperors, ii. 71.
- Cosmas Indicopleustes*, account of his Christian topography, iv. 79. note. 596. note.
- Cosmo of Medicis*, his character, vi. 430.
- Councils and synods of* Antioch, ii. 275.
 Arles, ii. 280.
 Basil, vi. 399.
 Carthage, iii. 539. iv. 147.
 Chalcedon, iii. 306. iv. 566.
 Clermont, vi. 6.
 Constance, vi. 394. 398. 605.
 Constantinople, iii. 20. iv. 584. 588. v. 93. vi. 125.
 Ephesus, iv. 554. 564.
 Ferrara, vi. 406.
 Florence, vi. 407.
 Frankfort, v. 131.
 Lyons, iii. 570. vi. 198. 240.
 Milan, ii. 280.
 Nice, ii. 250. v. 129.
 Pisa, vi. 398. 604.
 Placentia, vi. 4.
 Rimini, ii. 259.
 Sardica, ii. 276.
 Toledo, iii. 551. 553. 609.
 Tyre, ii. 272.
- Count*, great difference between the ancient and modern application of this title, ii. 43. By whom first invented, 44. Of the sacred largesses, under Constantine the Great, his office, 55. Of the domestics in the Eastern empire, his office, 57.
- Courtenay*, history of the family of, vi. 211.
- Creſcentius*, consul of Rome, his vicissitudes, and disgraceful death, v. 158.
- Crete*, the isle of, subdued by the Saracens, v. 436. Is recovered by Nicephorus Phocas, 458. Is purchased by the Venetians, vi. 178.
- Crimes*, how distinguished by the penal laws of the Romans, iv. 406.
- Crispus*, son of Constantine the Great, is declared Caesar, i. 523. Distinguishes his valour against the Franks and Alemanni, 526. Forces the passage of the Hellespont, and defeats the fleet of Licinius, 531. His character, ii. 79. His mysterious death, 83.
- Crispus*, the Patrician, marries the daughter of Phocas, and contributes to depose him, iv. 497. Is obliged to turn monk, 499.
- Croatia*, account of the kingdom of, v. 544.
- Cross*, the different sentiments entertained of this instrument of punishment, by the Pagan and Christian Romans, ii. 193. The famous standard of, in the army of Constantine the Great described, 194. His visions of, 196. 199. The holy sepulchre and cross of Christ discovered, 384.
- The cross of Christ undiminished by distribution to pilgrims, 385.
- Crown of thorns*, its transfer from Constantinople to Paris, vi. 200.
- Crowns*, mural and obdional, the distinction between, ii. 440. note.
- Crusade*, the first resolved on at the council of Clermont, vi. 8. Enquiry into the justice of the holy war, 9. Examination into the private motives of the crusaders, 14. Departure of the crusaders, 17. Account of the chiefs, 21. Their march to Constantinople, 29. Review of their numbers, 38. They take Nice, 41. Battle of Dorylaeum, 42. They take Antioch, 46. Their distresses, 49. Are relieved by the discovery of the holy lance, 52. Siege and conquest of Jerusalem, 57. Godfrey of Bouillon chosen king of Jerusalem, 61. The second crusade, 75. The crusaders ill treated by the Greek emperors, 78. The third crusade, 100. Siege of Acre, 102. Fourth and fifth crusades, 107. Sixth crusade, 113. Seventh crusade, 116. Recapitulation of the fourth crusade. 141. General consequences of the crusades, 206.
- Ctesiphon*, the city of, plundered by the Romans, i. 251. Its situation described, ii. 441. Julian declines the siege of that city, 446. Is sacked by the Saracens, v. 287.
- Cublai*, emperor of China, his character, vi. 306.
- Curopalata*, his office under the Greek emperors, v. 485.
- Customs*, duties of, imposed by Augustus, i. 197.
- Cycle of indictions*, the origin of, traced, and how now employed, ii. 62. note.
- Cyprian*, bishop of Carthage, his history and martyrdom, i. 654.
- Cyprus*, the kingdom of, bestowed on the house of Lusignan, by Richard I. of England, vi. 131.
- Cyrene*, the Greek colonies there finally exterminated by Chosroes II. king of Persia, iv. 503.
- Cyriades*, an obscure fugitive, is set up by Sapor the Persian monarch, as emperor of Rome, i. 328.
- Cyril*, bishop of Jerusalem, his pompous relation of the miraculous appearance of a celestial cross, ii. 265. His ambiguous character, 385.
- Cyril*, patriarch of Alexandria, his life and character, iv. 545. Condemns the heresy of Nestorius, 553. Procures the decision of the council of Ephesus against Nestorius, 555. His court intrigues, 559.
- Cyzicus*, how it escaped destruction from the Goths, i. 321. Is at length ruined by them, 322. The island and city of, seized by the usurper Procopius, ii. 492.

D

- Dacia*, conquest of, by the emperor Trajan, i. 6. Its situation, 28. Is over-run by the Goths, 293. Is resigned to them by Aurelian, 356.

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- Demons*, supposed to be the authors and objects of Pagan idolatry, by the primitive Christians, i. 552.
- Dagiseus*, general of the emperor Justinian, besieges Petra, iv. 259. Commands the Huns in Italy under Narfes, 300.
- Daimbert*, archbishop of Pisa, installed patriarch of Jerusalem, vi. 63.
- Dalmatia* described, i. 28. Produce of a silver mine there, 196. note.
- Dalmatius*, nephew of Constantine the Great, is created Cæsar, ii. 87. Is sent to govern the Gothic frontier, 88. Is cruelly destroyed by Constantius, 99.
- Damascus*, siege of, by the Saracens, v. 300. The city reduced both by storm and by treaty, 307. Remarks on Hughes's tragedy of this siege, 310. note. Taken and destroyed by Tamerlane, vi. 347.
- Damasus*, bishop of Rome, edict of Valentinian addressed to him, to restrain the crafty avarice of the Roman clergy, ii. 510. His bloody contest with Ursinus for the episcopal dignity, 513.
- Dames*, the Arab, his gallant enterprise against the castle of Aleppo, v. 324.
- Damietta*, is taken by Louis IX. of France, vi. 115.
- Damophilus*, archbishop of Constantinople, resigns his see, rather than subscribe the Nicene creed, iii. 17.
- Dandolo*, Henry, doge of Venice, his character, vi. 139. Is made despot of Romania, 177.
- Daniel*, first bishop of Winchester, his instructions to St. Boniface, for the conversion of infidels, iii. 531.
- Danielis*, a Grecian matron, her presents to the emperor Basil, v. 475. Her visit to him at Constantinople, 482. Her testament, 483.
- Danube*, course of the river, and the provinces of, described, i. 26.
- Daphne*, the sacred grove and temple of, at Antioch, described, ii. 396. Is converted to Christian purposes by Gallus, and restored to the Pagans by Julian, 399. The temple burned, 400.
- Dara*, the fortification of, by Justinian, described, iv. 109. The demolition of, by the Persians, prevented by peace, 241. Is taken by Chosroes king of Persia, 466.
- Darius*, his scheme for connecting the continents of Europe and Asia, ii. 5.
- Darkness*, præternatural, at the time of the passion, is unnoticed by the heathen philosophers and historians, i. 618.
- Dasagard*, the Persian royal seat of, plundered by the emperor Heraclius, iv. 524.
- Datianus*, governor of Spain, yields ready obedience to the Imperial edicts against the Christians, i. 691.
- Datus*, bishop of Milan, instigates the revolt of the Ligurians to Justinian, iv. 190. Escapes to Con-
- stantinople on the taking of Milan by the Burgundians, 196.
- Debtors*, insolvent, cruel punishment of, by the law of the twelve tables, iv. 401.
- Decemvirs*, review of the laws of their twelve tables, iv. 335. These laws superseded by the perpetual edict, 349. Severity of, 399.
- Decius*, his exaltation to the empire, i. 290. Was a persecutor of the Christians, 671.
- Decurions*, in the Roman empire, are severely treated by the Imperial laws, ii. 63.
- Deification* of the Roman emperors, how this species of idolatry was introduced, i. 84.
- Delators*, are encouraged by the emperor Commodus, to gratify his hatred of the senate, i. 107. Are suppressed by Pertinax, 122.
- Delphi*, the sacred ornaments of the temple of, removed to Constantinople by Constantine the Great, ii. 16. note.
- Democracy*, a form of government unfavourable to freedom in a large state. i. 41.
- Demosthenes*, governor of Cæsarea, his gallant defence against, and heroic escape from, Sapor king of Persia, i. 329.
- Diognatias*, bishop of Carthage, humanely succours the captives brought from Rome by Genseric king of the Vandals, iii. 442.
- Derar* the Saracen, his character, v. 303.
- Desiderius*, the last king of the Lombards, conquered by Charlemagne, v. 118.
- Despot*, nature of that title in the Greek empire, v. 485.
- Despotism* originates in superstition, i. 272. note.
- Diadem* assumed by Diocletian, what, i. 462.
- Diamonds*, the art of cutting them, unknown to the ancients, i. 198. note.
- Didius Julianus*, purchases the imperial dignity at a public auction, i. 131.
- Dioceses* of the Roman empire, their number and government, ii. 36.
- Diocletian*, the manner of his military election to the empire, i. 421. his birth and character, 423. Takes Maximian for his colleague, 425. Associates as Cæsars, Galerius, and Constantius Chlorus, 427. His triumph in conjunction with Maximian, 455. Fixes his court at the city of Nicomedia, 457. Abdicates the empire, 465. Parallel between him and the emperor Charles V. 466. Passes his life in retirement at Salona, 468. His impartial behaviour toward the Christians, 676. Causes that produced the persecution of the Christians under his reign, 677.
- Dion Cassius* the historian, screened from the fury of the soldiers, by the emperor Alexander Severus, i. 189.
- Discorus*, patriarch of Alexandria, his outrageous behaviour at the second council of Ephesus, iv. 504. Is deposed by the council of Chalcedon, 568.
- Dizabul*, great khan of the Turks, his reception of the ambassadors of Justinian, iv. 231.

Divorce,

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

Divorce, the liberty and abuse of, by the Roman laws, iv. 377. Limitations of, 379.

Docetes, their peculiar tenets, ii. 241. iv. 537. Derivation of their name, ii. 242. note.

Domitius, St. Loricatus, his fortitude in flagellation, vi. 13.

Domitian, when this epithet was applied to the Roman emperors, i. 460.

Domitian, emperor, his treatment of his kinsmen Flavius Sabinus, and Flavius Clemens, i. 644.

Domitian, the Oriental prefect, is sent by the emperor Constantius, to reform the state of the East, then oppressed by Gallus, ii. 132. Is put to death there, 133.

Donatus, his contest with Cæcilian for the see of Carthage, ii. 234. History of the schism of the Donatists, 235, 300. Persecution of the Donatists by the emperor Honorius, iii. 418.

Dorylæum, battle of, between sultan Soliman and the first crusaders, vi. 43.

Doxology, how introduced in the church-service, and how perverted, ii. 293.

Dramatic representations at Rome, a character of, iii. 216.

Dreams, the popular opinion of the preternatural origin of, favourable to that of Constantine previous to his battle with Maxentius, ii. 197.

Dromedary, extraordinary speed of this animal, i. 372. note.

Dromones of the Greek empire, described, v. 498.

Druids, their power in Gaul suppressed by the emperors Tiberius and Claudius, i. 39.

Druses of mount Libanus, a character of, v. 680. note.

Duke, derivation of that title, and great change in the modern, from the ancient application of it, ii. 43.

Durazzo, siege of, by Robert Guiscard, v. 612. Battle of, between him and the Greek emperor Alexius, 616.

E

Earthquake, an extraordinary one over great part of the Roman empire, ii. 561. Account of those that happened in the reign of Julian, iv. 326.

East India, the Roman commercial intercourse with that region, i. 66. Commodities of, taxed by Alexander Severus, 108.

Ebionites, account of that sect, i. 546.

—, A confutation of their errors, supposed by the primitive fathers, to be a particular object in the writings of St. John the Evangelist, ii. 240.

—, Their ideas of the person of Jesus Christ, iv. 533.

Eclipses, the book of, why not likely to be the production of king Solomon, iv. 153. note.

Ecclesiastical and civil powers, distinguished, by the fathers of the Christian church, ii. 212.

Edictus, son of the emperor Avitus, his gallant conduct in Gaul, iii. 482.

Edicts of the emperor Heraclius, iv. 587.

Edda, of Iceland, the system of mythology in, i. 293.

Edecon, is sent from Attila king of the Huns, as his ambassador to the emperor Theodosius the Younger, iii. 377. Engages in a proposal to assassinate Attila, 387. His son Odoacer, the first Barbarian king of Italy, 404.

Edeſſa, the purest dialect of the Syriac language spoken there, i. 251. note. The property of the Christians there, confiscated by the emperor Julian, for the disorderly conduct of the Arians, ii. 404. Revolt of the Roman troops there, iv. 49. Account of the school of, 594. History of the famous image there, v. 93. The city and principality of, seized by Baldwin the Crusader, vi. 45. Is retaken by Zenghi, 87. The counts of, 212.

Edict of Milan, published by Constantine the Great, ii. 184.

Edicts of the prætors of Rome, under the republic, their nature and tendency, iv. 341.

Edom, why that name was applied to the Roman empire by the Jews, i. 624. note.

Edripites, the Saracen dynasty of, v. 453.

Edward I. of England, his crusade to the Holy Land, vi. 118.

Egidius, his character, and revolt in Gaul, iii. 466. His son Syagrius, 561.

Egypt, general description of, i. 31. The superstitions of, with difficulty tolerated at Rome, 39. Amount of its revenues, 195. Public works executed there by Probus, 406. Conduct of Dioclesian there, 439. Progress of Christianity there, 607.

—, Edict of the emperor Valens, to restrain the number of reclusè monks there, ii. 510.

—, The worship of Serapis how introduced there, iii. 82. This temple, and the Alexandrian library destroyed by bishop Theophilus, 84. Origin of monkish institutions in, 507.

—, Great supplies of wheat furnished by, for the city of Constantinople, in the time of Justinian, iv. 70. Ecclesiastical history of, 610.

—, Reduced by the Saracens, v. 333. Capture of Alexandria, 339. Administration of, 345. Description of, by Amrou, 346.

—, The Egyptians take Jerusalem from the Turks, vi. 55. Egypt conquered by the Turks, 89. Government of the Mamelukes there, 117.

Elagabalus, is declared emperor by the troops at Emesa, i. 174. Was the first Roman who wore garments of pure silk, iv. 73.

Elephants, enquiry into the numbers of, brought into the field by the ancient princes of the East, i. 253. note. With what view introduced in the circus at Rome in the first Punic war, 417.

Eleusinion mysteries, why tolerated by the emperor Valentinian, ii. 505.

Elizabeth,

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- Elizabeth*, queen of England, the political use she made of the national pulpits, ii. 227. note.
- Emigration* of the ancient northern nations, the nature and motives of, examined, i. 271.
- Emperors* of Rome, a review of their constitutions, iv. 343. Their legislative power, 344. Their rescripts, 345.
- , Of Germany, their limited powers, v. 162. Of Constantinople, their pomp and luxury, 479. Officers of the palace, state, and army, 485. Adoration of the emperor, mode of, 487. Their public appearance, 489. Their despotic power, 495. Their navy, 497. They retain the name of Romans to the last, 510.
- Empire*, Roman, division of, into the East and West empires by Valentinian, ii. 489. Extinction of the Western empire, iii. 494.
- Encampment*, Roman, described, i. 19.
- Eneides*, the servile flatterer of Theodoric the Ostrogoth king of Italy, is made bishop of Pavia, iv. 13. note.
- Epagathus*, leader of the mutinous prætorians, who murdered their præfect Ulpian, punished by the emperor Alexander Severus, i. 189.
- Ephesus*, the famous temple of Diana at, destroyed by the Goths, i. 324. Council of, iv. 554. Episcopal riots there, 557.
- Epicurus*, his legacy to his philosophical disciples at Athens, iv. 115.
- Epirus*, despots of, on the dismemberment of the Greek empire, vi. 183.
- Equitius*, master general of the Illyrian frontier, is defeated by the Sarmatians, ii. 555.
- Erasmus*, his merit as a reformer, v. 539.
- Essenians*, their distinguishing tenets and practices, i. 606.
- Eucharist* a knotty subject to the first reformers, v. 556.
- Eudes*, duke of Aquitain, repels the first Saracen invasion of France, v. 406. Implores the aid of Charles Martel, 409. Recovers his dukedom, 412.
- Eudocia*, her birth, character, and marriage, with the emperor Theodosius the Younger, iii. 318. Her disgrace and death, 321.
- Eudoxia*, her marriage with the emperor Arcadius, iii. 112. Stimulates him to give up his favourite Eutropius, 295. Persecutes St. Chrysostom, 305. Her death and character, 310.
- Eudoxia*, the daughter of Theodosius the Younger, is betrothed to the young emperor Valentinian III. of the West, iii. 331. Her character, 431. Is married to the emperor Maximus, 438. Invites Genferic king of the Vandals to Italy, 439.
- Eudoxus*, bishop of Constantinople, baptises the emperor Valens, ii. 506.
- Eugenius* the Rhetorician is made emperor of the West by Arbogastes the Frank, iii. 59. Is defeated and killed by Theodosius, 64.
- Eugenius*, IV. pope, his contest with the council of Basil, vi. 399. Procures a re-union of the Latin and Greek churches, 412. Forms a league against the Turks, 443. Revolt of the Roman citizens against him, 607.
- Eumenius* the Orator, some account of, i. 474. note.
- Eunapius* the Sophist, his character of monks, and of the objects of their worship, iii. 93.
- Eunemians*, punishment of, by the edict of the emperor Theodosius against heretics, iii. 25.
- Eunuchs*, enumerated in the list of Eastern commodities imported and taxed in the time of Alexander Severus, i. 198. They inhabit the palace of the third Gordian, 231.
- , Their ascendancy in the court of Constantius, ii. 126. Why they favoured the Arians, 264. note. Procure the banishment of Liberius bishop of Rome, 294.
- , A conspiracy of, disappoint the schemes of Rufinus, and marry the emperor Arcadius to Eudoxia, iii. 112. They distract the court of the emperor Honorius, 228. And govern that of Arcadius, 234. Scheme of Chrysaphius to assassinate Attila king of the Huns, 387.
- , The bishop of Seez and his whole chapter castrated, vi. 525. note.
- Euric*, king of the Visigoths in Gaul, his conquests in Spain, iii. 481. Is veited with all the Roman conquests beyond the Alps by Odoacer king of Italy, 558.
- Europe*, evidences that the climate of, was much colder in ancient than in modern times, i. 260. This alteration accounted for, 261.
- , Final division of, between the Western and Eastern empires, iii. 104. Is ravaged by Attila king of the Huns, 365. Is now, one great republic, 634.
- Eusebia*, empress, wife of Constantius, her steady friendship to Julian, ii. 137. 139. Is accused of arts to deprive Julian of children, 142.
- Eusebius*, his character of the followers of Artemon, i. 614. His own character, 699. His story of the miraculous appearance of the cross in the sky to Constantine the Great, ii. 199.
- Eutropius* the Eunuch, great chamberlain to the emperor Arcadius, concert his marriage with Eudoxia, in opposition to the views of Rufinus, iii. 112. Succeeds Rufinus in the emperor's confidence, 121. His character and administration, 284. Provides for his own security, in a new law against treason, 290. Takes sanctuary with St. Chrysostom, 296. His death, 297.
- Eutyches*, his opinion on the subject of the incarnation supported by the second council at Ephesus, iv. 504. And adhered to by the Armenians, 608.
- Euxine Sea*, description of the vessels used in navigating, i. 317.
- Exaltation* of the cross, origin of the annual festival of, iv. 529.

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

Exarch, under the Greek empire, the office and rank of, v. 120. Of Ravenna, the government of Italy settled in, and administered by, iv. 312. 443.
Exciſe duties imposed by Augustus, i. 198.
Excommunication from Christian communion, the origin of, i. 59. ii. 224.
Exile, voluntary, under accusation and conscious guilt, its advantages among the Romans, iv. 413.

F

Faith and its operations defined, i. 572.
Falcandus, Hugo, character of his Historia Sicula, v. 639. note. His lamentation on the transfer of the sovereignty of the island to the emperor Henry VI. 640.
Fathers of the Christian church, cause of their antere morality, i. 575.
Fausta, empress, wife of Constantine the Great, causes of her being put to death, ii. 85.
Faustina, wife of Marcus Antoninus, her character, i. 102.
Faustina, the widow of the emperor Constantius, countenances the revolt of Procopius against the emperor Valens, ii. 493.
Festivals, Pagan, great offence taken at, by the primitive Christians, i. 555.
Feudal government, the rudiments of, to be found among the Scythians, ii. 573.
Figures, numeral, occasion of their first public and familiar use, v. 397.
Finances of the Roman empire, when the seat of it was removed to Constantinople, reviewed, ii. 61.
Fingal, his questionable history, whether to be connected with the invasion of Caledonia by the emperor Severus, i. 158.
Fire, Greek, the Saracen fleet destroyed by, in the harbour of Constantinople, v. 399. Is long preserved as a secret, 404. Its effects not to be compared with gunpowder, 500.
Firmus, an Egyptian merchant, his revolt against the emperor Aurelian, i. 374.
Firmus the Moor, history of his revolt against the emperor Valentinian, ii. 535.
Flagellation, its efficacy in penance, and how proportioned, vi. 13.
Flamens, Roman, their number, and peculiar office, iii. 71.
Flaminian way, its course described, iv. 301. note.
Flavian, archbishop of Constantinople, is killed at the second council of Ephesus, iv. 565.
Fleeca, golden, probable origin of the fable of, iv. 252.
Florence, the foundation of that city, iii. 164. note. Is besieged by Radagaisus, and relieved by Stilicho, 165.
Florentius, prætorian præfect of Gaul under Constantius, his character, ii. 175. 315. Is condemned by the tribunal of Chalcedon, but suffered to escape by Julian, 345.

Florianus, brother of the emperor Tacitus, his eager usurpation of the Imperial dignity, i. 393.
Felix is consecrated bishop of Rome, to supersede Liberius who was exiled, ii. 294. He is violently expelled, and his adherents slaughtered, 295.
Felix, an African bishop, his martyrdom, i. 687.
Fornication, a doubtful plea for divorce, by gospel authority, iv. 380. note.
France, modern, computation of the number of its inhabitants, and the average of their taxation, ii. 68.
 —, The name of, whence derived, iii. 597. Derivation of the French language, 604. note.
 —, Childeric deposed, and Pepin appointed king, by papal sanction, v. 119. Reign and character of Charlemagne, 136. Invasion of, by the Saracens, 405.
Frangipani, Censio, his profane violation of the persons of pope Gelasius II. and his college of cardinals, vi. 526. Derivation of his family name, 562.
Franks, their origin and confederacy, i. 309. They invade Gaul, and ravage Spain, 311. They pass over into Africa, 312. Bold and successful return of a colony of, from the sea of Pontus, by sea, 403.
 —, They over-run and establish themselves at Toxandria in Germany, ii. 161.
 —, Their fidelity to the Roman government, iii. 169. Origin of the Merovingian race of their kings, 400. How converted to Christianity, 530. Reign of their king Clovis, 559. Final establishment of the French monarchy in Gaul, 580. Their laws, 583. Give the name of France to their conquests in Gaul, 597. They degenerate into a state of anarchy, 605.
 —, They invade Italy, iv. 195. 308.
 —, Their military character, v. 504.
Frawitta the Goth, his character, and deadly quarrel with his countryman Priulf, ii. 639. His operations against Gainas, iii. 299.
Frederic I. emperor of Germany, his tyranny in Italy, v. 161. Engages in the third crusade, vi. 75. His disastrous expedition, 81. 101. Sacrifices Arnold of Brescia to the pope, 532. His reply to the Roman ambassadors, 545.
Frederic II. is driven out of Italy, v. 162. His disputes with the pope, and reluctant crusade, vi. 110. Exhorts the European princes to unite in opposing the Tartars, 304.
Frederic III. the last emperor crowned at Rome, vi. 608.
Frecmen of Laconia, account of, v. 474.
Fritigern, the Gothic chief, extricates himself from the hands of Lupicinus, governor of Thrace, ii. 599. Defeats him, 600. Battle of Salices, 605. His strength recruited by the accession of new tribes, 607. Negotiates with Valens, 612. Battle of Hadrianople, 613. The union of the Gothic tribes broken by his death, 630.

Freedmen,

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

Freedmen, among the Romans, their rank in society, iv. 369.

Fruentius was the first Christian missionary in Abyssinia, ii. 210.

Fulk of Neuilly, his ardour in preaching the fourth crusade, vi. 134.

G

Gabinus, king of the Quadi, is treacherously murdered by Marcellinus governor of Valeria, ii. 553.

Gaillard, M. character of his Histoire de Charlemagne, v. 136. note.

Gaisas the Goth is commissioned by Stilicho to execute his revenge on Rufinus, prefect of the East, iii. 119. His conduct in the war against the revolter Tribigild, 294. Joins him, 297. His flight and death, 299.

Gala, probable derivation of the term, v. 489. note.

Gallata, the suburb of, at Constantinople, assigned to the Genoese, vi. 280.

Galerius is associated in the administration, as Cæsar, by the emperor Diocletian, i. 427. Is defeated by the Persians, 446. Surprises and overthrows Narses, 448. Assumes the title of Augustus, on the abdication of Diocletian, 476. His jealousy of Constantine, 481. Deems it prudent to acknowledge him Cæsar, 483. His unsuccessful invasion of Italy, 488. Invests Licinius with the purple on the death of Severus, 493. His death, 496. From what causes he entertained an aversion to the Christians, 679. Obtains the countenance of Diocletian for persecuting them, 681. Publishes an edict of toleration just before his death, 695.

Gallizans, twofold application of that name in the infancy of Christianity, i. 641. Why the emperor Julian applied this name to the Christians, ii. 390.

Gallienus, son of the emperor Valerian, is associated by him in the Imperial throne, i. 309. Prohibits the senators from exercising military employments, 314. Character of his administration after the captivity of his father, 332. Names Claudius for his successor, 345. Favoured the Christians, 672.

Gallies of the Greek empire, described, v. 498.

Gallus elected emperor, on the minority of Hordilianus, the son of Decius, i. 304.

Gallus, nephew of Constantine the Great, his education, ii. 128. Is invested with the title of Cæsar, 129. His cruelty and imprudence, 130. His disgrace and death, 134. Embraced the doctrine, but neglected the precepts, of Christianity, 358. Converts the grove of Daphne at Antioch to a Christian burial place, 399.

Games, public, of the Romans, described, i. 234. 415. iii. 215. Account of the factions of the circus, iv. 59.

Ganges, source of that river, vi. 341. note.

Gaudentius, the notary, is condemned to death under the emperor Julian, ii. 346.

Gaul, the province of, described, i. 24. The power of the druids suppressed there by Tiberius and Claudius, 39. Cities in, 59. Amount of the tribute paid by that province to Rome, 195. Is defended against the Franks by Posthumus, 311. Succession of usurpers there, 363. Invasion of, by the Lygians, 398. Revolt of the Bagaudæ suppressed by Maximian, 429. Progress of Christianity there, 610.

—, Proportion of the capitation tax levied there by the Roman emperors, ii. 66. Is invaded by the Germans, 160. The government of, assigned to Julian, 161. His civil administration, 174. Is invaded by the Alemanni, under the emperor Valentinian, 515. And under Gratian, 608.

—, Destruction of idols and temples there, by Martin bishop of Tours, iii. 80. Is over-run by the barbarous troops of Radagaisus, after his defeat by Stilicho, 170. Is settled by the Goths, Burgundians, and Franks, 271. Assembly of the seven provinces in, 273. Reign of Theodoric king of the Visigoths in, 397. Origin of the Merovingian race of kings of the Franks in, 400. Invasion of, by Attila king of the Huns, 406. Battle of Chalons, 410. Revolutions of, on the death of the emperor Majorian, 481. Conversion of, to Christianity by the Franks, 547. Representation of the advantages it enjoyed under Roman government, 556. Conquests and prosperity of Euric king of the Visigoths, 558. Character and reign of Clovis, 559. The Alemanni conquered, 564. Submission of the Armoricans, and the Roman troops, 568. Final establishment of the French monarchy in Gaul, 580. History of the Salic laws, 583. The lands of, how claimed and divided by the Barbarian conquerors of, 591. Domain and benefices of the Merovingian princes, 592. Usurpations of the Seniors, 594. Privileges of the Romans in, 602.

Geografia, revolutions of the sea coast of, i. 248. note.

Gelakæan æra of the Turks, when settled, v. 670.

Gelasius, pope, his zeal against the celebration of the feast of Lupercalia, iii. 475. Deplores the miserable decay of Italy, 502.

Gelasius II. pope, his rough treatment by Censio Frangipani, vi. 526.

Gelimer deposes Hilderic the Vandal king of Africa, and usurps the government, iv. 124. Is defeated by Belisarius, 138. His final defeat, 144. His distressful flight, 148. Surrenders himself to Belisarius, 151. Graces his triumph, 153. His peaceful retirement, 154.

General of the Roman army, his extensive power, i. 75.

Generosity, Arabian, striking instances of, v. 188.

Genadius,

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- Gennadius*, the monk, his benediction against a Greek union with the Latin church, vi. 482.
- General*, the Roman general, under the emperor Honorius, his character, iii. 227.
- Genoës*, their mercantile establishment in the suburb of Pera at Constantinople, vi. 280. Their war with the emperor Constantianus, 284.
- Geiseric*, king of the Vandals in Spain, his character, iii. 335. Goes over to Africa on the invitation of count Boniface, 336. His successes there by the assistance of the Donatists, 339. Devastation of Africa by his troops, 341. Besieges Boniface in Hippo Regius, 342. His treacherous surprisal of Carthage, 347. Strengthens himself by an alliance with Attila king of the Huns, 363. His brutal treatment of his son's wife, daughter of Theodoric, 400. Raises a naval force, and invades Italy, 436. His sack of Rome, 440. Destroys the fleet of Majorian, 463. His naval depredations on Italy, 467. His claims on the Eastern empire, 468. Destroys the Roman fleet under Basiliscus, 479. Was an Arian, and persecuted his Catholic subjects, 536.
- Gentleman*, etymology of the term, vi. 26. note.
- Geoponics* of the emperor Constantine Porphyrogenitus, account of, v. 465.
- George* of Cappadocia supersedes Athanasius in the see of Alexandria, ii. 287. His scandalous history, and tragical death, 400. Becomes the tutelary saint of England, 404.
- Gepidæ*, their incroachments on the Eastern empire checked by the Lombards, iv. 215. Are reduced by them, 424.
- Germanus*, nephew of the emperor Justinian, his character and promotion to the command of the army sent to Italy, iv. 297. His death, 298.
- Germany*, the rude institutions of that country the original principles of European laws and manners, i. 259. Its ancient extent, 260. How peopled, 263. The natives unacquainted with letters in the time of Tacitus, 265. Had no cities, 266. Manners of the ancient Germans, 268. Population, 270. State of liberty among them, 271. Authority of their magistrates, 274. Conjugal faith and chastity, 276. Their religion, 278. Arms and discipline, 282. Their feuds, 285. General idea of the German tribes, 287. Probus carries the Roman arms into Germany, 399. A frontier wall built by Probus, from the Rhine to the Danube, 401.
- , Invasions of Gaul by the Germans, ii. 160. 515.
- , State of, under the emperor Charlemagne, v. 142. The Imperial crown established in the name and nation of Germany, by the first Otho, 149. Division of, among independent princes, 162. Formation of the Germanic constitution, 164. State assumed by the emperor, 167.
- Gerontius*, count, sets up Maximus as emperor in Spain, and loses his life in the attempt, iii. 258.
- Geta* and Caracalla, sons of the emperor Severus, their fixed antipathy to each other, i. 156.
- Ghebers* of Persia, history of, v. 383.
- Gibraltar*, derivation of the name of, v. 368.
- Gildo* the Moor, his revolt in Africa, iii. 123. His defeat and death, 129.
- Gladiators*, desperate enterprize and fate of a party of, reserved for the triumph of Probus, i. 406. The combats of, abolished by the emperor Honorius, iii. 157.
- Glycerius* is first emperor of Rome, and then bishop of Salona, iii. 491. Murders Julius Nepos, and is made archbishop of Milan, 492.
- Gnostics*, character and account of the sect of, i. 547. Principal sects into which they divided, 550. Their peculiar tenets, ii. 241. iv. 537.
- Gedfrey* of Bouillon, his character, and engagement in the first crusade, vi. 22. His route to Constantinople, 29. 33. Is elected king of Jerusalem, 61. Compiles the Office of Jerusalem, 66. Form of his administration, 67.
- Gog and Magog*, the famous rampart of, described, iv. 111.
- Goiswintha*, wife of Leovigild, king of Spain, her pious cruelty to the princess Ingundis, iii. 548.
- Gold* of affliction, the tax so denominated in the Eastern empire abolished by the emperor Anastatius, iv. 80.
- Golden horn*, why the Bosphorus obtained this appellation in remote antiquity, ii. 6.
- Gordianus*, proconsul of Africa, his character and elevation to the empire of Rome, i. 213. His son associated with him in the imperial dignity, 214.
- Gordian*, the third and youngest, declared Cæsar, i. 221. Is declared emperor by the army, on the murder of Maximus and Balbinus, 230.
- Goths* of Scandinavia, their origin, i. 291. Their religion, 295. The Goths and Vandals supposed to be originally one great people, 295. Their emigrations to Prussia and the Ukraine, ibid. They invade the Roman provinces, 298. They receive tribute from the Romans, 305. They subdue the Bosphorus, 317. Plunder the cities of Bithynia, 320. They ravage Greece, 323. Conclude a treaty with the emperor Aurelian, 355. They ravage Illyricum, and are chastised by Constantine the Great, 526.
- , Their war with the Sarmatians, ii. 92. Are again routed by Constantine, 95. Gothic war under the emperors Valentinian and Valens, 548. Are defeated by the Huns, 588. They implere the protection of the emperor Valens, 592. They are received into the empire, 594. They are oppressed by the Roman governors of Thrace, 597. Are provoked to hostilities, and defeat Lupicinus, 600. They ravage Thrace, 601. Battle of Salices, 605. They are strengthened by fresh swarms of their countrymen, 606. Battle of Hadrianople, 615. Scour

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

Scour the country from Hadrianople to Constantinople, 618. Massacre of the Gothic youth in Asia, 621. Their formidable union broken by the death of Fritigern, 631. Death and funeral of Athanaric, 632. Invasion and defeat of the Ostrogoths, 633. Are settled in Thrace by Theodosius, 636. Their hostile sentiments, 638.

—, Revolt of the Goths under Honorius, iii. 134. They ravage Greece, under the command of Alaric, 136. They invade Italy, 144. The sack of Rome by, 235. Death of Alaric, 249. Victories of Wallia in Spain, 269. They are settled in Aquitain, 270. See Gaul, and Theodoric. Conquest of the Visigoths in Gaul and Spain, 481. How the Goths were converted to the Christian religion, 527. 550.

—, Reign of Theodoric king of the Ostrogoths, iv. 1. The Goths in Italy, extinguished, 313.

Government, civil, the origin of, i. 272.

Governors of provinces, under the emperors, their great power and influence, ii. 42.

Gratian was the first emperor who refused the pontifical robe, ii. 309. note. Marries the princess Constantia, and succeeds to the empire, 558. Defeats the Alemanni in Gaul, 609. Invents Theodosius with the empire of the East, 623.

—, His character and conduct, iii. 1. His flight from Maximus, and death, 7. Overthrew the ecclesiastical establishment of Paganism, 72.

Greece, is ravaged by the Goths, i. 373. Is overrun by Alaric the Goth, iii. 136. Is reduced by the Turks, vi. 512.

Greek church, origin of the schism of, vi. 121. 412. 437.

Greek empire. See Constantinople.

Greeks, why averse to the Roman language and manners, i. 46. The Greek becomes a scientific language among the Romans, 47. Character of the Greek language of Constantinople, vi. 415. When first taught in Italy, 423.

Greek learning, revival of, in Italy, vi. 417.

Gregory the Great, pope, his pious presents to Recared king of Spain, iii. 551. Exhorts Theodelinda queen of the Lombards to propagate the Nicene faith, ibid. His enmity to the venerable buildings and learning of Rome, iv. 434. His birth and early profession, 456. His elevation to the pontificate, 458. Sends a mission to convert the Britons, 460. Sanctifies the usurpation of the emperor Phocas, 494.

Gregory II. pope, his epistles to Leo III. emperor of Constantinople, V. 105. Revolts against the Greek emperor, 108.

Gregory VII. pope, his ambitious schemes, v. 155. His contest with the emperor Henry III. 621. His retreat to Salerno, 623. VI. 525.

Gregory, prefect of Africa, history of him and his daughter, V. 351.

Gregory Nazianzen, his lamentation on the disgraceful discord among Christians, ii. 204. Lends the memory of the emperor Julian with invective, 319. Censure Constantius for having spared his life, 368. note.

Gregory Nazianzen is presented to the wretched sect of Sabina, by his friend archbishop Basil, iii. 13. His mission to Constantinople, 16. Is placed on the archiepiscopal throne by Theodosius, 18. His resignation and character, 23.

Grumbates, king of the Chionites, attends Sapor king of Persia, in his invasion of Mesopotamia, ii. 153. Loses his son at the siege of Amida, 154. Returns home in grief, 157.

Guardianship, how vested and exercised, according to the Roman civil laws, iv. 383.

Gubazes, king of Colchos, his alliance with Chosroes king of Persia, iv. 258. Returns to his former connexion with the emperor Julianian, 259. Is treacherously killed, 263.

Guelphs and Ghibelines, the parties of, in Italy, v. 162. vi. 566.

Guilt, the degrees of, in the penal laws of the Romans, iv. 406.

Guiscard, Robert, his birth and character, v. 553. Acquires the dukedom of Apulia, 601. His Italian conquests, 603. Besieges Durazzo, 611. Defeats the Greek emperor Alexius there, 616. Engages in the cause of pope Gregory VII. 622. His second expedition to Greece, and death, 623.

Gundobald, king of the Burgundians, is reduced by Clovis king of the Franks, iii. 571. His mode of justifying the judicial combat, 590.

Gunpowder, the invention and use of, vi. 375.

Gay of Lusignan, king of Jerusalem, his character, vi. 96. Is defeated and taken prisoner by Saladin, 97.

Gyarus, a small island in the Ægean sea, an instance of its poverty, i. 156.

II

Hadrian, emperor, relinquishes the eastern conquests of Trajan, i. 9. Their characters compared, ibid. His character contrasted with that of Antoninus Pius, ibid. His several adoptions of successors, 92. Founds the city of Ælia Capitolina on mount Sion, 545.

—, Reforms the laws of Rome in the perpetual edict, iv. 343.

Hadrianople, battle of, between Constantine the Great, and Licinius, i. 529. Is ineffectually besieged by Fritigern the Goth, ii. 602. Battle of, between the emperor Valens and the Goths, 613.

Hakem, caliph of the Saracens, assumes a divine character to supplant the Mahometan faith, v. 680.

Hamaanites, the Saracen dynasty of, in Mesopotamia, v. 455.

Hannibal, review of the state of Rome when he besieged that city, iii. 194.

Hannibalianus,

GENERAL INDEX.

- Hannibalianus*, nephew of Constantine the Great, is dignified with the title of king, ii. 87. Provinces assigned to him for a kingdom, 88. Is cruelly destroyed by Constantius, 59.
- Ha-pineji*, inhuice how little it depends on power and magnificence, v. 221.
- Harmozan*, the Persian satrap, his interview with the caliph Omar, v. 291.
- Harpies*, in ancient mythologic history, Le Clerc's conjecture concerning, ii. 4. note.
- Haran al Rashid*, caliph, his friendly correspondence with the emperor Charlemagne, v. 145. His wars with the Greek empire, 431.
- Hassar*, the Saracen, conquers Carthage, v. 359.
- Hawking*, the art and sport of, introduced into Italy, by the Lombards, iv. 448.
- Hegira*, the era of, how fixed, v. 225.
- Hesera*, the mother of Constantine, her parentage ascertained, i. 40. Was converted to Christianity by her son, ii. 132. note.
- Hesera*, sister of the emperor Constantius, married to Julian, ii. 139. Is reported to be deprived of children by the arts of the empress Eusebia, 142. Her death, 324.
- Heliopolis* taken by the Saracens, v. 316.
- Hell*, according to Mahomet, described, v. 217.
- Hellefpont* described, ii. 7.
- Helzetia*, amount of its population in the time of Cæsar, i. 270. note.
- Hengist*, his arrival in Britain, with succours for Vortigern, against the Caledonians, iii. 611. His establishment in Kent, 612. 615.
- Henoticon* of the emperor Zeno, character of, iv. 572.
- Henry* succeeds his brother Baldwin as emperor of Constantinople, vi. 188. His character and administration, 190.
- Henry III.* emperor, his contest with pope Gregory VII. v. 621. Takes Rome, and sets up pope Clement III. 622.
- Henry VI.* emperor, conquers and pillages the island of Sicily, v. 642.
- Henry* the Fowler, emperor of Germany, defeats the Turkish invaders, v. 557.
- Heptarchy*, Saxon, establishment of, in Britain, iii. 614. Review of the state of, 622.
- Heraclian*, count of Africa, retains that province in obedience to Honorius, iii. 234. His cruel usage of the refugees from the sack of Rome by Alaric, 243. His revolt and death, 256.
- Heraclianus*, emperor of Constantinople, v. 8.
- Heraclius*, deposes the Eastern usurper Phocas, and is chosen emperor, iv. 498. Conquests of Chosroes II. king of Persia, 501. His distressful situation, 506. Accepts an ignominious peace from Chosroes, 509. His first expedition against the Persians, 511. His second Persian expedition, 514. Strengthens himself by an alliance with the Turks, 521. His third Persian expedition, 522. His treaty of peace with Persia, 528. His triumph and pilgrimage to Jerusalem, 529. His theological inquiries, 580.
- Heraclius* marries his niece Martina, v. 7. Leaves his two sons joint successors to the empire, 8. Invasion of his provinces by the Saracens, 302. Flies from Syria, 327.
- Heraclius* the præfect, his expedition against the Vandals in Africa, iii. 476.
- Heraclius* the eunuch, instigates the emperor Valentinian III. to the murder of the patrician Ætius, iii. 429. His death, 432.
- Herbelet*, character of his Bibliothèque Orientale v. 283. note.
- Hercynian* forest, the extent of, unknown in the time of Cæsar, i. 261. note.
- Heresy* in religion, the origin of, traced, i. 549. Edict of Constantine the Great, against, ii. 232.
- Hermanric* king of the Ostrogoths, his conquests, ii. 546. His death, 590.
- Hermenegild* prince of Boetia, his marriage with Ingundis princess of Austrasia, and conversion to the Nicene faith, iii. 548. Revolt and death, 549.
- Hermits* of the East, their mortified course of life, iii. 524. Miracles performed by them and their relics, 526.
- Hermodorus*, the Ephesian, assists the Romans in compiling their twelve tables of laws, iv. 336.
- Hermogenes*, master general of the cavalry, is killed in the attempt to banish Paul, bishop of Constantinople, iii. 297.
- Hero* and Leander, the story of, by whom controverted and defended, ii. 7. note.
- Herodian*, his life of Alexander Severus, why preferable to that in the Augustan history, i. 192. note.
- Herodes Atticus*, his extraordinary fortune and magnificence, i. 54.
- Herodotus*, his character of the Persian worship, i. 242.
- Heruli*, of Germany and Poland, their character, iv. 17.
- Hilarion*, the monk of Palestine, account of, iii. 510.
- Hilary*, bishop of Poitiers, his remarkable observations on the diversity of Christian doctrines, ii. 254. His exposition of the term Homoiousion, 257.
- Hilary*, pope, censures the emperor Anthemius for his tolerating principles, iii. 474.
- Hilderic* the Vandal king of Africa, his indulgence to his Catholic subjects displeases both the Arians and Athanasians, iv. 123. Is deposed by Gelimer, 124. Is put to death, 139.
- Hindoos* of the East, not the disciples of Zoroaster, v. 383. note.
- Hindostan*, conquest of, by Tamerlane, vi. 339.
- Hippo Regius*, siege of, by Genseric king of the Vanuials, iii. 342.
- History*, the principal subjects of, i. 287.
- Holy war*, the justice of it enquired into, vi. 9.

Homicide,

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- Hemicide*, how commuted by the Salic laws, iii. 586.
- Homooufion*, origin, and use of that term at the council of Nice, ii. 251. And Homoiousion, the distinction between, 257.
- Honain*, war of, v. 240.
- Honoratus*, archbishop of Milan, is, with his clergy, driven from his see, by the Lombards, iv. 429.
- Honorata*, princess, sister of the emperor Valentinian III. her history, iii. 403.
- Honorius*, son of Theodosius the Great, is declared emperor of the West, by his dying father, iii. 65. Marries Maria, the daughter of Stilicho, 131. His character, 132. Flies from Milan on the invasion of Italy by Alaric, 149. His triumphant entry into Rome, 155. Abolishes the combats of gladiators, 157. Fixes his residence at Ravenna, 159. Orders the death of Stilicho, 184. His impolitic measures, and cruelty unite his barbarian soldiers against him under Alaric, 191. His councils distracted by the eunuchs, 228. His abject overtures to Attalus and Alaric, 232. His last acts, and death, 257. His triumph for the reduction of Spain by Wallia the Goth, 270. Is suspected of incest with his sister Placidia, 328. His persecution of the Donatists in Africa, 338.
- Honour*, the new ranks of, introduced in the city of Constantinople, ii. 25. v. 484.
- Hormisdas*, a fugitive Persian prince, in the court of the emperor Constantius, his remarks on the city of Rome, ii. 146. note. His history, and station under Julian, 429.
- Hormouz*, the son of Chosroes, king of Persia, his accession, iv. 468. His character, 470. Is deposed, and at length killed, 474.
- Horsis*, of Arabia, their peculiar qualities, v. 175.
- Hosein*, the son of Ali, his tragical death, v. 267.
- Hospitallers*, knights, of St. John of Jerusalem, popularity and character of the order of, vi. 65.
- Hostilianus*, the minor son of the emperor Decius, elected emperor, under the guardianship of Gallus, i. 303.
- Hugh*, king of Burgundy, his marriage with Marozia, and expulsion from Rome by Alberic, v. 156.
- Hugh*, count of Vermandois, engages in the first crusade, vi. 23. Is shipwrecked and made captive by the Greek emperor Alexius Comnenus, 32. His return, 51.
- Human nature*, its natural propensities, i. 575.
- Hume*, Mr. his natural history of religion, the best commentary on the polytheism of the ancients, i. 35. note. His difficulty as to the extent of the Imperial palace at Rome, resolved, 161. note. Charges the most refined and philosophic sects with intolerance, 246. note.
- Hungary*, establishment of the Huns in, iii. 355. State of, under the emperor Charlemagne, v. 143. Terror excited by their first approach to Europe, 548. Their character, 552.
- Hunades*, John, his exploits against the Turks, vi. 446. His defence of Belgrade, and death, 453.
- Huneric*, the son of Genferic, king of the Vandals, persecutes his Catholic subjects, iii. 536. His cruelty to the Catholics of Tipasa, 546.
- Huns*, their original seat, and their conquests, ii. 577. Their decline, 580. Their emigrations, 583. Their victories over the Goths, 588. 590.
- , They drive other barbarous tribes before them, upon the Roman provinces, iii. 161. Their establishment in Hungary, 355. Character of their king Attila, 357. Their invasion of Persia, 362. The empire of, extinguished by the death of Attila, 427.
- Hunting* of wild beasts, when a virtue, and when a vice, i. 114. Is the school of war, ii. 570.
- Hypatia*, the female philosopher, murdered in the church at Alexandria, iv. 549.
- Hypatius*, sedition of, at Constantinople, iv. 67.

I and J

- Jacobites* of the East, history of the sect of, iv. 602.
- James*, St. his legendary exploits in Spain, i. 611.
- Janizaries*, first institution of those troops, vi. 320.
- Iberian and Caspian gates* of mount Caucasus, distinguished, iv. 110. The Iberian gates occupied by Cabades king of Persia, 111.
- Idatius*, his account of the misfortunes of Spain by an irruption of the barbarous nations, iii. 265.
- Idolatry* ascribed to the agency of demons, by the primitive Christians, i. 552. Derivation of the term, and its successive applications, ii. 509. note.
- Jerem*, his extravagant representation of the devastation of Pannonia by the Goths, ii. 620. His influence over the widow Paula, iii. 513.
- Jerusalem*, its situation, destruction, and profanation, ii. 382. Pilgrimages to, and curious relics preserved there, 383. Abortive attempt of the emperor Julian to rebuild the temple, 386.
- , A magnificent church erected there to the Virgin Mary by Julian, iv. 95. The vessels of the temple brought from Africa to Constantinople by Belisarius, 152. Is conquered by Chosroes II. king of Persia, 502. Insurrection of the monks there, 571.
- , The city conquered by the Saracens, v. 320. Great resort of pilgrims to, 677. Conquered of, by the Turks, 682.
- , Is taken from the Turks by the Egyptians, vi. 55. Is taken by the Crusaders, 60. Is erected into a kingdom under Godfrey of Bouillon, 61. Succession of its Christian princes, 95. Is pillaged by the Carizmians, 113.
- Jerusalem*, New, described according to the ideas of the primitive Christians, i. 562.
- Jesuits*, Portuguese, persecute the Eastern Christians, iv. 601. Their labours in, and expulsion from Abyssinia, 613.
- Jews*, an obscure, unsocial, obstinate race of men, i. 537.

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- i. 557. Review of their history, 538. Their religion the basis of Christianity, 541. The promises of divine favour extended by Christianity to all mankind, 542. The immortality of the soul not inculcated in the law of Moses, 560. Why there are no Hebrew gospels extant, 603. Provoked the persecutions of the Roman emperors, 622.
- Jerets*, those of a more liberal spirit adopted the theological system of Plato, ii. 238. Their condition under the emperors Constantine and Constantine, 321. Abortive attempt of Julian to rebuild the temple of Jerusalem, 386.
- , Miraculous conversion of a number of, at Minorca, iii. 100. note. Persecution of, in Spain, 552.
- , Are persecuted by the Catholics in Italy, iv. 32. And by Cyril at Alexandria, 548. How plagued by the emperor Justinian, 581.
- , Those in Arabia subdued by Mahomet, v. 235. Assist the Saracens in the reduction of Spain, v. 571.
- , Massacres of, by the first crusaders, vi. 18.
- Jordogerd*, king of Persia, is said to be left guardian to Theodosius the Younger, by the emperor Arcadius, iii. 312. His war with Theodosius, 322.
- Jugilium*, the small island of, serves as a place of refuge for Romans who flew from the sack of Rome by Ataric, iii. 272.
- Ignatius*, bishop of Antioch, the Christian fortitude displayed in his epistles, i. 661.
- Ishidatus*, the Saracen dynasty of, v. 455.
- Illyrians*, the title of, how limited in the times of Roman simplicity, and how extended when Constantinople became the seat of empire, ii. 25.
- Illyricum* describ'd, i. 27.
- Images*, introduction of, into the Christian church, v. 89. The worship of, derived from Paganism, 90. Are condemned by the council of Constantinople, 98. The adoration of, justified by pope Gregory II. 105. And sanctified by the second council of Nice, 129.
- Imperator*, in the Roman history, explained, i. 75. note. The Imperial prerogatives, 80. The court, 83. The sense of this appellation altered by long use, 80.
- Incarnation*, theological history of the doctrine of, iv. 533.
- Incest*, natural, and arbitrary, distinguished, iv. 381.
- India*, account of the Christians of St. Thomas in, iv. 599. Persecution of, by the Portuguese, 600.
- Inductions*, the memorable era of, whence dated, i. 508. note. The name and use of, in the middle ages, whence derived, ii. 62.
- Indulgences* in the Romish church, the nature of, explained, vi. 12.
- Ingundis*, princess of Austrasia, is married to Hermegild prince of Boetia, and cruelly treated by his mother Gaiswintha, iii. 548.
- Inheritance*, paternal, subject to parental discretion among the Romans, i. 199. The Roman law of, iv. 387. Testamentary dispositions of property, 390. The Voconian law, how evaded, 393.
- Injuries*, review of the Roman laws for the redress of, iv. 397.
- Innocent III.* pope, enjoyed the plenitude of papal power, vi. 109.
- Inquisition*, the first erection of that tribunal, vi. 109.
- Institutes* of Justinian, an analysis of, iv. 367.
- Interest* of money, how regulated by the Roman laws, iv. 396.
- Joan*, pope, the story of, fictitious, v. 154.
- John*, principal secretary to the emperor Honorius, usurps the empire after his death, iii. 329.
- John* the almsgiver, archbishop of Alexandria, relieves the Jewish refugees when Jerusalem was taken by the Persians, iv. 502. His extraordinary liberality of the church treasure, 612.
- John*, bishop of Antioch, arrives at Ephesus after the meeting of the council, and, with his bishops, decides against Cyril, iv. 557. Coalition between him and Cyril, 558.
- John* of Apri, patriarch of Constantinople, his pride, and confederacy against John Cantacuzene, vi. 269.
- John* of Brienne emperor of Constantinople, vi. 196.
- John* of Cappadocia, praetorian praefect of the East, under the emperor Justinian, his character, iv. 86. Is disgraced by the empress Theodora, and becomes a bishop, 87. Opposes the African war, 126. His fraud in supplying the army with bread, 133.
- John Comnenus* emperor of Constantinople, v. 67.
- John Damascenus*, St. his history, v. 101. note.
- John* of Lycopolis, the hermit, his character and oracular promise to the emperor Theodosius the Great, iii. 61.
- John*, the Monophysite bishop of Asia, is employed by the emperor Justinian to root out Pagans and heretics, iv. 580.
- John XII.* pope, his flagitious character, v. 154.
- John XXIII.* pope, his profligate character, vi. 605.
- John*, St. the evangelist, reveals the true sense of Plato's doctrine of the Logos, ii. 240.
- John* the Sanguinary, seizes the Gothic treasures in Picenum, and obliges Vitiges to raise the siege of Rome, iv. 191.
- John Zimisces*, murders the Greek emperor Nicephorus, and succeeds him, v. 50. His Eastern victories, 459. Defeats Swatoflaus, czar of Russia, 572.
- Jona*, one of the Hebride islands, its ancient monastic eminence, iii. 511.
- Jonas*, renegado of Damascus, story of, v. 310.
- Jordan*, character of his work, De Originibus Scitawicis, v. 543. note.

Joseph

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- Joseph* the Carizmian, governor of Berzem, kills the sultan Alp Arslan, v. 667.
- Josephus*, the mention of Jesus Christ in his history, a forgery, i. 639. note. His opinion, that Plato derived knowledge from the Jews, controverted, ii. 237. note.
- Jovian* is elected emperor by the troops of Julian, on their retreat from Assyria, ii. 401. His treaty with Sapor king of Persia, 462. His death, 482.
- Jovians* and Herculians, new bodies of guards instituted to supersede the Prætorian bands, i. 459.
- Jovinian* of Verona, his punishment by a Roman synod, for heresy, iii. 145.
- Jovinus* reduces the Alemanni, who had invaded Gaul, ii. 517.
- , Account of his revolt against the emperor Honorius in Germany, iii. 262.
- Jovius*, prætorian præfect under the emperor Honorius, succeeds Olympius as his confidential minister, iii. 226. His negotiations with Alaric obstructed, 228. Deferts Honorius, and goes over to Alaric, and the new emperor Attalus, 235.
- Irene*, her marriage with the Greek emperor Leo, v. 24. Her ambition, and barbarity to her son Constantine, 25. Restores images to public devotion, 128.
- Ireland* was first colonised from Scotland, ii. 528. Derivation of the name of its tutelary saint, Patrick, iii. 498. note.
- Isaac I. Comnenus*, emperor of Constantinople, v. 57.
- Isaac II. Angelus*, emperor of Constantinople, v. 84. His character and reign, vi. 130. Is deposed by his brother Alexius, 132. Is restored by the crusaders, 155. His death, 161.
- Isaac*, archbishop of Armenia, his apology for the vices of king Artafres, iii. 325.
- Isauria*, the rebellion there against the emperor Gallienus, i. 340.
- Isaurians*, reduction of, by the Eastern emperors, iv. 102.
- Isidore*, cardinal, his ill treatment in Russia, vi. 459. Receives an act of union from the Greek clergy at Constantinople, 481.
- Ilycerates*, his price for the tuition of his pupils, iv. 115.
- Italy*, the dominion of, under Odoacer, succeeds the extinction of the Western empire, iii. 494. Its miserable state at this æra, 502. Conversion of the Lombards of, to the Nicene faith, 551.
- , Is reduced by Theodoric the Ostrogoth, iv. 12. His administration, 14. Government of, according to the Roman law, by Theodoric, 21. Its flourishing state at this time, 26. How supplied with silk from China, 72. History of Amalasontha, queen of Italy, 161. Invasion of, by Belisarius, 170. Siege of Rome by the Goths, 176. Invasion of Italy by the Franks, 195. Revolt of the Goths, 277. Expedition of the eunuch Narfes, 298. Invasion of, by the Franks and Alemanni, 303. Government of, under the exarchs of Ravenna, 512. Conquest of Alboin king of the Lombards in, 478. Distress of, 479. How divided between the Lombards, and the exarchs of Ravenna, 443.
- Italy*, growth of the papal power in, v. 102. Revolt of, against the Greek emperors, 108. The exarchate of Ravenna granted to the pope, 122. Extent of the dominion of Charlemagne there, 142. The power of the German Cæsars destroyed by the rise of the commercial cities there, 159. Factions of the Guelphs and Ghibelins, 160. Conflict of the Saracens, Latins, and Greeks in, 581.
- , Revival of Greek learning in, vi. 417. Authors consulted for the history of, 618. note.
- Jubilee*, popish, a revival of the secular games, i. 234. note. vi. 557. The return of, accelerated, 559.
- Jude*, St. examination of his grandsons before the tribunal of the procurator of Judæa, i. 644.
- Judgments* of God, in the Salfic laws, how determined, iii. 588.
- Judgments*, popular, of the Romans, displayed, iv. 410.
- Julia Domna*, wife of the emperor Severus, her character, i. 156. Her death, 173.
- Julian*, the nephew of Constantine the Great, his education, ii. 128. His dangerous situation on the death of his brother Gallus, 130. Is sent to Athens, where he cultivates philosophy, 137. Is recalled by Constantius, 140. Is invested with the title of Cæsar, 141. Is appointed to the government of Gaul, 161. His first campaign, 163. Battle of Strasburgh, 167. Reduces the Franks at Toxandria, 170. His three expeditions beyond the Rhine, 171. Restores the cities of Gaul, 173. His civil administration, 174. His account of the theological calamities of the empire under Constantius, 300. Constantius grows jealous of him, 312. The Gothic legions are ordered into the East, 313. Is elected emperor by the troops, 318. His embassy as a suppliant to Constantius, 321. His fourth and fifth expeditions beyond the Rhine, 322. Declares war against Constantius, and argues the Christian religion, 326. His march from the Rhine into Illyricum, 328. Enters Birmann, 331. Publishes apologies for his conduct, 332. His triumphant entry into Constantinople on the death of Constantius, 336. His private life and civil government, 357. His restoration in the imperial palace, 350. Becomes a slave to his history, 353. Erects a tribunal for the trial of the evil ministers of Constantius, 354. Banishes the spies and informers employed by his predecessor, 347. His love of freedom and tranquillity, 355. His kindness to the Grecian clergy, 350. His abilities as an orator, 352. And as a jurist, 353. His character, etna. His apostacy accounted for,

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

357. Adopts the Pagan mythology, 359. His theological system, 362. His initiation into the Eleusinian mysteries, and his fanaticism, 365. His hypocritical duplicity, 367. Writes a vindication of his apostacy, 369. His edict for a general toleration, 371. His Pagan superstitious zeal, 372. His circular letters for the reformation of the Pagan religion, 375. His industry in gaining proselytes, 379. His address to the Jews, 381. History of his attempt to rebuild the temple at Jerusalem, 386. Transfers the revenues of the Christian church, to the heathen priests, 391. Prohibits Christian schools, 392. Obliges the Christians to reinstate the Pagan temples, 394. Restores the sacred grove and temple of Daphne, 399. Punishes the Christians of Antioch for burning that temple, 400. His treatment of the cities of Edessa and Alexandria, 405. Banishes Athanasius, 407. The philosophical fable of his Casars, delineated, 412. Meditates the conquest of Persia, 415. Popular discontents during his residence at Antioch, 417. Occasion of writing his Misopogon, 420. His march to the Euphrates, 423. He enters the Persian territories, 428. Invades Assyria, 434. His personal conduct in this enterprise, 438. His address to his discontented troops, 440. His successful passage over the Tigris, 443. Burns his fleet, 449. His retreat and distress, 452. His death, 456. His funeral, 475.
- Julian*, count, offers to betray Spain into the hands of the Arabs, v. 364. His advice to the victorious Turks, 370.
- Julian*, the papal legate, exhorts Ladislaus king of Hungary and Poland to breach of faith with the Turks, vi. 447. His death and character, 451.
- Julius*, mailer-general of the troops in the Eastern empire, conceals a general massacre of the Gothic youth in Asia, ii. 622.
- Jurisprudence*, Roman, a review of, iv. 332. Was polished by Grecian philosophy, 351. Abuses of, 414.
- Justin* the Elder, his military promotion, iv. 43. His elevation to the empire, and character, 44. His death, 48.
- Justin II.* emperor, succeeds his uncle Justinian, iv. 418. His firm behaviour to the ambassadors of the Avars, 420. His abdication, and investiture of Tiberius, as his successor, 435.
- Justin Martyr*, his decision in the case of the Ebionites, i. 546. His extravagant account of the progress of Christianity, 611. Occasion of his own conversion, 614.
- Justina*, the popular story of her marriage with the emperor Valentinian examined, ii. 557. Her infant son Valentinian II. invested with the imperial ensigns, on the death of his father, 559. Her contest with Ambrose archbishop of Milan, iii. 30. Flies from the invasion of Maximus, with her son, 37.
- Justinian*, emperor of the East, his birth and promotion, iv. 43. His orthodoxy, 46. Is invested with the diadem by his uncle Justin, 48. Marries Theodora, 55. Patronizes the blue faction of the circus, 62. State of agriculture and manufacture in his provinces, 70. Introduces the culture of the silk worm, and manufacture of silk, into Greece, 77. State of his revenue, 79. His avarice and profusion, 80. Taxes and monopolies, 83. His ministers, 86. His public buildings, 88. Founde the church of St. Sophia at Constantinople, 92. His other public works, 96. His European fortifications, 98. His Asiatic fortifications, 104. He suppresses the schools of Athens, 112. And the consular dignity, 119. Purchases a peace from the Persians, 123. 241. Undertakes to restore Hilderic king of Carthage, 124. Reduction of Africa, 146. His instructions for the government of, 147. His acquisitions in Spain, 159. His deceitful negotiations in Italy, 165. Weakness of his empire, 212. Receives an embassy from the Avars, 228. And from the Turks, 230. Persian war, 247. His negotiations with Chosroes, 264. His alliance with the Abyssinians, 268. Neglects the Italian war under Belisarius, 284. Settles the government of Italy under the exarch of Ravenna, 312. Disgrace and death of Belisarius, 319. His death and character, 320. Comets and calamities in his reign, 322. His Code, Pandects, and Institutes, 332. His theological character and government, 577. His persecuting spirit, 579. His orthodoxy, 582. Died a heretic, 585.
- Justinian II.* emperor of Constantinople, v. 13.
- Justinian*, the son of Germanus, his conspiracy with the empress Sophia, and successes against the Persians, iv. 437.
- Juvenal*, his remarks on the crowded state of the inhabitants of Rome, iii. 218.

K

- Khan*, import of this title in the northern parts of Asia, ii. 572. iii. 161.
- King*, the title of, conferred by Constantine the Great on his nephew Hannibalianus, ii. 87.
- Kindred*, degrees of, according to the Roman civil law, iv. 388.
- Knight*hood, how originally conferred, and its obligations, vi. 26.
- Koran* of Mahomet, account and character of, v. 208.
- Koreish*, the tribe of, acquire the custody of the Caaba at Mecca, v. 191. Pedigree of Mahomet, 197. They oppose his pretensions to a prophetic character, 222. Flight of Mahomet, 224. Battle of Beder, 232. Battle of Ohud, 233. Mecca surrendered to Mahomet, 238.

L

- Labarum*, or standard of the cross, in the army of Constantine the Great, described, ii. 194.

Labeo,

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- Labæo*, the civilian, his diligence in business and composition, iv. 350. His professional character, 354.
- Lactantius*, difficulties in ascertaining the date of his Divine Institutions, ii. 179. note. His flattering prediction of the influence of Christianity among mankind, 187. Inculcates the divine right of Constantine to the empire, 189.
- Ladislaus*, king of Hungary and Poland, leads an army against the Turks, vi. 445. His breach of faith with them, 447.
- Ladislaus* king of Naples, harasses Rome during the schism of the papacy, vi. 600.
- Lætus*, prætorian præfect, conspires the death of Commodus, and confers the empire on Pertinax, i. 118.
- Laity*, when first distinguished from the clergy, i. 590.
- Lampadius*, a Roman senator, boldly condemns the treaty with Alaric the Goth, iii. 180.
- Lance, holy*, narrative of the miraculous discovery of, vi. 52.
- Land*, how assessed by the Roman emperors, ii. 63. How divided by the Barbarians, iii. 591. Allodial, and Salic, distinguished, 594. Of Italy, how partitioned by Theoderic the Ostrogoth, iv. 14.
- Laodicea*, its ancient splendor, i. 60.
- Lascaris, Theodore*, establishes an empire at Nice, vi. 181. His character, 221.
- Lascaris, Theodore II.* his character, vi. 224.
- Lascaris, Janus*, the Greek grammarian, his character, vi. 426.
- Latin church*, occasion of its separation from the Greek church, vi. 121. Corruption and schism of, 398. Reunion of, with the Greek church, 412. The subsequent Greek schism, 437.
- Latium*, the right of, explained, i. 44.
- Laura*, in monkish history, explained, iii. 524.
- Law*, review of the profession of, under the emperors, ii. 40.
- Laws of Rome*, a review of, iv. 332. Those of the kings, 334. Of the twelve tables, 335. Of the people, 339. Decrees of the senate, and edicts of the prætors, 341. Constitutions of the emperors, 343. Their rescripts, 345. The three codes of, 345. The forms of, 346. Succession of civil lawyers, 348. Reformation of, by Justinian, 356. Abolition and revival of the penal laws, 402.
- Lazi*, the tribe of, in Colchos, account of, iv. 256.
- Le Clerc*, character of his ecclesiastical history, iv. 533. note.
- Legacies and inheritances* taxed by Augustus, i. 199. How regulated by the Roman law, iv. 391.
- Legion*, in the Roman army under the emperors, described, i. 15. General distribution of the legions, 21. The size of, reduced by Constantine the Great, ii. 46.
- Leo of Thrace* is made emperor of the East, by his - master Aspar, iii. 470. Was the first Christian potentate who was crowned by a priest, ibid. Confers the empire of the West on Anthemius, 471. His armament against the Vandals in Africa, 476. Murders Aspar and his sons, iv. 4.
- Leo III.* emperor of Constantinople, v. 19. His edicts against images in churches, 97. Revolt of Italy, 108.
- Leo IV.* emperor of Constantinople, v. 23.
- Leo V.* emperor of Constantinople, v. 29.
- Leo VI.* the philosopher, emperor of Constantinople, v. 43. Extinguishes the power of the senate, 495.
- Leo*, bishop of Rome, his character and embassy from Valentinian III. to Attila king of the Huns, iii. 424. Intercedes with Genseric king of the Vandals for clemency to the city of Rome, 440. Calls the council of Chalcedon, iv. 566.
- Leo III.* pope, his miraculous recovery from the assaults of assassins, v. 134. Crowns Charlemagne emperor of the Romans, 135.
- Leo IV.* pope, his reign, v. 440. Found the Leonine city, 442.
- Leo IX.* pope, his expedition against the Normans of Apulia, v. 596. His treaty with them, 598.
- Leo*, archbishop of Thessalonica, one of the restorers of Greek learning, v. 512.
- Leo*, general of the East, under the emperor Arcadius, his character, iii. 294.
- Leo Pilatus*, first Greek professor at Florence, and in the West, his character, vi. 421.
- Leo*, the Jew proselyte, history of his family, vi. 561.
- Leonas*, the quaestor, his embassy from Constantius to Julian, ii. 325.
- Leonine city* at Rome founded, v. 442.
- Leontius* is taken from prison, and chosen emperor of Constantinople, on the deposition of Justinian II. v. 14.
- Leovigild*, Gothic king of Spain, his character, iii. 548. Revolt and death of his son Hermenegild, 549.
- Letters*, a knowledge of, the test of civilization in a people, i. 265.
- Lewis the Pious*, emperor of the Romans, v. 147.
- Lewis II.* emperor of the Romans, v. 147. His epistle to the Greek emperor Basil I. 582.
- Libanius*, his account of the private life of the emperor Julian, ii. 338. And of his divine visions, 366. Applauds the dissimulation of Julian, 368. His character, 421. His eulogium on the emperor Valens, 616.
- Liberius*, bishop of Rome, is banished by the emperor Constantius, for refusing to concur in deposing Athanasius, ii. 283, 294.
- Liberty*, public, the only sure guardians of, against an aspiring prince, i. 72.
- Licinius* is invested with the purple by the emperor Galerius, i. 493. His alliance with Constantine the

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- the Great, 514. Defeats Maximin, 515. His cruelty, 516. Is defeated by Constantine at Cibalis, 520. And at Mardia, 522. Peace concluded with Constantine, 523. Second civil war with Constantine, 528. His humiliation, and death, 533.
- Licinius*, fate of his son, ii. 83. Concurred with Constantine in publishing the edict of Milan, 184. Violated this engagement by oppressing the Christians, 190. Cæcilius's account of his vision, 197.
- Lieutenant*, Imperial, his office and rank, i. 77.
- Lightning*, superstition of the Romans with reference to persons and places struck with, i. 412.
- Limigantes*, Sarmatian slaves, expel their masters, and usurp possession of their country, ii. 95. Extinction of, by Constantius, 149.
- Literature*, revival of, in Italy, vi. 417. Ancient, use and abuse of, 431.
- Lithuania*, its late conversion to Christianity, v. 577.
- Litorius*, count, is defeated and taken captive, in Gaul by Theodoric, iii. 398.
- Liutprand*, king of the Lombards, attacks the city of Rome, v. 114.
- Liutprand*, bishop of Cremona, ambassador to Constantinople, ceremony of his audience with the emperor, v. 483.
- Leges*, Plato's doctrine of, ii. 238. Is expounded by St. John the Evangelist, 240. Athanasius confesses himself unable to comprehend it, 243. Controversies on the eternity of, 247.
- Logothets*, great, his office under the Greek emperors, v. 485.
- Lombard*, ancient, described, i. 25. Conquest of, by Charlemagne, v. 117.
- Lombards*, derivation of their name, and review of their history, iv. 215. Are employed by the emperor Justinian to check the Gepidæ, 217. Actions of their king Alboin, 421. They reduce the Gepidæ, 424. They over-run that part of Italy now called Lombardy, 428. Extent of their kingdom, 445. Language and manners of the Lombards, ibid. Government and laws, 450.
- Longinus*, his representation of the degeneracy of his age, i. 71. Is put to death by Aurelian, 373.
- , is sent to supersede Narfes, as exarch of Ravenna, iv. 427. Receives Rosamond the fugitive queen of the Lombards, 432.
- Lothaire I.* emperor of the Romans, v. 147.
- Louis VII.* of France is rescued from the treachery of the Greeks by Roger king of Sicily, v. 632. Undertakes the second crusade, vi. 75. His disastrous expedition, 81.
- Louis IX.* of France, his crusades to the Holy Land, vi. 113. His death, 117. Procured a valuable stock of relics from Constantinople, vi. 201.
- Lucian*, the severity of his father against the Heathen mythology, accounted for, i. 37.
- Lucian*, count of the East, under the emperor Arcadius, his cruel treatment by the præfect Rufinus, iii. 111.
- Lucian*, presbyter of Jerusalem, his miraculous discovery of the body of St. Stephen, the first Christian martyr, iii. 97.
- Lucilian*, governor of Illyricum, is surpris'd, and kindly treated by Julian, ii. 330. His death, 481.
- Lucilla*, sister of the emperor Commodus, her attempt to get him assassinated, i. 106.
- Lucius II.* and III. popes, their disastrous reigns, vi. 527.
- Lucrine* lake described, with its late destruction, iii. 205. note.
- Lucullan* villa in Campania, its description and history, iii. 498.
- Lupercalia*, the feast of, described, and continued under the Christian emperors, iii. 474.
- Lucius*, the Roman governor of Thrace, oppresses the Gothic emigrants there, ii. 597. Rathly provokes them to hostilities, 599. Is defeated by them, 600.
- Lustral* contribution in the Roman empire, explained, ii. 70.
- Luther, Martin*, his character as a reformer, v. 536.
- Luxury* the only means of correcting the unequal distribution of property, i. 65.
- Lygians*, a formidable German nation, account of, i. 398.
- Lyons*, battle of, between the competitors Severus and Albinus, i. 145.

M

- Macedonius*, the Arian bishop of Constantinople, his contests with his competitor Paul, ii. 296. Fatal consequences on his removing the body of the emperor Constantine to the church of St. Acacius, 298. His cruel persecutions of the Catholics and Novatians, 299. His exile, iv. 576.
- Macrianus*, prætorian præfect under the emperor Valerian, his character, i. 327.
- Macrianus*, a prince of the Alemanni, his steady alliance with the emperor Valentinian, ii. 521.
- Macrinus*, his succession to the empire predicted by an African, i. 168. Accelerates the completion of the prophecy, ibid. Purchases a peace with Parthia, 249.
- Madayn*, the capital of Persia, sacked by the Saracens, v. 287.
- Mæonius* of Palmyra assassinated his uncle Odenathus, i. 367.
- Mafsa*, its situation, i. 28.
- Magi*, the worship of, in Persia, reformed by Artaxerxes, i. 240. Abridgement of the Persian theology, 241. Simplicity of their worship, 242. Ceremonies and moral precepts, 243. Their power, 245.
- Magic*, severe prosecution of persons for the crime of, at Rome and Antioch, ii. 457.

Magnentius

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- Magnentius* assumes the empire in Gaul, ii. 111. Death of Constant, 112. Sends an embassy to Constantius, 114. Makes war against Constantius, 118. Is defeated at the battle of Mursa, 119. Kills himself, 125.
- Mahmad*, the Gaznevide, his twelve expeditions into Hindostan, v. 646. His character, 649.
- Mahomet*, the prophet, his embassy to Chosroes II. king of Persia, iv. 506.
- , His genealogy, birth, and education, v. 197. His person and character, 199. Assumes his prophetic mission, 202. Inculcated the unity of God, 204. His reverential mention of Jesus Christ, 206. His Koran, 208. His miracles, 210. His precepts, 212. His Hell, and Paradise, 216. The best authorities for his history, 219. note. Converts his own family, 220. Preaches publicly at Mecca, 221. Escapes from the Koreishites there, 224. Is received as prince of Medina, 226. His regal dignity, and sacerdotal office, 227. Declares war against infidels, 229. Battle of Bedr, 232. Battle of Ohud, 233. Subdues the Jews of Arabia, 235. Submission of Mecca to him, 237. He conquers Arabia, 240. His sickness and death, 246. His character, 249. His private life, 251. His wives, 253. His children, 255. His posterity, 269. Remarks on the great spread and permanency of his religion, 272.
- Mahomet*, the son of Bajazet, his reign, vi. 367.
- Mahomet II.* sultan of the Turks, his character, vi. 464. His reign, 466. Indications of his hostile intentions against the Greeks, 468. He besieges Constantinople, 477. Takes the city by storm, 500. His entry into the city, 506. Makes it his capital, 508. His death, 516.
- Mahometizm*, by what means propagated, v. 381. Toleration of Christianity under, 384.
- Majorian*, his history, character, and elevation to the Western empire, iii. 452. His epistle to the senate, 454. His salutary laws, 455. His preparations to invade Africa, 459. His fleet destroyed by Genseric, 463. His death, 464.
- Maluterra*, his character of the Normans, v. 593.
- Malek Shah*, sultan of the Turks, his prosperous reign, v. 668. Reforms the Eastern calendar, 670. His death, 671.
- Mallus Theodorus*, the great civil honours to which he attained, ii. 41. note.
- Mamelukes*, their origin and character, vi. 116. Their establishment in Egypt, 117.
- Mamma*, mother of the young emperor Alexander Severus, acts as regent of the empire, i. 182. Is put to death with him, 209. Her conference with Origen, 669.
- Mango*, an Armenian noble, his history, i. 444.
- Man* the only animal that can accommodate himself to all climates, i. 263. note.
- Mancipium*, in the Roman law, explained, iv. 386.
- Manichæans* are devoted to death, by the edict of Theodosius against heretics, iii. 25.
- Manuel Comnenus*, emperor of Constantinople, v. 69. He repulses the Normans, 653. But fails in his scheme of subduing the Western empire, 656. His ill treatment of the crusaders, vi. 78.
- Maogamalcha*, a city of Assyria, reduced and destroyed by the emperor Julian, ii. 436.
- Marble*, the four species of, most esteemed by the Romans, i. 214. note.
- Marcellinus*, count of the sacred largesses under the emperor Constant in Gaul, assails the usurpation of Magnentius, ii. 111. His embassy to Constantius, 114. Was killed in the battle of Mursa, 125.
- Marcellinus*, His revolt in Dalmatia, and character, iii. 465. Joins the emperor Anthemius, and expels the Vandals from Sardinia, 470. His death, 480.
- Marcellinus*, son of the prefect Maximin, his treacherous murder of Gabinius king of the Quadi, ii. 553.
- Marcellus* the centurion martyred for desertion, i. 680.
- Marcellus*, bishop of Rome, exiled to restore peace to the city, i. 693.
- Marcellus*, bishop of Apamea in Syria, loses his life in destroying the Pagan temples, iii. 80.
- Marcia*, the concubine of the emperor Commodus, a patroness of the Christians, i. 667.
- Marcian*, senator of Constantinople, marries the empress Pulcheria, and is acknowledged emperor, iii. 390. His temperate refusal of the demands of Attila the Hun, 392.
- Marcianapolis*, the city of, taken by the Goths, i. 299.
- Marcomanni* are subdued and punished by Marcus Antoninus, i. 286. Alliance made with, by the emperor Galienus, 315.
- Marcus*, elected bishop of the Nazarenes, i. 545.
- Mardia*, battle of, between Constantine the Great and Licinius, i. 522.
- Margus*, battle of, between Diocletian and Carinus, i. 422.
- Margus*, bishop of, betrays his episcopal city into the hands of the Huns, iii. 564.
- Maria*, daughter of Eudemon of Carthage, her remarkable adventures, iii. 349.
- Mariana*, his account of the misfortunes of Spain, by an irruption of the barbarous nations, iii. 266.
- Marinus*, a subaltern officer, chosen emperor by the legions of Asia, i. 289.
- Marius* the armourer, a candidate for the purple among the competitors against Gallienus, his character, i. 324.
- Mark*, bishop of Arethusa, is cruelly treated by the emperor Julian, ii. 395.
- Maranga*, engagement there between the emperor Julian, and Sapor king of Persia, ii. 453.

Maronites

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- Maronites* of the East, character and history of, iv. 605.
- Marezia*, a Roman prostitute, the mother, grandmother, and great-grandmother, of three popes, v. 154.
- Marriage*, regulations of, by the Roman laws, iv. 374. Of Roman citizens with strangers, prescribed by their jurisprudence, v. 491.
- Martel, Charles*, duke of the Franks, his character, v. 409. His politic conduct on the Saracen invasion of France, 410. Defeats the Saracens, 411. Why he was consigned over to hell flames by the clergy, 412.
- Martin*, bishop of Tours, destroys the idols and Pagan temples in Gaul, iii. 80. His monkish institutions there, 510.
- Martina* marries her uncle, the emperor Heraclius, v. 7. Endeavours to share the Imperial dignity with her sons, 8. Her fate, 10.
- Martinianus* receives the title of Cæsar, from the emperor Licinius, i. 532.
- Martyrs*, primitive, an inquiry into the true history of, i. 620. The several inducements to martyrdom, 659. Three methods of escaping it, 663. Marks by which learned Catholics distinguish the relics of the martyrs, 654 note. The worship of, and their relics, introduced, iii. 93.
- Mary*, Virgin, her immaculate conception, borrowed from the Koran, v. 206.
- Mascezel*, the persecuted brother of Gildo the moor, takes refuge in the Imperial court of Honorius, iii. 126. Is intrusted with troops to reduce Gildo, ibid. Defeats him, 129. His suspicious death, 130.
- Master* of the offices, under Constantine the Great, his functions, ii. 52.
- Maternus*, his revolt and conspiracy against the emperor Commodus, i. 109.
- Matthew*, St. his gospel originally composed in Hebrew, i. 603. note. iv. 535. note.
- Maurice*, his birth, character, and promotion to the Eastern empire, iv. 439. Restores Chosroes II. king of Persia, 477. His war against the Avars, 486. State of his armies, 488. His abdication and death, 492.
- Mauritania*, ancient, its situation and extent, i. 32. Character of the native Moors of, iii. 337.
- Maxentius*, the son of Maximian, declared emperor at Rome, i. 487. His tyranny in Italy and Africa, 498. The military force he had to oppose Constantine, 502. His defeat and death, 510. His politic humanity to the Christians, 692.
- Maximian*, associate in the empire with Diocletian, his character, i. 425. Triumphs with Diocletian, 455. Holds his court at Milan, 457. Abdicates the empire along with Diocletian, 468. He resumes the purple, 487. Reduces Severus, and puts him to death, 488. His second resignation, and unfortunate end, 494. His aversion to the Christians accounted for, 679.
- Maximilianus*, the African, a Christian martyr, i. 680.
- Maximin*, his birth, fortune, and elevation to the empire of Rome, i. 206. Why deemed a persecutor of the Christians, 670.
- Maximin* is declared Cæsar, on the abdication of Diocletian, i. 479. Obtains the rank of Augustus, from Galerius, 493. His defeat and death, 515. Renewed the persecution of the Christians after the toleration granted by Galerius, 697.
- Maximin*, the cruel minister of the emperor Valentinian, promoted to the præfecture of Gaul, ii. 501.
- Maximin*, his embassy from Theodosius the Younger, to Attila king of the Huns, iii. 377.
- Maximus* and Balbinus elected joint emperors by the senate, on the deaths of the two Gordians, i. 219.
- Maximus*, his character and revolt in Britain, iii. 6. His treaty with the emperor Theodosius, 10. Persecutes the Priscillianists, 26. His invasion of Italy, 36. His defeat and death, 40.
- Maximus*, the Pagan preceptor of the emperor Julian, initiates him into the Eleusinian mysteries, ii. 365. Is honourably invited to Constantinople by his Imperial pupil, 377. Is corrupted by his residence at court, 378.
- Maximus*, Petronius, his wife ravished by Valentinian III. emperor of the West, iii. 431. His character, and elevation to the empire, 436.
- Mebodes*, the Persian general, ungratefully treated by Chosroes, iv. 236.
- Mecca*, its situation, and description, v. 177. The Caaba, or temple of, 190. Its deliverance from Abraham, 197. The doctrine of Mahomet opposed there, 222. His escape, 224. The city of, surrendered to Mahomet, 238. Is pillaged by Abu Taher, 451.
- Medina*, reception of Mahomet there, on his flight from Mecca, v. 225.
- Megalesia*, the festival of, at Rome, described, i. 109. note.
- Meletians*, an Egyptian sect, persecuted by Athanasius, ii. 272.
- Melitene*, battle of, between the Eastern emperor Tiberius, and Chosroes king of Persia, iv. 467.
- Melo*, citizen of Bari, invites the Normans into Italy, v. 589.
- Memphis*, its situation, and reduction by the Saracens, v. 334.
- Merovingian* kings of the Franks in Gaul, origin of, iii. 400. Their domain and benefices, 592.
- Mervan*, caliph of the Saracens, and the last of the house of Ommiyah, his defeat and death, v. 415.
- Mesopotamia*, invasion of by the emperor Julian, ii. 429. Described by Xenophon, 430.
- Messala*, Valerius, the first præfect of Rome, his high character, ii. 34. note.
- Messiah*, under what character he was expected by the

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- the Jews, i. 542. His birth-day, how fixed by the Romans, ii. 326. note.
- Metals* and money, their operation in improving the human mind, i. 268.
- Metellus Numidicus*, the censor, his invective against women, i. 183. note.
- Metius Falconius*, his artful speech to the emperor Tacitus in the senate on his election, i. 388.
- Metrophanes* of Cyzicus, is made patriarch of Constantinople, vi. 438.
- Metz*, cruel treatment of, by Attila king of the Huns, iii. 407.
- Michael I.* Rhangabe, emperor of Constantinople, v. 28.
- Michael II.* the Stammerer, emperor of Constantinople, v. 31.
- Michael III.* emperor of Constantinople, v. 35. Is defeated by the Paulicians, 529.
- Michael IV.* the Paphlagonian, emperor of Constantinople, v. 55.
- Michael V.* Calaphates, emperor of Constantinople, v. 56.
- Michael VI.* Stratioticus, emperor of Constantinople, v. 57.
- Michael VII.* Parapinaces, emperor of Constantinople, v. 61.
- Milan*, how the Imperial court of the Western empire came to be transferred from Rome to that city, i. 457.
- , Famous edict of Constantine the Great in favour of the Christians, published there, ii. 184.
- , St. Ambrose elected archbishop of that city, iii. 29. Tumult occasioned by his refusing a church for the Arian worship of the empress Justina and her son, 31.
- , Revolt of, to Justinian, iv. 190. Is taken and destroyed by the Burgundians, 196.
- , Is again destroyed by Frederic I. v. 161.
- Military force*, its strength and efficacy dependent on a due proportion to the number of the people, i. 127.
- Military officers* of the Roman empire at the time of Constantine the Great, a review of, ii. 42.
- Millennium*, the doctrine of, explained, i. 562.
- Mingrelia*. See Colchis
- Minority*, two distinctions of, in the Roman law, iii. 117. note.
- Miracles*, those of Christ and his apostles, escaped the notice of the heathen philosophers and historians, i. 618. Account of those wrought by the body of St. Stephen, iii. 97.
- Miraculous powers* of the primitive church, an enquiry into, i. 567.
- Mistheus*, chief minister and father-in-law of the third Gordian, his character, i. 231.
- Misogegon* of the emperor Julian, on what occasion written, ii. 420.
- Missorium*, or great golden dish of Adolphus king of the Visigoths, history of, iii. 254.
- Moarwiyab*, assumes the title of caliph, and makes war against Ali, v. 263. His character and reign, 265. Lays siege to Constantinople, 393.
- Modar*, prince of the Amali, seduced by the emperor Theodosius, turns his arms against his own countrymen, ii. 631.
- Moguls*, primitive, their method of treating their conquered enemies, iii. 367. Reign and conquests of Zingis, vi. 289. Conquests of his successors, 296. See Tamerlane.
- Moguntiacum*, the city of, surprised by the Alemanni, ii. 518.
- Mokarwakas* the Egyptian, his treaty with the Saracen Amrou, v. 337.
- Monarchy* defined, i. 72. Hereditary, ridiculous in theory, but salutary in fact, 204. The peculiar objects of cruelty and of avarice under, ii. 61.
- Monastic institutions*, the seeds of, sown by the primitive Christians, i. 579. Origin, progress, and consequences of, iii. 505.
- Money*, the standard and computation of, under Constantine the Great, and his successors, ii. 66. note.
- Monks* have embellished the sufferings of the primitive martyrs by fictions, i. 651.
- , Character of, by Eunapius, iii. 94. By Rutilius, 127. Origin and history of, 506. Their industry in making proselytes, 512. Their obedience, 514. Their dress and habitations, 516. Their diet, 517. Their manual labour, 518. Their riches, 520. Their solitude, 521. Their devotion and visions, 522. Their division into the classes of Coenobites and Anachorites, 523.
- , Suppression of, at Constantinople, by Constantine V. v. 102.
- Monophysites* of the East, history of the sect of, iv. 602.
- Monothelite controversy*, account of, iv. 586.
- Montesquieu*, his description of the military government of the Roman empire, i. 233. His opinion that the degrees of freedom in a state are measured by taxation, controverted, ii. 61.
- Montius*, quaestor of the palace, is sent by the emperor Constantius, with Domitian, to correct the administration of Gallus in the East, ii. 132. Is put to death there, 133.
- Moors* of Barbary, their miserable poverty, iv. 149. Their invasion of the Roman province punished by Solomon the Eunuch, 159.
- Morea* is reduced by the Turks, vi. 512.
- Morofini*, Thomas, elected patriarch of Constantinople by the Venetians, vi. 176.
- Mosilama*, an Arabian chief, endeavours to rival Mahomet in his prophetic character, v. 277.
- Moses*, the doctrine of the immortality of the soul not inculcated in his law, i. 560. His sanguinary laws compared with those of Mahomet, v. 220.
- Mosheim*, character of his work De rebus Christianis aut Constantinis, iv. 533. note.
- Moslemab* the Saracen besieges Constantinople, v. 398.

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

Motaffem, the last caliph of the Saracens, his wars with the Greek emperor Theophilus, v. 413. Is killed by the Moguls, vi. 300.

Mourzouffe, usurps the Greek empire, and destroys Isaac Angelus, and his son Alexius, vi. 161. Is driven from Constantinople by the Latins, 165. His death, 180.

Musa, the son of Bajazet, invested with the kingdom of Anatolia, by Tamerlane, vi. 353. His reign, 360.

Mozarabes, in the history of Spain, explained, v. 387.

Municipal cities, their advantages, i. 44.

Muratori, his literary character, vi. 618. note.

Marsia, battle of, between the emperor Constantius, and the usurper Magnentius, ii. 119.

Musa the Saracen, his conquest of Spain, v. 373. His disgrace, 376. His death, 378.

Mustapha, the supposed son of Bajazet, his story, vi. 395.

Mura, battle of, between the forces of the emperor Heraclius and those of Mahomet, v. 243.

Mygdonius, river, the course of, stopped by Sapor king of Persia, at the siege of Nisibis, ii. 108.

N

Narbonne is besieged by Theodoric, and relieved by count Litorius, iii. 398.

Nacragan, the Persian general, his defeat by the Romans, and cruel fate, iv. 262.

Naifus, battle of, between the emperor Claudius and the Goths, i. 351.

Naples is besieged and taken by Belisarius, iv. 171. Extent of the dutchy of, under the exarchs of Ravenna, 444.

Narjes, his embassy from Sapor king of Persia to the emperor Constantius, ii. 151.

Narjes, king of Persia, prevails over the pretensions of his brother Hormuz, and expels Tindates king of Armenia, i. 445. Overthrows Galerius, 446. Is surprised and routed by Galerius, 449. Articles of peace between him and the Romans, 453.

Narjes, the Persian general of the emperor Maurice, restores Chosroes II. king of Persia, iv. 477. His revolt against Phocas, and cruel death, 501.

Narjes, the eunuch, his military promotion, and dissension with Belisarius, iv. 194. His character and expedition to Italy, 298. Battle of Tagina, 302. Takes Rome, 304. Reduces and kills Teias, the last king of the Goths, 306. Defeats the Franks and Alemanni, 309. Governs Italy in the capacity of exarch, 312. His disgrace, and death, 420.

Naulobatus, a chief of the Heruli, enters into the Roman service, and is made consul, i. 323.

Navy of the Roman empire described, i. 22.

Nazarene church at Jerusalem, account of, i. 544.

Nazarius the Pagan orator, his account of miraculous appearances in the sky in favour of Constantine the Great, ii. 199.

Nebriidius, praetorian praefect in Gaul, is maimed and superseded, by his indiscreet opposition to the troops of Julian, ii. 328.

Negrees of Africa, evidences of their intellectual inferiority to the rest of mankind, ii. 530.

Nectarius is chosen archbishop of Constantinople, iii. 23.

Nennius, his account of the arrival of the Saxons in Britain, different from that of Gildas, Bede, and Witikind, iii. 611. note.

Nepos, Julius, is made emperor of the West by Leo the Great, iii. 490.

Nepotian, account of his revolt in Italy, ii. 122.

Nero persecutes the Christians as the incendiaries of Rome, i. 637.

Nerva, emperor, his character, and prudent adoption of Trajan, i. 91.

Nestorius, archbishop of Constantinople, his character, iv. 551. His heresy concerning the incarnation, 552. His dispute with Cyril of Alexandria, 553. Is condemned, and degraded from his episcopal dignity, by the council of Ephesus, 556. Is exiled, 561. His death, 563. His opinions still retained in Persia, 593. Missions of his disciples in the East Indies, 596.

Nevers, John count of, disastrous fate of him and his party at the battle of Nicopolis, vi. 324.

Nice becomes the capital residence of sultan Soliman, v. 675. Siege of, by the first crusaders, vi. 40.

Nicephorus I. emperor of Constantinople, v. 27. His wars with the Saracens, 433. His death, 545.

Nicephorus II. Phocas, emperor of Constantinople, v. 48. His military enterprizes, 458.

Nicephorus III. Botaniates, emperor of Constantinople, v. 63. Was raised to the throne by sultan Soliman, 674.

Nicetas, senator of Constantinople, his flight, on the capture of the city by the Latins, vi. 168. His brief history, 170. note. His account of the statues destroyed at Constantinople, 171.

Nicholas, patriarch of Constantinople, opposes the fourth marriage of the emperor Leo the philosopher, v. 44.

Nicobolus V. pope, his character, vi. 429. How interested in the fall of Constantinople, 477.

Nicomedia, the court of Diocletian held there, and the city embellished by him, i. 457. The church of, demolished by Diocletian, 682. His palace fired, 686.

Nicopolis, battle of, between sultan Bajazet, and Sigismund king of Hungary, vi. 323.

Nika, the sedition of, at Constantinople, iv. 64.

Nineveh, battle of, between the emperor Heraclius, and the Persians, iv. 523.

Nisibis, the city of, described, and its obstinate defence against the Persians, ii. 107. Is yielded to Sapor by treaty, 465.

Nizam, the Persian vizir, his illustrious character, and unhappy fate, v. 671.

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

Neab, his ark very convenient for resolving the difficulties of Mosaic antiquarians, i. 263.
Nobilissimus, a title invented by Constantine the Great, to distinguish his nephew Hannibalianus, ii. 87.
Noricum described, i. 27.
Normans, their settlement in the province of Normandy in France, v. 533. Their introduction to Italy, 589. They serve in Sicily, 591. They conquer Apulia, 592. Their character, 593. Their treaty with the pope, 597.
Novatians are exempted by Constantine the Great, in a particular edict from the general penalties of heresy, ii. 253. Are cruelly persecuted by Macedonius bishop of Constantinople, 299.
Novels of Justinian, how formed, and their character, iv. 366.
Noureddin, sultan, his exalted character, vi. 87.
Nubia, conversion of, to Christianity, iv. 615.
Numerian, the son of Carus, succeeds his father in the empire, in conjunction with his brother Carinus, i. 412.
Numidia, its extent at different eras of the Roman history, i. 32.

O

Oasis, in the deserts of Lybia, described, iii. 289. note. Three places under this name pointed out, iv. 562. note.
Obedience, passive, theory and practice of the Christian doctrine of, ii. 187.
Obelisks, Egyptian, the purpose of their erection, ii. 146.
Oblations to the church, origin of, i. 591.
Obligations, human, the sources of, iv. 393. Laws of the Romans respecting, 394.
Odenathus, the Palmvrene, his successful opposition to Sapor king of Persia, i. 330. Is associated in the empire by Gallienus, 337. Character and fate of his queen Zenobia, 365.
Odin, the long reign of his family in Sweden, i. 272. note. His history, 293.
Odoacer the first Barbarian king of Italy, iii. 494. His character and reign, 500. Resigns all the Roman conquests beyond the Alps, to Euric king of the Visigoths, 558. Is reduced and killed by Theodoric the Ostrogoth, iv. 10.
Obud, battle of, between Mahomet and Abu Sopian prince of Mecca, v. 233.
Olga, princess of Russia, her baptism, v. 574.
Olive, its introduction into the western world, i. 64.
Olybrius is raised to the Western empire by count Ricimer, iii. 488.
Olympic games compared with the tournaments of the Goths, vi. 28.
Olympiodorus, his account of the magnificence of the city of Rome, iii. 199. His account of the marriage of Adolphus king of the Visigoths, with the princess Placidia, 253.
Olympius, favourite of the emperor Honorius, alarms him with unfavourable suspicions of the designs of Stilicho, iii. 181. Causes Stilicho to be put to death, 184. His disgrace, and ignominious death, 226.
Omar, caliph of the Saracens, v. 258. His character, 230. His journey to Jerusalem, 321.
Ommiyah, elevation of the house of, to the office of caliph of the Saracens, v. 255. Why not the objects of public favour, 413. Destruction of, 415.
Oracles, Heathen, are silenced by Constantine the Great, ii. 306.
Orchan, emir of the Ottomans, his reign, vi. 312. Marries the daughter of the Greek emperor Constantuzene, 316.
Ordination of the clergy in the early ages of the church, an account of, ii. 216.
Orestes is sent ambassador from Attila king of the Huns, to the emperor Theodosius the Younger, iii. 377. His history and promotion under the Western emperors, 492. His son Augustulus, the last emperor of the West, 493.
Orestes, prætor of Egypt, is insulted by a monkish mob in Alexandria, iv. 548.
Origen declares the number of primitive martyrs to be very inconsiderable, i. 653. His conference with the empress Mammaea, 669. His memory persecuted by the emperor Justinian and his clergy, iv. 583.
Orleans besieged by Attila king of the Huns, and relieved by Ætius and Theodoric, iii. 407.
Osius, bishop of Cordova, his great influence with Constantine the Great, ii. 202. Prevails on Constantine to ratify the Nicene creed, 261. Is with difficulty prevailed on to concur in deposing Athanasius, 283.
Ostroboene, the small kingdom of, reduced by the Romans, i. 251.
Ossian, his poems, whether to be connected with the invasion of Caledonia by the emperor Severus, i. 158. Is said to have disputed with a Christian missionary, 612. note.
Ostia, the port of, described, iii. 230.
Othman, caliph of the Saracens, v. 259.
Othman, the father of the Ottomans, his reign, vi. 311.
Otto I. king of Germany, restores and appropriates the Western empire, v. 148. Claims by treaty the nomination of the pope of Rome, 153. Defeats the Turks, 557.
Otto II. deposes pope John XII. and chastises his party at Rome, v. 157.
Otto, bishop of Frisingen, his character as an historian, vi. 543. note.
Ottomans, origin and history of, vi. 310. They obtain an establishment in Europe, 318.
Ovid is banished to the banks of the Danube, ii. 92.
Oxyrinchus, in Egypt, monkish piety of that city, iii. 509.

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

P

- Pacatus*, his encomium on the emperor Theodosius the Great, iii. 44.
- Pædrastus*, how punished by the Scatinian law, iv. 407. By Justinian, 409.
- Pagan*, derivation and revolutions of the term, ii. 309. note.
- Paganism*, the ruin of, suspended by the divisions among the Christians, ii. 309. Theological system of the emperor Julian, 362.
- , General review of the ecclesiastical establishment and jurisdiction of, before it was subverted by Christianity, iii. 70. Is renounced by the Roman senate, 76. The Pagan sacrifices prohibited, 78. The temples demolished, 80. The ruin of, deplored by the sophists, 93. Pagan ceremonies revived in Christian churches, 101.
- Paleologus, Constantine*, Greek emperor, his reign, vi. 439. Is killed in the storm of Constantinople by the Turks, 499.
- Paleologus, John*, emperor of Constantinople, vi. 267. Marries the daughter of John Cantacuzene, 274. Takes up arms against Cantacuzene, and is reduced to flight, 276. His restoration, 277. Discord between him and his sons, 327. His treaty with pope Innocent VI. 383. His visit to pope Urban V. at Rome, 385.
- Paleologus, John II.* Greek emperor, his zeal, vi. 396. His voyage to Italy, 400.
- Paleologus, Manuel*, associated with his father John, in the Greek empire, vi. 327. Tribute exacted from him by sultan Bajazet, 329. His treaties with Soliman and Mahomet, the sons of Bajazet VI. 369. His visit to the courts of Europe, 387. Private motives of his European negotiations explained, 395. His death, 396.
- Paleologus, Michael*, emperor of Nice, his brief replies to the negotiations of Baldwin II. emperor of Constantinople, vi. 203. His family and character, 226. His elevation to the throne, 228. His return to Constantinople, 232. Blinds and banishes his young associate John Lascaris, 234. He is excommunicated by the patriarch Arsenius, 235. Associates his son Andronicus in the empire, 237. His union with the Latin church, 238. Infligates the revolt of Sicily, 245.
- Palatines* and Borderers, origin and nature of these distinctions in the Roman troops, ii. 45.
- Palermo* taken by Belisarius by Stratagem, iv. 167.
- Palestine*, a character of, i. 30.
- Palladium* of Rome, described, iii. 70. note.
- Palladius*, the notary, sent by Valentinian to Africa to inquire into the government of count Romanus, connives with him in oppressing the province, ii. 533.
- Palmyra*, description of, and its destruction by the emperor Aurelian, i. 370.
- Panætius* was the first teacher of the Stoic philosophy at Rome, iv. 352. note.
- Pandects* of Justinian, how formed, iv. 359.
- Panhyperbæstos*, import of that title in the Greek empire, v. 484.
- Pannonia* described, i. 27.
- Pantheon* at Rome, by whom erected, i. 53. note. Is converted into a Christian church, iii. 81.
- Pantomimes*, Roman, described, iii. 216.
- Paper*, where and when the manufacture of, was first found out, v. 295.
- Papinian*, the celebrated lawyer, created prætorian præfect, by the emperor Severus, i. 152. His death, 165.
- Papirius, Caius*, reasons for concluding that he could not be the author of the Jus Papirianum, iv. 335. note.
- Papists*, proportion their number bore to that of the Protestants in England, at the beginning of the last century, ii. 191. note.
- Para*, king of Armenia, his history, ii. 544. Is treacherously killed by the Romans, 546.
- Parabolani* of Alexandria, account of, iv. 547. note.
- Paradijsè*, Mahomet's, described, v. 218.
- Paris*, description of that city, under the government of Julian, ii. 177. Situation of his palace, 317. note.
- Partia*, subdued by Artaxerxes king of Persia, i. 247. Its constitution of government similar to the feudal system of Europe, 248. Recapitulation of the war with Rome, 249.
- Paschal II.* pope, his troublesome pontificate, vi. 526.
- Pastoral* manners, much better adapted to the fierceness of war, than to peaceful innocence, ii. 564.
- Paternal* authority, extent of, by the Roman laws, iv. 370. Successive limitations of, 372.
- Patras*, extraordinary deliverance of, from the Sclavonians and Saracens, v. 473.
- Patricians*, the order of, under the Roman republic, and under the emperors, compared, ii. 29. Under the Greek empire, their rank explained, v. 120.
- Patrick*, the tutelar saint of Ireland, derivation of his name, iii. 498. note.
- Pavia*, massacre of the friends of Stilicho there, by the instigations of Olympius, iii. 183. Is taken by Alboin king of the Lombards, who fixes his residence there, iv. 429.
- Paul* of Samofata, bishop of Antioch, his character and history, i. 673.
- Paul*, archbishop of Constantinople, his fatal contest with his competitor Macedonius, ii. 296.
- Paula*, a Roman widow, her illustrious descent, iii. 196. Was owner of the city of Nicopolis, 200. Her monastic zeal, 513.
- Paulicians*, origin and character of, v. 521. Are persecuted by the Greek emperors, 526. They revolt, 528. They are reduced, and transplanted to Thrace, 530. Their present state, 533.
- Paulina*, wife of the tyrant Maximin, softens his ferocity by gentle counsels, i. 211. note.
- Paulinus*, master of the offices to Theodosius the Younger, his crime, and execution, iii. 320.
- Paulinus*, bishop of Nola, his history, iii. 246.
- Paulinus*, patriarch of Aquileia, flies from the Lombards

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- bards with his treasure, into the island of Grado, iv. 429.
- Pegasians*, the party of, among the Roman civilians, explained, iv. 355.
- Pekin*, the city of, taken by Zingis the Mogul emperor, vi. 294.
- Pelagian* controversy agitated by the Latin clergy, iii. 172. And in Britain, 278.
- Pella*, the church of the Nuzarenes settled there on the destruction of Jerusalem, i. 545.
- Peloponnesus*, state of, under the Greek empire, v. 472. Manufactures, 475.
- Penal laws of Rome*, the abolition, and revival of, iv. 402.
- Pentagon*, his office and power in Britain, iii. 278.
- Pontificals*, of the Greek and Latin churches, history of, vi. 11.
- Pepin*, king of France, assits the pope of Rome against the Lombards, v. 116. Receives the title of king by papal sanction, 119. Grants the exarchate to the pope, 122.
- Pepin*, John, count of Minorbino, reduces the tribune Rienzi, and restores aristocracy and church government at Rome, vi. 590.
- Pepper*, its high estimation and price at Rome, iii. 223. note.
- Perennis*, minister of the emperor Commodus, his great exaltation and downfall, i. 108.
- Perisabor*, a city of Assyria, reduced and burned by the emperor Julian, ii. 435.
- Perozes*, king of Persia, his fatal expedition against the Nephthalites, iv. 107.
- Persecutions*, ten, of the primitive Christians, a review of, i. 665.
- Perseus*, amount of the treasures taken from that prince, i. 194.
- Persia*, the monarchy of, restored by Artaxerxes, i. 239. The religion of the magi reformed, 240. Abridgment of the Persian theology, 241. Simplicity of their worship, 242. Ceremonies and moral precepts, 243. Every other mode of worship prohibited but that of Zoroaster, 246. Extent and population of the country, 248. Its military power, 256. Account of the audience given by the emperor Carus to the ambassadors of Varanes, 410. The throne of, disputed by the brothers Narses and Hormuz, 445. Galerius defeated by the Persians, 446. Narses overthrown in his turn by Galerius, 449. Articles of peace agreed on between the Persians and the Romans, 453.
- , War between Sapor king of, and the emperor Constantius, ii. 104. Battle of Singara, 105. Sapor invades Mesopotamia, 153. The Persian territories invaded by the emperor Julian, 128. Passage of the Tigris, 443. Julian harassed in his retreat, 453. Treaty of peace between Sapor and the emperor Jovian, 464. Reduction of Armenia, and death of Sapor, 541.
- , The silk trade, how carried on from China through Persia, for the supply of the Roman empire, iv. 74. Death of Perozes, in an expedition against the white Huns, 107. Review of the reigns of Cabades, and his son Chosroes, 233. Anarchy of, after the death of Chosroes II. 538. Ecclesiastical history of, 593.
- Persia*, invasion of, by the caliph Abubeker, v. 233. Battle of Cadesia, 284. Sack of Ctesiphon, 287. Conquest of, by the Saracens, 290. The magian religion supplanted by Mahometism, 384. The power of the Arabs crushed by the dynasty of the Bowides, 455. Persia subdued by the Turks, 653.
- , Conquest of, by the Moguls, vi. 299. By Tamerlane, 335.
- Pertinax*, his character, and exaltation to the Imperial throne, i. 118. His funeral and apotheosis, 142.
- Pescennius Niger*, governor of Syria, assumes the Imperial dignity on the death of Pertinax, i. 135.
- Petavius*, character of his Dogmata Theologica, iv. 533. note.
- Peter*, brother of the Eastern emperor Maurice, his injurious treatment of the citizens of Azimatum, and flight from thence, iv. 487.
- Peter I.* czar of Russia, his conduct toward his son, contrasted with that of Constantine the Great, ii. 84.
- Peter of Arragon*, assumes the kingdom of Sicily, vi. 247.
- Peter Bartholemy*, his miraculous discovery of the Holy Lance, vi. 52. His strange death, 54.
- Peter of Courtenay*, emperor of Constantinople, vi. 192.
- Peter the hermit*, his character and scheme to recover the Holy Land from the infidels, vi. 1. Leads the first crusaders, 18. Failure of his zeal, 51.
- Petra*, the city of, taken by the Persians, iv. 258. Is besieged by the Romans, 259. Is demolished, 261.
- Petrarch*, his studies and literary character, vi. 419. And history, 567. His account of the ruin of the ancient buildings of Rome, 635.
- Pfissil*, character of his history of Germany, v. 163. note.
- Phaloux*, Grecian, compared with the Roman legion, i. 16.
- Pharamond*, the actions, and foundation of the French monarchy by him, of doubtful authority, iii. 271.
- Pharas* commands the Heruli, in the African war, under Belisarius, iv. 130. Pursues Gelimer, 149. His letter to Gelimer, 150.
- Pharisæes*, account of that sect among the Jews, i. 560.
- Phasis*, river, its course described, iv. 250.
- Phasant*, derivation of the name of that bird, iv. 251.

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- Philippus*, Francis, his character of the Greek language of Constantinople, vi. 415.
- Philip I.* of France, his limited dignity and power, vi. 6.
- Philip* Augustus of France engages in the third crusade, vi. 103.
- Philip*, prætorian præfect under the third Gordian, raised to the empire on his death, i. 232. Was a favourer of the Christians, 671.
- Philip*, prætorian præfect of Constantinople, conveys the bishop Paul into banishment clandestinely, ii. 297.
- Philippicus*, emperor of Constantinople, v. 18.
- Philippopolis* taken and sacked by the Goths, i. 300.
- Philo*, a character of his works, ii. 239.
- Philosophy*, Grecian, review of the various sects of, i. 36.
- Phineas*, the situation of his palace, ii. 4.
- Phœœa* is settled by Genoese, who trade in allum, vi. 368.
- Phocas*, a centurion, is chosen emperor by the disaffected troops of the Eastern empire, iv. 491. Murders the emperor Maurice, and his children, 493. His character, 495. His fall, and death, 498.
- Phœnicia* described, i. 30.
- Phocas*, the son of Antonina, distinguishes himself at the siege of Naples, iv. 205. Is exiled, 206. Betrays his mother's vices to Belisarius, 207. Turns monk, 209.
- Phocas* the patrician, kills himself to escape the persecution of Justinian, iv. 580.
- Phocas*, patriarch of Constantinople, character of his library, v. 513. His quarrel with the pope of Rome, vi. 124.
- Phranza*, George, the Greek historian, some account of, vi. 395. note. His embassies, 460. His state on the taking of Constantinople by the Turks, 502.
- Picardy*, derivation of the name of that province, vi. 1. note.
- Pilate*, Pontius, his testimony in favour of Jesus Christ, much improved by the primitive fathers, i. 666.
- Pitay's* fables, history and character of, iv. 240.
- Pinna* marina, a kind of silk manufactured from the threads spun by this fish, by the Romans, iv. 73.
- Pipa*, a princess of the Marcomanni, espoused by the emperor Gallienus, i. 315.
- Piso*, Calphurnius, one of the competitors against Gallienus, his illustrious family and character, i. 335.
- Pizus*, the city of, destroyed by the Goths, i. 318.
- Placidia*, daughter of Theodosius the Great, her history, and marriage with Adolphus king of the Goths, iii. 252. Is injuriously treated by the usurper Singarie, after the death of her husband, 268. Her marriage with Constantius, and retreat to Constantinople, 317. Her administration in the West, as guardian of her son the emperor Valentinian III. 332. History of her daughter Honoria, 403. Her death and burial, 429. note.
- Plague*, origin and nature of this disease, iv. 327. Great extent, and long duration of that in the reign of Justinian, 331.
- Plato*, his theological system, ii. 237. Is received by the Alexandrian Jews, 239. And expounded by St. John the Evangelist, 240. The theological system of the emperor Julian, 362.
- Platonic* philosophy introduced into Italy, vi. 428.
- Platonists*, new, an account of, i. 474. Unite with the heathen priests to oppose the Christians, 679.
- Plautianus*, prætorian præfect under the emperor Severus, his history, i. 152.
- Plebeians* of Rome, state and character of, iii. 211.
- Pliny* the Younger, examination of his conduct toward the Christians, i. 646.
- Poet laureat*, a ridiculous appointment, vi. 563. note.
- Poggius*, his reflections on the ruin of ancient Rome, vi. 619.
- Poitiers*, battle of, between Clovis king of the Franks, and Alaric king of the Goths, iii. 577.
- Pollentia*, battle of, between Stilicho the Roman general, and Alaric the Goth, iii. 150.
- Polytheism* of the Romans, its origin, and effects, i. 35. How accounted for by the primitive Christians, 552. Scepticism of the people at the time of the publication of Christianity, 601. The Christians, why more odious to the Pagans than the Jews, 624.
- , The ruin of, suspended by the divisions among Christians, ii. 309. Theological systems of the emperor Julian, 362.
- , Review of the Pagan ecclesiastical establishment, iii. 70. Revival of, by the Christian monks, 99.
- Pompeianus*, præfect of Rome, proposes to drive Alaric from the walls by spells, iii. 221.
- Pompeianus*, Ruricius, general under Maxentius, defeated and killed by Constantine the Great, i. 507.
- Pompey*, his discretionary exercise of power during his command in the East, i. 76. Increase of the tributes of Asia by his conquests, 194.
- Pontiffs*, Pagan, their jurisdiction, iii. 70.
- Pontifex Maximus*, in Pagan Rome, by whom that office was exercised, ii. 211.
- Popes* of Rome, the growth of their power, v. 102. Revolt of, from the Greek emperors, 107. Origin of their temporal dominion, 122. Publication of the Decretals, and of the fictitious donation of Constantine the Great, 125. Authority of the German emperors in their election, 151. Violent distractions in their election, 153.
- , Foundation of their authority at Rome, vi. 521. Their mode of election settled, 550. Schism in the papacy, 599. They acquire the absolute,

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- absolute dominion of Rome, 613. The ecclesiastical government, 616.
- Population of Rome, a computation of, iii. 217.*
- Porcario, Stephen, his conspiracy at Rome, vi. 610.*
- Posthumus, the Roman general under the emperor Gallienus, defends Gaul against the incursions of the Franks, i. 311. Is killed by his mutinous troops, 363.*
- Power, absolute, the exercise of, how checked, v. 496.*
- Præfect of the sacred bed-chamber, under Constantine the Great, his office, ii. 51.*
- Præfects of Rome and Constantinople, under the emperors, the nature of their offices, ii. 34. The office revived at Rome, vi. 537.*
- Prætextatus, præfect of Rome under Valentinian, his character, ii. 514.*
- Prætorian bands, in the Roman army, an account of, i. 128. They sell the empire of Rome by public auction, 130. Are disgraced by the emperor Severus, 141. A new establishment of them, 151. Authority of the prætorian præfect, 152. Are reduced, their privileges abolished, and their place supplied, by the Jovians and Herculeans, 459. Their desperate courage under Maxentius, 510. Are totally suppressed by Constantine the Great, 513.*
- Prætorian præfect, revolutions of this office under the emperors, ii. 31. Their functions when it became a civil office, 33.*
- Prætors of Rome, the nature and tendency of their edicts explained, iv. 341.*
- Preaching, a form of devotion unknown in the temples of Paganism, ii. 226. Use, and abuse of, 227.*
- Predestination, influence of the doctrine of, on the Saracens and Turks, v. 231.*
- Presbyters, among the primitive Christians, the office explained, i. 583.*
- Prester, John, origin of the romantic stories concerning, iv. 59.*
- Priests, no distinct order of men among the ancient Pagans, i. 660. ii. 212.*
- Priestley, Dr. the ultimate tendency of his opinions, pointed out, v. 510. note.*
- Primogeniture, the prerogative of, unknown to the Roman law, iv. 388.*
- Prince of the waters, in Persia, his office, iv. 237. note.*
- Priscillian, bishop of Avila in Spain, is, with his followers, put to death for heresy, iii. 26.*
- Priscus the historian, his conversation with a captive Greek, in the camp of Attila, iii. 370. His character, 377. note.*
- Priscus, the Greek general, his successes against the Avars, iv. 488.*
- Præba, widow of the præfect Petronius, her flight from the sack of Rome by Alaric, iii. 243.*
- Probus assumes the Imperial dignity in opposition to Florianus, i. 393. His character and history, 394.*
- Probus, prætorian præfect of Illyricum, preserves Sirmium from the Quadi, ii. 554.*
- Probus, Sicorius, his embassy from the emperor Diocletian to Narses king of Persia, i. 451.*
- Procidia, John of, instigates the revolt of Sicily from John of Anjou, vi. 247.*
- Proclus, story of his extraordinary brazen mirror, iv. 89.*
- Proclus, the platonic philosopher of Athens, his superstition, iv. 117.*
- Proconsuls of Asia, Achaia, and Africa, their office, ii. 36.*
- Procopia, wife of the Greek emperor Michael I. her martial inclinations, v. 28.*
- Procopius, his history, and revolt against Valens, emperor of the East, ii. 489. Is reduced, and put to death, 495. His account of the testament of the emperor Arcadius, iii. 311. His account of Britain, 626. Character of his histories, iv. 48. Accepts the office of secretary under Belisarius, 127. His defence of the Roman archers, 130. His account of the desolation of the African province by war, 277.*
- Proculians, origin of the sect of, in the Roman civil law, iv. 354.*
- Proculus, his extraordinary character, and his rebellion against Probus in Gaul, i. 405.*
- Prodigies in ancient history, a philosophical resolution of, ii. 198.*
- Promises, under what circumstances the Roman law enforced the fulfilment of, iv. 394.*
- Promotus, master-general of the infantry under Theodosius, is ruined by the enmity of Rufinus, iii. 106.*
- Property, personal, the origin of, iv. 384. How ascertained by the Roman laws, 385. Testamentary dispositions of, how introduced, 390.*
- Prophets, their office among the primitive Christians, i. 583.*
- Propontis described, ii. 6.*
- Proterias, patriarch of Alexandria, his martial episcopacy, and violent death, iv. 571.*
- Protestants, their resistance of oppression, not consistent with the practice of the primitive Christians, ii. 188. Proportion of their number, to that of the Catholics, in France, at the beginning of the last century, 191. note. Estimate of their reformation of Popery, v. 536.*
- Proteubajios, import of that title in the Greek empire, v. 484.*
- Proverbs, the book of, why not likely to be the production of king Solomon, iv. 153. note.*
- Provinces of the Roman empire described, i. 23. Distinction between Latin and Greek provinces, 45. Account of the tributes received from, 191. Their number and government after the seat of empire was removed to Constantinople, ii. 37.*
- Præta, conquest of, by the Ottomans, vi. 311.*
- Prussia, emigration of the Goths to, i. 293.*
- Pulcheria, sister of the emperor Theodosius the Younger,*

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- Younger, her character and administration, iii 314. Her lessons to her brother, 316. Her contests with the empress Eudocia, 320. Is proclaimed empress of the East, on the death of Theodosius, 390. Her death and canonization, 469.
- Purple*, the royal colour of, among the ancients, far surpassed by the modern discovery of cochineal, iv. 71. note.
- Pigmies* of Africa, ancient fabulous account of, ii. 539.
- Q
- Quadi*, the inroads of, punished by the emperor Constantius, ii. 147. Revenge the treacherous murder of their king Gabinius, 554.
- Quæstor*, historical review of this office, ii. 53.
- Quæstion*, criminal, how exercised under the Roman emperors, ii. 59.
- Quintilian* brothers, Maximus and Condianus, their history, i. 107.
- Quintilius*, brother of the emperor Claudius, his intellectual effort to succeed him, i. 353.
- Quintus Curtius*, an attempt to decide the age in which he wrote, i. 230 note.
- Quirites*, the effect of that word when opposed to soldiers, i. 191. note.
- R
- Radagaisus*, king of the Goths, his formidable invasion of Italy, iii. 162. His savage character, 165. Is reduced by Stilicho, and put to death, 167.
- Radiger*, king of the Varni, compelled to fulfil his matrimonial obligations by a British heroine, iii. 626.
- Ramadan*, the month of, how observed by the Turks, v. 214.
- Rande*, a chieftain of the Alemanni, his unprovoked attack of Moguntiacum, ii. 518.
- Ravenna*, the ancient city of, described, iii. 157. The emperor Honorius fixes his residence there, 159. Invasion of, by a Greek fleet, v. 109. Is taken by the Lombards, and recovered by the Venetians, 114. Final conquest of, by the Lombards, 115. The exarchate of, bestowed by Pepin on the pope, 122.
- Raymond* of Tholouse, the crusader, his character, vi. 24. His route to Constantinople, 30. His bold behaviour there, 36.
- Raymond*, count of Tripoli, betrays Jerusalem into the hands of Saladin, vi. 96.
- Raynal*, Abbé, mistaken in asserting that Constantine the Great suppressed Pagan worship, ii. 304.
- Rebels*, who the most inveterate of, v. 528.
- Reccared*, the first Catholic king of Spain, converts his Gothic subjects, iii. 550.
- Reformation* from popery, the amount of, estimated, v. 536. A secret reformation still working in the reformed churches, 539.
- Rein-deer*, this animal driven northward by the improvement of climate from cultivation, i. 261.
- Relics*, the worship of, introduced by the monks, iii. 94. A valuable cargo of, imported from Constantinople by Louis IX. of France, vi. 201.
- Remigius*, bishop of Rheims, converts Clovis king of the Franks, iii. 565.
- Repentance*, its high esteem, and extensive operation, among the primitive Christians, i. 573.
- Resurrection*, general, the Mahometan doctrine of, v. 215.
- Retiarius*, the mode of his combat with the secutor, in the Roman amphitheatre, i. 116.
- Revenues* of the primitive church, how distributed, i. 594. ii. 221. Of the Roman empire, when removed to Constantinople, a review of, ii. 61.
- Rhætium*, city of, its situation, ii. 9.
- Rhætia* described, i. 27.
- Rhasartes*, the Persian general, defeated and killed by the emperor Heraclius, iv. 523.
- Rhetoric*, the study of, congenial to a popular state, iv. 113.
- Rhine*, the banks of, fortified by the emperor Valentinian, ii. 520.
- Rhodes*, account of the colossus of, v. 331. The knights of, vi. 314.
- Richard* I. of England, engages in the third crusade, vi. 103. Bellows the island of Cyprus on the house of Lusignan, 131. His reply to the exhortations of Fulk of Neuilly, 135.
- Richard*, monk of Cirencester, his literary character, iii. 275. note.
- Ricimer*, count, his history, iii. 451. Permits Majorian to assume the Imperial dignity in the Western empire, 453. Enjoys supreme power under cover of the name of the emperor Libius Severus, 464. Marries the daughter of the emperor Anthemius, 472. Sacks Rome, and kills Anthemius, 489. His death, 490.
- Rienzi*, Nicholas di, his birth, character, and history, vi. 572.
- Roads*, Roman, the construction and great extent of, i. 61.
- Robert* of Courtenay, emperor of Constantinople, vi. 194.
- Robert*, count of Flanders, his character and engagement in the first crusade, vi. 23.
- Robert*, duke of Normandy, his character and engagement in the first crusade, vi. 23. Recalled by the censures of the church, 51.
- Roderic*, the Gothic king of Spain, his defeat and death by Tarik the Arab, v. 368.
- Rodigune*, probable origin of her character, in Rowe's Royal Convert, iii. 626.
- Roger*, count of Sicily, his exploits, and conquest of that island, v. 666.
- Roger*, son of the former, the first king of Sicily, v. 626. His military achievements in Africa and Greece, 629.
- Roger de Flor*, engages as an auxiliary in the service of the Greek emperor Andronicus, vi. 249. His assassination, 251.

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

Romanus I. Licapenus, emperor of Constantinople, v. 45.
Romanus II. emperor of Constantinople, v. 48.
Romanus III. Argyrus, emperor of Constantinople, v. 54.
Romanus IV. Diogenes, emperor of Constantinople, v. 61. Is defeated and taken prisoner by the Turkish sultan Alp Arslan, 662. His treatment, deliverance, and death, 664.
Romanus, count, governor of Africa, his corrupt administration, ii. 533.
Romanus, governor of Bosra, betrays it to the Saracens, v. 300.
Rome, the three periods of its decline pointed out, i. Preface. Its prosperous circumstances in the second century, 1. The principal conquests of, achieved under the republic, 2. Conquests under the emperors, 4. Military establishment of the emperors, 11. Naval force of the empire, 22. View of the provinces of the empire, 23. Its general extent, 33. The union and internal prosperity of the empire, in the age of the Antonines, accounted for, 34. Treatment of the provinces, 42. Benefits included in the freedom of the city, 45. Distinction between the Latin and Greek provinces, ibid. Prevalence of the Greek, as a scientific language, 47. Numbers and condition of the Roman slaves, 48. Populousness of the empire, 51. Unity and power of the government, 52. Monuments of Roman architecture, 53. The Roman magnificence chiefly displayed in public buildings, 57. Principal cities in the empire, 58. Public roads, 61. Great improvements of agriculture in the western countries of the empire, 63. Arts of luxury, 65. Commerce with the East, 66. Contemporary representation of the prosperity of the empire, 68. Decline of courage and genius, 69. A review of public affairs after the battle of Actium, 72. The Imperial power and dignity confirmed to Augustus by the senate, 74. The various characters and powers vested in the emperor, 78. General idea of the Imperial system, 83. Abortive attempt of the senate to resume its rights after the murder of Caligula, 87. The emperors associate their intended successors to power, 90. The most happy period in the Roman history pointed out, 96. Their peculiar misery under their tyrants, 97. The empire publicly sold by auction by the praetorian guards, 130. Civil wars of the Romans, how generally decided, 146. When the army first received regular pay, 193. How the citizens were relieved from taxation, 174. General estimate of the Roman revenue from the provinces, 196. Miseries flowing from the succession to the empire being elective, 205. A summary review of the Roman history, 235. Recapitulation of the war with Parthia, 249. Invasion of the provinces by the Goths, 298. The office of censor revived by the emperor De-cius, 301. Peace purchased of the Goths, 305. The emperor Valerian taken prisoner by Sapor king of Persia, 327. The popular conceit of the thirty tyrants of Rome investigated, 333. Famine and pestilence throughout the empire, 341. The city fortified against the inroads of the Alemanni, 362. Remarks on the alleged sedition of the officers of the mint under Aurelian, 372. Observations on the peaceful interregnum after the death of Aurelian, 384. Colonies of barbarians introduced into the provinces by Probus, 402. Exhibition of the public games by Carinus, 415. Treaty of peace between the Persians and the Romans, 453. The last triumph celebrated at Rome, 455. How the Imperial courts came to be transferred to Milan and Nicomedia, 457. The praetorian bands superseded by the Jovian and Herculean guards, 459. The power of the senate annihilated, ibid. Four divisions of the empire under four conjunct princes, 464. Their expensive establishments call for more burdensome taxes, ibid. Diocletian and Maximian abdicate the empire, 465. Six emperors existing at one time, 493. The senate and people apply to Constantine to deliver them from the tyranny of Maxentius, 502. Constantine enters the city victorious, 511. Laws of Constantine, 524. Constantine remains sole emperor, 534. History of the progress and establishment of Christianity, 535. Pretensions of the bishop of Rome, whence deduced, 589. State of the church at Rome at the time of the persecution by Nero, 608. Narrative of the fire of Rome, in the reign of Nero, 636. The Christians persecuted as the incendiaries, 637. The memorable edicts of Diocletian and his associates against the Christians, 683.

 —, Account of the building and establishment of the rival city of Constantinople, ii. 3. New forms of administration established there, 23. Division of the empire among the sons of Constantine, 100. Establishment of Christianity as the national religion, 211. Tumults excited by the rival bishops, Liberius and Felix, 294. Paganism rest red by Julian, 371. And Christianity by Jovian, 478. The empire divided into the East and West, by the emperor Valentinian, 487. Civil institutions of Valentinian, 502. The crafty avarice of the clergy restrained by Valentinian, 510. Bloody contest of Damasus and Ursus for the bishopric of Rome, 513. Great earthquake, 561.
 —, The emperor Theodosius visits the city, iii. 42. Inquiry into the cause of the corruption of morals in his reign, 66. Review of the Pagan establishment, 70. The Pagan religion abandoned by the senate, 76. Sacrifices prohibited, 78. The Pagan religion prohibited, 80. Triumph of Honorius and Stilicho, over Alaric the Goth, 157. Alaric encamps under the walls of the city, 162.
Revised

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- Retrospect of the state of the city when besieged by Hannibal, 194. Wealth of the nobles, and magnificence of the city, 199. Character of the nobles of, by Ammianus Marcellinus, 202. State and character of the common people, 211. Public distributions of bread, &c. 212. Public baths, 214. Games and spectacles, 215. Attempts to ascertain the population of the city, 217. The citizens suffer by famine, 220. Plague, 221. The retreat of Alaric purchased by a ransom, 223. Is again besieged by Alaric, 230. The senate unites with him in electing Attalus emperor, 231. The city seized by Alaric, and plundered, 235. Comparison between this event, and the sack of Rome by the emperor Charles V. 244. Alaric quits Rome, and ravages Italy, 246. Laws passed for the relief of Rome, and Italy, 255. Triumph of Honorius for the reduction of Spain by Wallia, 270. Is preserved from the hands of Attila by a ransom, 424. Indications of the ruin of the empire, at the death of Valentinian III. 432. Sack of the city by Genseric king of the Vandals, 440. The public buildings of, protected from depredation by the laws of Majorian, 457. Is sacked again by the patrician Ricimer, 489. Augustulus, the last emperor of the West, 493. The decay of the Roman spirit remarked, 500. History of monastic institutions in, 509. General observations on the history of the Roman empire, 629.
- Rome*—Italy conquered by Theodoric the Ostrogoth, iv. 10. Prosperity of the city under his government, 23. Account of the four factions in the circus, 60. First introduction of silk among the Romans, 72. The office of consul suppressed by Justinian, 119. The city receives Belisarius, 175. Siege of, by the Goths, 176. Distressful siege of, by Totila the Goth, 284. Is taken, 287. Is recovered by Belisarius, 290. Is again taken by Totila, 295. Is taken by the eunuch Narses, 304. Extinction of the senate, 305. The city degraded to the second rank under the exarchs of Ravenna, 313. A review of the Roman laws, 332. Extent of the duchy of, under the exarchs of Ravenna, 444. Miserable state of the city, 453. Pontificate of Gregory the Great, 458.
- , The government of the city new modelled under the popes, after their revolt from the Greek emperors, v. 111. Is attacked by the Lombards, and delivered by king Pepin, 114. The office and rank of exarchs and patricians explained, 120. Reception of Charlemagne by pope Adrian I. 121. Origin of the temporal power of the popes, 122. Mode of electing a pope, 152. Is menaced by the Saracens, 438. Prosperous pontificate of Leo IV. 440. Is besieged and taken by the emperor Henry III. 621. Great part of the city burnt by Robert Guiscard, in the cause of pope Gregory VII. 623.
- Rome*, the history of, resumed, after the capture of Constantinople by the Turks, vi. 518. French and German emperors of, 519. Authority of the popes, 521. Restoration of the republican form of government, 533. Office of senator, 539. Wars against the neighbouring cities, 547. Institution of the Jubilee, 557. Revolution in the city, by the tribune Resazi, 572. Calamities flowing from the schism of the papacy, 600. Statutes and government of the city, 608. Porcaro's conspiracy, 610. The ecclesiastical government of, 616. Reflections of Poggius on the ruin of the city, 619. Four principal causes of its ruin specified, 623. The Coliseum of Titus, 635. Restoration and ornaments of the city, 643.
- Romilda*, the betrayer of Friuli to the Avars, her cruel treatment by them, iv. 507.
- Rofamond*, daughter of Cunimund king of the Gepidæ, her marriage with Alboin king of the Lombards, iv. 422. Conspires his murder, 431. Her flight and death, 432.
- Roum*, the Seljukian kingdom of, formed, v. 675.
- Rudbeck*, Olaus, summary abridgment of the argument in his Atlantica, i. 264.
- Rufinus*, the confidential minister of the emperor Theodosius the Great, stimulates his cruelty against Theſſalonica, iii. 5. His character and administration, 105. His death, 119.
- Rugilas* the Hun, his settlement in Hungary, iii. 355.
- Runic* characters, the antiquity of, traced, i. 255. note.
- Russia*, origin of the monarchy of, v. 560. Geography and trade of, 563. Naval expeditions of the Russians against Constantinople, 566. Reign of the czar Swatoffaus, 570. The Russians converted to Christianity, 574. Is conquered by the Moguls, vi. 302.
- Russian*, a Persian nobleman, a saying of his, expressive of the danger of living under despots, i. 98.
- Rutilius*, his character of the monks of Capraria, iii. 127.

S

- Sabellius* the heresiarch, his opinions afterward adopted by his antagonists, ii. 246. His doctrine of the Trinity, 250. The Sabellians unite with the Tritheists at the council of Nice to overpower the Arians, 252.
- Sabians*, their astronomical mythology, v. 194.
- Sabinean* obtains the command of the Eastern provinces from Constantius, ii. 158.
- Sabinian*, general of the East, is defeated by Theodoric the Ostrogoth king of Italy, iv. 19.
- Sabinians*, origin of the sect of, in the Roman civil law, iv. 354.

Sadducees,

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- Sadducees*, account of that sect among the Jews, i. 560.
- Saladin*, his birth, promotion, and character, vi. 92. Conquers the kingdom of Jerusalem, 97. His ineffectual siege of Tyre, 100. Siege of Acre, 102. His negotiations with Richard I. of England, 106. His death, 108.
- Salerno*, account of the medical school of, v. 604.
- Salic laws*, history of, iii. 583.
- Salust*, the praefect, and friend of the emperor Julian, declines the offer of the diadem on his death, ii. 461. Declines it again, on the death of Jovian, 484. Is retained in his employment by the emperor Valentinian, 488.
- Salust*, the historian, by what funds he raised his palace on the Quirinal hill, iii. 241. note.
- Salona*, the retreat of the emperor Diocletian, described, i. 470.
- Salvian*, his account of the distress and rebellion of the Bagaudæ, iii. 434. note.
- Samanides*, the Saracen dynasty of, v. 454.
- Samaritans*, persecution and extinction of, by the emperor Justinian, iv. 581.
- Samuel* the prophet, his ashes conveyed to Constantinople, iii. 95.
- Sapor*, king of Persia, procures the assassination of Chosroes king of Armenia, and seizes the country, i. 326. Defeats the emperor Valerian, and takes him prisoner, 327. Sets up Cyriades as successor to Valerian in the Roman empire, 328. Over-runs Syria, Cilicia, and Cappadocia, ibid. His death, 372.
- Sapor*, the son of Hormouz, is crowned king of Persia before his birth, ii. 101. His character and early heroism, 102. Harasses the eastern provinces of the Roman empire, 104. Battle of Singara, against the emperor Constantius, 105. His son brutally killed by Constantius, 106. His several attempts on Nisibis, 107. Concludes a truce with Constantius, 109. His haughty propositions to Constantius, 151. Invades Mesopotamia, 153. Reduces Amida, 156. Returns home, 157. His peaceful overtures to the emperor Julian, 415. His consternation at the successes of Julian, 447. Harasses the retreat of the Romans, 453. His treaty with the emperor Jovian, 464. His reduction of Armenia, and death, 541.
- Saracen*, various definitions of that appellation, v. 181. note.
- Saracens*, successions of the caliphs of, v. 258. Their rapid conquests, 281. Conquest of Persia, 290. Siege of Damascus, 300. Battle of Yermuck, and conquest of Syria, 317. Of Egypt, 331. Invasions of Africa, 349. Their military character, 502.
- Sarbar*, the Persian general, joins the Avars in besieging Constantinople, iv. 519. Revolts to the emperor Heraclius, 522.
- Sardinia*, expulsion of the Vandals from, by Mar-
- cellinus, iii. 477. Is conquered by Zano, the brother of Gelimer king of the Vandals, iv. 142. Is surrendered to Belisarius, 146.
- Sarmatians*, memorable defeat of, by the emperor Carus, i. 410. Their manners described, ii. 89. Brief history of, 91. They apply to Constantine the Great for assistance against the Goths, 92. Are expelled their country by the Limigantes, 94. Are restored by Constantius, 150.
- Savage manners*, a brief view of, i. 263. Are more uniform than those of civilised nations, ii. 564.
- Sarus* the Goth plunders the camp of Stilicho, and drives him into the hands of the emperor at Ravenna, iii. 183. Insults Alaric, and occasions the sacking of Rome, 235. Is killed by Adolphus king of the Visigoths, 263.
- Saturninus*, one of the competitors for empire against Gallienus, his observation on his investiture, i. 336.
- Saturninus*, lieutenant under the emperor Probus, in the East, is driven into rebellion by his troops, i. 404.
- Saxons*, ancient, an account of, ii. 522. Their piratical confederations, 523. Their invasions of Gaul checked by the Romans, 524. How converted to Christianity, iii. 550. Descent of the Saxons on Britain, 611. Their brutal desolation of the country, 620.
- Scanderbeg*, prince of Albania, his history, vi. 451.
- Scatinian law* of the Romans, account of, iv. 267.
- Scaurus*, the patrician family of, how reduced under the emperors. ii. 30. note.
- Schism* in religion, the origin of, traced, i. 549.
- Science* reducible to four classes, v. 426.
- Sclavonians*, their national character, iv. 219. Their barbarous inroads on the Eastern empire, 222. Of Dalmatia, account of, v. 544.
- Scots and Picts*, the nations of, how distinguished, ii. 527. Invasions of Britain by, 529.
- Scythians*, this name vaguely applied to mixed tribes of barbarians, i. 324. Their pastoral manners, ii. 563. Extent and boundaries of Scythia, 571. Revolutions of, iii. 160. Their mode of war, 366.
- Sebastian*, master-general of the infantry under the emperor Valens, his successful expedition against the Goths, ii. 611. Is killed in the battle of Hadrianople, 615.
- Sebastian*, the brother of the usurper Jovinus, is associated with him in his assumed Imperial dignities, iii. 263.
- Sebastocrator*, import of that title in the Greek empire, v. 484.
- Sees*, in Normandy, the bishop, and chapter of, all castrated, vi. 525. note.
- Segestan*, the princes of, support their independency obstinately against Artaxerxes. i. 248. note.
- Sequel*, emperor of Abyssinia; is with his whole court, converted by the Jesuits, iv. 619.

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- Selden*, his fententious character of tranfubftantiation, v. 88. note.
- Selenucia*, the great city of, ruined by the Romans, i. 250.
- Selenus Nicator*, number of cities founded by him, i. 247. note.
- Seljuk*, Turkish dynasty of the houfe of, v. 654. Division of their empire, 672.
- Seijeant*, legal and military import of that term, vi. 151. note.
- Severus, Septimius*, general of the Pannonian legions, affumes the purple on the death of Pertinax, i. 137. His conduct toward the Chriftians, 668.
- Senate* of Rome is reformed by Auguftus, i. 73. Its legislative and judicial powers, 82. Abortive attempt of, to refume its rights after the murder of Caligula, 87. Its legal jurifdiction over the emperors, 121. Is fubjected to military defpotifm, by Severus, 153. Women excluded from this afsembly by a folemn law, 183. The form of a fecret meeting, 216. Meafures taken to fupport the authority of the two Gordians, 217. The fenate elect Maximus and Balbinus emperors on the deaths of the Gordians, 219. They drive the Alemanni out of Italy, 314. The fenators forbid to exercife military employments by Gallienus, ibid. Elect Tacitus, the father of the fenate, emperor, 386. Prerogatives gained to the fenate, by this election, 389. Their power and authority annihilated by Diocletian, 458.
- , Amount of the coronary gold, or cuftomary free gift of, to the emperors, ii. 72. The claim of Julian to the empire admitted, 333.
- , Petitions of, to the emperors, for the reftoration of the altar of victory, iii. 73. The Pagan religion renounced, 76. Debates of, on the propofals of Alaric the Goth, 179. Genealogy of the fenators, 195. Paffes a decree for putting to death Serena the widow of Stilicho, 220. Under the influence of Alaric, elects Attalus emperor, 231. Trial of Arvandus, prætorian præfect of Gaul, 482. Surrenders the fovereign power of Italy to the emperor of the Eaft, 496.
- , Extinction of that illuftrious afsembly, iv. 305.
- , Reftoration of, in the twelfth century, vi. 533. The afsembly refolved into fingle magiftrates, 539. 608.
- Serapion*, his lamentation for the lofs of a perfonified deity, iv. 540.
- Serapis*, hiftory of his worfhip, and of his temple at Alexandria, iii. 82. The temple deftroyed, 84.
- Serena*, niece of the emperor Theodofius, married to his general Stilicho, iii. 116. Is cruelly ftangled by order of the Roman fenate, 220.
- Severinus*, St. encourages Odoacer to affume the dominion of Italy, iii. 495. His body, how difpofed of, 499. note.
- Severus* is declared Cæfar on the abdication of Diocletian and Maximian, i. 479. His defeat and death, 488.
- Severus* is appointed general of the cavalry in Gaul under Julian, ii. 165.
- Shepherds* and warriors, their refpective modes of life compared, ii. 564.
- Shiites*, a feft of Mahometans, their diftinction from the Sonnites, v. 260.
- Siberia*, extreme coldnefs of the climate, and miferable ftate of the natives of, ii. 576. Is feized and occupied by the Tartars, vi. 304.
- Sicily*, reflections on the diftractions in that ifland, i. 338. Is conquered by the Saracens, v. 437. Introduction of the filk manufacture there, 477. Exploits of the Normans there, 591. Is conquered by count Roger, 606. Roger, fon of the former, made king of, 626. Reign of William the Bad, 638. Reign of William the Good, 639. Conquest of, by the emperor Henry VI. 642. Is fubdued by Charles of Anjou, vi. 243. The Sicilian Vefpers, 247.
- Sidonius Apollinaris* the poet, his humourous treatment of the capitation tax, ii. 67. His character of Theodoric king of the Viſigoths in Gaul, iii. 445. His panegyric on the emperor Avitus, 450. His panegyric on the emperor Anthemius, 471.
- Sigifmond*, king of the Burgundians, murders his fon, and is canonifed, iii. 572. Is overwhelmed by an army of Franks, 573.
- Silentiarius, Paul*, his account of the various fpecies of ftone and marble, employed in the church of St. Sophia at Conftantinople, iv. 94. note.
- Silk*, firft manufactured in China, and then in the fmall Grecian ifland of Ceos, iv. 72. A peculiar kind of filk procured from the pinna marina, 73. The filk worm, how introduced to Greece, 77. Progreffs of the manufacture of, in the tenth century, v. 476.
- Simon*, perfecutor of the Paulicians, becomes a profelyte to their opinions, v. 526.
- Simeon*, king of Bulgaria, his exploits, v. 546.
- Simeon Stylites*, the hermit, his extraordinary mode of life, iii. 525.
- Simony*, an early inftance of, i. 673. note.
- Simplicius*, one of the laft furviving Pagan philofophers of Athens, his writings, and character, iv. 119.
- Singara*, battle of, between the emperor Conftantius, and Sapor king of Perfia, ii. 105. The city of, reduced by Sapor, 158. Is yielded to him by Jovian, 465.
- Singeric*, brother of Sarus, is made king of the Goths, iii. 268.
- Singidunum* is perfidiously taken by Baian chagan of the Avars, iv. 484.
- Sirmium* is perfidiously taken by Baian chagan of the Avars, iv. 484.
- Siroes* depofes and murders his father Chofroes II. king

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- king of Persia, iv. 527. His treaty of peace with the emperor Heraclius, 528.
- Sisebut*, a Gothic king of Spain, persecutes the Jews there, iii. 553.
- Sixtus V.* pope, character of his administration, vi. 617.
- Slave*, strange perversion of the original sense of that appellation, v. 544.
- Slaves*, among the Romans, who, and their condition described, i. 48.
- Slavery*, personal, imposed on captives by the barbarous nations, iii. 595.
- Sleepers*, seven, narrative of the legendary tale of, iii. 350.
- Smyrna*, capture of, by Tamerlane, vi. 351.
- Society*, philosophical, reflections on the revolutions of, iii. 638.
- Saffarides*, the Saracen dynasty of, v. 454.
- Soldiers*, Roman, their obligations and discipline, i. 12. When they first received regular pay, 193.
- Soliman*, sultan, conquers Asia Minor, v. 674. Fixes his residence at Nice, 675. Nice taken by the first crusaders, vi. 41. Battle of Dorylaeum, 42.
- Soliman*, the son of Bajazet, his character, vi. 366. His alliance with the Greek emperor Manuel Palaeologus, 369.
- Solomon*, king of the Jews, not the author of the book which bears the name of his Wisdom, ii. 239. Reasons for supposing he did not write either the book of Ecclesiastes or the Proverbs, iv. 153. note.
- Solomon* the eunuch relieves the Roman province in Africa, from the depredations of the Moors, iv. 157. Revolt of his troops at Carthage, 273. Is defeated and killed by Antalus the Moor, 276.
- Solyman*, caliph of the Saracens, undertakes the siege of Constantinople, v. 397. His enormous appetite and death, 400.
- Sonnites*, in the Mahometan religion, their tenets, v. 260.
- Sopator*, a Syrian philosopher, beheaded by Constantine the Great, on a charge of binding the wind by magic, ii. 274. note.
- Sophia*, the widow of Justin II. her conspiracy against the emperor Tiberius, iv. 457.
- Sophia*, St. foundation of the church of, at Constantinople, iv. 91. Its description, 93. Is converted into a mosque, vi. 506.
- Sophian*, the Arab, commands the first siege of Constantinople, v. 393.
- Sopronia*, a Roman matron, kills herself to escape the violence of Maxentius, i. 500. note.
- Sortes Sanctorum*, a mode of Christian divination, adopted from the Pagans, iii. 576. note.
- Soul*, uncertain opinions of the ancient philosophers as to the immortality of, i. 556. This doctrine more generally received among the barbarous nations, and for what reason, 559.
- Was not taught by Moses, 560. Four different prevailing doctrines as to the origin of, iv. 536. note.
- Sozopetra* destroyed by the Greek emperor Theophilus, v. 443.
- Spain*, the province of, described, i. 23. Great revenues raised from this province by the Romans, 195. Is ravaged by the Franks, 311.
- , Review of the history of, iii. 264. Is invaded by the barbarous nations, 266. The invaders conquered by Wallia king of the Goths, 269. Successes of the Vandals there, 334. Expedition of Theodoric king of the Visigoths into, 443. The Christian religion received there, 547. Revolt and martyrdom of Hermenegild, 543. Persecution of the Jews in, 552. Legislative assemblies of, 607.
- , Acquittions of Justinian there, iv. 159.
- , State of, under the emperor Charlemagne, v. 141. First introduction of the Arabs into the country, 364. Defeat and death of Roderic the Gothic king of, 368. Conquest of, by Musa, 373. Its prosperity under the Saracens, 379. The Christian faith there, supplanted by that of Mahomet, 387. The throne of Cordova filled by Abdalrahman, 417.
- Stadium*, Olympic, the races of, compared with those in the Roman circus, iv. 59.
- Stauracius*, emperor of Constantinople, v. 27.
- Stephen*, a freedman of Domitilla, assassinate the emperor Domitian, i. 646.
- Stephen*, count of Chartres, his character and engagement in the first crusade, vi. 23. Deserts his standard, 51.
- Stephen*, St. the first Christian martyr, miraculous discovery of his body, and the miracles worked by it, iii. 97.
- Stephen* the Savage, sent by the Greek emperor Justinian II. to exterminate the Chersonites, v. 17.
- Stephen I.* pope, solicits the aid of Pepin king of France, against the Lombards, under the character of St. Peter, v. 116. Crowns king Pepin, 119.
- Stilicho*, the great general of the Western empire under the emperor Honorius, his character, iii. 114. Puts to death Rufinus the tyrannical prefect of the East, 118. His expedition against Alaric in Greece, 120. His diligent endeavours to check his progress in Italy, 127. Defeats Alaric at Pollentia, 131. Drives him out of Italy, 134. His triumph at Rome, 135. His preparations to oppose the invasion of Radagaisus, 163. Reduces and puts him to death, 167. Supports the claims of Alaric in the Roman senate, 179. Is put to death at Ravenna, 184. His memory persecuted, 185.
- Stoza* heads the revolted troops of the emperor Justinian in Africa, iv. 273.
- Strasbourg*, battle of, between Julian and the Alemanni, ii. 167.

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

Successianus defends the Roman frontier against the Goths, i. 318.
Suevi, the origin and renown of, i. 312.
Suicide applauded and pitied by the Romans, iv. 413.
Sulpicius, Servius, was the highest improver of the Roman jurisprudence, iv. 350.
Sultan, origin and import of this title of Eastern sovereignty, v. 646.
Sunnat, description of the pagoda of, in Guzarat, and its destruction by Sultan Mahmud, v. 648.
Sun, the worship of, introduced at Rome by the emperor Elagabalus, i. 177. Was the peculiar object of the devotion of Constantine the Great, before his conversion, ii. 182. And of Julian, after his apostacy, 372.
Susa, the city of, taken by Constantine the Great, i. 504.
Szateflaus, czar of Russia, his reign, v. 570.
Szeijs cantons, the confederacy of, how far similar to that of the ancient Franks, i. 310.
Sword of Mars, the sacred weapon of the Huns, history of, iii. 359.
Syagrius, king of the Franks and Burgundians, his character, iii. 561. Is conquered by Clovis, 562.
Sylla the dictator, his legislative character, iv. 404.
Syllanus the consul, his speech to the senate, recommending the election of the two Gordians to their approbation, i. 216.
Sylvania, sister of the præfect Rufinus, her uncommon sanctity, iii. 120. note.
Sylvanus, general in Gaul under Constantius, is ruined by treachery, ii. 143.
Sylvester, pope, is degraded and sent into exile by Belisarius for an attempt to betray the city of Rome to the Goths, iv. 187. His death, 280. note.
Symmachus, his account of the Pagan conformity of the emperor Constantius, during his visit to Rome, ii. 308. Pleads in behalf of the ancient Pagan religion of Rome, to the emperor Valentinian, iii. 73.
Syngus, bishop of Ptolemais, excommunicates the presbiter Andronicus, ii. 225. His extraordinary character, ibid. note. His advice to the Eastern emperor Arcadius, iii. 142.
Synods, provincial, in the primitive churches, institution of, i. 586. Nature of those assemblies, ii. 228. See Councils.
Syria, its revolutions and extent, i. 30. Is reduced by Choïroes II. king of Persia, iv. 501. General description of, v. 314. Is conquered by the Saracens, 316. Invaluable, by Tamerlane, vi. 344.
Syriac language, where spoken in the greatest purity, i. 251. note.
Syrinno, duke of Egypt, surprises the city of Alexandria, and expels Athanasius the primate of Egypt, ii. 286.

T

Tabari, the Arabian historian, account of his work, v. 282. note.
Tabenne, the island of, in upper Thebais, is settled with monks, by Pachomius, iii. 508.
Table of emerald, in the Gothic treasury in Spain. account of, iii. 255.
Tacitus, emperor, his election and character, i. 386.
Tacitus the historian, his character of the principles of the portico, i. 95. note. The intention of his episodes, 237. His character as a historian, 259. His account of the ancient Germans, 265. His history how preserved and transmitted down to us, 387. note. His account of the persecution of the Christians as the incendiaries of Rome, 637.
Tactics of Leo and Constantine, character of, v. 467. Military character of the Greeks, 500.
Tagina, battle of, between the eunuch Narses, and Totila king of the Goths in Italy, iv. 302.
Taberites, the Saracen dynasty of, v. 453.
Tamerlane, his birth, reign, and conquests, vi. 332. His letter to Bajazet, 343. His conference with the doctors of the law, at Aleppo, 346. Defeats and takes Bajazet prisoner, 350. How kept out of Europe, 357. His triumph at Samarcand, 359. Dies on a march to China, 360. His character, 361.
Tancred the crusader, his character, vi. 25. His bold behaviour at Constantinople, 36.
Tarapius, secretary to the empress Irene, made patriarch of Constantinople, v. 128. Presides at, and frames the decrees of, the second council of Nice, 129.
Tarik, the Arab, his descent on Spain, v. 368. Defeats and kills Roderic the Gothic king of, 369. His disgrace, 373, 378.
Tarragona, the city of, almost destroyed by the Franks, 311.
Tartars, see Scythians.
Tartary, Eastern, conquest of, by Tamerlane, vi. 337.
Tatian, and his son Proculus, destroyed by the base arts of Rufinus, the confidential minister of the emperor Theodosius, iii. 107.
Taurus, the consul, is banished by the tribunal of Chalcedon, ii. 345.
Taxes, how the Roman citizens were exonerated from the burden of, i. 194. Account of those instituted by Augustus, 197. How raised under Constantine the Great, and his successors, ii. 62.
Tayef, siege of, by Mahomet, v. 241.
Ticis, the last king of the Goths, defeated and killed by the eunuch Narses, iv. 305.
Tillemackus, an Asiatic monk, loses his life at Rome, in an attempt to prevent the combat of the gladiators, iii. 157.
Temple of Jerusalem, burned, i. 642. History of the emperor Julian's attempt to restore it, ii. 386.
Timagin. See Zingis.

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- Tephrice* is occupied and fortified by the Paulicians, v. 528.
- Tertullian*, his pious exultation in the expected damnation of all the Pagan world, i. 566. Suggests desertion to Christian soldiers, 580. His suspicious account of two edicts of Tiberius and Marcus Antoninus, in favour of the Christians, 666.
- Testaments*, the Roman laws for regulating, iv. 390. Codicils, 392.
- Tetricus* assumes the empire in Gaul, at the instigation of Victoria, i. 364. Betrays his legions into the hand of Aurelian, 365. Is led in triumph by Aurelian, 376.
- Thabor*, mount, dispute concerning the light of, vi. 273.
- Thanes*, the island of, granted by Vortigern, as a settlement for his Saxon auxiliaries, iii. 612.
- Theatrical* entertainments of the Romans described, iii. 216.
- Theban* legion, the martyrdom of, apocryphal, i. 630.
- Thesi*, the Roman laws relating to, iv. 393, 403. 406.
- Themes*, or military governments of the Greek empire, account of, v. 469.
- Themistius*, the orator, his encomium on religious toleration, ii. 480.
- Theodatus*, his birth and elevation to the throne of Italy, iv. 164. His disgraceful treaties with the emperor Justinian, and revolt against them, 168. His deposition and death, 174.
- Theodibert*, king of the Franks in Austrasia, joins the Goths in the siege and destruction of Milan, iv. 195. Invades Italy, 196. His death, 198.
- Theodimir*, a Gothic prince of Spain, copy of his treaty of submission to the Saracens, v. 375.
- Theodora*, empress, her birth, and early history, iv. 51. Her marriage with Justinian, 54. Her tyranny, 56. Her virtues, 57. Her death, 59. Her fortitude during the Nika sedition, 58. Account of her palace and gardens of Heraeum, 98. Her pious concern for the conversion of Nubia, 615.
- Theodora*, wife of the Greek emperor Theophilus, her history, v. 35. Restored the worship of images, 150. Provokes the Paulicians to rebellion, 528.
- Theodora*, daughter of the Greek emperor Constantine IX. her history, v. 54.
- Theodora*, widow of Baldwin III. king of Jerusalem, her adventures as the concubine of Andronicus Comnenus, v. 77.
- Theodore Angelus*, despot of Epirus, seizes Peter of Courtenay, emperor of Constantinople, prisoner, vi. 193. Possesses himself of Thessalonica, 194.
- Theodoric* acquires the Gothic sceptre by the murder of his brother Thurismund, iii. 445. His character by Sidonius, ibid. His expedition into Spain, 448.
- Theodoric*, the son of Alaric, his prosperous reign over the Visigoths in Gaul, iii. 397. Unhappy fates of his daughters, 400. Is prevailed on by Ætius to join his forces against Attila, 409. Is killed at the battle of Chalons, 414.
- Theodoric* the Ostrogoth, his birth and education, iv. 2. Is forced by his troops into a revolt against the emperor Zeno, 6. He undertakes the conquest of Italy, 9. Reduces and kills Odoacer, 12. Is acknowledged king of Italy, 13. Review of his administration, 14. His visit to Rome, and care of the public buildings, 24. His religion, 28. His remorse, and death, 40.
- Theodosopolis*, the city of, in Armenia, built, iii. 324.
- Theodosius* the Great, his distinction between a Roman prince and a Parthian monarch, ii. 73. note. The province of Mæsia preserved by his valour, 555. Is associated by Gratian as emperor of the East, 624. His birth and character, 625. His prudent and successful conduct of the Gothic war, 629. Defeats an invasion of the Ostrogoths, 633.
- , His treaty with Maximus, iii. 10. His baptism, and edict to establish orthodox faith, 11. Purges the city of Constantinople from Arianism, 17. Enforces the Nicene doctrine throughout the East, 19. Convenes a council at Constantinople, 20. His edicts against heresy, 24. Receives the fugitive family of Valentinian, and marries his sister Galla, 39. Defeats Maximus, and visits Rome, 41. His character, 42. His lenity to the city of Antioch, 47. His cruel treatment of Thessalonica, 50. Submits to the penance imposed by St. Ambrose, for his severity to Thessalonica, 54. Restores Valentinian, 56. Consults John of Lycopolis the hermit on the intended war against Eugenius, 60. Defeats Eugenius, 62. His death, 65. Procured a senatorial renunciation of the Pagan religion, 76. Abolishes Pagan rites, 78. Prohibits the Pagan religion, 88.
- Theodosius* the Younger, his birth, iii. 310. Is said to be left by his father Arcadius, to the care of Jezuegerd king of Persia, 312. His education and character, 316. His marriage with Eudocia, 318. His war with Persia, 321. His pious joy on the death of John, the usurper of the West, 330. His treaty with the Huns, 356. His armies defeated by Attila, 365. Is reduced to accept a peace dictated by Attila, 372. Is oppressed by the embassies of Attila, 375. Embassy of Maximin to Attila, 377. Is privy to a scheme for the assassination of Attila, 387. Attila's embassy to him on that occasion, 388. His death, 389.
- , His perplexity at the religious feuds between Cyril and Nestorius, iv. 558. Banishes Nestorius, 562.
- Theodolus* III. emperor of Constantinople, v. 19.
- Theodolus*, the father of the emperor, his successful expedition to Britain, ii. 531. Suppresses the revolt

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- volt of Firmus the moor, in Africa, 536. Is be-headed at Carthage, 538.
- Theodofius*, patriarch of Alexandria, his competition with Gaian, how decided, iv. 610. His negotiations at the court of Byzantium, 612.
- Theodofius*, the deacon, grandson of the emperor Heraclius, murdered by his brother Constant II. v. 11.
- Theodofius*, the lover of Antonina, detected by Belifarius, iv. 205. Turns monk to escape her, 206. His death, 208.
- Theodofius*, president of the council of Hierapolis under Constantius, his ridiculous flattery to that emperor, ii. 334.
- Theophano*, wife of the Greek emperor Romanus II. poisons both him and his father, v. 48. Her connexion with Nicephorus Phocas, 49. His murder, and her exile, 51.
- Theophilus*, emperor of Constantinople, v. 32. His Amorian war with the caliph Motaslem, 443.
- Theophilus*, archbishop of Alexandria, destroys the temple of Serapis, and the Alexandrian library, iii. 84. Assists the persecution of St. Chrysoftom, 305. His invective against him, 309. note.
- Theophilus*, his pious embassy from the emperor Constantius to the East Indies, ii. 210.
- Theophobus*, the Persian, his unfortunate history, v. 33.
- Therapeuta*, or Essenians, some account of, i. 606.
- Theropylie*, the straits of, fortified by the emperor Justinian, iv. 100.
- Theffalonica*, sedition and massacre there, iii. 49. Cruel treatment of the citizens, 50. Penance of Theodofius for this severity, 54.
- Theudelinda*, princess of Bavaria, married to Autharis king of the Lombards, iv. 450.
- Thibaut*, count of Champagne, engages in the fourth crusade, vi. 135.
- Thomas* the Cappadocian, his revolt against the Greek emperor Michael II. and cruel punishment, v. 31.
- Thomas* of Damascus, his exploits against the Saracens when besieging that city, v. 306.
- Thomas*, St. account of the Christians of, in India, iv. 599. Persecution of, by the Portuguese, 600.
- Thrace* is colonised by the Baltharæ, in the reign of Probus, i. 402. The fugitive Goths permitted to settle there by the emperor Valens, ii. 593. Is ravaged by them, 601. The Goths settled there by Theodofius, 636.
- Thrasmund* king of the Vandals, his character, iii. 537.
- Three Chapters*, the famous dispute concerning, iv. 583.
- Thundering Legion*, the story concerning, of suspicious veracity, i. 607.
- Tiberius* is adopted by Augustus, i. 90. Reduces the Pannonians, 136. Reduces Cappadocia, 168. note. Suspicious story of his edict in favour of the Christians, 660.
- Tiberius* is invited by Justin II. as his successor in the empire of the East, iv. 435. His character and death, 438.
- Timasus*, master-general of the army under the emperor Theodofius, is disgraced and exiled under Arcadius, iii. 288.
- Timothy* the Cat conspires the murder of Proterius archbishop of Alexandria, and succeeds him, iv. 572.
- Tiyasa*, miraculous gift of speech bestowed on the Catholics, whose tongues had been cut out there, iii. 546.
- Tiridates* king of Armenia, his character and history, i. 442. Is restored to his kingdom by Diocletian, 443. Is expelled by the Persians, 446. Is restored again by treaty between the Romans and Persians, 454. His conversion to Christianity, and death, ii. 103.
- Titus* admitted to share the Imperial dignity with his father Vespasian, i. 90.
- Togrul Beg*, sultan of the Turks, his reign and character, v. 654. He rescues the caliph of Bagdad from his enemies, 657.
- Toledo* taken by the Arabs under Tarik, v. 370.
- Toleration*, universal, its happy effects in the Roman empire, i. 34. What secels the most intolerant, 246. note.
- Tollius*, objections to his account of the vision of Antigonus, ii. 197. note.
- Torismend*, son of Theodoric king of the Visigoths, attends his father against Attila king of the Huns, iii. 410. Battle of Chalons, 413. Is acknowledged king on the death of his father in the field, 416. Is killed by his brother Theodoric, 445.
- Torture*, how admitted in the criminal law of the Romans under the emperors, ii. 59.
- Totila* is elected king of Italy by the Goths, iv. 278. His justice and moderation, 281. Besieges and takes the city of Rome, 284. Is induced to spare Rome from destruction, at the instance of Belifarius, 289. Takes Rome again, 295. Plunders Sicily, 296. Battle of Tagina, 302. His death, 303.
- Tulunides*, the Saracen dynasty of, v. 455.
- Tournaments* preferable exhibitions to the Olympic games, vi. 28.
- Tours*, battle of, between Charles Martel and the Saracens, v. 410.
- Toxandria*, in Germany, is overrun and occupied by the Franks, ii. 161.
- Traditors*, in the primitive church, who, i. 687.
- Trajan*, emperor, his conquest of Dacia, i. 6. His conquests in the East, 7. Contrast between the characters of him and Hadrian, 9. His pillar described, 57. Why adopted by the emperor Nerva, 91. His instructions to Pliny the Younger for his conduct toward the Christians, 647. Description of his famous bridge over the Danube, iv. 99. note.
- Trajan*, count, his treacherous murder of Para king of Armenia, ii. 546.

Transub-

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

Transubstantiation, the doctrine of, when established, vi. 109.

Trebizond, the city of, taken and plundered by the Goths, i. 318. The dukes of, become independent on the Greek empire, vi. 182. Is yielded to the Turks, 513.

Tribigild the Ostrogoth, his rebellion in Phrygia against the emperor Arcadius, iii. 292.

Tribune, the office of, explained, i. 79.

Tribonian, his genius and character, iv. 357. Is employed by Justinian to reform the code of Roman laws, 359.

Trinity, the mysterious doctrine of, ii. 242. Is violently agitated in the schools of Alexandria, 247. Three systems of, 248. Decisions of the council of Nice concerning, 251. Different forms of the doxology, 293. Frauds used to support the doctrine of, iii. 544.

Tripoli, the confederacy of, cruelly oppressed under the government of count Romanus, ii. 533.

Trifagion, religious war concerning, iv. 575.

Troops, Roman, their discipline, i. 12. When they first received pay, 193. Cause of the difficulty in levying them, ii. 48. See Jovians, Palatines, and Prætorian bands.

Troy, the situation of that city, and of the Grecian camp of besiegers, described, ii. 8.

Turin, battle of, between Constantine the Great and the lieutenants of Maxentius, i. 505.

Turisund, king of the Gepidæ, his honourable reception of Alboin the Lombard, who had slain his son in battle, iv. 421.

Turks, their origin, iv. 223. Their primitive institutions, 225. Their conquests, 226. Their alliance with the emperor Justinian, 231. Send auxiliaries to Heraclius, 521.

—, They grow powerful and licentious under the Saracens, v. 447. Terror excited by their menacing Europe, 548. Their military character, 552. They extend themselves over Asia, 645. Reign of Mahmud the Gaznevide, 646. Their manners and emigration, 651. They subdue Persia, 653. Dynasty of the Seljukians, 654. They invade the provinces of the Greek empire, 658. Reformation of the Eastern calendar, 670. They conquer Asia Minor, 673.

—, Their capital city, Nice, taken by the crusaders, vi. 40. The seat of government removed to Iconium, 74. Valour and conquests of Zenghi, 86. Character of sultan Nouredin, 87. Conquest of Egypt, 89. Origin and history of the Ottomans, 310. Their first passage into Europe, 315. Their education and discipline, 373. Embassy from, to the emperor Sigismund, 400. Take the city of Constantinople, 500.

Turpin, the romance of, by whom, and when written, vi. 5. note.

Twelve Tables, review of the laws of, iv. 335. Their severity, 399. How the criminal code of, sunk into disuse, 402.

Tyrants of Rome, the popular conceit of the thirty investigated, i. 333.

Tyre is besieged by Saladin, vi. 100.

Tythes assigned to the clergy as well by the emperor as by Moses, i. 245. Were first granted to the church by Charlemagne, v. 139.

V.

Vadomair, prince of the Alemanni, is sent prisoner to Spain by the emperor Julian, ii. 323. His son murdered by the Romans, 518.

Valens, general of the Illyrian frontier, receives the title of Cæsar from Licinius, i. 521. Loses his new title and his life, 523.

Valens, the brother of the emperor Valentinian, is associated with him in the empire, ii. 487. Obtains from his brother the Eastern portion of the empire, 489. His timidity on the revolt of Procopius, 494. His character, 499. Is baptised by Eudoxus, and patronises the Arians, 506. Is vindicated from the charge of persecution, 508. His edict against the Egyptian monks, 510. His war with the Goths, 549. Receives the suppliant Goths into the Roman territories, 512. His war with them, 603. Is defeated and killed at the battle of Hadrianople, 613. His eulogium by Libanius, 616.

Valens, the Arian bishop of Mursa, his crafty pretension to divine revelation, ii. 264.

Valentia, a new province in Britain, settled by Theodosius, ii. 532.

Valentinian I. his election to the empire, and character, ii. 484. Associates his brother Valens with him, 487. Divides the empire into the East and West, and retains the latter, 489. His cruelty, 499. His civil institutions, 502. His edicts to restrain the avarice of the clergy, 510. Chastises the Alemanni, and fortifies the Rhine, 519. His expedition to Illyricum, and death, 555. Is vindicated from the charge of polygamy, 557.

Valentinian II. is invested with the Imperial ornaments in his mother's arms, on the death of his father, ii. 559. Is refused, by St. Ambrose, the privilege of a church for him and his mother Justina, on account of their Arian principles, iii. 31. His flight from the invasion of Maximus, 37. Is restored by the emperor Theodosius, 56. His character, ibid. His death, 58.

Valentinian III. is established emperor of the West, by his cousin Theodosius the Younger, iii. 331. Is committed to the guardianship of his mother Placidia, 332. Flies, on the invasion of Italy by Attila, 423. Sends an embassy to Attila to purchase his retreat, 424. Murders the patrician Ætius, 430. Ravishes the wife of Petronius Maximus, 431. His death, and character, 432.

Valentinians, their confused ideas of the divinity of Jesus Christ, iv. 540. note.

Valeria,

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

- Valeria*, empress, widow of Galerius, the unfortunate fates of her and her mother, i. 516.
- Valerian* is elected censor under the emperor Decius, i. 301. His elevation to the empire, and his character, 308. Is defeated and taken prisoner by Sapor king of Persia, 327. His treatment, 331. His inconsistent behaviour toward the Christians, 672.
- Vandals*. See Goths.
- , Their successes in Spain, iii. 334. Their expedition into Africa under Genseric, 336. They raise a naval force and invade Italy, 336. Sack of Rome, 440. Their naval depredations on the coasts of the Mediterranean, 467. Their conversion to the Christian religion, 529. Persecution of the Catholics, 536.
- , Expedition of Belisarius against Gelimer, iv. 132. Conquest of, 146. Their name and distinction lost in Africa, 154. Remains of their nation still found in Germany, 155.
- Vandals*. See B. bran.
- Vangians* of the north, origin and history of, v. 501.
- Varronian*, the infant son of the emperor Jovian, his history, ii. 483.
- Vataces*, John, his long and prosperous reign at Nice, vi. 197. 202. His character, 222.
- Vegitius*, his remarks on the degeneracy of the Roman discipline at the time of Theodosius the Great, iii. 67.
- Veli*, the siege of that city, the æra of the Roman army first receiving regular pay, i. 193.
- Venice*, foundation of that republic, iii. 420. Its infant state under the exarchs of Ravenna, iv. 444. Its growth and prosperity at the time of the fourth crusade, vi. 137. Alliance with France, 139. Divides the Greek empire with the French, 174.
- Veratius*, his mode of obeying the law of the twelve tables respecting personal insults, iv. 399.
- Verina*, empress, the widow of Leo, deposes Zeno, iv. 4. Her turbulent life, 5.
- Verona*, siege of, by Constantine the Great, i. 506. Battle of, between Stilicho the Roman general, and Alaric the Goth, iii. 154.
- Verres*, why his punishment was inadequate to his offences, iv. 404.
- Vespasian*, his prudence in sharing the Imperial dignity with his son Titus, i. 90.
- Vestals*, Roman, their number, and peculiar office, iii. 70.
- Vetrantio*, the Roman general in Illyricum, assumes the purple, and enters into an alliance with the Gaulish usurper Magnentius, ii. 113. Is reduced to abdicate his new dignity, 117.
- Victoria* exercises the government over the legions and province of Gaul, i. 364.
- Victory*, her statue and altar, in the senate house at Rome, described, iii. 72. The senate petitions the Christian emperors to have it restored, 73.
- Vigilantius*, the presbyter, is abused by Jerom for opposing monkish superstition, iii. 95. note.
- Vigilius*, interpreter to the embassy from Theodosius the younger to Attila, is privy to a scheme for the assassination of Attila, iii. 377. Is detected by Attila, 388.
- Vigilius* purchases the papal chair of Belisarius and his wife, iv. 187. Inligates the emperor Justinian to resume the conquest of Italy, 296.
- Vine*, its progress, from the time of Homer, i. 64.
- Virgil*, his fourth eclogue interpreted into a prophecy of the coming of the Messiah, ii. 203. Is the most ancient writer who mentions the manufacture of silk, iv. 72.
- Vitalian*, the Gothic chief, is treacherously murdered at Constantinople, iv. 46.
- Vitalianus*, prætorian præfect under the emperor Maximin, put to death by order of the senate, i. 217.
- Vitellius*, emperor, his character, i. 97.
- Vitiges*, general of the Barbarians under Theodatus king of Italy, is by his troops declared king of Italy, iv. 174. He besieges Belisarius in Rome, 176. Is forced to raise the siege, 192. He is besieged by Belisarius in Ravenna, 193. Is taken prisoner in Ravenna, 201. Conforms to the Athanasian faith, and is honourably settled in Asia, 202. His embassy to Chosroes king of Persia, 242.
- Vitruvius* the architect, his remarks on the buildings of Rome, iii. 217.
- Vizir*, derivation of that appellation, v. 221. note.
- Ukraine*, description of that country, i. 298.
- Uldin*, king of the Huns, reduces and kills Gainas the Goth, iii. 300. Is driven back by the vigilance of the Imperial ministers, 313.
- Ulfilas*, the apostle of the Goths, his pious labours, iii. 528. Propagated Arianism, 534.
- Ulyian*, the lawyer, placed at the head of the council of state, under the emperor Alexander Severus, i. 184. Is murdered by the Prætorian guards, 188.
- Voconian* law abolished the right of female inheritance, iv. 389. How evaded, 393.
- Voltaire* prefers the labarum of Constantine to the angel of Licinius, ii. 197. note. His reflections on the expences of a siege, iii. 637. note.
- Fortigern*, king of South Britain, his invitation of the Saxons for assistance against his enemies, iii. 611.
- Vouti*, emperor of China, his exploits against the Huns, ii. 581.
- Upsal*, anciently famous for its Gothic temple, i. 293.
- Urban* II. pope, patronises Peter the Hermit in his project for recovering the Holy Land, vi. 2. Exhorts the people to a crusade, at the council of Clermont, 7.
- Urban* V. pope, removes the papal court from Avignon to Rome, vi. 597.
- Urban* VI. pope, his disputed election, vi. 599.
- Urfacius*, master of the offices under the emperor Valentinian, occasions a revolt of the Alemanni by his parsimony, ii. 515.

Urficinus,

G E N E R A L I N D E X.

Ursinus, a Roman general, his treacherous conduct to Sylvanus in Gaul, ii. 143. Is superseded in his command over the Eastern provinces, 158. Is sent back again to conduct the war with Persia under Sabinian, 159. Is again disgraced, ibid.

Ursini, history of the Roman family of, vi. 565.

Ursulus, treasurer of the empire under Constantius, unjustly put to death by the tribunal of Chalcedon, ii. 345.

Ujary. See Interest of money.

W

Walachians, the present, descendents from the Roman settlers in ancient Dacia, i. 357. note.

Wales is settled by British refugees from Saxon tyranny, iii. 617. 620. The bards of, 624.

Wallia is chosen king of the Goths, iii. 268. He reduces the barbarous invaders of Spain, 269. Is settled in Aquitain, 270.

War and robbery, their difference, v. 184. Evolutions and military exercise of the Greeks, 500. Military character of the Saracens, 502. Of the Franks and Latins, 504.

Warburton, bishop of Gloucester, his literary character, ii. 386. note. His labours to establish the miraculous interruption to Julian's building the temple of Jerusalem, 388. notes.

Warna, battle of, between the sultan Amurath II. and Ladislaus king of Hungary and Poland, vi. 449.

Werdan, the Greek general, defeated by the Saracens at Aiznadin, v. 303.

Wheat, the average price of, under the successors of Constantine the Great, ii. 417. note.

Whitaker, Mr. remarks on his account of the Irish descent of the Scottish nation, ii. 528. note.

White, Mr. Arabic professor at Oxford, character of his sermons at Bampton's lecture, v. 409. note.

Wilfrid, the apostle of Suffex, his benevolent establishment at Selsey, iii. 622.

William I. the Bad, king of Sicily, v. 638.

William II. the Good, king of Sicily, v. 639.

Windmills, the use of, from whence derived, vi. 208.

Wine, the use of, expressly prohibited by Mahomet, v. 215.

Wisdom of Solomon, when, and by whom that book was written, ii. 239.

Wolodimir, great prince of Russia, marries Anne, daughter of the emperor Romanus, v. 494. His conversion to Christianity, 576.

Women, in hereditary monarchies, allowed to exercise sovereignty, though incapable of subordinate state offices, i. 183. How treated by the Roman civil laws, iv. 374. The Voconian law, how evaded, 393. Are not excluded from Paradise by Mahomet, v. 219.

X

Xenophon, his description of the desert of Mesopotamia, ii. 430.

Xerxes, the situation of his bridge of boats for passing over to Europe, pointed out, ii. 7.

Y

Yermuk, battle of, between the Greeks and the Saracens, v. 318.

Yezdegerd, king of Persia, his reign the æra of the fall of the Sassanian dynasty, and of the religion of Zoroaster, v. 285.

Yezid, caliph of the Saracens, v. 266.

Z

Zabergan invades the Eastern empire with an army of Bulgarians, iv. 314. Is repulsed by Belisarius, 316.

Zachary, pope, pronounces the deposition of Childeric king of France, and the appointment of Pepin to succeed him, v. 119.

Zeno, brother of Gelimer the Vandal usurper, conquers Sardinia, iv. 142. Is recalled to assist his brother, 143. Is killed, 144.

Zara, a city on the Sclavonian coast, reduced by the crusaders for the republic of Venice, vi. 143.

Zenghi, sultan, his valour and conquests, vi. 86.

Zeno, emperor of the East, receives a surrender of the Imperial government of the Western empire, from the senate of Rome, iii. 496. The vicissitudes of his life and reign, iv. 4. His Henoticon, 572.

Zenobia, queen of Palmyra, her character and history, i. 365.

Zingis, first emperor of the Moguls and Tartars, parallel between him and Attila, king of the Huns, iii. 358. His proposal for improving his conquests in China, 367. His birth and early military exploits, vi. 289. His laws, 290. His invasion of China, 293. Carisme, Tranfoxiana, and Persia, 294. His death, 296.

Zizais, a noble Sarmatian, is made king of that nation by the emperor Constantius, ii. 150.

Zobeir, the Saracen, his bravery in the invasion of Africa, v. 352.

Zoe, first the concubine, becomes the fourth wife of the emperor Leo the philosopher, v. 44.

Zoe, wife of Romanus III. and Michael IV. emperors, v. 55.

Zoroaster, the Persian prophet, his high antiquity, i. 240. note. Abridgement of his theology, 241. Provides for the encouragement of agriculture, 244. Assigns tythes to the priests, 245.

Zosimus, his representation of the oppression of the laical contribution, ii. 71.

Zwinglius the reformer, his conceptions of the Eucharist, v. 536.

Zurich, brief history of that city, vi. 531.

T H E E N D.

E R R A T A.

V O L. IV.

- Page 13. Note 22. line 2, 3. for δαλερω τροπω—read δαλερω τροπω.
20. Note 46. line 5. for dromonibas—read dromonibus.
22. Note 55. line 8. for Cotlian—read Cottian.
30. line 4. for, When at his summons the chair of St. Peter was disputed by Symmachus and Laurence, they appeared, &c.—read, When the chair of St. Peter was disputed by Symmachus and Laurence, they appeared at his summons, &c.
112. line 22. for and his pupils—read, and that his pupils, &c.
129. line 23. for patrons—read patron.
553. line 2 from the bottom, for partia—read partial.
568. Note 63. line 1. for περι βοτος—read περιβοτος.
569. ibid. line 14. for Ειμηνη—read Ειμηνη.

V O L. V.

- Page 247. line 13. for bid—read bade.

V O L. VI.

- Page 42. Note 82. line 3. for Herman—read Hernan.
57. line 27. for described—read descried.
93. line 15. for despoifed—read despoiled.
219. line 16. for dispife—read despife.
302. line 12. for hattened—read hastening.
303. line 15. for Bata—read Bela.
324. Note 63. line 7. dele afterwards.
331. Note 1. line 2. read Ali, a native of Yezd.
360. line 21. for intranquil—read in the tranquil.
361. line 3. for haft—read has.
507. line 15. for taste—read judgment.

This book is DUE on the last date stamped below.

---

|  |  |  |
|--|--|--|
|  |  |  |
|--|--|--|

Form L9-Series 4939

3 1158 01047 9

D 000 001 481

